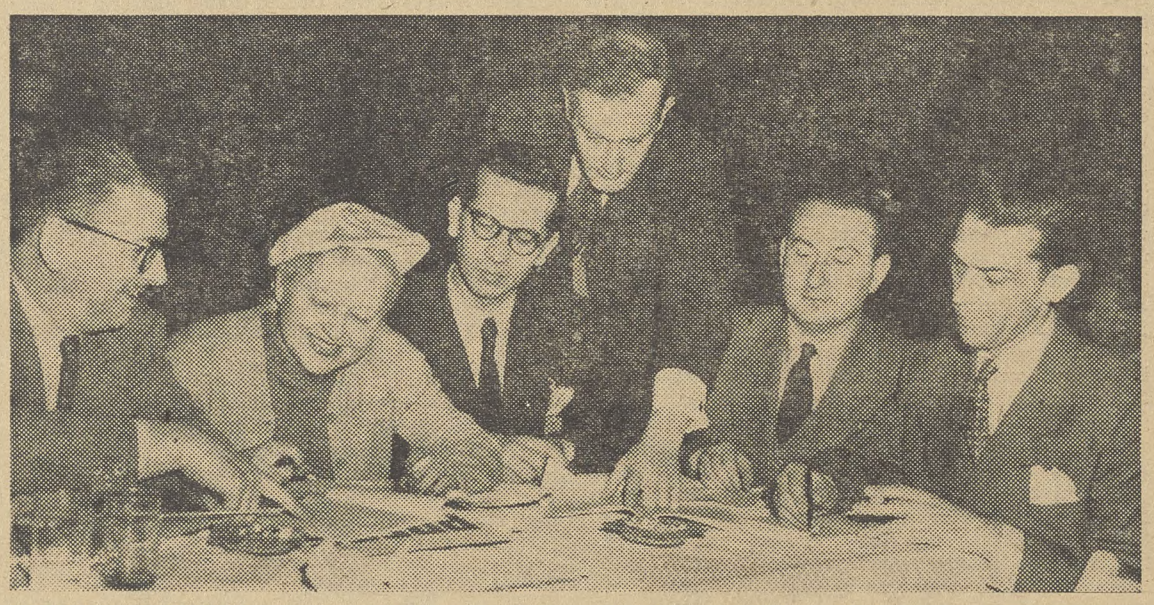
The next morning the Frankfurt Communist paper, Sozialistische Volkszeitung, printed a 1500-word manifesto it said had been adopted by the 1148 delegates, and also a copy of a telegram it said had been sent Marshal Stalin. That was the same morning Hermann Schirmer, head of the party, told loyal party members the convention had been postponed and that no new date had been set.

United States: The Daily Worker got very indignant at Premier Razmara of Iran when he was assassinated recently. It said he "was wedded to the Anglo-American program of converting Iran into a military base." That was the same day Moscow's Pravda, which is even more official than the Daily Worker, broadly intimated the Premier had been murdered by "people closely connected with American influence in Iran."

Italy: Sen. Giuseppe Alberganti, a prominent Communist, speaking at a provincial party congress in Milan, accused the Red-dominated General Confederation of Labor (CGIT) of having "a trade unionist mentality" and of "worrying too much about improving the economic conditions of Italian workers while ignoring the political objectives" of the party.

In the audience: a couple of hundred CGIT leaders and Palmiro Togliatti, head of the Communist Party in Italy.



FRENCH LIBERAL editors and publishers spent a day watching United Auto Workers' Cleveland convention. Left to right (seated) are Daniel Benedite, editor of Franc-Tireur; Mme. Marie-Louise Gazier, publicist and wife of French Minister of Information; Robert Verdier, publisher of Le Populaire; Georges Paques, information chief of French Productivity Center, and Bernard Dubais, labor economist of French Embassy; standing, Harry Lennon, Economic Cooperation Administration aide who guided them.

Taft Measure To 'Improve' T-H A Fake

THE unauthorized statement of Sen. Taft (R. O.) that organized labor supports a bill he alleges might speed disposition of some National Labor Relations Board cases was nailed as a figment of his imagination last week by the CIO.

As a matter of fact, CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg wrote Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, the CIO doesn't like the bill at all. Taft introduced it Mar. 29.

It provides a new procedural step—permitting pre-hearing motions for the dismissal of complaints. Anti-union managements would make use of the step "simply for purposes of delay," Goldberg maintained.

HE DESCRIBED the bill as "a product of a sub-committee of the Section on Labor Relations of the American Bar Association."

"The only attorney on the subcommittee who represents the CIO or any of its affiliated unions," he wrote, "opposed the motions practice proposal from the outset. Thus there has never been even the slightest basis for supposing that the CIO would support the bill."

Goldberg explained to Murray that the NLRB's procedure is "far too complicated and legalistic now" without making it worse.

Annual Wage Auto Union's Major Goal

THE CIO Auto Workers cleaned up some important business before adjourning their 13th constitutional convention in Cleveland.

The delegates supported Pres. Walter P. Reuther's proposal to go out after a guaranteed annual wage in a resolution that listed it as "the next major goal of our union." They instructed their officers to invite management to help work out a program and asked President Truman to name a commission to study the problem.

They approved a change in the constitution authorizing the removal of local union officers and committee members who get themselves involved in inter-plant rackets, such as gambling, but made it clear that such connections not carried into the plant from the outside would not be cause for ousting.

IN another resolution, the convention told the officers to investigate the advisability of the union's setting up its own insurance company to cut down the high cost of premiums to members.

The UAW also rejected establishment of a labor party at the present, but called for a united labor conference on political questions before the 1952 campaign.

In another constitutional amendment, they voted to set the terms of international officers at two years and to hold conventions every two years.

New York was picked for the 1953 parley.

Idle Pay In Sickness Sought In Florida

Gov. Fuller Warren has recommended to the Legislature that Florida's unemployment compensation laws be amended to provide benefits for workers who are jobless because of illness.

"Having been an employe for nearly half my lifetime," Warren said, "I know from personal experience that any involuntary unemployment is very distressing, but I know of no unemployment more distressing than that caused by sickness."

CWA Member Now 'Brother Mayor'

Carlton W. Cheek is "Brother Mayor" now to members of Local 6329 of the CIO Communications Workers in North Kansas City, Mo.

Cheek was elected mayor of the city in an election Apr. 3, defeating the incumbent, 745 to 482. He formerly was an alderman in North Kansas City.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 23, 1951 No. 17

Truman Will Name New Labor Board With Broad Powers Despite NAM

(See Page 3)

CIO TEXTILE WORKERS on strike at the Dan River Mill, Danville, Va., effectively block the entrance to one of the plant's main gates by stretching out on the ground and forming a "human carpet." Virginia State Police arrested 20 strikers after dispersing them with tear gas bombs. (For story on the strike and additional photos see Page 7.)

CIO Groups Back Truman On MacArthur Ouster

(See Page 2)

Crazy 'Senator From Maine' Feted By Ohio Republicans

(See Page 5)

CIO Groups Back MacArthur Ouster

CIO GROUPS and leaders all over the U. S. joined last week in praising President Truman for relieving Gen. MacArthur of his Far Eastern command.

(CIO Pres. Murray led the parade, as reported last week, when he issued a statement declaring that "Americans rightly have an instinctive resistance to any effort by the military to gain control of the policy-making powers of government.")

The CIO Political Action Committee devoted an entire eight-page issue of its publication, Political Action of the Week, to a detailed analysis of the situation. It included a reprint of the complete text of President Truman's address to the nation and some selected quotes from press editorials.

"The lines of a great political struggle over peace or war were drawn when President Truman fired Gen. MacArthur for disobeying orders and disregarding national policy," the PAC publication began. "Shall the U. S. keep trying to save the peace of the world? Or shall we plunge upon a course that would expand the Korean battle into worldwide atomic conflict?

"THAT IS THE issue between Truman and MacArthur. Having resolved our national policy toward peace, the President could not tolerate a commander who would not carry it out and who undertook a military domination of the civil government of the country. . ."

PAC Director Jack Kroll, addressing the convention of the Pennsylvania State Council, added his own personal comment:

"The President should have fired MacArthur long ago," he said. "He would have had us wage war against a nation of 400 million which has always absorbed its conquerors and made Chinese of them." The delegates cheered him. (See story on this page.)

The Ohio CIO Council executive board unanimously adopted a resolution applauding Truman for his "courageous and forthright decision" and stating that "men more interested in political expediency than in their nation's welfare" were attempting to make political football of the MacArthur dismissal.

The New York State Council executive board likewise expressed approval.

"THE PRESIDENT'S action was in the best interests of the nation and its purposes in this time of world crisis," the resolution stated. "The artificial storms which are being whipped up by reactionary newspapers and politicians for selfish and unpatriotic purposes cannot obscure that fact."

The Rubber Workers wired Truman: "You have lessened the threat of military dictatorship by exercising your prerogatives as commander-in-chief. Our nation and the free world can be grateful that in this time of crisis you have seen fit to act with such wisdom and fortitude."

Pres. Martin Wagner, of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, termed the dismissal "a great victory for our democratic way of government."

Charleston, W. Va., Picks Labor-Backed Republican Mayor

Labor-supported Republican John T. Copenhaver defeated R. Carl Andrews, Democratic incumbent, for mayor of Charleston, W. Va., in municipal elections Apr. 16. Both the CIO-PAC and Kanawha Valley Labor's League for Poltical Education-AFL backed Copenhaver.

The Andrews administration has been marked by injunctions asked by the city against labor organizations. Andrews stated, during the campaign, that he was opposed to union organization for city employes.

On the other hand, Copenhaver said that he favored such organization, would assist moves of city employes to improve their wages and working conditions and promised city police would not terrorize peaceful pickets.

Donora Firm Pays Off In Gas Deaths

DURING five horrible days in October, 1948, death came to 22 persons and serious illness to 5910 others because the giant smokestacks of the American Steel & Wire Co., at Donora, Pa., poured out poisonous fumes which the capricious wind, for once, did not disperse.

It was the worst industrial disaster of its type ever brought before the public, and indignation ran high.

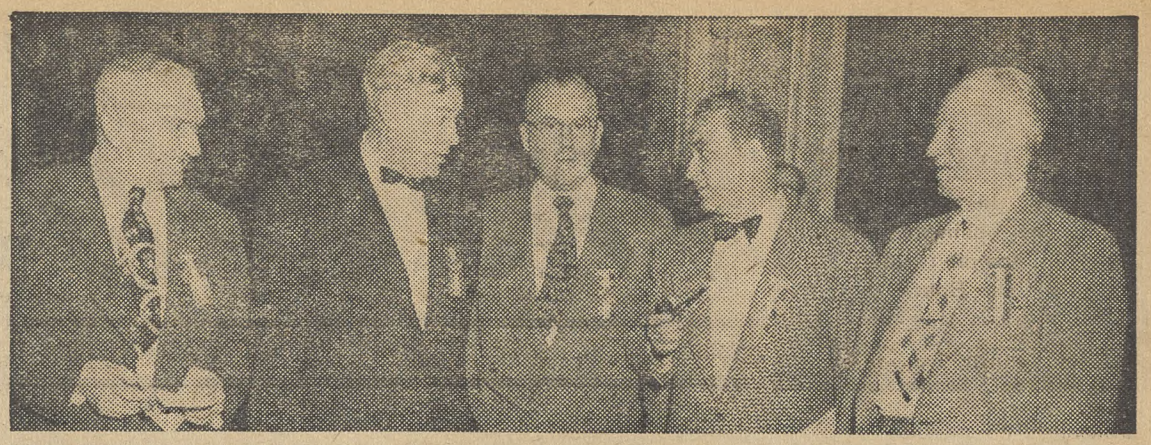
The CIO Steelworkers were instrumental in starting an investigation by the U. S. Public Health Service. The probe revealed uncontested evidence that adequate smoke control and purification procedures at the plant would have prevented the disaster.

Now, nearly three years later, the company, although refusing to admit responsibility for what happened, has just settled 130 damage suits out of court at about 5c on the dollar.

It was sued for $4,643,000 in about 130 separate actions. It paid $235,000.

Heads URW Council

Miss Ann Snider (above), an employe of the Firestone plant at Los Angeles and a member of Local 100 of the CIO Rubber Workers, recently was elected president of URW District Council 5 at its convention at Los Angeles. The council includes 22 locals in western states.



CONVENTION CONFAB: Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers (second from left) and four district directors of the steel union engage in animated conversation at the convention of the Pennsylvania CIO Council at Philadelphia. Left to right, George Medrick, Harrisburg; McDonald, H. Charles Ford, Philadelphia; C. B. Newell, Bethlehem, and John W. Grajciar, Sharon. More than 1000 delegates attended the parley.

Penna. Council Supports Truman In Dispute With MacArthur

MORE THAN 1000 delegates to the 14th annual convention of the Pennsylvania CIO Council roundly cheered President Truman's foreign policy during their three-day session in Philadelphia last weekend.

The convention was the first of any CIO group since the President ousted Gen. MacArthur in their dispute over extending the Korean war to the mainland of Asia. Endorsement of the Truman stand came from the floor and from speakers such as CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Steelworkers and of National PAC, and PAC Dir. Jack Kroll.

"The President should have fired MacArthur long ago," Kroll bluntly told delegates representing 650,000 workers. "He would have had us wage war against a nation of 400 million which has always absorbed its conquerors and made Chinese of them."

Carey Flays MacArthur

"We must educate the people on the true meaning of the MacArthur episode," Carey said, "as another in the line of attempts by reaction to take over the American government. The people thirst for the kind of leadership that Truman displayed when he fired a general who wanted to be a dictator."

"We have cleaned out the Reds from the CIO," said McDonald. "Now we have other enemies. The Tafts and the Martins are just as big a threat as the Commies, for they have about the same viewpoints in having no use for working men as such."

The convention was marked by a determination to prevent, through revitalized political action, any dictatorship in the United States—either by the military or by Wall Street.

Chief immediate goals of the political program adopted by the convention were enactment of a Fair Employment Practices Commission law, which has been made a political football by the Republican Legislature, and defeat of a GOP-sponsored flat income tax bearing most heavily on workers and others of low or moderate income.

Three of the delegates were Democratic members of the State House of Representatives. The Democrats, with the cooperation of a few dissident Republicans, defeated the income tax measure when it was introduced, but the Republican majority managed to keep it alive through parliamentary maneuvering.

$1000 For One Vote

One of them John Walsh, CIO Electrical Workers' delegate from Chester, said that "anyone who wanted $1000 or more could have had it" for switching his vote. The Democrats, however, are standing firm against the unequal levy, he added.

William Hart, director of Steelworkers' District 19, at Tarentum, asserted that PAC is on the verge of victory in Pennsylvania. He called attention to the need for boosting registrations among younger unionists, particularly ex-servicemen, and the wives of members. Another 10 votes on each of the state's voting precincts would have elected a Democratic governor, he claimed.

The defense mobilization mess as whipped up by its head, Charles E. Wilson, former president of General Electric, was hit hard. Carey declared that compared to the big business representatives directing the defense, "the Costellos and their ilk are simply amateurs at milking the American public."

Controls 'A Joke'

Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers and chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, described price controls as "a joke."

To combat charges of favoritism in the award of defense contracts, the delegates in a resolution called upon President Truman to discharge any federal employe guilty of such action and to make public all information about irregularities, including the names of the companies involved. The resolution also asked the President to make public the amount of Red infiltration—if any—into government jobs.

Organization of state, county, and municipal workers and the employes of insurance companies was described as the council's main organization aim. Support was urged in the forthcoming National Labor Relations Board representation election among employes of the John Hancock Insurance Co., with the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee leading the fight for the CIO.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization and councils, told the convention that the CIO has grown "by leaps and bounds since ousting the Reds." He urged the delegates to "help small unions become big ones," and hailed the Steelworkers for their leadership in the fight for pensions.

Pleads For India

Harry Boyer, council president, made a moving plea for help for India, and described the failure to supply wheat to that country as "a tragic indictment of leaders in Congress." He hailed 1951 as "a year of great opportunity for PAC in Pennsylvania," and rapped the State administration for its many shortcomings.

Harry Block, council secretary-treasurer, in supporting a resolution against discrimination because of age, disclosed that Pennsylvania employers are not only refusing jobs to older workers, but also to younger men who might be called into the armed service.

Carey first entered the labor movement in Philadelphia. He said that the IUE, of which he is president, will demand that his old employer, the Philco Corp., devote a small portion of its swollen profits to paying 1500 IUE members while they are laid off for two weeks—a period which "happens" to coincide with expiration of the IUE contract May 1.

He predicted that 20,000 radio and television workers will be jobless soon, and demanded that credit restrictions be amended to permit purchases of television sets by moderate income groups.

"Congress," he said, "refused to take any action to regulate the billions of dollars of credit being used for gambling in the necessities of life on the commodity exchanges. But the Federal Reserve Board did take strict action to limit the credit that a worker might have."

George L-P Weaver, former director of the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, described the present crisis as "a struggle of ideas to line up Asia and Africa on our side against communism." We will be listened to abroad only if we put civil rights into effect at home, he added.

Beg Pardon

The box in last week's issue of the CIO News, entitled "The Parade of Profits," erroneously described the corporation profit figures as for the "first quarter" of 1949 and 1950.

Actually, the figures were for the entire year.

HST To Name New WSB Despite Big Biz

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

OVER the protest of the big business organizations, a reconstituted Wage Stabilization Board may go into operation this week.

It will handle economic issues, and will also be empowered to make recommendations in "non-economic" disputes—on such issues as union security, seniority, etc.

When the President sets up a new board, it will take the place of the old nine-man group from which the labor members resigned in angry protest on Feb. 16.

The new board will have 18 members—double the size of the earlier agency—with six each for labor, management, and the public.

Deadlock Broken

The two-month deadlock on handling of wage and disputes matters was broken when the President's newly-formed National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy voted 12-4 to recommend to President Truman adoption of a "formula" for handling non-economic disputes. (See text in adjoining column).

Under the recommendations, "non-economic" disputes can go to the Wage Board for handling either by joint agreement of the two parties or by certification of the President in cases which "substantially threaten" the progress of the national defense program.

Once such a "non-economic" dispute is before it, the board will examine the facts and bring recommendations to the President for "fair and equitable terms of settlement."

In cases where both the union and employer agree in advance to accept the board's findings, the board decision will be binding on the two parties.

Voting for this solution of the deadlock were representatives of the public, labor and agriculture on the advisory board.

Industry Opposed

Only the four industry members—speaking for the National Association of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce and the Committee for Economic Development—voted against the proposal.

The vote came late in the day on Apr. 17, after the President's Advisory Board had spent several hours discussing the issues. Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, chairman of the advisory group, which holds frequent meetings at the White House, did not vote.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. Walter Reuther of the UAW represented the CIO at the session; the AFL spokesmen were Pres. William Green and Secy.-Treas. George Meany.

Voting with them were officials of four big agricultural groups and these public members: William H. Davis, a lawyer who headed the War Labor Board under President Roosevelt; Paul Porter, Washington lawyer; John Lord O'Brien, lawyer, and George Mead, retired industrialist.

Presidential Approval

Next day, at his press conference, the President said (1) that he was going to accept the recommendations of his advisory group; (2) that when you get a majority vote of 3-1, it's time to act on its recommendations; (3) that he was very happy about the way the advisory group has been working out.

Later, it was announced at the White House that George W. Taylor of Philadelphia, a member of the World War II labor board, will be chairman of the new board.

Whatever its composition, the new WSB will find a sizeable backlog of cases in which wage increases are awaiting approval. Far-reaching decisions will have to be made by the new board, and the labor members will probably push for improvements and flexibility in the handling of problems involving the wage formula itself.

In the past, both CIO and AFL have insisted on provisions for special handling of cases involving hardships, substandard conditions and inequities.

Big Stumbling Block

But the big stumbling block to getting the board set up again has been the question of its handling of "non-economic" disputes. The National Association of Manufacturers, in particular, has rallied against any such jurisdiction for the board.

At the United Labor Conference in Washington last month, Murray flatly charged that the NAM's stand was based upon hope that unions could more easily be threatened with Taft-Hartley injunctions. He warned of danger of a "straitjacket" for labor, with management turning down fair demands on the one hand and seeking court injunctions if unions strike to win their objectives.

On Apr. 12, the labor and management members of the President's advisory group conferred together, and at that time the NAM and Chamber of Commerce spokesman gave tentative approval of the compromise on "non-economic" disputes.

But after further meetings with their own groups, the president of the Chamber and the chairman of the board of the NAM were forced to switch their positions.

Advisory Board's Recommendation

Here is the recommendation of the President's National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy for the disputes powers of a reconstituted Wage Stabilization Board in "non-economic" matters. The recommendation, adopted by a 12-4 vote, will probably be included in an Executive Order setting up a new wage board:

1. The Wage Stabilization Board shall be reconstituted as an 18 man tripartite Board with six representing the Public, six representing Management, and six representing Labor.

2. The reconstitued Wage Stabilization Board shall be empowered to assume jurisdiction of any labor dispute which is not resolved by collective bargaining or by the prior full use of conciliation and meditation facilities and which threatens an interruption of work affecting the national defense where:

i) The parties to any such dispute jointly agree to submit such dispute to the Board, or

ii) The President is of the opinion that the dispute is of a character which substantially threatens the progress of national defense and certifies such dispute to the Board.

3. In any such case certified to the Board by the President or in any such case where the parties jointly agree to submit the case to the Board for their recommendations, the Board shall investigate and inquire into the issues in dispute and promptly report to the President thereon with their recommendations to the parties as to fair and equitable terms of settlement.

4. In any such case where the parties jointly agree to be bound by the decision of the Board, the Board shall render a decision on the issues in dispute which decision shall be binding on the parties.

United Labor Action Groups Being Formed In Many Areas

FIRST reports of joint action to carry out locally the objectives of last month's United Labor Conference in Washington are beginning to come in from cities and states throughout the country.

In many places, locals of the CIO and AFL and the railroad brotherhoods, as well as city and state councils and federations, are getting together to form United Labor Committees in their communities.

Their objective is to tell the men and women with whom they live and work that the National United Labor Policy Committee, in fighting for a sane defense mobilization program with equality of sacrifice, is fighting for all the people of the United States—not just those who belong to unions.

In Kentucky, representatives of the CIO, AFL and brotherhoods met in Louiville on Apr. 17 and set up a Kentucky United Labor Policy Committee to back up the national group.

Seventeen delegates met and, according to the Louisville Courier-Journal, "acted as if they never had been bitter rivals."

Pres. Al Whitehouse of the Kentucky CIO Council was named temporary chairman on motion of Secy.-Treas. Edward H. Weyler of the AFL State Federation of Labor. On motion of CIO Reg. Dir. William B. Taylor, the committee unanimously endorsed an AFL strike at two Louisville hotels.

The committee decided to hold open meetings in Louisville, Covington, Paducah and Ashland to acquaint the public with labor's stand on national issues; to promote a statewide radio program for the same purpose, and to circulate a petition endorsing National ULPC recommendations for presentation to Kentucky members of Congress.

When the meeting ended, Whitehouse declared:

"It's the thrill of my life, in the face of past history, that things like this take place. It's the beginning of great things."

In Memphis, Tenn., a local United Labor Policy Committee was established soon after the national conference in Washington.

It has been meeting weekly, with the presidents of the CIO and AFL councils alternating as chairman. An 11-point program has been adopted and is being put in working form by subcommittees.

PLANS INCLUDE a mass meeting, on a date to be selected, at which a CIO or AFL leader will speak and to which Sen. Kefauver and Rep. Gore, both Democrats, will be invited.

They also include enlisting the support of other groups for the ULPC program; publication of a pamphlet explaining the program; organization of "beat inflation" groups, and speaking and radio programs to keep the public informed.

The United Labor Policy Committee of Connecticut, already in existence, scheduled a major conference for New Haven for late last week to translate the ULPC program into action in that State. National labor leaders were scheduled to speak.

The Georgia Industrial Union Council, unable to secure the cooperation of the State AFL at least for the present, moved to implement the ULPC program by itself at a meeting in Rome. First step was to schedule a mass meeting in Atlanta's City Auditorium on Apr. 27.

The program calls for speeches by Director W. H. Crawford of the Steelworkers' District 35, Thomas J. Starling of the Auto Workers, G. R. Hathaway, state director of the Packinghouse Workers; Earl Moye of the Communications Workers; State Dir. H. D. Lisk of the Textile Workers, and Pres. Charles C. Mathias of the Atlanta CIO Council.

Pres. C. H. Gillman of the Georgia CIO Council said additional meetings will be held at other points in the state.

IN COLORADO, the State CIO Council, also working alone, gave wide distribution to the Declaration of Principles and Program for Action adopted at the national conference. Copies of them, together with CIO Pres. Philip Murray's speech, went to all affiliated locals, all international representatives and to the executive board members of the State and Denver CIO Councils.

Secy.-Treas. William T. Butler met with delegates from locals in the Pueblo area and gave a detailed report on the Washington conference. He also has held meetings with other groups in different parts of the State.

In Cleveland the CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhoods are in the process of setting up a local ULPC.

In Detroit, the Greater Detroit and Wayne County Industrial Council Union was preparing to invite the AFL and railroad brotherhoods to form a countywide ULPC.

CIO MEMBERS in the United States might well follow the example set by their brother trade unionists in Rubber Workers Local 232, New Toronto, Ont., who used this car in cooperation with the Canadian Congress of Labour to spread the fight for price control.

A CHANCE FOR SERVICE

The way seems clear for re-establishment of a Wage Stabilization Board with some scope and authority to do justice to the needs of American wage-earners.

Thus, two months after the three labor members resigned in disgust from the old board, workers have an opportunity to get both their economic and their non-economic problems considered by a responsible agency of government.

The wage board crisis need not have lasted so long. But for weeks the big business groups—like the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce—were hotly opposed to any board that might produce reasonable decisions on these disputes.

It soon became clear that industrial peace and stability were not what the Chamber and the NAM wanted. As hasty and enthusiastic converts to "full and free" collective bargaining, these two organizations sounded as if they were panting for strikes and discord. Why? Because they saw a chance to poison public opinion against labor and to use the harsh injunction features of the Taft-Hartley Act to smash union activity.

Wisely, the President's Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy—comprised of farm and public members, as well as those of labor and management—didn't think much of this recipe for chaos. Their advice, accepted by President Truman, calls for a reconstituted wage and disputes board. This new agency, of course, will face difficult problems, in which the welfare of millions of workers is involved.

The new board will have a real opportunity for great public service if it meets these issues honestly, fair-mindedly and realistically.

TONS OF PREVENTION

If—as the sages all agree—an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, then the value of two million tons should be tremendous.

The two million tons represent grain for the people of India—millons of whom face starvation in a famine brought about by natural causes.

President Truman has called upon Congress to authorize the shipment of two million tons of surplus American grain to the hungry families of India. The CIO and hundreds of other groups have enthusiastically endorsed the proposal as a humanitarian measure.

Such a gift will save lives, and it cannot help but win friends for the American people.

Yet action in Congress languishes, largely because of quiet opposition from reactionary politicians who claim they know exactly how we should deal with Asia. Because the Indian government has not always seen eye to eye with our own government, these p e a n u t statesmen would have us deprive men, women and children of food enough to keep body and soul together. So the grain-for-India bill is bottled up in the House Rules Committee.

Now, after two months of inactivity, the House may approve not a gift of grain but what is termed a "generous loan." But final action may yet be far away.

While we delay, the Russian and Chinese Communists are preparing to take the wheat from the mouths of their own hungry citizens to help feed the Indian public. Whatever propaganda value the two big Communist regimes get from this political move will be a direct gift from American reactionaries.

Some of the men who so recklessly urge a declaration of war on 450 million Chinese would do well to give additional thought to seeking the friendship of 300 million more friends in Asia.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

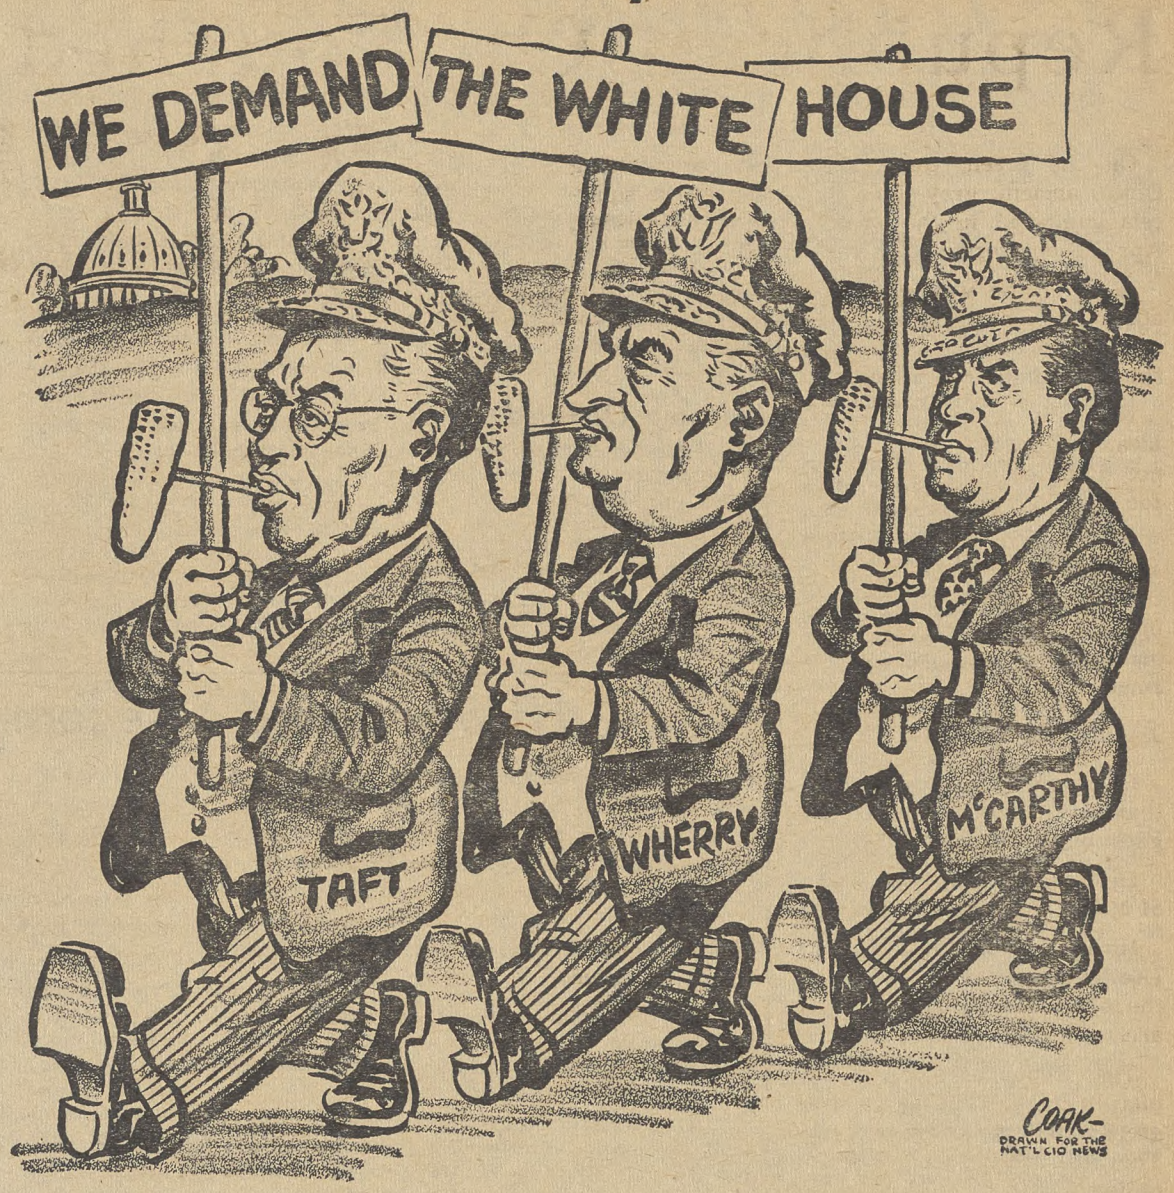
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV April 23, 1951 No. 17

Bonus Army—1951



The MacArthur Viewpoint

Excerpts from an editorial in the Washington, D. C., Post:

NOW THE REAL DEBATE is on—the debate upon the edges of which this country has been hovering for a twelve-month past. Some of the facts are still missing. Outstanding among them is the past as well as present position of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. General MacArthur charged them with a belief at one time in the MacArthur strategy. To what extent is he right? The President must not let Secretary Marshall delay a single instant in putting the record straight . . .

* * *

Aside from the loss of western Europe moreover, this country would lose the backbone of Asia by following MacArthur. The general is right when he casts out the foolish notion of some of his own supporters that the people of even Communist-run Asia are ideologically Communist.

Asians still ask each other by way of greeting, "Have you eaten?" The belly and not the mind is the chief worrier in Asia. Yet, withal, they want to run their own affairs, and, as General MacArthur testified, they are seized with a new and intoxicating nationalism.

* * *

If, as General MacArthur says (and, in the main, rightly), the Soviet's moves are the response of cold calculation, a free society cannot afford to govern itself differently. It must be sober in decision. To go off half-cocked is to court ruin and disaster. Action must be rigidly realistic when that action may influence the American destiny for a thousand years.

That is why MacArthur's text must be scrutinized with the head and not with either knees or heart. The first point to notice is that not only did he not mention any of the fighting Allies in Korea, he did not once refer to the United Nations. He did not refer to the United Nations because he knew full well that the line of policy he advocated will not commend itself to any of our covenanted allies . . . But the rest of us must think of consequences. What are they? If western Europe would not agree with us, then they would go neutral, and 270 million people and 70 million tons of steel would be lost to our armory.

* * *

General MacArthur . . . says that all we have to do is blockade the Chinese coast, help Chiang Kai-shek land on the coastline, and give him "logistical support." Blockade, no matter how you slice it, means war. So, as we found in the 'twenties, does economic sanctions. Collective reprisals against China are now under consideration at Lake Success. But the issue is highly delicate.

An all-in blockade from Vladivostok to Singapore—a tidy distance, if you look at the map—would mean a denial of raw materials to western Europe and would put Japan solely on American charity. And what does "logistical support" mean? It means that not only would we have to ferry a discarded politician, Chiang Kai-shek, across, we would have to make sure he would win.

How could it be otherwise? All our stakes would be on Chiang Kai-shek. Chiang knows that. Having run away from the Communists every time he came anywhere near them, he would never dream of trying to reconquer China without the United States in front of him, back of him, and all around him. General MacArthur can't make a warrior out of Chiang Kai-shek by thinking so.

No, the course that General MacArthur recommends is a course of all-out intervention, step by inexorable step. It is war . . . The Japanese could tell General MacArthur something about the size and the depth of the morass into which he would commit America. And Chiang Kai-shek would be the tiger on the American back.

* * *

There is a remaining item in the American strategy that General MacArthur advised. It is to end the Korean "sanctuary" in Manchuria by bombing it.

General MacArthur omits altogether to mention that we, no less than the Chinese and North Koreans, have a sanctuary. It is located in air-free South Korea and Japan. Whether this sanctuary would remain intact after we start to bomb Manchuria—none can tell. General MacArthur thinks so. The Soviet, he says, "will not necessarily mesh its action with our moves."

Perhaps not, though after Wake Island, there will be some hesitation in accepting General MacArthur's judgment on that vital score.

The Russians are sensitive as no other people are about their frontiers. But, as we say, MacArthur may be right. Our own reaction to his view of Russian policy is that it is a good one for us to follow.

Let us not mesh our actions with their moves. Let us not fight the foe that Russia picks for us and commit our force on the battlefield she selects. Let us keep the initiative and be sovereign over our own strategy.

Republican Or Touched In The Head?

By AL ZACK

On the green, tree-studded lawn surrounding Ohio's ancient, gray-stone State House, the squirrels gamboled in the weak sunlight Wednesday, Apr. 11, chattering to each other.

Wise in the way of politics, they cared little about the chatter going on behind the 12-foot stone walls that insulate the legislators from the thinking of the rest of the world.

Normally, many say, the squirrels have the right idea. But on this Wednesday they should have ignored the peanuts offered them by little children, for Apr. 11 was a strange day in the State House.

After all, the squirrels probably reasoned, what stranger thing could happen inside a State capitol than to have the air-conditioning system hooked up to the sewer system for 20 years, until someone decided to find out why the Legislature smelled?

Record Smashed

But even that record was smashed Apr. 11. On that day, another "visiting dignitary" was the guest of the State of Ohio.

He was, he said, "Sen. Paul Snow" of the State of Maine. He was, he said, a Republican.

He was interested, he said, in Ohio's tax laws. (Editor's note: The squirrels would have spotted the tipoff. They know how nutty Ohio's tax laws are.)

The Republicans, with nearly a four-to-one margin in the Ohio Legislature, were delighted to greet a fellow GOPer, especially one from Maine. They still believe that "as Maine goes, so goes the nation."

So they dragged out the red carpet, dusted off the sergeant-at-arms, polished up old cliches for introducing guest speakers and it was "Sen. Paul Snow Day" in the Ohio Legislature.

Newsmen Not Interested

If the newsmen paid only slight heed to the whole show, it was because "visiting dignitaries" are a dime a dozen. And anyway it was more exciting to sit around the pressroom chatting about a five-star general who lost his job because he ignored the lesson buck privates learn the hard way.

Today the pressroom is empty every time a visiting dignitary shows up, for the newspaper guys won't forget "Sen. Paul Snow."

On Wednesday, Apr. 11, "Sen. Paul Snow" sat in on the Senate Taxation Committee hearings. He spoke there of taxes and things, and observers said he sounded just as logical as many spokesmen for employers' groups.

As a matter of fact, many lobbyists, trained over the years to nod sagely as someone advocates taxing workers rather than employers, because workers have such tremendous profits, nodded sagely as "Sen. Paul Snow" talked.

Feted By Republicans

Then Paul Snow had his picture taken with the State Treasurer (Republican of course). He was introduced to both Houses by prominent members of the majority party (Republican, of course). He made speeches from the rostrum of each House and proclaimed the virtues of his party (Republican, of course).

He was dined by the State Chairman of one political party (yup, Republican), and taken on a tour of Columbus night clubs by some of the more youthful legislators (Republicans).

All in all, the GOP shot the works on young "Sen. Paul Snow" of Biddeford, Me.

And the "Senator" paid for his meals with sound examples of "Republican thinking."

Talked GOP Language

For example, asked why Maine potatoes are so hard to mash, he observed:—

"It's because the Department of Agriculture made us dump 90 million bushels in a ravine on the Canadian border in 1949. They paid us $2 a bushel to do it. As fast as we dumped them, the Canadians loaded them up, resacked them and sold 'em back to the U. S. for $6 a bushel. That's why they don't mash so well—they cost too much."

The Republicans murmured something about "bureaucrats," and went on dining and wining "Sen. Paul Snow."

Delayed Check-Up

That was Apr. 11. All the next day the squirrels, and the newsmen gossiped about five-stars and four-roses.

But the following day somone checked up on "Sen. Paul Snow."

They found that he wasn't a State Senator from Maine. He was, they found, an escapee from a Veterans Hospital for mental patients at Chillicothe, Ohio.

Today Paul Snow is back in the hospital. The legislators, red faces and all, are back making laws. And the red carpet has been put away.

And the squirrels? Well, they are betting (you should pardon the expression, Sen. Kefauver), that MacArthur would need more than his scrambled-eggs on his cap and an old corncob pipe for identification, before he'd get a chance to address the Ohio Legislature.

AMA Distorts Pamphlet In Flank Attack On Health Plan

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE American Medical Association has dived again into the bottomless bag of tricks it uses to fool the public about health insurance.

The story broke in the press with a bang last week. The incident shows how low the AMA will go in its current $3.5 million smear campaign, and that the campaign is directed not only against health and other social legislation, but also against the government agencies and officials who favor such measures.

The AMA has its knife out particularly for the Federal Security Administration and its head, Oscar Ewing, who has long supported a proposed national health program. As a result, the AMA would love to see the FSA's appropriation cut drastically. That's probably the leading clue to the plot against FSA that hit the press last week.

The story:

Back in 1945, FSA published a training guide for supervisors of state social work agencies called "Common Human Needs." It was a 132-page pamphlet, written by Charlotte Towle, then on loan from the Univ. of Chicago School of Social Work.

If she read the papers last week, Miss Towle must have been dumbfounded to find that now, six years later, Dr. Elmer L. Henderson, president of AMA, has suddenly accused her of having written a "viciously un-American" document. He made the charge in a telegram sent to Ewing several weeks ago and published in the AMA Journal.

Dr. Henderson claimed that the pamphlet came out in favor of "the socialized state" and he quoted from Miss Towle's piece, to prove it. Here's what he quoted —and it was all he quoted—to show that he really had the goods on the FSA this time:

"Social security and public assistance programs are a basic essential for attainment of the socialized state envisaged in democratic ideology, a way of life which so far has been realized only in slight measure."

SOUNDS pretty bad, doesn't it? Especially if you listen to the AMA's propaganda that any legislation that might benefit rank-and-file Americans smacks of a "socialized state."

Clem Whitaker and Leone Baxter, the husband and wife publicity team responsible for the AMA's propaganda, have made "socialized state" the key words of their multi-million dollar "education" drive.

But is it true that the pamphlet advocates a "socialized state" or socialistic theories? It certainly does not.

The FSA booklet is a technical piece, written solely for social workers. It's full of "trade" terms that have specialized meanings, and is pretty dull reading for outsiders. Its purpose is to give social workers a general understanding of the people who are forced to seek some kind of public relief assistance, in the light of modern advances in psychology and sociology. It deals with how to treat children, adolescents, old people, or the disabled, who may need public assistance.

There is nothing whatever in the pamphlet that could be considered as having anything even remotely to do with a "socialized state" as the AMA uses the term.

For "socialize" happens to be a much-used word among social service workers. To them it has a special meaning, just as certain medical words may have a scientific meaning quite different from their common definition.

Social workers have good authority for the way they use the word "socialize."

As Webster's New International Distionary defines it, the word "socialize" means:

(1) To render social; esp. to fit or train for society or a social environment; as to socialize children or corrigible prisoners. (2) To adapt to social needs or uses; to use for social purposes . . . . (3) To render socialistic in nature; or to conform to, or regulate by, the theories or practices of socialism.

THE AMA wants to scare the public with the third meaning; but Miss Towle was certainly quite within her rights in using the phrase "socialized state" in Webster's first two definitions.

As a matter of fact the pamphlet is sprinkled with liberal uses of the word "socialized"—socialized ends, socialized citizens, socialized behavior, socialized understanding, socialized assistance, are some of them.

The AMA's attack on FSA for having published "a viciously un-American" pamphlet was a complete phony. It was intended to deceive the press and the public, which apparently it did.

When the FSA last week ordered the Government Printing Office to burn all copies of a pamphlet completely beyond reproach, the AMA could cut another notch in its belt.

Propaganda Payoff: House Votes Curb On FSA Publicity Office

The American Medical Association timed its newest "propaganda" attack on the Federal Security Administration just right, and it succeeded.

The story of the six-year-old "socialized" pamphlet, shown up elsewhere on this page, broke just a day or so before the House was due to consider the FSA appropriation for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Result: the House passed a special anti-propaganda rider aimed directly at Oscar Ewing, FSA head. By a vote of 156-88, the lower chamber adopted an amendment by Rep. Smith (R., Wis.), stating that "no funds provided herein shall be used for publicity or propaganda not heretofore authorized by Congress."

Smith, echoing the AMA, charged that Ewing was "constantly propagandizing the country on socialized medicine."

The Senate has yet to act.

Anti-Indian Bias In West Protested

A FORCEFUL reminder that original Americans suffer discrimination came last week when the Association on American Indian Affairs held its annual meeting in New York.

"It is painfully obvious that they (civil rights) are freely and habitually violated in almost all states with a sizable Indian population," said Oliver LaFarge, president of the association.

He described police brutality against Indians as "chronic," and said it had almost reached the point "of a perpetual open season on Indians."

"In large areas of the United States," he went on, "Indians are treated as sub-human, as second-class citizens, because their skins are a trifle darker.

"Even their freedom to come and go is pretty theoretic. There is no such freedom for people so shackled by ignorance, so circumscribed by paternalism—benevolent or not."

LaFarge said paternalism by the federal government is holding back Indians from full status as citizens by depriving them of "the most fundamental of all rights—the right to make their own mistakes."

Overwork Kills Pace-Setter

WLADYSLAW TRUCHAN, the Stakhanovite speedup and stretchout worker whose production exploits the Communists held up as models for Polish workers, is dead.

He worked himself to death, according to word received in Washington by the National Catholic Welfare Council news service. He died of physical exhaustion in a hospital at Katowice, Poland, the NCCW was advised.

Truchan, an old party member, returned to Poland from France in 1947. He began his career as a Stakhanovite worker in 1949 and specialized in breaking records in the Kosciusko steel mill.

As his production went up, the Communists raised quotas for other workers to drive them to his level, causing much suffering from overwork. Truchan himself collapsed in a year.

PRES. JACOB S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers unveils the plaque at the $1 million Sidney Hillman Health Center, New York City, while Mrs. Sidney Hillman and other officials of the union look on. Left to right, Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, executive Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg; Dr. Morris A. Brand, medical director of the center; Mrs. Hillman, Potofsky, Vice Pres. Louis Hollander, Vice Pres. Anthony Froise and Vice Pres. Abraham Miller. Hollander is also manager of the New York Joint Board of ACWA, whose members the center will serve. Another medical center will be opened in Philadelphia.

Health Center Dedicated To Sidney Hillman; Research On Heart Ailments Also Planned

A MILLION - dollar health center, dream of the New York Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers for many years, has become reality. Completed, staffed, and open for business, it was dedicated Apr. 14, in impressive ceremonies in New York.

The six-story building, in the heart of New York's garment district, will be known by the name of the late President of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers—Sidney Hillman.

It will provide complete medical service for 40,000 members of the Joint Board in the metropolitan area, and the union hopes eventually to make it into a health center for the community as a whole.

ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky, dedicating the building, said:

"As we admire this new center of healing, we realize what a far cry it is from the sweatshop days of 1910 and 1912. It is a living memorial to the great Sidney Hillman, who emerged out of that dark past and fought for institutions such as this, until the day he died. This center is his dream realized. He dreamt of serving and protecting the membership. His life was dedicated to that end."

The capital needed to complete and staff the center was created as a joint fund by the Clothing Manufacturers' Exchange and the New York Joint Board. Cost of medical services will be met the first year by payment of $10 additional dues per member.

The building is equipped to examine and treat 750 patients per week, all by appointment. Services include complete health examinations, laboratory screening tests, all other tests for ambulant patients, and referrals to and treatments by consultants, when necessary.

The center itself is guided on policy matters by a medical advisory council of five of the most distinguished physicians in New York. Its medical director is Dr. Morris A. Brand. It is staffed by 75 part-time doctors, including chiefs of service and consultants in each branch of medicine, and 25 full-time technicians, nurses and lay personnel.

THE center contains the latest in laboratory equipment, a modern pharmacy where drugs will be dispensed at nominal costs, physical therapy rooms, suites for eye, ear, nose and throat examinations and a room for minor surgery and urology, X-ray and photo fluorogram laboratories are completely equipped to aid in making diagnoses, and X-ray therapy also will be available.

At the dedication ceremonies, Louis Hollander, New York Joint Board manager, announced that the center had set aside $250,000 for a research program in heart and circulatory diseases and arthritis.

"One of the problems of great concern to research workers today is why arteriosclerosis and heart disease occur with different frequency among different national and social groups," Hollander said, "and to discover, first, the actual frequency in different groups, and second, whether the variation is due to hereditary or to social and dietary factors.

"The health center has members representing many nationalities. By cooperation with other agencies, other ethnic groups could be studied also."

Oscar Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, spoke at a luncheon following the dedication ceremonies.

"Here in the heart of the clothing district," Ewing said in part, "from which Sidney Hillman emerged as a national leader, you have set an example for the world of the way in which the minimum benefits of governmental social programs can be supplemented by the initiative, the imagination, the vision and the realism of a wisely-led and self-respecting union membership."

Phila. Hillman Center To Open Soon

The CIO Clothing Workers will dedicate a second Sidney Hillman Medical Center on May 5 in Philadelphia.

Like the one dedicated Apr. 14 in New York, it is financed jointly by the union and the employers. Vice President Alben W. Barkley will be guest of honor at the dedication. Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers will speak.

Operation of the two-story center, which will be staffed by 40 local physicians, will be under a 24-member board of trustees, divided between the union and management.

For the first year it will be under the chairmanship of Charles Weinstein, manager of the union's Philadelphia Joint Board.

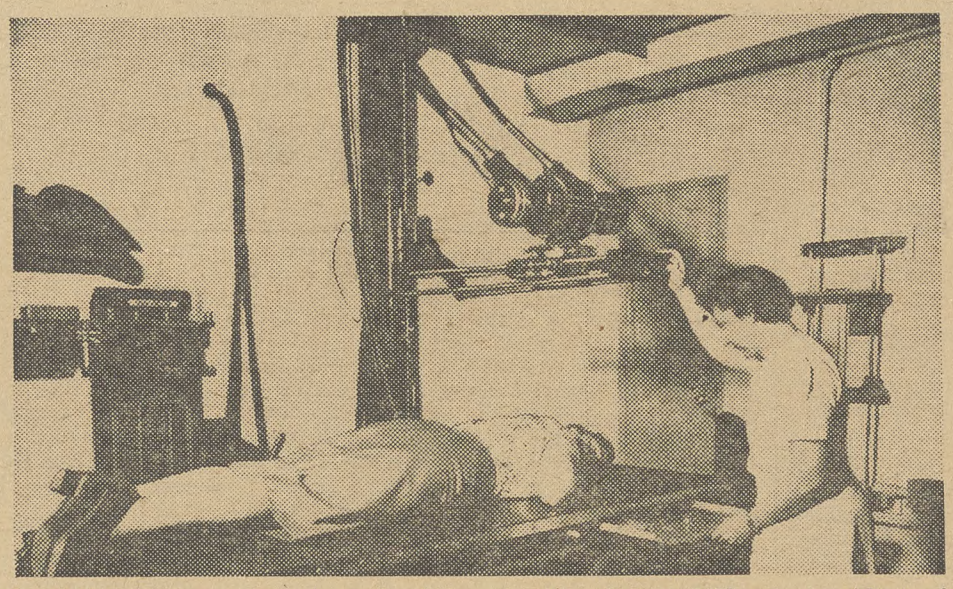
Laundry Workers Win Pensions

More than 20,000 laundry workers are eligible for retirement benefits which became effective Apr. 1 in the New York area.

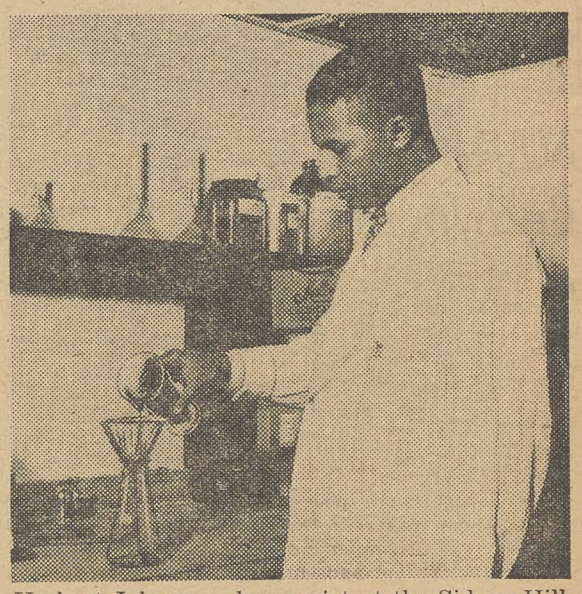
Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the CIO Clothing Workers, with which the joint laundry board is affiliated, said the pension plan at first will provide only $300 a year, in addition to social security, but benefits will be increased as accumulated reserves permit.

Rosenblum said introduction of the pension plan makes the laundries under ACWA jurisdiction the first service industry in the country to provide employes a complete welfare plan at no cost to them.

The benefits include health, life, accident, maternity, hospitalization and surgical benefits.



X-RAY Technican at work at the Sidney Hillman Health Center at 16 East 16th Street, New York City, which was dedicated Apr. 14. A memorial to the late Sidney Hillman, president of the CIO Clothing Workers, the center will serve 40,000 joint board members in the New York metropolitan area.



Herbert Johnson, pharmacist at the Sidney Hillman Health Center, mixes a prescription. Drugs will be dispenssd to members at cost from a modern pharmacy.

Strikebreakers Cause Textile Walkout Violence

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

STORIES OF picket line disorder in the CIO Textile Workers' strike against 42 southern mills have been printed by many of the nation's newspapers.

A survey of struck mills in the Piedmont region last week showed that when flare-ups had occurred, they were the direct result of strikebreaking action by either companies or individuals.

The charges of "violence" and "intimidation of people who want to work" leveled at the union by southern management through the press have a familiar ring. They have been used effectively in previous strikes to becloud the real issue. Mill owners are hoping they will work again.

In Danville, Va., for example, where Dan River Mills broke a strike in 1930 by hammering home the idea through the newspapers that the strikers were responsible for acts of violence, history was repeating itself.

Under the watchful eyes of more than 60 Virginia State police, sent in by anti-labor Gov. John Battle, scabs have daily been herded into the company's huge Schoolfield plant.

The only disorder to date occurred early last week when a strikebreaker, riding in the car of a company supervisor, shot and wounded two pickets. The following day, the town's only morning paper quoted B. D. Browder, vice-president of the mills, as blaming the incident on "acts of violence by a small group of reckless people whose ranks were enlarged by a noticeable number of outside agitators brought in to stir up trouble."

Under a banner headline, "Violence Blamed on Agitators," the local paper said:

"Dan River Mills blamed violence which broke out at the Schoolfield plant early today on the work of professional agitators.

"State police lobbed tear gas bombs into the swirling crowd of pickets after traffic had been blocked, cars damaged and an outburst of pistol fire resulted in a slight wound to a striker."

But the Textile Workers saw the affair in a somewhat clearer light.

"It is significant that the first violence in the Dan River strike was the shooting of two pickets by a strikebreaker," Pres. Emil Rieve of TWUA pointed out, "and that this shooting was used by the State police for an unwarranted tear-gassing of the picket lines, resulting in injury to a number of other strikers.

"This action was unquestionably initiated by the company. Otherwise, armed strikebreakers would not be riding in the cars of company supervisors prepared to shoot without excuse."

The blocking of traffic occurred when a number of pickets, led by Rev. Charles Webber, president of the Virginia CIO Council, formed a "human carpet" by stretching out on the ground in front of the main gates of the plant. Webber and 19 others were arrested and charged with "preventing free access into the premises of the Dan River Mills."

IN GREENSBORO, N. C., Harry Austin, Jr., picket at the Proximity Mill of the Cone chain, was attacked by a knife-wielding strikebreaker leaving the plant. Twenty-four stitches were required for a wound in his stomach. The youth's father is president of the Proximity TWUA local. The attacker was charged with simple assault, despite the seriousness of the wound.

The case was the first incident of violence in that situation. William Billingsley, manager of the TWUA Greensboro-Burlington Joint Board, declared:

"As always, it is the strikebreakers who start violence. If the company were willing to meet its responsibilities to its employes and sit down and bargain in a genuine attempt to reach agreement, such incidents as this would not occur."

Clarence Cone, vice president of Cone Mills Corp., said the trouble "seems to be an isolated incident" and "hoped there would be no more." Here, as at Dan River, the company has recruited strikebreakers from neighboring towns in a determined effort to continue operations.

Auto loads of non-strikers attempted to drive through picket lines at Cedartown Textiles, Inc., in Cedartown, Ga. In the ensuing scuffle, one car got through but another was overturned.

POLICE hauled away 19 pickets, including two newspaper men from the Rockmart, Ga., Journal, who said a camera belonged to one of them was smashed.

Their editor, E. C. Saunders, roundly condemned the police action. He called the arrests a violation of constitutional rights of the newsmen who, he said, "were there to get the news."

At Goldsboro, N. C., Clement Kiliner, a strikebreaker at the Bordon Cotton Mill, was arrested on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon. The warrant was signed by Walter Parris, a striking TWUA member, who claimed Kiliner threatened to kill him.

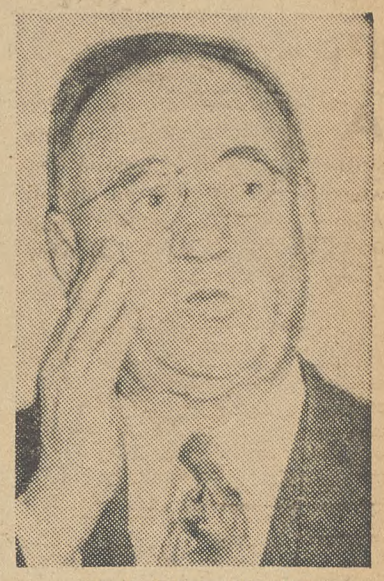
It was much the same picture in all the seven southern states where more than 40,000 TWUA members are out. Most mills, including Dan River, were passing the buck to the Wage Stabilization Board in Washington in an effort to avoid offering more than a 2% wage increase.

Frank T. deVyver, vice president of Erwin Mills, Inc., in a letter sent to 6000 employes, claimed that "the Wage Board in Washington is going to settle how much wage increase you are going to get."

At the end of last week, there was no indication that any of the struck mills was in a hurry to follow the example of the Gold-Tex Corp., Rock Hill, S. C., which signed a contract with the union Apr. 11. The strike there lasted but 11 days.

Basis of that agreement was acceptance by TWUA of a 13c an hour package, including a 10c an hour wage increase, 1c an hour for additional insurance, two additional paid holidays making a total of three, and retirement-severance pay.

TWO HUSKY MEMBERS of the Virginia State police, complete with riot clubs, stand guard at the Schoolfield plant of the Dan River Mills as pickets maintain an orderly line. More than 60 State troopers were sent into Danville by Gov. John Battle. A staff member of a Senate Labor subcommittee has been sent from Washington to make an investigation.



Emil Rieve Speaks

The Textile Workers Union president tells a big audience of Cone Mill workers in the Guilford County Courthouse, Greensboro, N. C., that southern textile mill owners can afford a wage increase now.

Rieve Scores NAM Head's Hypocrisy

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve charged last week that William H. Ruffin, head of the Erwin Mills chain, does not follow in his own plants the principles he "defends" as a spokesman for business.

Ruffin is also president of the National Association of Manufacturers and a big speechmaker.

Rieve noted a talk made by Ruffin in Syracuse, N. Y., on Apr. 14, when the NAM head called for "genuine collective bargaining" and the "American way," rather than "government interference" in labor-management relations.

"Almost 6000 workers in four plants of the Erwin Mills are now on strike because your company refuses to engage in genuine collective bargaining," Rieve said in a public statement.

"It would be more realistic, I feel, to judge Mr. Ruffin's position on these matters from the actions of the corporations he heads, rather than from his words."

Overseer Helps Make Strikers Of Scabs

Striking members of TWUA Local 250 at Erwin, N. C., held a street dance one evening last week, right outside the main gate of the plant. Inside the mill, the 75 scabs the company had been able to round up were gathered around an open window, watching the dancers and listening to the music.

Suddenly, an overseer appeared at the window, ordered the strike breakers back to their jobs, slammed the window shut and then proceeded to nail it down. The next morning only 25 scabs showed up for work. Normally, the mill employs 2000 production workers.

NLRB Aide Tells Mill To Stop Beating TWUA Members

A NATIONAL Labor Relations Board trial examiner has backed up charges made against the American Thread Co., Tallapoosa, Ala., by the CIO Textile Workers.

These same charges, when included in a Senate Labor subcommittee report, were pooh-poohed by Republican leaders in Congress, but the trial examiner not only bears them out, but adds to them.

In an intermediate order directing the thread company to stop assaults on union members, the examiner tells in detail the manner in which the company had a worker beaten because of union activity.

The worker, Earlene Rochester, attempted to pull company goons off her husband in a fight outside the company gates. One of them grabbed her "around the neck with the crook of his left arm, and hit her a number of times in the face with his right fist, finally knocking her unconscious against a telephone pole nearby."

During this whole occurrence another goon stood by with a shotgun and threatened to "blow the head off" a cab driver who tried to help the woman. LPA

THEY MAY NOT LOOK it but these pickets at the Erwin Mill, Erwin, N. C., are very determined men. Their determination has had a telling effect on a dwindling force of strikebreakers who scurry in and out of the mill at shift changes. At last count, the company had 75 of them in the mill, which normally employes 2000 workers.

Social Security Urged For U. S. Workers

THE CIO LAST week asked congressional support for the pending Lesinski Bill (H. R. 3414), which would extend social security coverage to employes and officers of the U. S. government.

Such workers are covered by federal retirement benefits which are restricted to those who have worked at least five years, and for which they pay 6% of their earnings. The Lesinski Bill would cover them with both federal retirement and social security.

It would reduce payments to 3¼%, of which 1½% would go to social security and the balance to the retirement fund. Higher-paid employes would continue to pay 6% into the retirement fund on that part of their salaries above $3600.

Pension payments would be increased by as much as $70 a month by the Lesinski Bill.

The CIO's position was made known in a letter to Chairman Doughton (D. N.C.) of the House Ways and Means Committee. It was signed jointly by Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee and president of the Textile Workers, and Nathan Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept.

It noted that opposition to similar measures in the past was expressed by those who feared social security coverage would mean the end of the federal retirement system. The letter pointed out that the Lesinski Bill "clearly supplements" the government's pension system "and presents no threat now or in the future as to the measure of protection for federal employes."

"Our collective bargaining programs, which are working out so well in practice recognize the principle of integretion," said Rieve and Cowan.

"We could not endorse any bill which did not maintain present benefits and look beyond them to improvements of benefits to all.

"WE BELIEVE that federal employment should draw on the best resources of mind and skill of the nation's manpower. We also know that flexibility of demand is essential for fullest utilization of manpower on the federal payrolls.

"For this reason we have observed the fact that there is a large movement in and out of the federal staffs in most of the federal departments.

"Most of this movement occurs during the first five years of employment.

"These people are, in effect, penalized by gaps in the Social Security coverage since any vested right to the federal retirement benefit does not extend below five years of employment."

Asst. Labor Secy. Creasey Urges Curb On 'Wetbacks'

ASSISTANT Labor Secy. Creasey has called for legislation to end the "menace" of Mexican laborers who enter the U. S. illegally by wading across the Rio Grande.

Wetbacks often are recruited and aided in their illegal entry by unscrupulous American employers who want them for cheap farm labor, Creasey declared. They are never paid more than $2.50 a day, he said.

The President's Commission on Migratory Labor in its recent report criticized the government for failure to halt the use of cheap foreign labor in the U. S.

Rep. Celler (D., N. Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, has appointed a subcommittee headed by Rep. Walter (D., Pa.), to conduct an investigation "without fear or favor" . . . "let the chips fall where they may."

Celler predicted many men in high places would be linked with the investigation. After preliminary research, the subcommittee will hold public hearings and a field investigation along the Mexican border.

Celler agreed that large numbers of migrants are needed to harvest crops, but added, "It is quite another thing to allow these wetbacks to come in and do this work at starvation wages."

He said the committee had found that during the Texas frost in March, immigration inspectors picked up 8191 wetbacks in three Texas counties. At the same time, he said, 5602 American farm workers were on relief in these same counties.

"I'd like to tell that program director what I think of his series of patriot programs."

ARA Sends SOS For Radiomen

Pres. William R. Steinberg, of the CIO American Radio Association, disclosed last week that there is a desperate shortage of radio ship operators on vessels carrying defense cargoes.

He said that at least five ships are tied up in different ports due to lack of radio operators. Operators with six months experience who have been licensed since 1940, he said, are urgently needed.

Interested parties should communicate with ARA offices in New York, Baltimore, New Orleans, Houston, San Francisco or Seattle, Wash.

Mazey Scores Briggs On Junk Pact Retention

THE FAILURE of Briggs Manufacturing Co., Detroit, Mich., to keep its promise to cancel its scrap metal contract with Carl Renda was attacked last week by Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey, of the CIO Auto Workers.

Renda is a son-in-law of Santo Perrone, Detroit underworld leader.

He acquired the firm's scrap contract, which is worth an estimated $100,000 a year to him, after a UAW walkout at Briggs during which strikers were beaten and threatened by gangsters and thugs. The story was given in detail before the Kefauver Senate Crime Investigating Committee during a session in Detroit.

Mazey was one of the witnesses. After the committee sessions, the union formally demanded that the contract be cancelled. Upon the company's failure to comply, charges of unfair labor practices were filed with the National Labor Relations Board. Mazey later said the firm had agreed to end the relationship through which it was losing thousands of dollars a year.

"MY INFORMATION that the salvage contract would be cancelled April 1 came directly from W. O. (Spike) Briggs, Jr., in a telephone conversation to my office on Mar. 8," Mazey said on Apr. 15.

"It was information voluntarily offered me by Mr. Briggs. He called me. I didn't call him.

"I do not know what pressures were brought to bear upon the company since that time to force it to change its position into a declaration of faith in Renda as set forth in its answer to our NLRB charges.

"As to the company's denial that it is losing money on the Renda contract, the union wishes only to repeat that our assertion to that effect is based upon the sworn testimony of a former financial officer of the company which has been widely publicized in the Detroit press and which is a matter of official and public record.

"Finally, the union wishes only to add that we would be glad to see the factual matters involved in this case tried in open court with the witnesses to whom we have referred in our charge and in our public statements called to testify under oath. We are convinced that under such circumstances this whole illegal conspiracy will become obvious."

CIO Maritime Unions Open 150 Contracts

THREE CIO maritime unions have served notice on more than 150 East, West and Gulf Coast steamship operators that existing agreements which expire June 15 will be opened on approximately 40 new contract proposals.

The three unions—National Maritime, Marine Engineers and American Radio Association—notified the employers, as required under the Taft-Hartley Act, of intention to modify the contracts.

Heading the list were requests for a 40-hour week, a 25% wage increase and a four-week vacation schedule after one year of employment.

Union proposals were sent to Frank J. Taylor, chairman of the employes' bargaining committee, and to about 100 individual companies having agreements.

Taylor said in New York that his committee had requested a list of the specific demands of each union for study before a meeting date for discussion could be set.

Present basic wage scales for engineers range from $378.60 monthly for third assistant engineers on liberty ships up to $696.95 for chiefs. Radio officers on the same type vessels are paid $352.13 a month, while ablebodied seamen, firemen, oilers and watertenders receive $248.41 a month.

Meanwhile Pres. Joseph Curran of the NMU revealed that his union has petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for an election among all employes of the steward's departments on vessels operated by members of the Pacific Maritime Association.

The NMU has conducted an intensive organizing drive for the past three months among rank and file members of the Communist-dominated Marine Cooks and Stewards Union. Curran said that more than the necessary 30% of the employed stewards have signed pledge cards with the NMU since the start of the drive.

THE NMU asked for a consent election, but there appeared little likelihood that the other parties concerned would agree to it. Curran said that approximately 3000 MCS members are eligible to vote.

The MCS, which was expelled from the CIO last year because of its Communist domination, has been trying every trick in the book to hinder the NMU's membership campaign.

In addition, it has brought in Pres. Harry Bridges of the Longshoresmen's Union—also expelled from CIO as Communist controlled—who promised support.

This move backfired when the vice-president of Bridges' home local in San Francisco declared the Longshoremen had not gone on record in support of MCS and would not do so.

Factory Jobs Hit Postwar Peak

Factory employment in February and March reached 16 million, a postwar peak, according to the U. S. Dept. of Labor. Total non-farm employment was 45.8 million.

The department also said 50,000 unfilled jobs were on the rolls of state employment offices, with the largest demand for engineers. In the skilled field, heaviest unfilled demand was for machinists, tool and die makers, machine and tool operators, sheet metal workers, electricians, skilled aircraft assembly workers, airplane and auto mechanics, and repairmen.

Anti-Inflation Program ADA Parley Subject

Americans for Democratic Action has called a conference in Washington May 18, of farm, labor and business representatives to "work out a plan of action to stop inflation."

ADA warned that a "timid and confused anti-inflation program threatens serious dislocations in our domestic economy," and called on the Office of Price Stabilization "to do its job of stopping price increases instead of sanctioning them."

High Court Dampens Spirits Of Medicos

A U. S. District Judge at Portland, Ore., dismissed an anti-monopoly suit against the Oregon Physicians Service last October and the medicos cheered. But now the U. S. Supreme Court has agreed to look into the government's charges.

The government brought suit in October, 1948, against the Oregon Medical Society, the Oregon Physicians' Service, and eight county medical societies. It charged the groups conspired to suppress the business of privately-controlled medical insurance companies by disciplining doctors who co-operated with them, by agreeing not to compete with each other, and by limiting the type of medical care offered.

CIO Backs Bill For U. S. Aid To Local Health Centers

KENNETH KRAMER, director of the Insurance and Health Dept. of the CIO Textile Workers, told the House Interstate Commerce Committee recently that the CIO vigorously supports pending bills to give federal aid to local public health centers and services.

Kramer pointed out that the bills would be of particular benefit in small communities and in defense areas.

Many small communities, he said, have "substandard housing, substandard public safety, substandard streets and schools, and substandard public health facilities. These are not rich communities, the people do not earn high wages and their ability to be taxed is stretched now to the breaking point."

Kramer said that the bills would fill a vital need in this type of community by supplying "a self-starter for local action . . ."

"Federal grants-in-aid will give most American communities the necessary boost toward full health departments," he added.

The American Medical Association has not directly opposed the measures, but is seeking to tack on amendments turning control of local units over to the medical societies.

Most Lush U. S. Era For Business NOW

AMERICAN corporations are not only making the highest profits in history—but their rate of return on investment is also rising to new peaks.

A National City Bank of New York survey shows that some 3300 companies averaged a profit of 13.3% on their capital investment in 1950. For each $100 of investment, the companies netted $13.30 profits —after taxes—during the year.

A year before they had made "only" $11 on each $100 of investment.

Profit, in terms of sales of goods, also rose steeply. It averaged 7.7% for the 3300 companies in 1950, compared to 6.6% in 1949.

But the profit return on investment is the figure that both businessmen and Uncle Sam's tax experts look at. Here are the profit returns on a sample of the industries cited by the New York bank:

Industry	No. of Firms	Profit Return 1949	Profit Return 1950
Iron & Steel	55	11.6%	15.5%
Automobile	26	30.2%	32.3%
Household appliances	44	15.4%	22.3%
Electrical equipment, radio and television	83	17.3%	23.0%
Cotton goods	38	9.9%	12.7%
Silk and rayon	17	13.1%	19.7%
Chemical products	65	17.1%	21.3%
Glass products	10	19.8%	23.6%
Manufacturing	1693	13.9%	17.1%
Trade	178	13.4%	14.8%
Public utilities	293	8.8%	9.8%

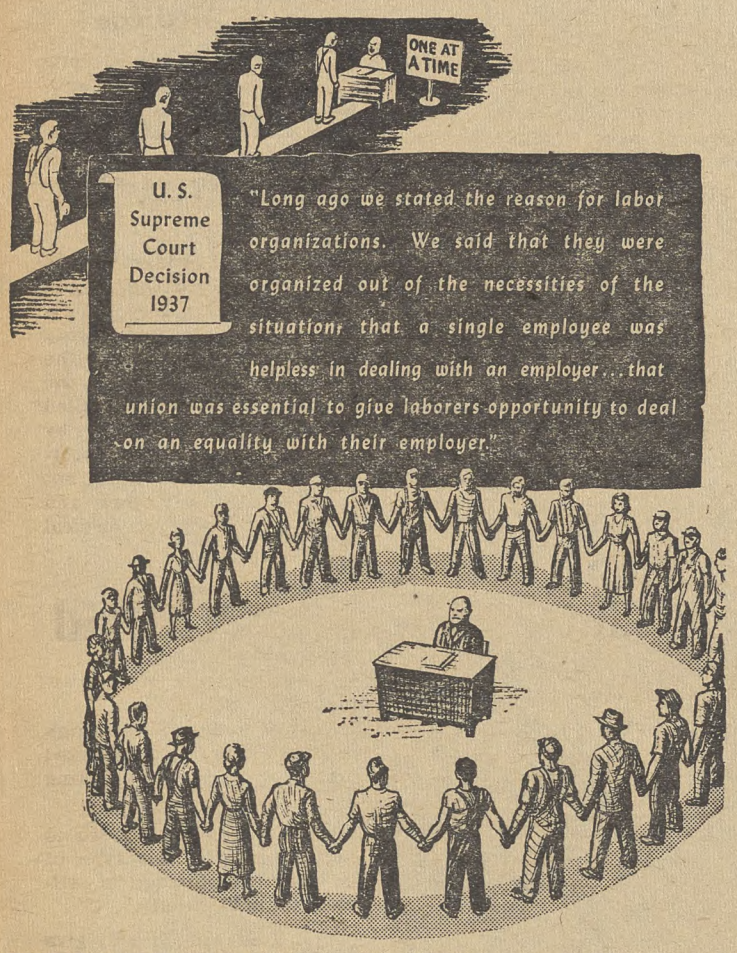
Decreased return on investment was reported for only one general group—financial firms. They netted 9% profit, down one-tenth of one percent from 1949.

Martin Hits Raids On Press Freedom

The conference of white collar unions called by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions opened last week in Brussels with a blast by Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newpaper Guild against new restrictions on the free press.

Martin assailed the Peron government's seizure of La Prensa of Buenos Aires, one of Argentina's leading independent newspapers, and Spain's withdrawal of press credentials from Sam Pope Brewer, New York Times correspondent, as "new and renewed crimes of tyranny, of despotism and of suppression."

The conference brought together representatives of non-manual workers in nearly a score of countries to discuss mutual problems and the possibility of forming an ICFTU sub-group. Others attending from the CIO are Vice Pres. John J. Moran of the Communications Workers, and Helen Rachlin, New York, president of Local 1707, Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.



GOING LIKE HOTCAKES: The CIO Dept. of Education and Research reports that it already has sold 18,000 copies of this new poster, which comes in two sizes. The large size, 17 by 22 inches, sells for 25c a copy; 10 copies for $1. The small size, 8½ by 11 inches, sells for 10c a copy; 20 copies for $1, and 100 copies for $3.50. Address the department at 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Rumely Found Guilty Of Contempt Of Congress

By GERVASE N. LOVE

EDWARD A. RUMELY, executive secretary of the tory Committee for Constitutional Government, was found guilty of contempt of Congress on Apr. 18.

A jury before Judge Richmond B. Keech in Federal Court in Washington took less than 20 minutes to find that he was in contempt on three counts.

He had refused to tell the Buchanan House Lobby Investigating Committee who paid for large orders of books and other extreme right wing literature which the CCG published and distributed for the purchasers.

Rumley faces a year in jail and a fine $1000 fine. Judge Keech said he would impose sentence on Apr. 27. Rumely was freed in bail and through his attorney, Neil Burkinshaw, announced he will appeal the verdict "as far as I can go."

In his defense Rumely tried to distort the Bill of Rights and freedom of the press into a cloak for his refusal to answer the lobby probers' queries. But in charging the jury, Judge Keech said the jurors need only find he had made "willful default" in order to find him guilty.

Any reason he might advance for refusing to produce the desired information, the court said, was "immaterial."

"There need not have been an evil or bad purpose (for the refusal)," Judge Keech said. "Even if a witness believe he has a legal right to refuse to produce information, that belief is immaterial. A witness decides at his own peril what his legal duties are."

For years Rumely has been collecting about $500,000 a year from timid proponents of the status quo, including some of the country's wealthiest and most reactionary Republicans, who feared their wealth might be trimmed by first the New Deal, then the Fair Deal, or by organized labor, equitable taxation or decent social legislation.

People who contribute up to $500 a year to an organization like the CCG do not have to be listed in reports under the Lobby Act, those who give more do. The CCG accepted "gifts" only up to $490.

The bulk of CCG income comes not from gifts, but from "purchases" of books and pamphlets which preach that the government should go back to Hoover or pre-Hoover ideas.

The CCG has screamed about what it calls "creeping socialism" over collective bargaining legislation, river valley developments, federal housing aids and rent controls, social security, unemployment compensation.

In fact, it has opposed just about every type of legislation or planning that might benefit the average American, rather than the wealthy. It is this thinking that the "purchased" literature reflects.

WHEN A "purchaser" buys books or pamphlets from the CCG, they aren't delivered at his door. Instead they are sent to a list of recipients prepared by the CCG which includes colleges, schools, churches, libraries, etc., and thus become "gifts" to educational or religious institutions. The purpose, according to the Lobby Investigating Committee, is to influence Congress indirectly.

Rumely also lined up a number of friends of the CCG in Congress who inserted in the Congressional Record CCG propaganda—much of it in the form of inspired speeches.

The CCG later purchased these in reprint form through the same friendly members, and sent them through the mails postage free, under the members' franks, by the million—235 million pieces in eight years, according to testimony given before the Lobby Investigating Committee and repeated during Rumely's trial.

The CCG—founded by Frank Gannet, Rochester, N. Y., newspaper publisher—has been turned into a good thing by Rumely.

HE COLLECTS a 4% commission on every book sold above $16,000 in sales. He also has created its numerous offspring, such as the Fighters for Freedom, America's Future, and the Constitution and Free Enterprise Foundation, all of which spread CCG propaganda lavishly.

In a speech in the Congressional Record last Aug. 29. Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) denounced Rumely as a "plain, unadulterated native Fascist," and the CCG as "his committee for a Fascist government in the United States." He described the donors to Rumely's treasure chest as "those unthinking, irrational millionaire suckers who are counting upon Ed Rumely and his ilk to save their America."

The next day the House voted to cite Rumely, despite the anguished squeals of distressed Republicans who were accused of seeking to protect the contributors to their campaign war chests —the same wealthy industrialists and financiers who feed the CCG kitty. Rep. Buchanan (R. Pa.), chairman of the Lobby Investigating Committee, has been subjected to uncreasing abuse from the extreme right wing ever since.

Rumely was cited some years ago for a comparable refusal to answer the questions of a congressional committee investigating lobbies, but was found not guilty.

He was conviced of violating the Trading-With-the-Enemy Act shortly after World War I because of his purchase, with German funds, of the old New York Mail for use as a German propaganda device. He was later pardoned by President Coolidge.

Brehm On Trial In Kickback Case

Two former office employes testified in U. S. District Court in Washington last week that they kicked back parts of their salaries—paid by the U. S. government — to Rep. Walter E. Brehm, Ohio Republican.

Brehm was on trial on charges of violating the Corrupt Practices Act, which forbids a member of Congress to receive campaign funds from federal employes.

Mrs. Clara Soliday, 75-year-old former clerk, testified that she kicked back from $100 to $240 a month of her salary during the three years she worked in his office, and that whenever she got a raise, Brehm "got most of it." Mrs. Emma Craven, also a former clerk, told the court she returned $210 a month for the five months she worked for him.

Pass Work Ailment Bill

The Vermont Legislature has passed the State's first occupational disease law and sent it to the governor for signature. It provides for a maximum of $4000 for death from silicosis or asbestosis if injury occurs within two years after exposure, death within seven years.

UE Grows More Like The Boss Daily, NLRB Case Shows

THE UNITED Electrical Workers, expelled from the CIO because of Communist domination, has failed in a phony publicity stunt at the big General Electric Co. plant in Lynn, Mass.

A UE petition for a new election at Lynn, where the workers voted for the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers last year, has been thrown out by the National Labor Relations Board.

The production and maintenance workers and the salaried (white collar) workers have been traditionally included in the same bargaining unit at Lynn. In other GE plants, they are in separate unions.

Last years, GE sought to have the units reconstituted and separated for the election between IUE-CIO and UE. Both organizations objected. The NLRB ruled the historic units would remain.

Two weeks ago, UE petitioned for a new representation election for the production and maintenance workers only, and in only one of the Lynn plants, the River Works. In effect, UE was now seeking what the company had sought a year ago.

The board promptly dismissed the petition as "untimely and premature."

Sidney Cushing, president of IUE-CIO Lynn Local 201, says the UE is the joke of the town.

Murray Honors Ernest Bevin

CIO Pres. Philip Murray cabled condolences to Mrs. Ernest Bevin following the death of her husband, the former British Foreign Minister who died Apr. 14, about a month after illness forced his retirement. Murray said:

"Please accept my deepest personal sympathy with you in your great loss. Ernest was a great friend and devoted his life to the betterment of his fellowmen.

"Both for myself and on behalf of the American workers organized in the Congress of Industrial Organizations I want to convey to you our sense of sharing in your grief over the loss of this stalwart fighter for humanity."

Similar expressions were also sent by the Canadian Congress of Labour.

IUE Urges Action On Job Losses

THE CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers has sent a delegation to various government officials protesting transitional unemployment in the radio and television industry.

The union says that more than 20,000 workers in the industry are now laid off. It proposed a five-point program to solve the problem.

IUE attributed the layoffs to a breakdown in the mobilization agencies' electronics program; government credit regulations which, in effect, limit sale of radio and television sets, and refusal of the companies to share any sacrifices required in the transition period.

The delegation visited Manly Fleishmann, administrator of the National Production Authority; Harry K. Clark, vice-chairman of the Munitions Board of the Department of Defense, and R. M. Evans, member of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System.

IUE was represented by Daniel Arnold of Camden, N. J., chairman of the union's Radio and Television Conference Board; David Lasser, IUE-CIO national office staff member; and several local union officials.

"The electronics industry is going in two directions at once," Arnold declared.

"While 20,000 workers are laid off at present, the industry will soon be faced with the necessity of recruiting 50,000 to 100,000 in addition to the present labor force in order to meet production schedules for military electronics."

ARNOLD said that radio and television workers earned an average of 15c an hour less than in manufacturing generally, and thus "did not share in the industry's unprecedented prosperity last year. The industry is well able to shoulder a portion of the cost of retaining this labor force for later use for military production."

The IUE delegation proposed this program:

1. That the radio and television plants pay a special unemployment benefit to those laid off —this money to come from 1950 profits. It was estimated that a fund of $12.5 million—less than 10% of the industry's 1950 profits after taxes—would pay 20,000 jobless workers $40 a week for 15 weeks.

2. That the radio and television plants begin immediately to reconvert physically to handle prime and sub-contracts for military electronics.

3. That the labor force in the radio and television industry be given intensive training in the military electronics field.

4. That initial orders and allocations of materials be provided immediately to keep the labor force intact until the military electronics program is fully underway.

5. That the rigid credit restrictions which impose a special hardship upon people of low income to buy radio and television sets be loosened, especially those restrictions which discriminate against the radio and television field.

CCL Kicks Out Fur Union As Red Tool

THE EXECUTIVE council of the Canadian Congress of Labour has expelled the Fur & Leather Workers Union for the same reason it was ousted from the CIO last summer—Communist domination.

The action was the first taken under an amendment to the CCL constitution, adopted at the convention last September, authorizing the council to expel any union which follows the Communist Party line.

It was based on a statement the Fur & Leather Workers issued after a meeting in Winnipeg, Man., on Mar. 13. The statement attacked the CCL for a joint presentation to the Canadian government with the Canadian Trades & Labor Congress, the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labor and the Dominion Joint Legislative Committee of the railroad brotherhoods demanding price controls and opposing wage controls.

IN ADDITION, the labor groups said that if wage increases created serious inflationary pressure, they would be willing to discuss practical wage stabilization with government and management. This, the Fur & Leather Workers' statement charged, was "betraying" the interests of Canadian workers.

"In supporting the motion for expulsion of the Fur & Leather Workers Union," said the CCL statement announcing the move, "members of the executive council said the policy indicated by the Fur & Leather Workers Union was the line being followed by the Communist Party."

In announcing the expulsion, the CCL made it clear that there was no suggestion that the majority of rank and file members of the ousted union supported the CP line. The policy was one adopted by officers who follow Communist policy, the CCL said, rather than the policy determined by the great majority of the membership.

CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with the CCL.

Oil Union Comeback Regains Plants Lost Since '48 Strike

By RAY DAVIDSON

THE CIO OIL Workers Intl. Union got slapped hard by the combined forces of six major oil companies, the police and the courts of California during a bitter statewide strike in late 1948.

For a while after that some misled people thought that the Oil Workers Union was down and out. As a result, there have been, during the past two years, a number of vulture-like raids on OWIU in the state.

The vultures didn't get anything to eat. OWIU showed it had plenty of life left and chased away the raiders in a series of four significant National Labor Relations Board elections.

Here's the blow-by-blow account of the raids against OWIU in California since the 1948 strike:

1. In the closing days of the strike, NLRB ordered an election in the huge Standard Oil of California refinery at Richmond. This election had been asked for four months earlier but NLRB had stalled until the strike accurred. When the election was ordered, OWIU members tried to go back into the plant to vote, but were locked out. IAM got only 89 votes out of the more than 2000 cast, but the Independent Union of Petroleum Workers got a majority of votes and the bargaining rights.

2. The Richmond workers lived with an independent union contract for 18 months, then tossed the independents out in another NLRB election in June, 1950. OWIU won this election and regained bargaining rights in this, the largest refinery on the west coast.

3. The Independent Union of Petroleum Workers raided the Wilmington and Oleum, refineries of the Union Oil Co. The raid failed as the vote went 782 for OWIU, 450 for the independents. This was in mid-1950.

4. Early in 1951, the AFL set up a paper organization called Oil Workers Organizing Committee and raided OWIU's statewide Richfield Oil bargaining unit. In an election Feb. 6-7, the AFL was slapped down. The vote was a topheavy 911 for OWIU, 283 for AFL, 90 for no union.

5. The Indepndent Union of Petroleum Workers raided the Standard refinery in El Segundo. The NLRB ordered an election Apr. 3-5, and the vote went 539 for OWIU, 411 for the independents and 18 for no union in the main plant group. In a smaller electrical unit, OWIU got 21 votes, the independents seven and the AFL four. Thus OWIU retained its bargaining rights in El Segundo.

6. Meantime, the independents have started one more raid, seeking to take away OWIU's bargaining rights in the 300-man Kettleman-North Dome unit. Judging from past records, that election too should go to the Oil Workers and that should be the end of the trouble with IUPW.

(Note: OWIU, which has bargaining rights for close to 90% of California's oil workers, has invited the Independent Union of Petroleum Workers to merge its 10 percent with OWIU and form one solid union in the California industry.)

(Note No. 2: Records in OWIU headquarters in Denver now show the union's membership to be at the highest level in history.)

'Corrupt And Contented' City Votes Itself A New Charter

PHILADELPHIA, saddled until recently with one of the most corrupt and venal city governments of modern times, has taken a major step toward reform.

Voters last week, by a two-to-one majority, took three actions which will go a long way toward making a basic clean-up possible. Both CIO and AFL were active in support of the change.

The voters approved a new city charter, strengthening the power of the mayor's office and extending the civil service system. They reformed the make-up of the city council, and they did away completely with the most cynically misused of all the former elective offices, that of Receiver of Taxes.

The old city charter was written by the State Legislature in 1919 and deprived the city of virtually any power to decide its own affairs.

The new one, drawn up by a committee of 15 public-minded citizens, is known as the "home rule" charter. It allows Philadelphia to make its own decisions on a number of important points, giving the mayor's office both new power and new responsibility.

The entire tax department went under the axe. Not only was the office of Receiver abolished, to be combined into a new appointive post known as Director of Finance, but all tax jobs were put under civil service for the first time. Same went for the employes of the parks department. More changes are to come.

The city council, until now composed of 22 members elected from strictly gerrymandered districts, has been revamped into a 17-man group. Ten will be elected from new and strictly geographic districts and seven at large. First elections under the new council set-up will be this fall.

BOTH Republican and Democratic city chairmen supported the change. But for tactical reasons, it was reliably reported, both groups approached the CIO Political Action Committee at the last minute and asked PAC to carry the main burden of the wind-up. The PAC did.

More than 1000 field workers were flung into the campaign, and the CIO Council president, Henry Shipherd, made several radio and television appearances.

The reform move was preceded two years ago by election of Richardson Dilworth as City Treasurer, after a campaign in which Dilworth exposed case after case of corruption at City Hall. Dilworth ran unsuccessfully for governor in 1950.

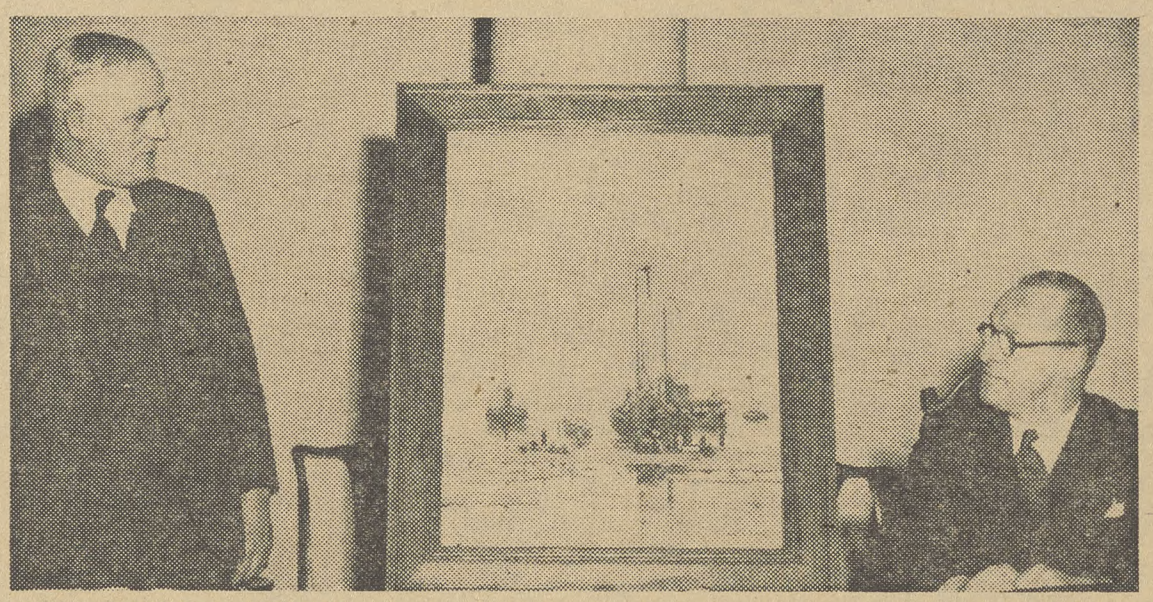
Symington Appointed RFC Head

W. STUART Symington, chairman of the National Security Resources Board and a Fair Dealer, was appointed one-man head of the revamped Reconstruction Finance Corp. by President Truman last week.

The appointment was made a few days after the Senate, by an eight-vote margin, failed to kill the President's reorganization plan. The proposal provided for the single director and a centralization of responsibility in him, rather than a five-man board of directors such as has operated the RFC since its foundation. A majority voted to kill it, but failed by eight votes to reach the required two-thirds margin.

Meantime, the big business and finance effort to kill the RFC and establish a monopoly on credit continued. The Senate Banking and Currency Committee is scheduled to hold hearings this week on several bills which would either put it out of business, and thus shut off credit to business firms turned down by commercial banks, or would drastically revamp its operations.

In addition, a sub-committee headed by Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) will study some 80 letters from members of Congress.



SECY. ARTHUR DEAKIN of the British Transport and General Workers Union (left) and Sir Vincent Tewson, secretary of the British Trade Union Congress, are admiring a Dutch china wall plaque. It was the gift to Deakin from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in honor of his 60th birthday. Because Deakin was ill and unable to attend the November meeting of the ICFTU executive board, the presentation was made to him by Sir Vincent on behalf of the ICFTU, at the March meeting of the BTUC General Council.

Charter Issued To Department Store Workers

THE CIO announced the chartering last week of its newest fledgling — the United Department Store Workers of America.

Set up with the blessing of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, director of organization and councils, it will operate as an organizing committee in non-union areas of the department store field.

Its first organization work will be undertaken in the New York area, where the formerly unaffiliated Local 1-S, composed of about 8000 employes of the Macy Store, is already affiliated.

Haywood said the new group has no intention of raiding any other organization, but that it will welcome the affiliation of other department store locals. Many of these in the New York area, he added, now belong to a Communist-dominated organization, and he predicted their members will join the CIO.

As announced previously, R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant director of organization, is president of the UDSWA, and Samuel Kovenetsky, president of Local 1-S, is vice president and organization director.

Murray and Haywood also named to the organizing committee Secy.-Treas. David J. MacDonald of the CIO Steelworkers as secretary-treasurer; Vice Pres. John Livingston of the CIO Auto Workers, Pres. Michael Quill of the CIO Transport Workers, and three members of the Local 1-S executive board: Philip Hoffstein, Sam Levine and William Atkinson. Thomas will represent the new group on the CIO Executive Board.

AN ADDITIONAL vice president and members of the new union's executive board will be named soon. Once the UDSWA is firmly established, a convention will be held to elect permanent officers and adopt a constitution. Temporary headquarters have been established in the CIO Regional Office at 1133 Broadway, New York.

Haywood, Thomas and Kovenetsky issued a joint statement in which they said:

"Through creation of the United Department Store Workers of America, CIO, the way is now open for the growth of democratic industrial unionism, in a vitally important section of the American economy.

"The United Department Store Workers of America is certain to receive a warm greeting from employes of numerous department stores throughout the country. In recent weeks, we have had many letters of inquiry from department store workers in a number of large cities.

"While our immediate field of activity for the next few months will be in the metropolitan New York area, the United Department Store Workers has every intention of developing itself into a truly national union of store employes.

"WE believe that many department store employes in New York will welcome this chance to rid themselves of Communist infiltration into their unions, and that in the United Department Store Workers of America they will find themselves assisted in winning improvements in their living standards, their personal security, and their working conditions.

"On behalf of the CIO, we welcome all department store workers to our new organization and pledge them our every effort to build a strong, undominated union that will represent truly American democratic ideals and that will work unceasingly for economic and social justice."

Store Union Story Taken To Public

FOR YEARS the merchants of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., have celebrated "Community Day," designed to draw into their establishments people who have money to spend.

The customers always include a lot of union members. They are able to help the merchants celebrate because their unions have pushed their wages up to high levels.

But all through the years the clerks who waited on the customers were down at the bottom of the wage scale. Even now the rates in Wilkes-Barre stores begin at $16 and $18 a week, with a bonus based on sales volume that may add a little more.

This year the customers on Community Day got something extra. They got a four-page printed leaflet from a CIO member telling them of the blocks the merchants are throwing up in the road of the organizing efforts of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union.

The pamphlet also told the story of how the Isaac Long Store stuffed underpaid workers with free liquor and food on the eve of a National Labor Relations Board election on Apr. 5.

THE store's brawl was no long-planned affair, CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph M. Walsh said. Management didn't even think of it, he said, until Newspaper Guild members handed the employes leaflets as they went home on Apr. 2 inviting them to a mass meeting right after work the next night.

The next morning store executives went around among the workers and asked certain of them to a cocktail party that night at Wilkes-Barre's Hotel Sterling.

There was plenty to eat and plenty to drink—and plenty of low-voiced insinuations against the union. The results apparently looked so good management decided to repeat the affair the following night.

That one must have been successful, too. The vote the next day was 119 to 51 against the CIO. The National Labor Relations Board is investigating Walsh's complaint that the store owners and some of its executives violated the law by interfering in the election.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer attended a packed meeting of the Macy Department Store workers in New York, and his talk was well received. These workers are happy to be back in the CIO, who brought organization to them in the first place. They accepted amalgamation with the new CIO United Department Store Workers of America with enthusiasm. Following the meeting a charter was presented to the United Department Store Workers. R. J. Thomas is chairman of the group, David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer, and Sam Kovenetsky of Local 1-S, at Macy's, vice-chairman and director of organization. Headquarters of this organization will be at the CIO Regional Office, 1133 Broadway, New York. This organization is striving to bring to the department store workers a strong, militant trade union in this important industry.

Allan Haywood

From New York the writer went to Philadelphia, where he spoke to the delegates attending the Pennsylvania State Industrial Union Council convention. It was one of the largest state conventions ever held. It brought together the many representatives of the local unions and the international unions. These delegates were fully alerted to the problems confronting labor, and they voiced full support to the present position taken by the CIO. Pres. Harry Boyer and Secy.-Treas. Harry Block, of the state council, presided over the affair and did a wonderful job.

A call has been sent to CIO regional directors in the states listed below in the interest of the defense mobilization problems as they affect our membership. On May 19 and 20, those from Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Western New York, Kentucky and West Virginia will meet in Cleveland. On May 25, 26 and 27, those from Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana and Eastern Missouri will meet in Chicago. Similar conferences will be held later in other parts of the country.

A national conference on civil defense will be held in the near future in Washington. The meeting will be presided over by Millard Caldwell, Federal Civil Defense Administrator. Representatives from all major cities and states, as well as representatives from agriculture and labor, will attend.

The CIO representatives appointed by Pres. Murray are the following: Allan S. Haywood, Irving Abramson, Robert Kinney, August Scholle and Philip Weightman. This important conference will be held May 7 and 8, and is to be attended by only those invited by the government.

The CIO has just issued a new international union charter to the National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians. Officers of this new group are J. R. McDonnell, president; Edward B. Lynch, vice president, and George Maher, executive secretary. Their headquarters are at Room 534, 80 East Jackson blvd., Chicago, 4, Ill.

Martin C. Kyne, executive secretary of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, reports the following representation election victories: Union News Co., New York, RWDSU 193, District 65 177; Universal Laboratories, New York, RWDSU 48, District 65, 0; Nat Lewis Shop, New York, RWDSU 18, against 9; Graham Chemical Co., New York, RWDSU 22, no union 15; Leaf Brands, Chicago, Ill., RWDSU Chicago Joint Board 214, ILWU 129; I. Miller Shoe Co., New York, RWDSU 98, void 1; Libby, McNeil & Libby, New York, RWDSU 24, no union 21; Euclid Candy Co., New York, RWDSU 78, AFL 13; Delicia Candy Co., New York, RDWSU 79, AFL 62.

Reg. Dir. Jack Easton reports that in recent weeks the Steelworkers have won eight union shop elections involving 2619 workers in West Virginia. The vote in favor of the USA-CIO was 2186 yes, no 197, void 6; challenged 2. Field Reps. H. R. Richards, Frank Cisar and Sam Jones conducted the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in a representation election at Lee Stine's Cafeteria at the Fairchild Aircraft Division, Hagerstown, Md., the cafeteria workers voted in favor of the Auto Workers-CIO by the following vote: UAW 20, against 9, challenged 1, blank 1. In a union shop election at Wonder Clothes, Baltimore, Md., the Clothing Workers won by a vote of 12 yes to 0 no.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, CIO Woodworkers, reports the following representation election victories: Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., Klamath Falls, Ore., eligible 653, IAW-CIO 472, no union 58; Red Blanket Lumber Co., Prospect, Ore., IWA-CIO 38, no union 34; Wilbur Lumber Co., Wilbur, Ore., 95 eligible, IWA-CIO 41, no union 37. In a union shop election at the McIntosh Lumber Co., Blue Lake, Calif., the tally was 102 yes, 7 no. In another at Cusick Brothers, Mayfield, Wash., it was 17 yes, 0 no.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports that in a representation election at W. S. Fox Sons, Pine Bluff, Ark., the workers voted IWA-CIO 73, no union 9, challenged 3. The campaign was conducted by IWA Reps. Carl Foster and Tucker.

Pres. Harry Sayre of the Paperworkers reports winning a representation election at the UARCO Company, Cleveland, O., by a vote of 105 UPA to 54 no union. The campaign was under the direction of CIO Reg. Dir. Sam Sponseller and carried out by CIO Rep. C. C. Smith and UPA Rep. Berkley Watterson.

Reg. Dir. James Leary advises that the Brewery Workers have signed up 28 of the 30 employes of the Automatic Canteen Co., Kansas City, Mo. The company recognized the union as bargaining agent for the employes and has signed a contract. Intl. Rep. Jack Riggs was in charge of organization at this company.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election at the Plastic Molding Corp., Sandy Hook, Conn., the workers voted in favor of the Rubber Workers by 122 to 53 no union. In a union shop election at the Naugatuck Chemical Co., Naugatuck, Conn., the vote was yes 626, no 57.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports a representation election victory for the Textile Workers at the Paradise Mfg. Co., Los Angeles, by a vote of 87 for CIO and 30 against.

James Dickerson, director of District 37, Steelworkers, reports a representation election victory at the National Lead Co., Magnet Cove, Ark. by a vote of USA-CIO 77, AFL 68.

Secy.-Treas. Frank Grasso of the Paperworkers reports victory in two representation and one union shop elections. The representation victories were in Richmond, Va., at the Bodecker Co., where a 2 to 1 vote led to the establishing of the new UPA Local 685, and a 25 to 2 victory in Philadelphia, Pa., at the American Business Systems Co. The union shop victory was at the King Paint Roller Co., Detroit, Mich., where the workers voted to retain UPA Local 995.

Austria Elects President On May 6

THE VOTERS of Austria will pick their own president for the first time in history when they go to the polls on May 6.

The Socialists (SPO) and the People's Party (OVP) have governed the country through a coalition since 1945, but have come to a parting of the ways. The break has resulted in some fears that the country's political stability, which has been outstanding, may suffer, but they are not widespread.

Six candidates are in the field, but only those of the Socialists and People's Party are conceded more than an outside chance. The Socialists have nominated Mayor Theodore Koerner of Vienna, a former general in the old imperial army, who joined the party after World War I.

Named by the People's Party is Dr. Heinrich Gleissner, governor of the province of Upper Austria, a veteran of pre-war politics who spent most of the war in a Nazi concentration camp.

Under the constitution a popular election is authorized, but, one has never been held. Dr. Karl Renn, who died last year, was elected by Parliament in 1945. The problem was settled this year when the Russians said they wouldn't agree to setting aside the constitution—and that they didn't recognize it anyway.

Murray Message Wins Jap Thanks

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has received thanks from Zengoro Shimagami, secretary of the General Council of Trade Unions of Japan, for the "encouraging and inspiring message" he sent to the organization's recent convention.

"The splendid speech made at the first-day," he said, "by Miss Gladys Dickason, vice president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, whom you and Pres. Jacob Potofsky kindly arranged to send us to address the meeting on the vital role to be played by the organized labor movement, made a great impression on the minds of all present."

CIO Urges President To Set Up FEPC

THE CIO has added its voice to the demand for establishment, by Executive Order, of a Fair Employment Practices Commission, like that which functioned so effectively during World War II.

James B. Carey, CIO Secretary-Treasurer and chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, last week asked President Truman to set up an FEPC, and reminded him that several government higher-ups already had been approached on the subject but that none of them would proceed without an OK from the White House.

Partial text of the letter follows:

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations is, as you already know, completely in support of such an executive procedure.

"We feel that labor in this country should be fully utilized at the level of employment on a basis of full equality as to job opportunity, the exercise of full skill, and equal payment for equal service, regardless of race, creed or color.

"For our government to proceed otherwise is to negate the position we claim to take in leading the world struggle against totalitarianism and armed aggression. . . .

"On Dec. 13 we sent a telegram to you asking you to include an FEPC Executive Order in the declaration on the national emergency scheduled for two days later. On Jan. 10 we sought an appointment with you, at which time Mr. David Niles advanced as your suggestion that we meet with Mr. C. E. Wilson.

"We met with Mr. Wilson on Feb. 6. Mr. Wilson pointed out that he had served as Chairman of the Committee on Civil Rights, and declared that he would issue a public statement calling for the establishment of such an agency by Executive Order.

"HE ADDED the condition, however, that his making such a statement would be subject to your approval or disapproval.

"Since that time, we have heard nothing. No statement has been forthcoming from Mr. Wilson.

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations believes that a continued denial of employment because of inequality in hiring, in full utilization of skills and with equal pay for equal work, is a real and vital shortcoming of the defense mobilization program.

"The continuance of such practices is wholly inconsistent with the role we assume as defenders of human rights everywhere.

"I, therefore, urge that you issue without further delay, an Executive Order establishing a Fair Employment Practices Commission to insure that all of our citizens can participate in the defense program without any regard to prejudices which might exist anywhere in our country."

School Segregation Suits Readied In Two More States

THE QUIET and effective legal campaign of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to end segregation in southern schools moved on to a new front last week.

The NAACP announced it would institute court proceedings in Mississippi and Alabama to force the admission of qualified Negro students to graduate and professional schools.

(Gov. Fielding L. Wright, of Mississippi, immediately announced that the State will "resist to the fullest extent of our resources . . . we shall insist upon segregation regardless of the costs or consequences.")

In Georgia, the NAACP filed an amended petition asking that a three-judge court be appointed to hear the organization's request for a permanent injunction forbidding discrimination against—i.e. segregation of—Negro students in that State's "white" elementary and high schools.

(The original Georgia suit was filed Sept. 19, 1950. Since then the Legislature, with the blessing of Gov. Herman Talmadge, has passed a law denying State funds to any school which obeys a court order to admit Negroes. Since the suit therefore now involves a direct attack on the State's statutes, NAACP wants a three-judge court to hear it. Immediate appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court may be had from the decisions of such a tribunal.)

In Kentucky, NAACP plans to ask an injunction ordering the admission of Negro applicants to Paducah Junior College on the same terms and conditions as other students.

(This comes in the wake of a U. S. Supreme Court decision refusing to hear Kentucky's plea that a lower court order, declaring that Negroes had the right to be admitted, be set aside. The college has as yet taken no steps to obey the court order.)

In South Carolina, a suit is pending asking admission of Negro students to "white" elementary schools in Clarendon County. As a result of another court suit, the Univ. of North Carolina has announced that Negro students will be accepted in graduate and professional schools, pending appeal.

(Gov. James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina, referring to the Clarendon County suit, has announced that he will withhold State funds for public education if NAACP wins. Ralph Bunche, Negro winner of the Nobel Peace Prize and director of the Trusteeship Division of the United Nations, commented that Byrnes' remarks had harmed America's foreign relations. He was "shocked" to see Byrnes, a former secretary of state, line himself up with Talmadge and his "bigotries.")

Heart of the NAACP attack on segregation in schools is in the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, which says:

"No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States. . . ."

NAACP's legal briefs in its education cases are more and more attacking segregation, rather than laying primary emhpasis on whether the separate facilities offered for Negroes are actually equal to those offered whites.

In the case involving the Univ. of North Carolina graduate and professional schools, NAACP used this approach. The brief pointed out that the Negro law school facilities are not physically equal to those given white law students—but then went to the heart of the matter in the following language (quoted from a brief filed in Texas):

"Few students and no one who has practiced law would choose to study in an academic vacuum, removed from the interplay of ideas and the exchange of views with which the law is concerned."

4-23

'Confessions' Of 3 Barred At Trenton

WITH the jury back in the courtroom, and the confessions of three of the defendants ruled out, the re-trial of the Trenton Six before the New Jersey Superior Court has moved into a decisive stage.

For several weeks the jury was not allowed to hear arguments on the question of permitting the alleged "confessions" of the six Negro defendants to be admitted as evidence.

Judge Ralph J. Smalley finally ruled out three of the confessions, saying that the State had not proved they were obtained legally. Last week he refused to allow the Prosecutor to read a handwritten "confession" allegedly made by Ralph Cooper, one of the defendants. A typewritten copy of a "confession" the prosecution claims Cooper signed was among those thrown out by Judge Smalley.

The "confessions" of Collis English and McKinley Forrest were admitted. Those of John McKenzie and James Thorpe, in addition to Coopers, were thrown out.

At the first trial three years ago, all five confessions were admitted, and served as the basis on which the six were convicted and sentenced to death. (Defendant Horace Wilson never signed a confession.) The men were accused of murdering an elderly second-hand furniture dealer in Trenton, N. J., on Jan. 27, 1948.

An appeal resulted in the verdict being overthrown by the N. J. Supreme Court in August, 1948.

CHECKS TOTALLING $400 are being gratefully received from Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council (left) by the Rev. Charles S. Watkins (center) and Samuel A. Williams on behalf of the Trenton Six Defense Fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The Rev. Mr. Watkins and Williams are treasurer and vice president, respectively, of the New Jersey NAACP branch. The money was contributed by 19 CIO local unions for the defense of six Negroes, whom the NAACP and New Jersey CIO believe are falsely accused of murder. Judges ruled out three "confessions."

Reuther Hits Builder Flop In Slum Plan

WALTER REUTHER, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, has asked the government to stop work on Detroit's huge slum clearance and rebuilding project in the Gratiot area.

He asked federal authorities to act because the city has made no adequate plans for finding the 7460 persons involved another place to live.

The law requires any city which undertakes a redevelopment plan to relocate the families involved. Raymond Foley, administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, however, issued a "prior approval" of the Detroit plan, on the city's promise to come up with a relocation program later.

Now, Reuther said in a letter to Foley, approximately 450 families have been forced to move, but no facilities have been provided for them to move to.

Some have been shunted temporarily to other already overcrowded homes in the same area, and face moving again. Others have found vacancies in public housing. A lot more have simply doubled up with slum families outside the area.

This has been the result of the city's reliance upon the good faith of the private builders who ultimately are expected to do the construction work. Even the director of the Detroit Housing Commission has publicly stated in recent weeks that the builders' cooperation on the relocation qestion has been "far from satisfactory."

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

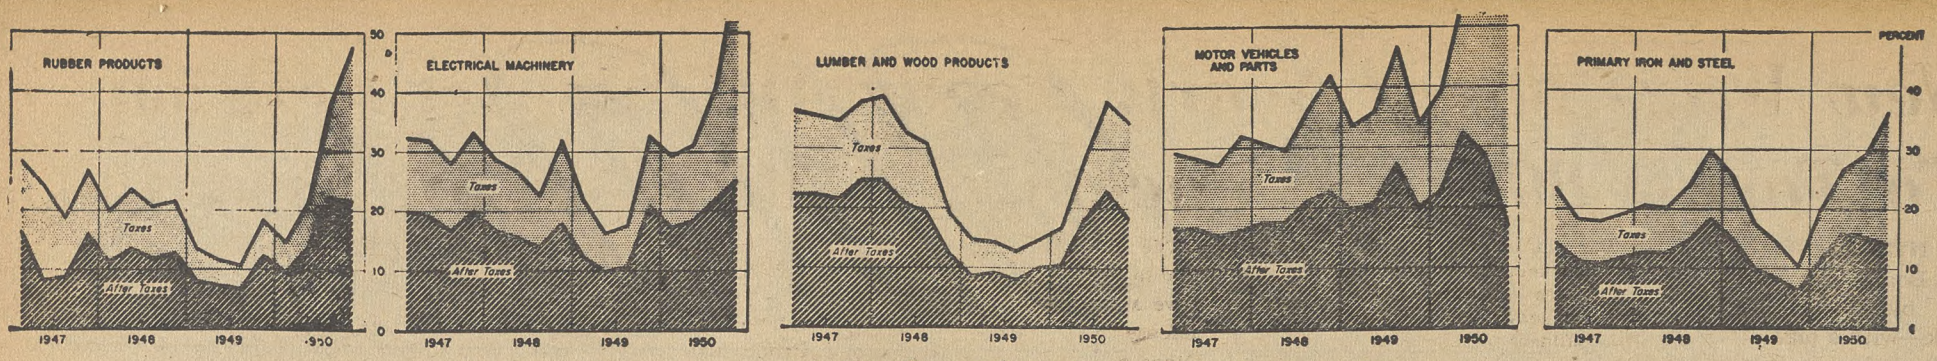
Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 30, 1951 82 No. 18

U.S. Reveals Company Profits Up 43%

Firms Get $4½ Billion Tax 'Bribes'

(See Stories, Pages 2 & 5)

AMERICAN SCENE: Every housewife knows that the cost of living has skyrocketed, but few of them know exactly how much. Mrs. Aryness Joy Wickens, Deputy Commissioner of U. S. Labor Statistics, in a recent speech told American women just how much the cost of groceries has risen. She said that it now takes $23.74 to buy the following groceries which could be purchased in 1939 for $10: 10 pounds of flour, five pounds of sugar, 15 pounds of potatoes, two loaves of bread, seven quarts of milk, a six-pound rib roast, two pounds of bacon, two pounds of butter, a package of rolled oats, two dozen oranges, a pound of coffee, a five-pound head of cabbage, three pounds of green beans, two pounds each of veal cutlet and pork chops, a can of salmon, three pounds of onions, a pound of cheese, two dozen eggs, three pounds of apples, two cans of tomatoes, two bunches of carrots, a can of peaches, two cans of peas, a head of lettuce and a box of dried prunes. High prices like these are behind CIO's demand for a Defense Production Act with controls that really work.



Going Up—Rates Of Profits Of Selected Industry Groups

Corporate Profits After Taxes Rise 43% In '50

PERHAPS THE most appropriate place to study the 1950 profits of the country's manufacturing corporations would be in a stratoflyer.

The report of the Federal Trade Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission, made public last week, showed that the 1950 incomes of 21 different industry groups had one thing in common—they were up, way up.

Profits of manufacturing corporations—before payment of federal taxes—were listed as 61% higher than in 1949. They were $23.2 billion in 1950, compared to $14.4 billion in 1949.

Net income after taxes last year was about $12.9 billion, or 43% more than in 1949. Sales in 1950 are estimated to have been 17% above 1949, while costs and expenses arose only 13%.

All industries showed increases in profits before taxes, ranging from 12% for the tobacco industry to 141% for rubber products.

There were four industries in which 1950 profits before taxes were more than double the 1949 figures. They were rubber products 141%, lumber and wood products 121%, electrical machinery 111%, and primary non-ferrous metals 100%.

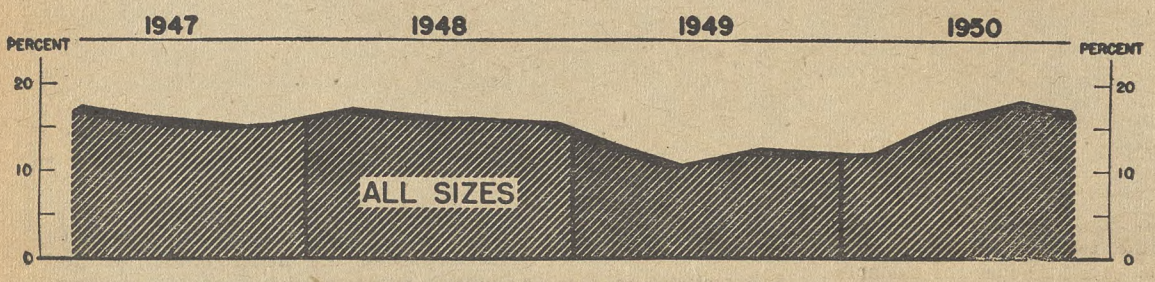
In all, half the industries covered in the report showed more than a 75% increase in profits before taxes.

Profits after taxes increased for every industry but one, tobacco, which showed a slight decrease of 3%. For the others, the 1950 increases ranged from 7% for printing and publishing to 107% for rubber products.

Two industries, rubber products and lumber and wood products, more than doubled profits after taxes in 1950. Twelve of the 22 industries reported showed more than a 50% profit increase after taxes.

Total assets of manufacturing corporations at the end of 1950 were estimated at $126.3 billion, $16.5 billion higher than at the end of 1949.

All in all, the corporations weren't starving!



Profit Rates Of All Manufacturing Corporations

Has Your Income Increased Like These Business Profits?

Following is a list of profits after taxes of manufacturing corporations by industry groups in 1949 and 1950, as reported by the U. S. Federal Trade Commission and Securities & Exchange Commission.

	Profit after taxes In millions of dollars
Industry Group	1949	1950	Change
Food	$ 965	$ 1063	+ 10%
Tobacco	156	152	— 3%
Textile mill products	349	610	+ 75%
Apparel and finished textiles	81	110	+ 36%
Lumber & wood	146	299	+105%
Furniture & fixtures	54	105	+ 94%
Paper & allied products	388	558	+ 65%
Printing & publishing	150	160	+ 7%
Chemicals	917	1364	+ 49%
Petroleum	1433	1808	+ 26%
Rubber	115	238	+107%
Leather	47	82	+ 74%
Stone, clay & glass	322	481	+ 49%
Primary non-ferrous metals	264	500	+ 89%
Primary iron & steel	653	1007	+ 54%
Fabricated metal	356	594	+ 67%
Machinery (excl. electrical)	785	1014	+ 29%
Electrical machinery	385	688	+ 74%
Transportation equip. (excl. autos)	155	193	+ 25%
Motor vehicles & parts	1141	1515	+ 33%
Instruments, etc.	125	198	+ 58%
Miscellaneous	84	145	+ 73%
All manufacturing	9021	12,864	+ 43%

Dozen Rallies Spur Fight For Equality Of Sacrifice

THE MAGIC flame of labor unity in the home-front fight for equality in the mobilization drive burned more brightly last week.

Leaders of CIO unions in a dozen additional cities and states, usually with their AFL counterparts, held or planned meetings intended to drive home to the great mass of Americans the fact that big business has taken over direction of the defense effort.

The flame was lighted at the United Labor Conference held in Washington last month by the United Labor Policy Committee, composed of representatives of CIO, AFL and the railroad brotherhoods.

One spot where unity burned especially bright last week was in New York City. On the night of Apr. 26, more than 5000 union officials, committee members, shop stewards and other active workers crowded into Manhattan Center at the joint call of the New York City CIO Council and the AFL Central Trades and Labor Council.

They heard CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union, AFL Pres. William Green, AFL Secy.-Treas. George Meany and Pres. Thomas Murray of the New York State Federation of Labor tell what has been wrong with mobilization and what the labor thinks should be done about it.

Carey spoke on "Whose Defense Program Is It?" He answered his own query—"It's big business.'"

He denounced the "obscene accumulation of enormous profits and not wage increases," as the major cause of inflation.

He described the "profit-taking spree . . . running berserk"; business scheming to dodge not only excess profits taxes, but other taxes as well; the new price "control" set-up that he said will increase prices; the fake "sacrifices" of business and the genuine sacrifices of the average American.

Don't Like Us

"In view of this," he said, "is it any wonder that the ruling big business clique in Washington has been violently opposed to labor's participation in the defense program? Is it any wonder that the profiteers and the tax-evaders don't want to give labor a policy-making voice where it can call a halt to profiteering and tax-evading?"

Haywood substituted for CIO Pres. Philip Murray, confined to a Pittsburgh hospital with a serious stomach ailment. He also attacked big business mis-handling of the defense program.

"Working men and women know that no building is stronger than its foundation," he said. "They also know that no defense program will truly produce national strength and effectiveness if it is not firmly based on fair play, on economic and social justice, and on unshakable determination to spread the necessary sacrifice equally among every group.

"That is plain common sense. You recognize it. I recognize it.

"Unfortunately, there are men in high places in Washington who do not seem to recognize it."

Among them, he said, is Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, "who manages to get by, in this inflationary period, on an income of about $200,000 a year."

Haywood pointed out that the situation has improved somewhat since the labor members of the old Wage Stabilization Board walked out Feb. 16 in protest against "an unfair and inequitable program."

The "icy curtain" between big business in mobilization and the people as a whole, he said, has started to melt "thanks to the program and the actions of the organized labor movement and the ULPC."

"Of course the thaw is not complete," he conceded. "But the thaw is going to continue."

A resolution adopted without dissent commended the National ULPC and called on all personnel in federal executive and legislative branches to "fulfill their obligations and responsibilities by assuring" the nation that they will adopt the labor program.

Another impressive meeting was held in New Haven, Conn., under the auspices of the Connecticut United Labor Committee.

More than 300 delegates voted to organize some 175,000 union members in a campaign to protest the wage-price policy and big business domination of mobilization, and to demand a new program based on "equal sacrifice and fair play."

Co-Chairmen

Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff of the Connecticut CIO Council and Pres. Timothy Collins of the Connecticut Federation of Labor were co-chairmen of the meeting, the first of its size ever held by CIO and AFL in the State.

Speakers were Frank Fernbach of the National CIO Dept. of Educational and Research; William Lavelle, CIO legislative representative in Washington; Margaret C. Driscoll, CIO State legislative agent; Secy.-Treas. John J. Driscoll of the State CIO Council; Joseph Keenan, secretary-treasurer of the AFL Building and Construction Trades Dept., and Secy.-Treas. Joseph M. Rourke of the State Federation of Labor.

The Greater New Haven CIO Council is making plans to arrange for a joint meeting of all organized labor in the vicinity early in May.

At Meadville, Pa., 150 delegates from CIO and AFL unions in five northwestern Pennsylvania counties met Apr. 22 in the first full-scale joint labor conference in the area's history.

Representing about 75,000 union members, they demanded an immediate end to the "critical situation" created by blunders and big business mismanagement of the mobilization program.

They also set up a five-county steering committee to keep union members informed of votes in Congress and the State Legislature affecting labor.

Co-chairmen were Ralph Tillotson, CIO sub-regional director in Erie, and John Hoover, president of the Meadville Central Labor Union, AFL. The principal speaker was Lavelle,

In Cleveland, a local United Labor Policy Committee was set up at a meeting of CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhood representatives and steps were taken to put the United Labor Program for Action into effect immediately in the Greater Cleveland area.

CIO, AFL and brotherhoods in Billings, Mont., established the Yellowstone County United Labor Committee at a meeting Apr. 22 and voted unanimously to form a permanent organization to handle political and legislative matters.

CIO Sub-Regional Director Sylvester Graham reported the committee will meet regularly on the second Friday of each month.

The Greater Kansas City Industrial Union Council, which covers both Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kan., and the local AFL "cost of living" committees are now holding joint sessions. CIO Reg. Director James J. Leary suggested that the two groups expand their field of operations to cover the broader objectives of the United Labor Conference.

New Wage Board Nearly Ready To Tackle 800-Case Backlog

A NEW WAGE Stabilization Board may be in operation by the middle of this week—with a man-sized pile of work on the agenda.

George W. Taylor, Univ. of Pennsylvania professor who headed the War Labor Board during much of World War II, was sworn in as new chairman of the WSB on Apr. 26.

Other members of the 18-man agency created by the President on Apr. 20 will probably be named early in the week. There will be six from labor, six from management and six representing the public.

It is likely that the six labor names will be recommended to the White House after the United Labor Policy Committee completes an afternoon session on Apr. 30.

THREE CIO union officials have been widely mentioned in the press as slated for posts with the board. They are Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, who served on the WLB and also on the WSB until its break-up over major issues last February; Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers; and Vice-Pres. John Livingston of the United Automobile Workers.

Taylor said that the board will face a backlog of 800 wage cases, involving some three million workers. The WSB has not been functioning since mid-February, when labor members protested its earlier formula for wage stabilization was rigid and unfair to many groups of workers.

Wages were temporarily frozen in January by order of Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston. Later, in its controversial Regulation No. 6, the board thawed the freeze to permit increases up to 10% over the rate in effect on Jan. 15, 1950.

But many aspects of the wage problem await action by the board. Cases involving the CIO textile workers, meat packers and shipbuilders — among others — have been awaiting approval. All revolve around the 10% boost provision.

Johnston, in a major decision last week involving a million railroad workers, approved a 6c cost-of-living increase which pierced the 10% "ceiling" set by the WSB's regulation.

That case involved an agreement between the AFL railroad unions and the Army, which has been running the nation's railroads for the past several months. The case rattled through several government agencies, and found some urging approval of the wage hike and others calling for its refusal.

Meanwhile, the National Association of Manufacturers kept up its running criticism of President Truman's order that the Wage Board may also hear cases involving non-economic disputes.

The president's order permits him to certify such disputes which have a "substantial" effect on the defense program to the board. Other non-economic cases may go to it by mutual agreement of the union and company.

The NAM News, in an editorial that waves the flag for the Taft-Hartley Act, lamented what it called as an "alliance" between the administration and Labor.

IT BEMOANED the fact that strikebreakers and scabs herded into some southern textile mills might be "compelled" to join a union through board action.

Rieve, whose union is now on strike in southern mills, charged that conditions were particularly bad in mills owned by NAM Pres. William Ruffin.

He said that Mill-Owner Ruffin pays workers in his Mississippi mill about 70c an hour less than the pay which NAM Pres. Ruffin always claims in his speeches is "average" for American workers.

Two Locals Bolt Commie Union To Join CIO Paperworkers

Members of two locals of the Distributive, Processing and Office Workers Union in Richmond, Va., have voted unanimously to leave the left wing group and join the CIO Paperworkers.

The action was an aftermath to the merger meeting in New York last October of the Food and Tobacco Workers, the Office and Professional Workers and independent Local 65. At the time, delegates from Richmond Locals 45 and 57 questioned criticism leveled at U. S. foreign policy and the lack of attention to trade union problems.

First rumblings of the disaffiliation move brought Donald Henderson, former president of FTA and now administrator for DPO, to Richmond on the run. Despite threats and coercion, the members refused to be moved from their decision to disaffiliate.

Max Sussman, business manager for the two new Paperworkers' locals, says he hopes the example of the Richmond workers will be followed by other locals "now being held captive by DPO in an unholy alliance designed to defeat the aims and achievements of the CIO."

Defense Act Revision Proposed By Truman

PRESIDENT TRUMAN last week asked Congress to renew and amend the Defense Production Act — but, with only a couple of exceptions, he did not ask for specific changes which labor and consumer groups have been maintaining are necessary if price control is to be effective.

The two points of major economic importance which the President did ask were these:

1. Passage of a new and stronger rent control law, allowing the government to impose both residential and commercial rent ceilings "where they are needed to stabilize the situation, stop profiteering, and hold down living costs." The present rent law expires June 30.

2. Power for the government to control speculation on the commodity markets by setting high margin requirements whenever gambling threatens to drive up prices. The present act leaves commodity speculation entirely uncontrolled.

His other major recommendations were:

1. Extension of the present act for two years, until June 30, 1953. It is due to expire June 30 unless renewed.

2. Authority for the government to build and operate defense plants where necessary to produce essential materials and equipment. No such authority now exists.

3. Permission to subsidize high-cost producers of certain essential materials so as to get the materials from them without increasing prices all along the line.

4. Amendment of the act to freeze the parity price for each farm commodity as of the beginning of the marketing season. This would permit price increases in foods whose market price is still below the parity level. It would change the parity price once a year rather than day-by-day.

5. Provision of much stronger enforcement powers for the Office of Price Stabilization—a serious weakness in the present law.

The President said that wage stabilization was a necessary part of the whole picture, but clearly indicated that he believed wage policy should be flexible.

Referring to the re-establishment of a Wage Stabilization Board, he said:

"THE FURTHER development of fair wage stabilization policies for the longer run should now go rapidly forward.

"In formulating such policies, many factors will have to be weighed, including changes in the cost of living, substandards of living, and cases of hardship and inequity."

He renewed his request for $10 billion in new taxes, pointing out that the present Treasury surplus would be wiped out by January. And he predicted he might have to ask Congress later for authority to subsidize the production of certain foods, if prices get out of line again.

In general, the President indicated the major impact of the military build-up on our economy was still to come, but that the big first shock was over and the economy was — temporarily at least—levelling off.

Wall St. Journal Says New Profit Curb Has 'More Sound Than Substance'

ECONOMIC Stabilizer Johnston last week issued a new general policy which was widely heralded as "profit limitation."

Sounds fine—but even the conservative Wall Street Journal described it as having "more sound than substance."

If the policy meant anything, it would be hailed as the beginning of that equality of sacrifice for which labor and consumer groups have been begging for so long. But it doesn't, and can't, mean a thing, now or for a long time to come, labor economists say.

Johnston said that after OPS issues its permanent price ceilings, to be known as "tailored prices," it should allow no industry to get a higher-than-tailored ceiling unless it could show that its dollar profits were below 85% of the average of its dollar profits for the best three years out of the four-year period 1946 through 1949.

He instructed Price Administrator Michael Di Salle to develop this policy into a program.

The new policy is seen as meaningless because:

(a) Johnston did not define what he meant by an industry—would an individual shoe manufacturer have to fall below 85% of his own average profits or those of all shoe manufacturers?

(b) It would apply only after the permanent price ceilings had been set, and they haven't been set. It doesn't apply now, for instance, to car prices, food prices, the new manufacturers' pricing order or anything still under the general "freeze" order, which was issued Jan. 26.

(c) All the loopholes in the present law would still be in effect, unless Congress changes it.

(d) The old OPA of World War II had a very similar policy, but since it applied only at the end of the pricing process, it was used only six times out of the millions of price-setting operations OPA conducted.

CIO economists warn: In spite of the essential meaninglessness of this new policy, the big business interests will undoubtedly try to use it as an excuse to try to persuade the Wage Stabilization Board to outlaw cost-of-living escalator clauses in union contracts.

The equally widely heralded manufacturers' interim pricing order, issued two days after the new policy, carefully allows the manufacturers to pass on every cent of every cost increase they have obtained since Korea.

The increased costs of raw materials in many instances represent sheer profiteering. Hence, the order freezes the profiteering right into the price structure.

Profits Of Standard Oil Of N. J. Over $1 Million Daily In '50

Standard Oil of New Jersey made more than a million dollars in profits every day last year—after taxes.

The figure, reported Apr. 20, was $408,223,223, or $1,114,000 a day. The 1949 profit was $268,869,501.

Standard of New Jersey, with its affiliates, is the world's largest oil company, and this country's third largest private enterprise.

Its tremendous 1950 profits were exceeded only by those of General Motors, with $834,044,039.

American Telephone & Telegraph was third highest money-maker in 1950, with net profits of $346,962,051.

CIO Urges 6 Changes In Price Control Law

THE CURRENT Economic Outlook, published by the CIO Department of Research and Education, spells out in detail what is wrong with the present price control law. It also lists CIO's recommendations for specific amendments to the price control law, which is known as Defense Production Act.

Of the six recommendations, President Truman's message to Congress calls for the enactment of one, mentions another as something that may have to be faced in the future, and by-passes the rest.

The CIO's suggested changes in the DPA called for sections to provide:

"1. The authority to use food price subsidies which would permit effective controls over retail food prices while, at the same time, assuring fair returns to farmers. (The President said this might become necessary later on.)

"2. The necessary authority to regulate trading and margins on the commodity exchanges. (The President asked for this.)

"3. Effective grade labelling and the establishment of specifications and standards for different kinds of goods and services.

"4. Elimination of the special profit guarantee for food processors.

"5. Elimination of the provision which requires exclusive consultation by the OPS Administrator with industry and trade association representatives prior to the issuance of any rules or regulations.

"6. The authority for consumers, as well as manufacturers and retailers, to file protests against rules or regulations ordered by the OPS Administrator."

THE OUTLOOK added that if shortages develop in such basic items as food and clothing, "then rationing of those goods should be instituted . . . While no such shortages exist at present, it is possible that they may appear during the course of the mobilization effort."

The Outlook charged that in passing the Defense Production Act last year, Congress "handed the Administration an unworkable law . . . which made it impossible to regulate the commodity markets or to impose selective price controls."

But, the publication commented, "the stabilization agencies, on the other hand, have failed consistently to utilize fully the inadequate powers at their command."

See Here, Private Enterprise

Everybody who can read knows that corporations have been having a field day. Now the Federal Trade Commission confirms the trend. Its findings:

Profits of corporations in 21 major industries, after taxes, soared 43% in 1950 over 1949 levels.

That looks like profiteering, if you'll excuse the expression.

It doesn't look like equality of sacrifice, and it doesn't look as though our present tax laws are operating to place a fair share of the defense burden on profits.

If Congress is responsive to the views of the folks back home, it will give thought to aiming its anti-aircraft guns at those high-flying super-profits.

The CIO has proposed six ways that Congress can halt inflation, stabilize the economy, and provide a little equality of sacrifice in the defense picture. The President has also made suggestions for improving the basic anti-inflation law. There's no excuse for delay on Capitol Hill.

Of course, big business organizations like the National Association of Manufacturers are likely to oppose most of these proposals.

But every time the NAM moans about alleged dangers to its idea of free enterprise, an awful lot of people are going to be thinking about that 43% profit increase.

Ten Million Dollar Pressure

During 1950, at least $10 million was spent for lobbying in the Congress of the United States. Most of it came from business and other conservative pressure groups.

The American Medical Association, according to figures rounded up by the Congressional Quarterly, spent about $1¼ millions for lobbying. Was the AMA successful? Well, no national health insurance program has been passed.

The Committee for Constitutional Government spent almost a million. Did it do a job? Well, Taft-Hartley is still on the books, and a lot of Fair Deal measures are still gathering dust in pigeonholes.

But history shows that big money doesn't always walk off with the show. Despite opposition from big business and its pressure boys, we've moved through the years in a steady path toward a form of government more responsive to the people's needs. We can keep political progress alive—by political action.

This is an off-year for elections. Many people would like to forget about politics until the campaign is under way. Chances are, those same people will be complaining in '52 that their Election Day choice is limited to Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee.

Just about a year from now, primary elections will be starting in the various states. If union members do a political action job in the next 12 months, they can win nominations for candidates pledged to policies of fair play and equal sacrifice.

But the time to get busy is now, not next year—when it may be too late to win one of the most important elections in American history.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV April 30, 1951 No. 18

LITTLE JACK HORNER!

CP Makes May Day Mockery

By GERVASE N. LOVE

MAY DAY, the traditional day of celebration for organized labor in Europe, will be observed again this week—with the Communists, as usual, trying to make a mockery of it.

They won't, of course, be able to succeed. For the free workers of Europe are as wise in their generation as the Reds. The day will be, for them, a day devoted to consideration of the basic objectives of free workers everywhere—peace, economic advancement, and social and industrial democracy—which May Day has come to symbolize.

They will hold their parades. They will listen thoughtfully to the speeches of their leaders. They will sing the songs of the worker and they will pay tribute to the memories of those who died in the long fight for the better life.

So will the Communists. But whereas the free workers will believe sincerely in what they are doing and what they are celebrating, the day to their Red brethren will be merely another opportunity to thump the tub for whatever aims Soviet Russia may be pursuing at that time.

MAY DAY was never very widely observed in the United States, even though it was of American origin. It was adopted as a day symbolic of international fraternity among workers at an international labor meeting at Paris in 1889.

The motion for its adoption was presented by the American delegation. May 1 was picked because that date, three years before, had marked the start of a general strike in Chicago to enforce the eight-hour day.

The McCormick Harvester Works for months had been locking out its regular employes and replacing them with scabs and Pinkerton "detectives" in anticipation of the strike.

On May 3, 1886, a mass meeting of the lockout victims was held at the plant gate. In the midst of it the scabs and "detectives" charged.

A fight developed. Police were called. They restored order by firing into the crowd and killing several workers.

A protest meeting that night in the Haymarket Square was climaxed by the historic explosion. (The person who planted the bomb has never been found.) Police fired frantically into the crowd. How many were killed was never determined, but the number was high.

The persecution and frame-ups of Anarchists that followed constitutes one of the most shameful chapter in American history.

The workers of Europe are coming more and more to the clear realization that their goals will never be attained with the "help" of Soviet Russia and her Communist stooges in other countries.

WHO BUT THE SOVIET, they might well wonder, would turn a day dedicated to peace and justice into an occasion for a display of armed might? In Moscow, the Red Army will march, fly, ride on tanks and cannon in a day-long demonstration.

Even if the Russian worker doesn't get much in the way of peace or justice—or food and clothing and housing—he can have, on this one day, the privilege of looking at the fighting men he supports and the war materiel he pays for.

Communist slogans, meaningless as they've become, will be screamed over the rest of Europe, too. It's a foregone conclusion that the disillusioned workers won't pay much attention to them.

In the United States the Communists have sort of taken over May Day by default. Undoubtedly they will stage parades and make speeches parroting those of their masters in Moscow.

AMERICAN WORKERS will be content to send their greetings to laboring people of other countries, as Pres. Philip Murray has done on behalf of the CIO.

"We are all engaged in the common quest for liberty, dignity and security," he wrote. "Where democratic liberties still exist, workers through their organizations are able to demonstrate publicly the will to struggle and the determination to continue their efforts to extend and consolidate their gains . . .

"Free trade unionists everywhere are now banded together in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in quest of peace, freedom and social justice. In the free world we still enjoy the right to struggle for the attainment of those goals. In the slave world, promises of social betterment not only are cynically broken but the rights of working people to change and improve their way of life are brutally suppressed."

Lobbying Expenditures Doubled In 4 Years

Three hundred and forty organizations which have a stake in influencing federal legislation spent $10,303,204 for that purpose during 1950, according to their reports under the Lobby Act

At the head of the list, as might be expected, was the American Medical Association, which paid $1,326,078 to fight President Truman's health insurance plan and other legislation that might affect its monopoly position in the medical field.

In second place was the Committee for Constitutional Government, which spent $921,549 in an effort to return the United States to its pre-Hoover economic and social status.

(Edward A. Rumley, executive secretary of that isolationist, anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal group, was convicted recently of contempt of Congress for failure to answer all the questions the House Lobby Investigating Committee asked him last summer.)

A study and tabulation of the lobbyists' reports, made by Congressional Quarterly, shows that the AMA and the CCG also headed the list in 1949.

The organizations studied in that tabulation were good, bad and indifferent from the labor point of view. The 1950 total, according to CQ, compares with over-all lobby spending of $7,969,710 in 1949; $6,191,838 in 1948 and $5,058,357 in 1947—indicating a steady increase in efforts to influence members of Congress on a widening range of issues.

Sixteen groups, including the AMA and the CCG, spent more than $100,000 on legislation during the year. Business groups spent more than half the grand total, including the outright business organizations and the phoney fronts masquerading under small business, tax reduction and "public" labels.

The CQ tabluation shows that after the AMA and the CCG, the other groups that spent more than $100,000 ranked in this order:

Townsend Plan, Inc. (through the third quarter), $379,551; United World Federalists, $345,022; Association of American Railroads, $269,825; National Small Business Men's Association, $221,107; National Association of Real Estate Boards, $133,650; American Legion, $130,872; National Tax Equality Association, $126,971; National Coal Association, $122,737; Atlantic Union Committee, $116,666; AFL, $116,027; National Federation of Post Office Clerks, $115,092; Chamber of Commerce of the U. S., $109,926; National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, $105,051, and Southern States Industrial Council, $104,387.

The National Small Business Men's Association is one of the masquerades big business uses to carry the ball on the legislative front. Both it and the Small Business Economic Foundation were created by DeWitt Emery, Akron, O., printer.

The House Select Committee on Small Business, of which Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) is chairman, investigated both groups less than two years ago. A report filed with the House on Feb. 21, 1950, showed Emery to be president of both groups and their directorates to interlock. In summarizing the committee's findings, the report said:

"We . . . believe that we can give fully responsive answers to the two main questions stated at the beginning of this report:

"1. Do these organizations claim to represent small business? The answer is 'yes'.

"2. If so, is the claim false or misleading? The answer is 'yes'."

The Foundation, the committee found, lives on "the dole of the biggest businesses in the country," and it "may well be called an absolute fraud."

"As to the association," it continued, "the answer must be much the same."

Both groups, the committee reported, are strongly anti-labor.

The Conference of American Small Business Organizations, which reported spending $53,655, was found to be the same type of organization by the House Lobby Investigating Committee of last summer headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.).

Like Emery's foundation, it has used its name to get donations from big business and fronted for its financial benefactors—not for the people for whom it professed to act.

The Patman committee also investigated that National Tax Equality Association and found that like the National Small Business Men's Association, it has what might be called a subsidiary—National Associated Businessmen, Inc.

Both were formed by Vernon Scott and his firm, Scott & Schuler, organization and industry counselors. They share leadership and have common aims, but at least for lobby report purposes are regarded as separate organizations.

The CQ tabulation shows that while the NTEA was spending $126,970 on legislative matters last year, the NAB was spending $34,658. In addition, 20 state groups of associated business men or tax equality associations, all affiliated with the NAB, were spending a total of $92,840.

The NTEA directs its efforts toward a "tax equality" program aimed at cooperatives, which it claims under present laws are a "menace" to small business. (The CIO does not agree.) The NAB has more general aims, but stresses the same kind of "tax equality" program.

Both profess to be arms of small business. But the NTEA gets most of its money from public utility companies, the Patman committee found. And the committee staff found evidence indicating that NTEA funds "flow into NAB or its state affiliates."

"It thus seems sufficiently clear that if these organizations do claim to represent small business," the report states, "there is at least a prima facie basis for regarding the claims as false or at the very least grossly misleading."

In its summary, the committee found that the two organizations and the NAB state affiliates do in fact purport to represent small business, and that this claim is "false or misleading."

CQ found that the Communist Party spent $10 on lobbying during the first six months of the year.

Expenditures of 312 groups were sorted out into nine categories by CQ. These were:

Business (outright), $3,410,054;

Citizens (including such organizations as the CCG), $1,799,803;

Employe (unions), $518,413;

Farm, $1,212,214;

Foreign policy, $744,904;

Professional, $1,596,835;

Reclamation, $389,374;

Tax, $443,186;

Veterans and military, $188,421.

Labor's Lobbying Expenses Are Only 5% Of Total

Twenty-nine labor groups accounted for $518,413 of the $10,303,204 spent to influence legislation in Congress during 1950, according to the Congressional Quarterly Report.

That's 5% of the total. The American Medical Association's expenditure of $1,326,078 was just under 13%.

The National CIO reported spending $32,709. This sum included $1500 for the CIO Housing Committee, a $5000 gift to the Committee for the Nation's Health, and the cost of mimeographing and distributing the "Legis-letter." The CIO Maritime Committee spent $22,002 and the Communications Workers $9703. The AFL reported spending $116,027.

U.S. Doles Out Billions In Tax Rebates To Manufactures

BILLIONS of dollars of "tax rebates" have been given to hundreds of American manufacturing corporations within the last few months.

The rebates take the form of government certificates which permit companies to write off the cost of new plants within the next five years. Ordinarily, companies amortize their plants in 20, not five years.

This tremendous subsidy for business was approved by Congress for the purpose of obtaining an increase in the country's defense production capacity. Congress and many government administrators remembered with fear the 1940-41 period, when many industries refused to expand their plant capacity for World War II without special favors from the Government.

Under the five-year amortization plan, a company deducts from its profits in each year through 1956 20% of the cost of its new plant and equipment. That deduction, of course, lowers profits and, therefore, means lower taxes.

If five years from now the national emergency is over and corporation tax rates have dropped, the corporations will have made a big saving in the money they pay to Uncle Sam. They will also have a lot of new buildings and equipment.

The companies benefit even if taxes don't go down five years from now. First, they get the tax benefits at a period of almost guaranteed high profits.

Secondly, the higher costs for plants during the five year period permitted by Uncle Sam's certificates tend to get melded into the price structure. Prices go up to absorb the building costs—and then have a tendency to stay up

AT ANY rate, the certificates are attractive to industrialists so far, some $4½ billion in five-year-amortization permits have been handed out to businessmen.

Many economists believe this type of "incentive" to industry is needed to insure success of the defense production program.

But union researchers, looking at the problem, feel that administration of the entire five year depreciation program by the Defense Production Administration—a division of Charles E. Wilson's Office of Defense Mobilization—has been very lax. They point out:

- The large bulk of the $4½ billion in certificates has been granted to big business.
- Many five-year amortization certificates have been given to companies with only the most remote connection with the defense program.
- Many of the amortization certificates cover factory and other buildings which will be used for private profit long after the defense program is over.
- In some industries—such as paper and textile, for instance—certificates have been handed out even though the companies have no direct connection with the defense effort that requires emergency action.
- Many of the certificates have been granted without any indication of real economic need.

The certificates are being granted even though American corporations now holding a record-breaking accumulation of more than $76 billion in net working capital.

IN SOME other industries, expansion which is not directly needed for the defense program will merely use up steel and short-supply items which should be used wherever possible for defense needs.

One such case is in the woolen industry; in a recent letter to Sen. Maybank (D S.C.), Research Director Sol Barkin of the CIO Textile Workers says:

"The benefit cannot be justified as necessary under the regulations issued by President Truman. While these woolen fabrics are required for national defense, there is no 'shortage of facilities for the production' of these materials for national defense.

"The woolen and worsted industry now has sufficient capacity to take care of all possible military and civilian needs . . .

"The unevenness of employment at the present time, even with the available government contracts, makes the construction of further facilities with government aid of highly dubious value. It will undermine sound competition."

Corporations holding the biggest tax amortization certificates issued by the Defense Production Administration:

INTERNATIONAL PAPER	$ 42,971,958
NATIONAL STEEL	21,725,895
DETROIT STEEL	47,797,100
GULF OIL	33,912,342
PUEBLO STEEL	80,000,000
CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RR	66,422,000
SEABOARD AIRLINE RR	49,910,903
PITTSBURGH STEEL	56,318,000
REYNOLDS METAL	78,365,278
SINCLAIR OIL	27,000,000
CHEMSTRAND	114,031,500
U. S. STEEL	420,000,000
ETHYL CORP.	56,536,000
WEYERHAEUSER TIMBER	31,594,377
ALCOA	149,262,789
STANDARD OIL	45,199,000
KAISER	135,960,505
JONES AND LAUGHLIN	42,057,287
CRUCIBLE STEEL	27,251,893
DOW CHEMICAL	70,651,760
ARMCO STEEL	123,492,406
BETHLEHEM STEEL	235,849,000
GENERAL ELECTRIC	48,322,930
ETHYL CORP.	48,176,000
GRANITE STEEL	63,033,900
HARVEY MACHINE CO.	94,700,000
SOLVAY PROCESS DIVISION	29,000,000
TOTAL	$2,190,816,928

Spain's High Prices Cause 2nd Strike

SPANISH workers, for the second time in less than two months, staged a widespread strike last week in protest against the Franco dictatorship's failure to do something about the rising cost of living.

The walkout, a two-day demonstration that took an estimated 350,000 workers from their jobs, forced numerous factories, mines and stores to close in the heavily industrialized Basque provinces on the north coast of Spain, not far from the French border.

It was so successful that government officials conceded the impossibility of carrying out their threat to discharge the strikers. They admitted that the best they might do was to fire a few leaders as a "disciplinary" measure.

Some 200 leaders of the strike have been arrested.

A RENEWAL of the walkout appeared possible later in the week when strikers who had returned left their jobs again in angry protest against refusal of authorities to release those arrested.

The political implications of the walkout were not immediately clear. The Basques, devoutly Catholic and anti-Communist, are also stoutly anti-Franco.

It was they who were slaughtered by Italian Fascist and German Nazi supporters of Marshall Franco and his Falangists at Guernica during the Civil War.

The protest was clearly based in part on opposition to Franco, but appeared aimed primarily at high prices and scarcities caused by black markets, which are blamed on some government officials, and graft in government circles. As a result, the workers' standard of living is the lowest in Western Europe.

The Associated Press quoted one Balboa steel worker as saying, as he prepared to return to his job:

"WE MADE our protest. Now it's up to the government to do something about it so we can live. My problem is very simple. Before our Civil War, I made half of what I'm making now. But I lived 100% better.

"Don't make any mistake. I'm not a Communist and I'm not against Franco, but I want to live and I've got a family to feed."

Government statistics show that take-home pay for most jobs is about 50% more than in 1936, when the Civil War started.

But the basic wage for a miner, however, is even now only 47c a day, for a textile worker 43c, for a metal worker 47c, and for a carpenter 52c. In addition, the worker receives small social welfare benefits.

The cost of living has increased 25% to 50% in recent months. Neither wages nor benefits, nor a combination of them, has been boosted enough to permit the standard of living to be maintained—even at prices which are low compared to the rest of Europe.

BREAD sells for 4c a pound, butter 28c, potatoes 5c and the lowest grade of beef 28c. The least a man can buy a suit of clothes for is $12.50, while the lowest grade of dress costs around $6. Black market prices, of course, are far higher.

The Basque walkout followed a general strike in Barcelona, on the northeast Mediterranean coast, that started Mar. 10. It was broken by the government with great difficulty and the use of considerable force.

EVERYBODY APPEARS to be enjoying a joke in this photograph of American delegates and union officials at the World Congress of Professional Workers, held under the auspices of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at Brussels, Belgium, Apr. 18-21. Left to right, seated, Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newspaper Guild, who is labor information chief of the Paris office of ECA; Mrs. Helen Rachlin, president of Local 1707, Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee; standing, Pres. Paul R. Hutchings of the AFL Office Employees Union; Secy.-Treas. Irvin R. Kuenzli of the AFL Federation of Teachers; Arnold Zander of the AFL State, County and Municipal Employees; Victor Reuther, CIO representative in Europe; John J. Connors, AFL educational director; Vice Pres. John Moran of the CIO Communications Workers; Harry Steeper, AFL Musicians; L. A. Thomasen, CIO Newspaper Guild member and ECA labor information representative in Belgium, and Irving Brown, AFL European representative. More than 200 delegates attended.

ICFTU Professional Workers Demand Higher Wages, Increased Production

THE COMMON bond that unites manual and non-manual workers in all spheres was reaffirmed by the first World Congress of Professional Workers in its closing session in Brussels, Belgium.

The congress was called by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. It brought together more than 200 representatives of white collar workers from 18 countries and the Free Trade Unions in Exile.

"Within the framework of an economic democracy," the resolution stated, "there must be the fullest recognition of the right of non-manual workers to a voice in the conduct of an enterprise.

"This requires an extension of joint consultation to consider production problems and questions relating to welfare and efficiency, so as to provide for the participation of non-manual workers through trade union machinery."

ANOTHER resoultion, introduced by the delegation of the French Force Ouvriere, called for a study of techniques for improving productivity with emphasis on a continuous improvement in the living standards and working conditions of workers.

The two resolutions reflected the increasing determination of workers in other nations, especially in western Europe, to seek a greater share in the income from their labor, and to boost production only if it will benefit them as well as their employers.

A resolution from the United States delegation condemned the "ruthless expropriation" of the newspaper La Prensa by the Argentine government, and the withdrawal of press credentials from Sam Pope Brewer, New York Times correspondent, by the Spanish government.

CIO members attending the conference were Pres. Harry Martin of the Newspaper Guild; Vice Pres. John J. Moran of the Communications Workers, and Mrs. Helen Rachlin, of New York, president of Local 1707 of the Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

Carey Says Asians Resent U. S. 'Domestic Colonial Policy'

AMERICA'S "domestic colonial policy" has caused resentment among the peoples of Southeast Asia against the United States, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey told the Press Club of New York City last week.

"Now this sounds like a severe indictment of the United States," declared Carey who spoke at the club's annual banquet. "That is exactly what it is. Here we have maintained a domestic colonial policy of our own.

"We have imposed that policy in varying intensity upon Negroes, Jews, Mexicans, Japanese, Chinese and even our own native Indians. We have denied these people the full integration of citizenship and the right to exercise their freedom of decision.

"We have done that on the political level, on the economic level, and at the community organization level . . .

"We tell an Indonesian or a Hindu or a Malayan that the American people are eager, willing and able to help him in his struggle toward freedom. He is likely to ask whether all the American people are eager, willing and able.

"I have no doubt but what the minority groups in this country are willing and eager to aid the peoples of other lands, but I am absolutely convinced that in too many cases they are not able to help them. They are not able to help because they have not been permitted to help themselves."

Summer School Held By ICFTU

The first international summer school of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions was held in Paris last week with a student body of 76 unionists from 15 affiliated European organizations.

In an opening address, U. S. Ambassador Milton Katz, head of the Economic Cooperation Administration in Europe, said that the west should shift its emphasis to the re-establishment of the "military strength and political effectiveness of free Europe."

The North Atlantic Treaty, he said, complements the Marshall Plan because it is designed to insure peace and to "create a bulwark of strength behind which we may continue to work out a constructive future."

The summer school was set up by the ICFTU Education Service under the supervision of Hans Gottfurcht. Instruction centered largely about the Shuman Plan, cooperation, and increased industrial productivity.

FTC Tells Public:

Beer Is Fattening—Because It Stimulates Appetite

If you sit down and drink a case or two of Acme beer some thirsty afternoon this summer, you'll probably not only have a hangover, but the chances are you will also weigh more than you did before your binge began.

The Federal Trade Commission isn't concerned over whether or not you get a headache out of the deal. But the FTC has put its foot down on the practice of the Acme Brewing Co., San Francisco, Cal., of using the phrase "dietatically non--fattening" without qualifiation in its advertisements.

The qualification which FTC has ordered the firm to use is:

"When taken in substitution for foods of equal or greater caloric value and not in addition to the normally required diet."

This statement or its equivalent must be made "clearly and conspiciously" and "in immediate conjunction" with the non-fattening claim, the order specifies.

Acme Beer makers have been saying in much smaller type than in the non-fattening claim, that the beer is "relatively so, [unfattening] compared with other foods," according to the commission.

FTC says it is a fact that beer in itself is non-fattening, because it is "a food beverage with a relatively low caloric content," but goes on to say that "beer has a tendency to stimulate the appetite of many consumers."

If the beer stimulates his appetite so that the imbiber eats more heartily than he would have otherwise, he'll gain weight, FTC adds.

At $3100 Living Is Tough

At $35,000 A Year You Get Those 'Cadillac Blues'

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

THE WALL Street Journal would like you to think that things are tough all over. As evidence, they offer the cases of a $35,000-a-year businessman; a $17,000-yearly-income family in Texas; and a $60-a-week steel worker's family.

The steel worker—like workers in other industries—has plenty of troubles in these days of inflation. But neither the $17,000 family nor the $35,000 businessman appear to have problems that would touch the strings of your heart.

Whether the business paper intended or not, its series of articles shows this: there's a vast difference between worry about buying milk for the kids, and the more remote worry of whether you can make that 1950 Cadillac last another year.

The picture is most serious, of course, for the man who works in the steel mill. Mr. M., the article calls him, gets to the point in a hurry.

"I'm making more than ever before," he says, "but I have less than I ever had."

Worker Discouraged

He declares it to be "most discouraging" the way he loses ground, year by year. In 1946, he says, he owed debts of less than $100. Today—five years later—he lists his debts as "around $300." His wife thinks they total much more.

M. earns about $3100 a year, or about $60 a week at his job in the steel mill. Back in 1946, he grossed about $45 weekly. Today he is making more than he ever did in his life.

(If it weren't for the CIO Steelworkers who have contracts with most basic steel companies, M's earnings would likely be a lot less than $60 a week. The industry isn't exactly noted for spontaneous generosity to its employes.)

M's wages are lower than the "average" for steel workers. Dept. of Labor figures show that the average for iron, steel and rolling mill workers was $77.27 a week at last report in January.

But Mrs. M has some interesting figures to supply to the picture. In 1946, she fed her family of six for about $19 weekly. Today it costs $30 a week to do the job.

That's not counting milk which runs about $4.25 a week and even then, she feels the four kids—15, 13, 9, and 5 years of age—don't get as much milk as they should.

Rent Almost Double

The family rented a three-room apartment in 1946 for $22 a month, including utilities. Today the five rooms they occupy in a housing project cost $42.35 monthly.

Mr. and Mrs. M. have no automobile, no television and no new furniture. The only appliance they have purchased since 1946 is a $79 vacuum cleaner.

As a $3100-a-year man, M. is just about the "average" U. S. family head from the standpoint of cash income. In a 1949 check, the Dept. of Commerce found the average family's earnings were $3100 a year. About 20% of the 39 million U. S. families earned between $3000 and $3999 that year.

If Mrs. M. puts $10.50 aside each week to apply on the rent, $8.50 for food and milk, at the end of the month she has less than $12 left. About $4 of that usually goes for miscellaneous household expenses and $5.65 to a saving bond fund for "emergencies."

Mrs. M. says, "There doesn't seem to be much left after the rent and food are paid for."

M. recalls: "Our whole life has been tormented by money troubles, but never more than now." He takes a dim view of his future unless prices come down to "where the workingman can raise a family healthily and happily."

Different Wolf?

The second and third families interviewed by Journal reporters also were finding it difficult to ignore a "wolf" sitting on their front porches. Somehow, though their financial problems didn't sound as important as M's.

Mr. and Mrs. B, the second couple interviewed, live in Texas. Despite an income of $17,000 a year, the B's have somehow or other managed to get themselves $22,500 in debt.

But inflation wasn't their real problem. They've had a bad case of "keeping up with the Joneses."

They bought an $18,500 home with a $5000 down payment and a $13,500 mortgage. Then they felt they just had to buy a $9500 lot in downtown Houston, on which they still owe $6800.

New Furniture, Too

A new home just has to have new furniture, the B's decided, so they bought $7300 worth of it during the past two years, including a television set, washing machine, refrigerator and an electric stove.

Add to the above a new 1950 Mercury convertible on which B traded his 1949 model plus $800 "mainly because the tires (on the old car) were getting pretty well shot."

Enumerating his debts in his comfortable living room, B declares "we've had a lot of big capital expenditures lately."

B. gives his wife a $300 allowance every month with which she pays all household expenses and buys clothing for both of them.

B. has gotten two "cost of living" pay raises in the last year on his job as an oil company attorney—one for $56 a month and one for $36. The rapid rise in the cost of living has sucked this "new money" up like a blotter and B. just grins ruefully and looks at the ceiling when asked where it has gone.

Earns $35,000 A Year

Before shedding a tear over the plight of the B's, let's listen to a really sad story as the Journal reporter interviews Mr. Z, a $35,000-a-year New England manufacturing executive.

"Last year my income was $5000 larger than it ever was before, but for the first time I had to dip into my savings to meet Christmas and other year-end expenses," he complains.

Last year he was paid a salary of $30,000, plus a $5000 bonus. His Federal income taxes totaled $9000. So after paying Uncle Sam off, he had "only" $26,000 left.

When he bought his wife a new Oldsmobile last year, he found it necessary to sell some stock instead of paying for it out of the accumulated surplus in his checking account.

He himself is still driving a 1950 Cadillac and is afraid he will be forced to drive it all this year unless he decides to sell more stock and buy a '51 model.

Making Clothes Last

Mrs. Z. is making her clothes last longer now, too. "Last year she couldn't buy the new fur coat she wanted," Z. related. "So I bought her one for $1000 at Christmas—and that's one of the things that threw my savings program out of gear."

The Z's haven't bought many household gadgets since World War II. They bought a lot of stuff back in the early 1940's when prices were much lower. They have let themselves go in one respect, they admit. They purchased a small $300 television set which they turned in a short time later on a more elaborate $800 model.

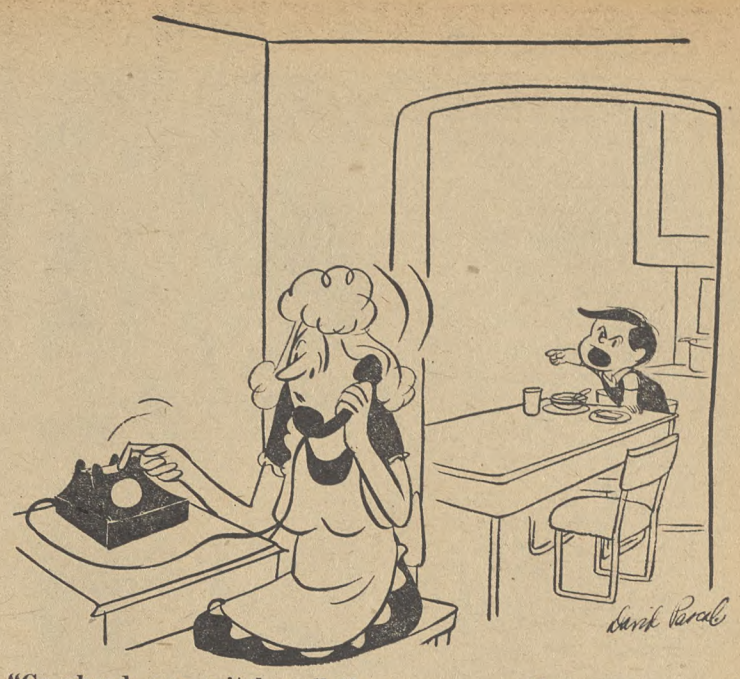
Z. figures he has saved $200 a year on movies and $100 more on shows and nightclubs by staying at home watching the free TV shows.

Conquergood To Direct CCL Education Dept.

Appointment of Howard Conquergood, Toronto, as educational and welfare director of the Canadian Congress of Labour was announced last week.

Conquergood, who attended Queen's Univ. of Toronto, joined the staff of the CIO Steelworkers in 1943. He was employed for recreational, educational and welfare work, but soon became engaged in other activities, including those of a staff representative.

He set up a model welfare organization during the 1946 strike at the Steel Co. of Canada, Hamilton, Ont., in 1946. Active in CCL educational work for some years, he has arranged many weekend institutes and organized summer and winter schools and staff seminars.



"Go ahead, you snitch, call the cops . . . call the FBI . . . call the President . . . call UN . . . I ain't gonna eat your old cereal anyhow . . . go ahead . . . just call . . . I double-dare you."

CIO-CSC Ready With Program Of Aid For Armed Forces

THE CIO Community Services Committee has prepared an elaborate program as a guide for state and local industrial union councils in providing members of the armed forces with services to meet their personal needs.

The committee points out that with the rapid expansion of our armed forces and the return from Korea of wounded veterans, the job of carrying out the program rests with council and local union IUC community services committees.

The program is based on the following principles:

1. The CIO recognizes the necessity of supporting the welfare of service men and women and veterans.

2. The support is not intended to be limited to CIO members living in the vicinity of military installations, but is to be extended wherever possible.

3. CIO councils and local unions should participate freely in all community efforts in support of services to the armed forces and veterans through the local United Services Organization and also through the local USO and by independent activity through local unions and CIO councils.

4. CIO councils participating in USO activities should insist on adequate representation on boards and committees.

CIO local unions are asked to assist servicemen in pre-induction problems dealing with legal matters, insurance policies and other personal needs.

State and local unions also are urged to help in providing service personnel with entertainment, education, sports participation and counselling services.

Strike Curb Stricken From Bill

THE HOUSE Appropriations Committee recently tried to make it a felony—punishable by $1,000 fine or a year in jail—for any government employe to be a member of any organization which "asserts the right to strike against the government of the United States."

The language was stricken out of the bill on a point of order raised jointly by Rep. Yorty (D. Cal.) and Rep. Cannon (D. Mo.) as the House was considering the supplemental appropriations bill.

"Some of our large labor organizations," Yorty explained, "as a matter of policy do not believe in striking against the government, but they do assert that they have the right.

"The government is going into all sorts of private enterprise and these union members who are engaged as workers in these enterprises will be made, by this criminal statute, guilty of a felony."

THE CHECK which Patrick McGrath (third from left), business manager of Local 1-2, CIO Utility Workers, is presenting to John S. Sinclair, 1951 Fund Chairman of the New York Chapter of the American Red Cross, brought to $25,700 the sum contributed by Consolidated Edison employes. More than half of the money was given by members of CIO union. Left to right, Frank Vilas, Consolidated's assistant director of community relations; Local 1-2 Pres. Andrew McMahon, McGrath, Sinclair, Eugene W. Stetson, Red Cross city chairman; and C. Edward Gideon, financial secretary of Local 1-2 and co-chairman of the drive.

Firm Blasted In Donora Fog Case

FRANK BURKE, health and safety director of the CIO Steelworkes, last week scored the American Wire and Steel Co. for stingy settlements paid in the 130 damage suits resulting from deaths and illnesses in the Donora, Pa. smog disaster of 1948.

Fumes from the company's Donora plant were found by the U. S. Public Health Service to have caused the tragedy.

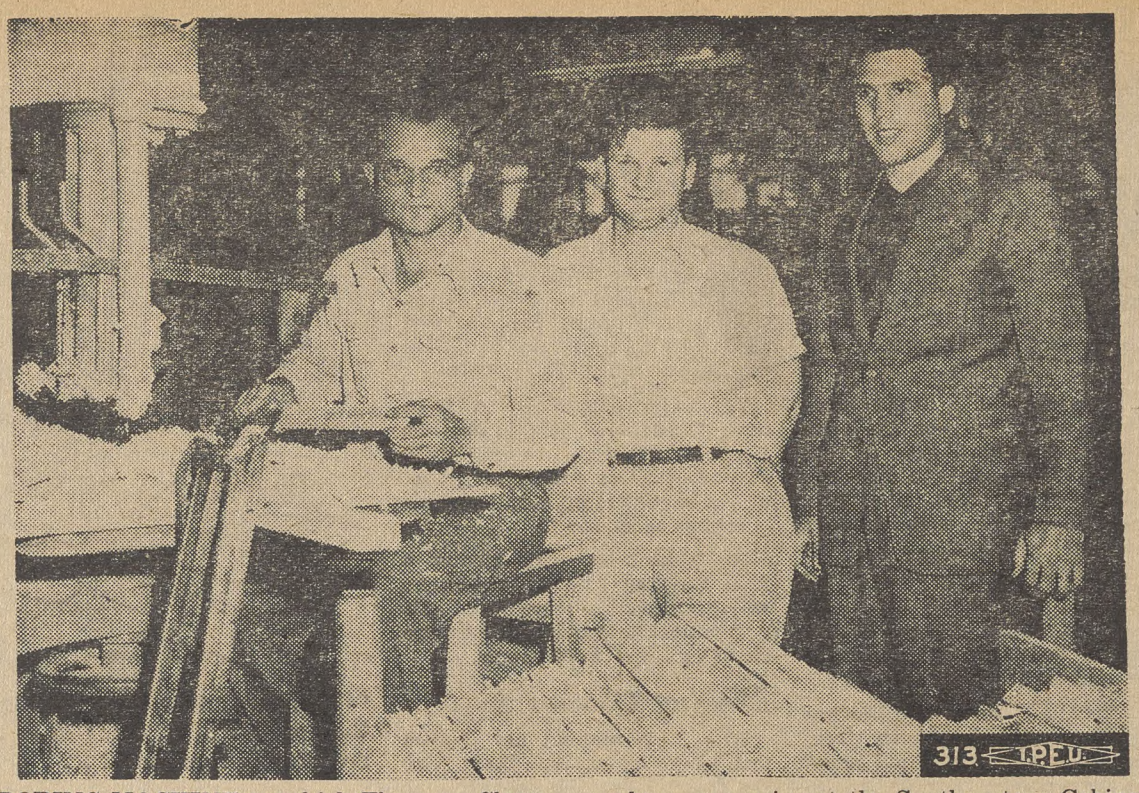
The company was sued for $4,643,000, but it settled for $235,000, about 5c on the dollar.

Burke said that the steel union "has exerted every means at its command to determine the causes of this tragic occurrence and to prevent its repetition."

The union donated the sum of $10,000 to the Borough of Donora to investigate these causes and secured all the resources of the U. S. Public Health Service, and the Dept. of Welfare of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to determine causes and suggest remedies.

Burke said the union "received meager cooperation" from the company in taking steps to prevent a return of the poisonous fog.

Burke said that the vigilance of workers at the plant, the institution by the company of safe operating procedures and adherence of the workers to the union's safety and health program are necessary to prevent a repetition of the tragedy.



BORING MACHINE at which Thurman Sheets (left) is seated was altered so that Sheets, whose legs are paralyzed, can operate it by hand. A member of the CIO Furniture Workers, Sheets thereby got a better job and a 30c-an-hour pay raise at the Southeastern Cabinet Co., near Lenoir, N. C. Others in the photo are Ray Bean (center), president of Local 285, UFWA, and Oren Mason, company personnel director.

Union-Management Cooperation Obtains Handicapped Man Better Job, 30c Raise

GOOD relations between his company and his CIO union have brought a better job and a 30c-an-hour pay raise to Thurman Sheets, who as a childhood victim of infantile paralysis lost the use of his legs.

An employe of Southeastern Cabinet Co. near Lenoir, N. C., where the workers are members of Local 285, Furniture Workers, Sheets formerly operated tailing molder and lathe sander machines. This job paid 95c an hour.

A boring machine operator's job—which pays $1.25 an hour—became available. Sheets' seniority made him next in line for this job. Under a strict interpretation of the contract between the company and the union he was disqualified because of his physical disability—the machine was foot-controlled.

Sheets appealed to his job steward and Local 285's president, Ray Bean. A quick huddle with the plant personnel manager, Orren Mason, and the company machinist brough results.

It took the machinist half an hour or so to equip the boring machine with a handle so it could be fed by hand. Sheets got the job.

Plant Superintendent Joseph Hennessey says Sheets is "doing a fine job."

Mason adds, "His attendance record is excellent."

The company manufactures cabinets for television sets.

Local 285 has been bargaining agent for the employes since they voted 224 to 4 for the union in a National Labor Relations Board election last Dec. 11. A contract between the company and the union was signed in March.

Smear Tactics Of AMA Bring Tart Reply

THE American Medical Association, which seems to hit a new low in public relations every time it opens its official mouth, has been discovered in another smear campaign.

Last month, in a signed editorial in the AMA Journal, Dr. Elmer Henderson, AMA President, wrote, with martyred fervor. In holding the fort against "socialized medicine," he claimed he was being roundly vilified by "thwarted, unhappy advocates of socialized medicine and a few of their apologists in the medical profession."

Henderson hinted broadly that anybody connected with the Committee for the Nation's Health, including Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, was colored with "pinkish pigmentation, and that's a mild way of saying it."

The Committee for the Nation's Health on Mar. 15 wrote Dr. Henderson asking that the columns of the Journal be opened for a statement on behalf of national health insurance, and also requesting that its letter be printed.

The letter chided Henderson for his cracks about "pinkishness," denied that the Committee in any way favored socialized medicine "when that term is used for what it really means."

IT ADDED that differences of opinion should be settled by "public and professional discussions in which all views have a chance to be heard."

"We believe," the letter stated, "that American principles such as the free choice of physicians and the independence of our medical schools can and will be maintained through properly designed legislation. If we did not so believe, none of us would advocate any such legislation."

Signers of the letter—there were 30—included CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Pres. Emil Rieve, of the CIO Textile Workers, and Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers.

On Apr. 20 the Committee for the Nation's Health finally decided to make the letter public.

It did so because (a) Henderson, in more than a month, had been unable to find time to reply to the letter, and (b) the letter had not yet been printed, in the AMA Journal, a weekly publication.

UAW Blasts U. S. Effort To Tax Strike Benefits

CIO AUTO Workers officials last week were taking a dim view of efforts of Bureau of Internal Revenue agents to enforce a ruling which would make strike benefits subject to income tax.

The Bureau has maintained for the past 31 years that benefits "received from a labor union by an individual member while on strike are to be included in his gross income . . . there being no provision of law excepting such income from taxation." Up until the present however, no attempt has been made to enforce the ruling.

When revenue agents began dropping into UAW local union offices this year asking how much each local paid out and to whom, few of the offices then were in a position to give accurate information.

Their records showed how much was spent and what it was spent for but did not indicate what each individual received.

The benefits had taken a host of different forms: cash for rent and minimum living expenses, cash for medical expenses, food baskets, grocery orders, etc., to large numbers on strike.

Last year the union paid out more than $5 million in benefits to strikers at Chrysler, John Deere, International Harvester and other smaller plants.

THE PAYMENTS in all cases were for direct strike relief and did not include other expenses, such as radio time, newspaper ads, leaflets, etc.

UAW Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey has informed the locals involved that the tax claims are "grounded in error." He said in a letter that "there was no employer-employe relationship existing" and "there has been no service performed." He added:

"Therefore, withholding forms do not have to be filed by any local union. Strike relief, like other relief payments received from public welfare agencies, is not taxable income."

He said the UAW would take over the dispute and attempt to clarify the status of strike benefits in conferences with Bureau officials in Washington.

GCEOC Protests Ill. Wage Plan

The CIO Government and Civic Employes Organizing Committee has sent a strong protest to Gov. Adalai E. Stevenson (D.) of Illinois and to members of the Legislature over a proposal in the Governor's budget message to raise by a flat 10% the wages of some 18,000 State employes.

GCEOC termed the proposal "woefully inadequate," and said it makes no provision for raising substantially the wages of workers at the lower economic levels.

The CIO group urged the Governor and Senate to support a bill sponsored by Sen. Miller (R.). The measure provides a $35 increase to State employes earning up to $205 a month, $25 to workers earning up to $265; and $15 to those making up to $305 monthly.

British Deputy Stops Gromyko's Tongue

Andrei Gromyko, Russian delegate at the meeting of the Big Four foreign ministers' desputies in Pairs, was very neatly put in his place by Ernest Davies, British deputy, at the 36th session last week.

The Soviet spokesman claimed that Great Britain's Labor Party "conspired" with Winston Churchill's Conservatives in formulating foreign policy, and that a recent Churchill speech was "an appeal from an aggressor brandishing an atomic weapon."

"I cannot take the weight of Winston Churchill on my shoulders," said Davies, "but I cannot agree with Mr. Gromyko's interpretations."

Churchill's recent motions have been defeated in the House of Commons, Davies recalled.

"That is what happens in a democracy," he told Gromyko, "but it is possible you would not understand it."

Gromyko was left speechless.

Wis. Univ. To Be Host To Five CIO Unions

Five CIO groups will send members to the 1951 summer institute program at the Univ. of Wisconsin.

Subject of the six-day sessions this year will be "Defense Mobilization, Wage and Price Control."

The five CIO groups are: Steelworkers, June 17-23; Auto Workers, July 29-Aug. 4; Communications Workers, July 29-Aug. 4; Wisconsin CIO, Aug. 18-25; and Newspaper Guild, Aug. 18-25.

CWA-Signal Corps Plan Aims To Use Inductees' Skills

ONE OF the chief gripes most frequently heard from GIs during World War II was that they were in outfits where their duties weren't even remotely connected with their civilian jobs.

Machinists were assigned to the finance department, electricians were put in the medical corps and expert accountants were likely to find themselves in the infantry.

In an effort to avoid this woeful waste of skill, the CIO Communications Workers and the U. S. Signal Corps have worked out a joint program which aims to put to use in the armed services the special abilities of the telephone workers.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said that under the plan, local union officials to which an inductee belongs will prepare a statement listing his skill and the military jobs for which he is best qualified.

The inductee will turn in this statement at the reception center when he receives his classification interview. His special qualifications will be checked with the army's needs. Whenever possible, he will be placed in a job where his skill can be best used.

"This program is designed to help place square pegs in square holes, round pegs in round holes," Beirne said in a letter to all CWA locals.

1 JIM LAVOIE, the hero of the film Local 100, is fired by the foreman who does not believe that Lavoie's illness caused his four-day absence from the job. The foreman has been informed that Lavoie was drunk.

2 "WHO IS NEXT?" fellow workers of Lavoie ask as he takes his possessions from the locker. Some of them decide that the only way to protect their jobs is to organize a union.

Sound Film 'Local 100' Packs Wide Audience Appeal

THE FIRST SHOWING of the National Film Board of Canada production, "Local 100," in this country drew applause from 100 union members at the recent Southern Texas CIO Education Conference at Houston.

The film tells a hard-hitting, straight-forward story of how the discharge of a worker led to the formation of a union and to a contract. (The story is outlined in the captions of the pictures from the movie on this page.) The running time of the 16 mm sound film is 30 minutes.

It impressed the conference delegates because it dealt with situations they recognized as bona fide. The very nature of the film also makes it a good one to show to workers who are considering establishment of a union.

But "Local 100" doubtless will appeal to other than union groups.

George T. Guernsey, CIO associate director of education, points out that the movie should interest "church, school and community groups because it deals with the fundamental problem of why unions are formed."

The rental fee is $4, but the movie may be purchased for $90. Inquiries and orders should be sent to the CIO Film Division, 718 Jackson Place, Washington 6. D. C.

This is but one of the many films covering a wide range of subjects that may be obtained from the film division, whose library is constantly growing. An increasing demand from unions and other groups is reported by Guernsey.

More and more educators are coming to realize the value of visual education such as is provided by movies. And apparently there is a growing group of local unions which are profiting from the experience of the education.

3 NOT ALL the men will "buy" the union idea. Here they are—talking in the locker room over the proposal to form a union. All of them are engaged in the discussion or are in deep thought.

4 THE WORKERS' appeal to the international headquarters of a union brings an organizer who is addressing a meeting of the organizing committee. He tells the men the union exists to protect them.

5 DURING a negotiating session the plant manager wants to know why the union wants grievance procedure. He is told of Lavoie's discharge, is shown a doctor's certificate; Lavoie is reinstated, grievance procedure is granted.

Quick Action Urged On Grain For India

IN INDIA, people died last week because they didn't have enough to eat; many, in fact, had nothing to eat.

In Washington, the House Rules Committee reluctantly cleared for action a bill to lend India $190 million to buy two million tons of food from this country's stockpile. The measure probably will get to the floor this week.

The bill was stalled for two months because Congress, defying pleas from Americans in all walks of life—including the CIO and AFL—to feed the hungry without delay, insisted upon a financial deal, instead of the gift asked by President Truman.

A SIMILAR bill in the Senate has been approved by the Foreign Relations Committee. However, it provides that half the grain be sent as a gift and half as a loan.

The President asked that the entire two million tons be a gift on the ground that India is in such financial shape it cannot repay a loan and would only be embarrassed. In asking the U. S. for aid, India merely requested "special easy terms."

Labor, liberal and charitable organizations urged last weekend that House members act quickly on the bill so grain can be started to the starving Indians. The Rules Committee set a limit of six hours' debate.

Much of it is due to be bitter, with some Congressmen prepared to insist that the grain be sent as a gift to the needy.

Famine is no longer a mere threat to India but is already widespread, according to John Brophy, former CIO official now serving as the representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at the United Nations. He had been asked by J. H. Oldenbroek, ICFTU secretary-general, to try to speed up action on the bill.

Brophy was CIO member of an ICFTU delegation that visited Asia last year and spent more than two weeks in India.

It was apparent then, he recalled, that because of crop failures caused by excessive rains, earthquakes and locusts, famine would come within a few months. The delegation, which also included Gordon Chapman of the AFL, immediately advised the U. S. government of the situation and urged prompt steps to head it off.

Brophy said the ICFTU is intensely interested in getting food to India from the free world not only to save lives and alleviate misery, but also lest the Communists capitalize upon hunger to take over the struggling labor movement. He said Dhyan Mungat, ICFTU representative in Asia, has advised the ICFTU that the situation is growing worse every day and that it is "rapidly approaching a catastrophe."

The National Planning Association—an organization of agriculture, business, labor and the professions—in a statement last week said that "the American people should respond promptly and in a spirit of Christian charity to the appeal from India."

News Guild Sues Paper For Libel

The CIO Newspaper Guild has filed a $500,000 libel suit against the Salt Lake Tribune Publishing Co. and its general manager, Eugene MacKinnon.

The Salt Lake local was established in February when the ANG won a National Labor Relations Board election. It had invited certain prominent persons, including the city commissioners to a dinner Apr. 1, when an ANG charter was to be presented.

ANG Secy.-Treas. Ralph B. Novak charges that MacKinnon told several invited guests that "the Guild is a commie-controlled organization" and added that "for the latter reason it is surprising to see you lend your support to this movement."

If Stomach Is Weak, Don't Read This

The Food and Drug Administration seized 454,072 pounds of unfit foods during March, and the list of reasons these shipments were snatched and destroyed would turn the stoutest stomach.

One of the really sickening shipments seized consisted of 200,000 pounds of wormy canned spinach.

Also confiscated were 12 lots labelled as black pepper which had been adulterated with buckwheat hulls or paradise seeds. The public also was denied access to a shipment of dental cream containing "sharp, hard pieces."

Potofsky Will Aid Manpower Study

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, has been named a member of the special 15-man National Manpower Council, set up at Columbia Univ. in New York City by a $100,000 grant from the Ford Foundation.

Purpose of the Council, whose formation was announced by Columbia Univ. Pres. Dwight D. Eisenhower, is "to appraise the nation's manpower resources in a period of enduring emergency."

The Council will attempt to determine the major areas in which significant manpower wastes now occur and methods for improving the use of the nation's manpower. The Council will make recommendations based on its findings.

Injuries Prove Fatal To Easton's Grandson

An accident recently took the life of the grandson of Pres. John Easton of the West Virginia CIO Council.

Easton's grandson, John B. Easton, Jr., 23, died from injuries received while at work in the Libbey-Owens-Ford glass plant in Charleston, W. Va.

Young Easton was injured when he was caught in a conveyor belt and thrown into a machine. He died a week later. A member of Local 1 of the CIO Glass Workers, Easton had worked at the plant about a year.

John Easton, Jr., is survived by his wife, his mother and his grandparents. He was buried at Springhill Cemetery, Charleston, on April 15.

Big Biz Group Seeks To Censor Textbooks

IF A HIGH-BROW and apparparently honest publication called the Educational Reviewer shows up in your community with an attack on textbooks used in your schools—don't be fooled.

It's really the brain-child of a big business, anti-labor, isolationist lobbying outfit hiding behind the appealing name of the Conference of American Small Business Organizations.

Its aim is to ferret out textbooks that don't agree with big business, reactionary thinking on such things as "personal liberty and economic liberty," then to attack them as concealing "theories of collectivism" and as "slanting toward socialism."

The Educational Reviewer popped up recently in Washington, where it was cited as an authority by Adelbert W. Lee, tory vice president of the District of Columbia School Board. A subcommittee of the House District Committee is investigating his charge that four textbooks currently used in the public schools smack of "socialism."

TO UNDERSTAND the Educational Reviewer, it is necessary to go into a little of the history of CASBO. Last year's House Lobby Investigating Committee, headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), made a careful study of CASBO.

The committee's report, issued last year, showed that CASBO loudly proclaims itself as a spokesman for small business—but in actual practice it works for the same objectives as big business.

Some of its annual income of about $50,000 comes from small business men, but the committee also found substantial contributions from some of the largest multi-million dollar enterprises in the country.

CASBO is the creation of Fred A. Virkus, of Chicago. Virkus is an open and avowed enemy of organized labor, with a flair for circulating loaded questionnaires purporting to show that what unions want is bad and what they oppose is good.

VIRKUS ALSO is on record as anti-Semitic and as a far right-winger who has worked with Merwin K. Hart, head of the notorious National Economic Council, and Gen. Robert E. Wood, an old-line isolationist.

CASBO set up the Educational Reviewer as a quarterly at a conference in Washington in 1948. Since its first issue appeared in July, 1949, it has reviewed 18 textbooks, found only four acceptable.

The resolution establishing the Reviewer alleged that "left wing educators" are trying to rebuild the educational system "with the avowed purpose of bringing about a new social order based on the principles of collectivism or Marxism." The textbooks these teachers select are "essentially instruments of propaganda," it added.

THE BUCHANAN Committee found the Reviewer an "ingenious contribution to the encyclopedia of pressure tactics."

"What matters," the report continued, "is not that CASBO's viewpoint is either broad or narrow but that it has gone to such lengths to put it into operation.

"The long-run aim of this program is obvious, and this is nothing less than the establishment of CASBO's philosophy as the standard of educational orthodoxy in the schools of the Nation.

"We all agree, of course, that our textbooks should be American, that they should not be the vehicle for the propagation of obnoxious doctrines.

"Yet the review of textbooks by self-appointed experts . . . smacks too much of the book-burning orgies of Nurenberg to be accepted by thoughtful Americans without foreboding and alarm."

WONDER What's Happening Here: It's a scene from "Time and Half," Chicago YWCA Industrial Dept.'s original musical revue in which CIO and AFL members took part. This particular scene is "How To Dress on Nothing a Year," with Marguerite Spears of the YWCA (left) introducing Anna Gonko of the AFL Garment Workers (center). Awaiting introduction is Riva Zasser of Local 68E of the CIO Shoe Workers.

Insurance Agents Vote At Hancock

Some 5800 John Hancock Life Insurance Co. agents are in the midst of three weeks of voting by mail in a National Labor Relations Board election for a collective bargaining agent.

Three unions are on the ballot: CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee, National Federation of Insurance Agents' Council-AFL, and United Insurance Agents. The last-named union was formerly in the United Office & Professional Workers, one of the unions expelled from the CIO because of its Communist domination.

The election is being held despite the combined efforts of the non-CIO unions and management to delay it with motions filed with the NLRB.

U.S. Must Wage Peace, Hoffman Advises

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

RUSSIA IS waging a kind of war on four fronts—military, political, economical and psychological.

If America is to be successful in opposing the Communist's overall plan for world conquest and bring peace to a war-weary world, she must wage the struggle for peace along these same four fronts.

This, in brief, is Paul Hoffman's theme in his new book, "Peace Can Be Won," published by Doubleday & Co. The volume is dedicated to Arthur Vandenberg, senior Senator from Michigan, whose untimely death, Apr. 18, came just two days before its publication. Vandenberg's "words and works for peace will always be an inspiration to those who love peace," says the dedication.

"Peace is quiet and dull and intangible," writes Hoffman, while war is "violent and spectacular, something that you can feel and see, something you can support."

THERE are two extremes of thought on the question of how to wage peace, says Hoffman. On one hand there is what he calls the "we-can-do-business-with-Stalin" school. This is held by a dwindling group of Americans which still believes that we can reconcile our differences with the USSR around the council table.

At the other extreme is the "preventive war" school. Its advocates believe that since Russia is inevitably going to attack us, we should jump on her first and "drop the bomb now."

Hoffman thinks that the time is not yet ripe for doing business with Stalin. It won't be, he feels, until the Russians are convinced that the "free world" is so strong and unified that "negotiations might bear fruit."

As for a "preventive war," Hoffman does not believe we are faced with so direful a dilemma "that we have no choice but to cast mankind into the darkness of global war." He says that "you do not prevent a war by starting one."

THE program he advocates as offering "a reasonable prospect for avoiding World War III" calls for creation of an armed defense force "formidable enough to keep the Red Army from marching, at the same time that we are keeping the Soviet Union off balance by vigorous offensives along the economic, political and psychological fronts."

"My entire program is based on the premise," Hoffman says, "that only we have the material resources, the mastery of the industrial arts, the strategic position and the organizational drive to lead the fight for peace."

Discussing the waging of the peace on the military front, Hoffman says it is his "considered judgment" that if "our purpose is peace, we can count on the Europeans to stand side by side with us, to fight if necessary and to win."

Hoffman draws extensively on his 2½ years experience as head of the Economic Cooperation Administration for his discussion of waging peace on the economic front.

He calls for a "hardheaded administration" to hold down the cost of foreign aid programs; urges that our "skills as well as our dollars" be sent abroad; and recommends that an Overseas Economic Administration be formed to administer all programs of aid abroad and take the place of the present ECA and the Point Four program.

Peace Can Be Won, by Paul Hoffman, Doubleday & Co., N. Y.; price $2.50 cloth edition; $1 in paper cover.

BLS Index Jumps, At 184.5 Mar. 15

The Bureau of Labor Statistics' cost of living index increased to 184.5, another all-time high, in the month ended Mar. 15, according to figures released last week.

The 184.5 was shown for both the revised and the old indices. It represented a rise of .9 points in the new and .5 points in the old. It also meant a pay boost of 9c an hour retroactive to Mar. 15 to some 65,000 members of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers employed by General Electric Co. under the contract escalator clause.

Company Couldn't Get Materials — IUE Did

THE CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers last week pried enough additional materials out of the National Production Authority to permit two closed plants to reopen and end layoffs for 2100 workers.

The NPA acted Apr. 25, a day after a delegation from the IUE Radio and Television Conference Board headed by Chairman Daniel Arnold appealed for the additional materials.

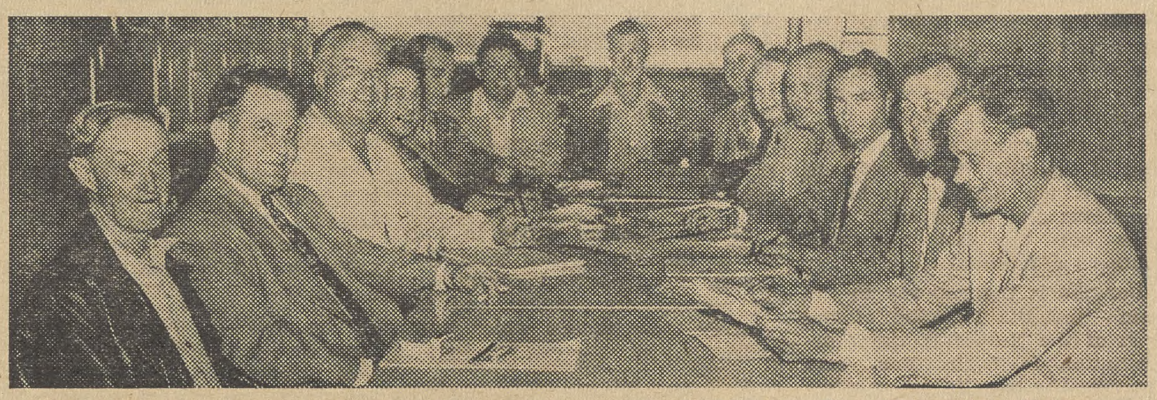
The plants were the television departments of the Radio Corp. of America at Camden, N. J., where 1300 workers had been laid off, and at Pulaski, Va., where 900 workers were furloughed. They closed Apr. 23, when materials ran out and the firm couldn't get more, and reopened Apr. 26. Arnold attributed the quick action on the appeal to the efforts of John E. Dillon, IUE-CIO electronics expert on loan to the NPA.

The workers who were laid off will be paid for a half-day of the time they lost, under the contract between the union and the company. Workers belonging to other unions who were laid off in additional RCA plants also returned to their jobs, thanks to the work of the IUE-CIO.

THE APPEAL and its results dramatized the union plea that the government do something about the plight of 20,000 workers in the radio and television industry who have been laid off because of a breakdown in the mobilization electronics program. It also showed that something could be done.

The IUE blames the layoffs on failure of mobilization agencies to allot enough materials to keep the plants in operation until they begin actual production of materials for the armed forces.

It proposed a five-point program that included a special unemployment compensation payment to those laid off of $40 a week, to come out of the industry's fantastic profits; immediate reconversion of the plants to defense production; intensive training of radio and television workers in electronics; immediate orders and material allocations to keep the labor force intact until defense production is started, and easing of credit restrictions which have slowed down sales of radio and television sets.



MEMBERS of a rank-and-file committee meet to draw up a constitution for the Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Workers LIU 78, CIO, which has won three victories in Labor Board elections from the Communist-dominated Distributive, Processing and Office Workers. The meeting was held in the office of Irwin DeShetler, Southern California CIO Regional Director. Left to right, Jim Gandy, Watsonville, Cal., area; DeShetler; Ken Gillie, CIO field representative; Marjorie Briggs and Jack Frost, small fruits area; Henry Santiesevan, CIO publicity representative; Louis White, Salinas, Cal.; Jim Spangler, CIO field representative; Anna Ellis, Salinas, Cal.; Jim Chilcoat and Jack Garrett, Phoenix, Ariz.; Ray Ward, El Centro, Cal., and Lester Logan, Yuma, Ariz. They voted to bar Communists as members.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE WRITER attended an important meeting in Dayton, O., presided over by Brother Al Whitehouse, district director of the Steelworkers. It was attended by representatives of all CIO local unions and city and state councils. Representatives from a large number of CIO national and international unions were also in attendance. The purpose of this conference was to gather CIO forces in assisting in organizing the 10,000 workers of the National Cash Register Co. All pledged their fullest support to bringing true trade unionism to these workers. The writer in addressing the gathering called upon everyone to get into this campaign and give the USA every support.

Allan Haywood

This meeting was vastly different from a similar meeting held in Dayton, back in 1936, when half the audience was company spies and did everything possible to disrupt our great movement. Those in attendance this past week were all true blue trade unionists. People of all creeds, colors and nationalities were there.

Pres. Murray has been stricken and is seriously ill in the hospital in Pittsburgh. He has shown signs of improvement. Millions of Americans are praying for a speedy recovery for him.

Reg. Dir. John Easton reports that another local union has been organized for the Government & Civic Employes Organizing Committee, CIO, in Lewisburg, W. Va. This latest addition makes a total of six new local unions for the GCEOC-CIO in the past couple of weeks. GCEOC Rep. Earl Moore, assisted by CIO Rep. Harry Colebank, did the organizing of these locals.

Reg. Dir. Bob Starnes reports that in a representation election held at the General Box Co., Meridian, Miss., the workers voted in favor of the CIO Woodworkers by 169 to 132 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the Rubber Workers won a representation election at the Los Angeles Standard Rubber Co., Los Angeles, Calif., by 58 for URW-CIO, 52 against.

Dir. William F. Donovan, of District 28, USA-CIO, reports the following union shop elections in the Akron, O., area: Local 1155, Johnson Steel and Wire Co., Akron, for union shop 45, against 2; Local 1675, I. A. Barnett Co., Barberton, for union shop 53, against 1; Local 3836, Alsco, Inc., Akron, for union shop 153, against 14. These make a total of 13 union shop elections in fabricating plants in District 28 where the USA has won by substantial margins.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, CIO Woodworkers, reports that in a representation election at the Harbor Lumber Co., Coos Bay, Ore., the workers voted in favor of the IWA-CIO by 17 to 3 for no union. In a union shop election at the Hale Brothers Logging Co., Springfield, Ore., the workers voted 11 to 1 in favor of a union shop. At the Tangfeldt Logging Co., Springfield, the workers voted 11 to 1 for the union shop.

REG. DIR. LEE TUCKER reports that the Steelworkers won a representation election at the National Lead Co., Baroid Sales Division, Malvern, Ark., by a vote of USA-CIO 152, AFL 68, challenged 6. USA Staff Reps. Allan Bryant and Ed Waldon handled the campaign.

The Brewery Workers report that they won a significant victory in a representation election at the newly constructed Anheuser-Busch Co. brewery, near Newark, N. J., by a vote of 39 to 29 against. This is only the beginning, as some 2000 workers will be employed eventually.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers reports that the URW won a certification election at the Capital Tire Co., Philadelphia, Pa. by a vote of 50 for URW, 2 no union. The URW was also certified as bargaining agent for 85 workers at the American Rubber Co., Belleville, Ont., Canada.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election among driver-salesmen at the Donaldson Baking Co., Columbus, O., the workers voted in favor of the Retail, Wholesale, Department Store Union by 64 to 32 against. Also in a representation election at the Shelby Gum Co., Shelby, O., the workers voted for the RWDSU-CIO by 18 to 16 against. Intl. Rep. Gerald Hughes handled both the above elections.

Naming Of Moody Disappoints UAW

Blair Moody, Washington correspondent of the Detroit News, was named U. S. Senator from Michigan last week by Gov. G. Mennen Williams.

A Democrat, he is regarded as a liberal. He replaces the late Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg, a Republican, who was the GOP engineer of the bipartisan foreign policy and played a major role in establishing the United Nations.

Moody, according to those who know him, will probably hew pretty closely to the Vandenberg position in support of a bi-partisan foreign policy.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers said Williams' choice of Moody left the union and the CIO "extremely disappointed."

The UAW had urged the appointment of George Edwards, pioneer UAW member and long an active unionist. Edwards formerly was president of the Detroit Common Council and was defeated for Mayor by Republican Albert E. Cobo in the last election.

Reuther made it clear the UAW was not opposed to Moody, but strongly favored Edwards.

Union-Busting Plans Get Try-Out At Dan River

By MARY HEATON VORSE
For Labor Press Association

AT GATE 5 at the Dan River Mills, at Danville, Va., a dozen men and girls in white coats and with flit guns personify a force of "exterminators." They are leading the CIO picket line of perhaps 50 strikers.

Excitement mounts as the change of shifts approaches. A dozen State Police swinging riot clubs are near at hand. It's a glittering spring day; the sun reflects blindingly from the big silver tanks near the mills and pink dogwood blooms in nearby yards.

The girls on the picket line wear bright colored toppers. Now the first of the "returned workers" come through the gate and are greeted by the pickets with a derisive shout.

The "exterminators" in their white coats ply their empty flit guns busily. It's one of the acts with which the Danville strikers have enlivened their strike.

Virginia's little Taft-Hartley Act, which assures people the "right to work," has kept mills open. Gate 5, is the gate to the sewing room. Most of the "returned workers" are girls. Here and there an older woman is greeted with a shout: "Getting ready for your old age pension, Ma?"

The "exterminators" keep busy, the State Police watch the show with grins. There is a complete lack of tension in the good-natured crowd. No one expects anything to happen. Nothing does.

"The State Police have gotten better natured since last week when they tossed that tear gas at us," a striker tells me. "When they laid all them fire hoses out we sure thought we was in for trouble."

This lively scene is one of the many picket lines strung around the sixteen entrances of the two mills which together have a production force of 12,000.

It is the largest single striking unit of the 40,000 textile workers who are now striking for better conditions and wages which will wipe out the last remaining southern differential.

Danville is the gateway to the South and the keystone of the arch of the Textile Workers' organization in Dixie. For years Danville has been the show place of good labor management relations in the Southern textile industry.

When I was last here about two years ago an informal check on local reaction to the union revealed that in the eyes of many businessmen the union had brought prosperity to the handsome city of Danville.

With the announcement of the President's decision to name a Wage Stabilization Board the strikers hoped for settlement. On Apr. 20 the union made the offer that both parties submit their difficulties to the new board and abide by its decision.

The proposal was rejected by the Dan River Mills.

DAN RIVER, which has boasted of its good labor relations for 10 years, now seems to wish to have no labor relations which include a union.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve has testified before a Senate Labor subcommittee as follows:

"I charge there exists in the textile industry, primarily in the South, a wide-spread conspiracy to prevent organization and to destroy those unions which now exist."

It is very interesting to see the evidences that the intension to cripple and destroy unionism in the South is the result of the concerted plan. For instance, last year in the strike at the Enka Mill at Morristown, Tenn., two labor relation "experts," Fisher and Rudge, tried out some new strike-busting techniques.

These same gentlemen moved into the Danville region long before the strike and are said to have made a number of surveys of local reaction to the union.

At any rate, you can recognize many of the same techniques which were applied in Morristown.

There is a cleverly planned propaganda campaign which is closely related in these two strike areas, so far apart both in time and place; in both one may see the experienced hands of Messrs. Fisher and Rudge, whose activities TWUA Executive Vice Pres. George Baldanzi described in a radio talk:

"When you examine closely you find that their functions are the same as the strike-busters who were exposed years ago by the LaFollette Investigating Committee.

"The only difference between them and the Bergoff regime is that instead of using blackjacks and goons they distort words.

"They are a Fifth Avenue Edition of the Bergoffs, and by virtue of big fees masquerade under the guise of being engaged in community relations."

THESE community relations are beginning to disgust many supervisors. A group of them and secretarial workers met last week in the TWUA office in Danville to discuss possibility of organization.

Supervisors have been told that they would lose their jobs if they didn't bring their striking relatives back to work. One supervisor refused point blank to tell his striking wife to go back. Others don't like using their cars to bring strikebreakers to work.

Management has combed the countryside for strikebreakers who are said to come from as far as Gastonia, Ga., changing buses at the state line and walking across it to preserve the law which prohibits importing strikebreakers across state lines.

But the strikers feel confident that their strike will not be broken. They are hoping to hear that their dispute will be certified for settlement by the WSB. They believe that "the strike could be ended while both parties awaited a fair settlement as determined by a judgment of fact by representatives of the finest government on earth—the United States Government."

4-30

Murray Ill, Condition Serious

CIO PRES. Philip Murray lay seriously ill last week at Mercy Hospital in Pittsburgh.

He was taken to the hospital on Apr. 23 suffering what had been described as abdominal upsets. Doctors at the hospital diagnosed the illness as a disturbance in the pancreas digestive gland, and placed him under specialized medical treatment.

Although described by hospital authorities as being on the "critical" list, Murray was later reported responding well to the treatment. Doctors late last week had not yet determined whether an operation would be necessary.

The CIO leader was kept almost completely secluded by hospital authorities in order to assure uninterrupted rest during his illness.

President Truman sent the following telegram to Murray Apr. 26:

"I am distressed to learn that you are in the hospital and hope that you will not have too hard a time. Keep your courage up and get well soon. With every good wish."

Make Heart Survey

The American Heart Association has announced it is making a survey of heart and circulatory diseases among union members.

Steel Union Backs M'Arthur Ouster

The executive board of the CIO Steelworkers, meeting in Pittsburgh Apr. 19, expressed support of the action taken by President Truman in relieving Gen. Douglas MacArthur of his command.

The resolution declared that "it should be obvious to all fair-minded citizens that the President could not continue to tolerate a situation in which Gen. MacArthur repeatedly voiced policy viewpoints in direct opposition to those of the administration elected by the people to conduct the foreign policy of our country."

The board likewise supported the President's basic policy in seeking "to limit, not to spread, the conflict in Asia."

A similar resolution was passed by the executive board of the California CIO Council.

Support Voted Strikers

The CIO Steelworkers have pledged "full financial and moral support" to members of the CIO Textile Workers on strike against southern cotton-rayon mills.

The steel union's executive board acted Apr. 19.

Wall Street Paper: Wilson May Quit

Some of the most "loyal supporters" of Charles E. Wilson, defense mobilization chief, are predicting he'll be out of his top government job "before long," the Wall Street Journal reported last week.

The businessmen's paper quoted unnamed Wilson assistants to this effect: If labor representatives who serve on the President's top defense advisory board succeed at any time in reversing decisions of Wilson or his aides, Wilson "will quit."

After quoting other ODM staff members, the Journal concludes:

"On one point there is no disagreement: The mobilization director is riled and worried by the needling from labor's hierarchy.

"The former head of General Electric finds his power waning . . . The President doesn't always follow his advice. Cabinet members atop 'old line' government departments thwart his wishes."

Kansas, Many Areas Decontrol Rents

AS IF THEY were trying to get under the wire before Congress passes a strengthened rent control law, literally scores of communities—and one entire state—are taking advantage of the present "local option" loophole and decontrolling rents on their own motion.

Under the present law, once a local governing body has done this, no federal controls can be brought back.

Even if Congress does adopt the President's proposals there is little chance for an effective rollback of rents. There is much chance that Congress will write in some kind of a blanket rent increase for everybody.

The Office of the Housing Expediter is forced, in most instances, to approve the decontrol motion, although Housing Expediter Tighe Woods turns them down whenever the circumstances justify such action on his part. But only the most flagrant violation of the rules result in OHE disapproval.

The Kansas legislature, for instance, last week decontrolled the whole state, including Kansas City, Hays, Larned, and Leavenworth, exempting only 13 counties, 11 of which never had controls.

In one of these counties—Saline—the army is considering re-opening an air base and has sought assurance that the rent gougers will not start operations.

The Maryland legislature decontrolled Carroll County.

The government of Santa Clara County, Cal., voted decontrol, despite the fact that the Moffett Field naval air base is in the area and is expanding operations.

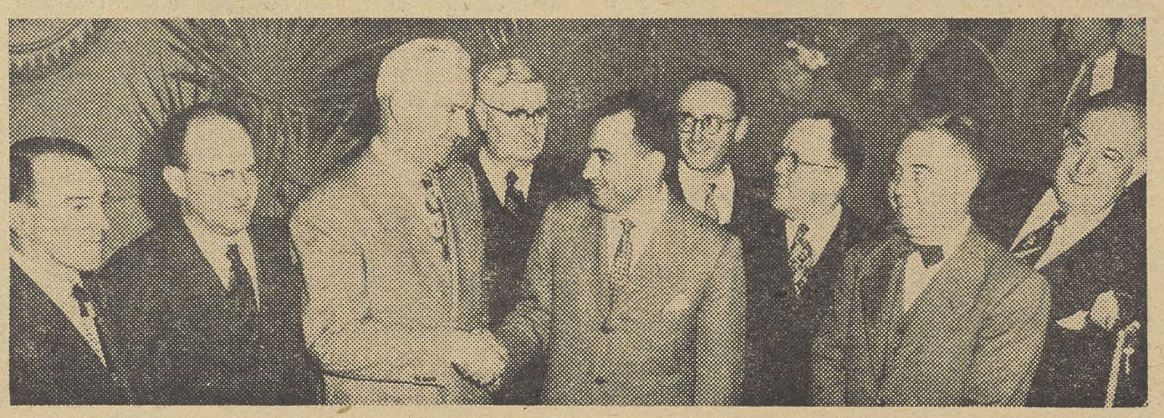
These are just a handful of the series of "local option" decontrol actions which OHE has been forced to approve during the last week.

In two instances, OHE refused to allow decontrol. One was in Pensacola, Fla., where the governing body, without holding a public hearing or considering any facts bearing on housing shortage or the lack of it, voted to lift federal controls. In Pensacola, there are a large naval hospital, two navy air fields, and a naval air base.

The other turndown came in Ann Arbor, Mich., where the city council, again without the semblance of public hearing, "secretly" voted for decontrol.

Meanwhile, the Bureau of Labor Statistics gave a glimpse of things to come in newly decontrolled areas. It issued the results of a study of what happened in nine cities after controls were lifted.

Findings: the average rise in rents since 1949 in those cities was 19.8%, as compared to a 3.5% increase in nine cities of equal size which had remained under controls.



FIGHT INFLATION: Following the lead of the United Labor Policy Conference in Washington, a United Labor Committee is formed for Connecticut. Pres. Timothy Collins of the Connecticut Federation of Labor (left) and Pres. Michael Sviridoff of the State CIO Council are shaking hands. Left to right: Joseph M. Rouke, secretary-treasurer of the state Federation of Labor; Frank Fernback of the CIO Dept. of Research and Education; Collins; CIO Regional Director Edward McCrone; Sviridoff; John J. Driscoll, CIO secretary-treasurer; William Lavelle, CIO assistant legislative director; William Egan, a vice-president of the state AFL; Jos. Keenan, secretary-treasurer of the AFL Building and Construction Trades Dept.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 7, 1951 82 No. 19

Unions Return To Defense Set-Up, Warn More Improvements Needed

(See Stories, Pages 2 & 3)

AWAIT NEXT MOVE: Striking members of the CIO Textile Workers play checkers outside the gates of the Royal Cotton Mills at Wake Forest, N. C., while state highway patrolmen watch in the background. The night before there was a two-hour battle which the union says was started by gun-toting scabs firing from the mill. The patrolmen restored order. Strikers say that politics also are mixed in the struggle. U. S. Sen. Willis Smith is the main stockholder of the mill, and Democratic State Chairman Everett Jordan is president. For a story on the gun battle and late developments in the strike, see Page 10.

ULPC Gives Reasons For Labor's Action

The following statement was issued Apr. 30 by the United Labor Policy Committee to announce the intention of labor to return to the defense mobilization agencies.

THE UNITED Labor Policy Committee voted unanimously today for the immediate return of labor representatives to all defense agencies.

In the two months since labor representatives withdrew from defense posts, a significant change of attitudes has taken place in Washington. Considerable progress has been made in correcting unjust and unworkable procedures, but much remains to be done.

We anticipate that substantive progress can now be made through the cooperative efforts of labor, management and farm representatives within the mobilization agencies.

The defense mobilization program, the 15 million American workers we represent and the American people as a whole will benefit from the policy changes which have resulted from the protest by labor against big-business domination of defense agencies.

We do not want to give the impression that the United Labor Policy Committee is now satisfied with all defense policies or programs.

On the contrary, further fundamental improvements are imperative. The cards are still stacked against the consuming public. The remedy for these wrongs lies in more vigorous price regulations and even more with Congress. Labor and every other group in the nation must now undertake a new campaign for constructive action by Congress.

Here, in summary, are the major changes made in the past few weeks that will help to strengthen the mobilization program:

Participation

The appointment by President Truman of the National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy has made it possible for representatives of the general public, labor and agriculture—as well as business—to participate in major defense policy-making at the top level, and to bring to the responsible Government officials a breadth of viewpoint, heretofore completely lacking.

The creation of the National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy, reporting directly to the Chief Executive, does not, of itself alone, solve all the complex problems developing from the nation's mobilization program against the challenge of Soviet imperialism and Communist aggression.

We do believe, however, that operation of that top-level board has made possible a more effective role for labor, agriculture and the public throughout the defense program. Other agencies, notably the production and manpower agencies and the Office of Price Stabilization, are now seeking effective labor representation to assist in the administration of their programs.

The representatives of the United Labor Policy Committee, acting in the national interest now as in the past, will continue their fight for fair play and equality of sacrifice in their positions within the various defense agencies.

Wage Stabilization Board

The United Labor Policy Committee accepts the reconstitution of the Wage Stabilization Board, with 18 members and with new power to handle all disputes which substantially affect defense production.

We believe the new Wage Stabilization Board can establish policies that will do justice to working people, while at the same time providing the degree of economic stabilization essential to the mobilization effort.

The United Labor Policy Committee is convinced that no conflict exists between the legitimate needs and aspirations of workers and the overwhelming desire of the general, consuming public to halt the steady, relentless rise in the cost of living.

We are confident that when the new Wage Stabilization Board begins to operate, it will promptly take affirmative action on the recommendations of the Economic Stabilization Administrator for specific revision of the original and inflexible wage formula. In that way hardships, inequities and substandards can be corrected, and the stability of collective bargaining agreements be maintained.

It will behoove the members of the Wage Stabilization Board to adopt policies giving justice and equity to wage earners—both in the sharing of the common burden of the defense program and in the enjoyment of a fair share of America's tremendous economic wealth and productivity.

Manpower

We are gratified to report the reaching of a satisfactory agreement with the Office of Defense Mobilization and the Department of Labor on the handling of manpower problems.

Under this agreement, a labor-management policy committee on manpower will be established, with representatives of the ODM and the Department of Labor serving as co-chairmen. This committee will operate at the national level and will deal with broad policy.

It is our belief that this new committee will be able to offer effective recommendations for a democratic manpower program.

Creation of this new manpower setup is a victory of major proportions for our traditional American concept of voluntary cooperative action.

Defense Production Act

The course of future defense policy depends upon Congress. In fact, the entire defense stabilization program will expire on June 30 unless Congress extends the Defense Production Act.

President Truman has submitted recommendations to Congress for the extension and strengthening of the Defense Production Act.

We endorse the President's appeal to Congress to broaden and tighten rent controls as part of the stabilization program.

We are convinced that no program can be adequate unless it fully recognizes the need for stronger price controls, without which the cost of living will continue its alarming upward rise.

We are determined to fight and keep fighting for the elimination of special privilege from our tax laws, and for more equitable treatment of low-income groups.

We feel that the interests of small business are still being neglected in the defense program and that a Smaller War Plants Corporation should be created to insure that big-business does not seize a monopolistic share of defense orders. At the same time we should enlist the useful facilities of small shops for defense production.

Above all, we call upon Congress with all our power to write into the new Defense Production Act a clear declaration that equality of sacrifice must be the underlying principle of homefront defense policies.

Conclusion

Improvement in the programs of the defense agencies and resolute determination by Congress to meet its responsibility to speed defense production, to curb inflation, and to bring equity to the tax program, will go far to strengthen our American campaign for freedom and peace.

Organized labor will support every move to strengthen our nation and protect the democratic institutions we cherish. By the same token, we will continue to criticize and resist unjust policies and unworkable procedures.

The progress already made, and the progress which we are convinced the future must bring, reaffirm once again the essential strength and flexibility of our democratic institutions. In our ability constantly to adjust government policies to the needs of the plain people, lies the strength and power of our democracy.

It is our best insurance of victory over the reactionary ideas as well as the military weapons of the communist totalitarians.

Anti-Inflation Fight Speeded

THE UNITED front of organized labor in the fight on inflation and big business bungling of the defense mobilization program gathered momentum last week in all parts of the country.

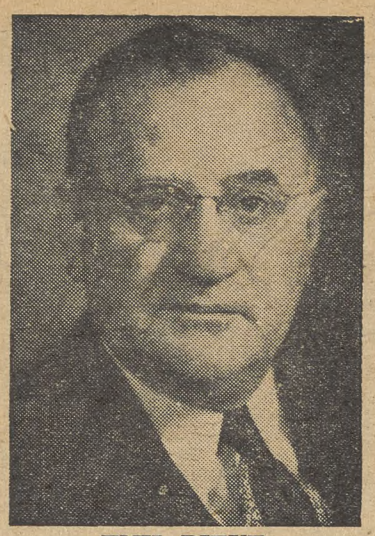
In more than a score of communities and states, local leaders of CIO and AFL unions and the railroad brotherhoods proceeded with joint plans for telling the great mass of Americans how mobilization leaders are letting fantastic profits grow more fantastic and how the cost of the defense program is being palmed off by the wealthy onto people of small and moderate income.

Formation of another United Labor Policy Committee was announced by CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhood leaders in Los Angeles county.

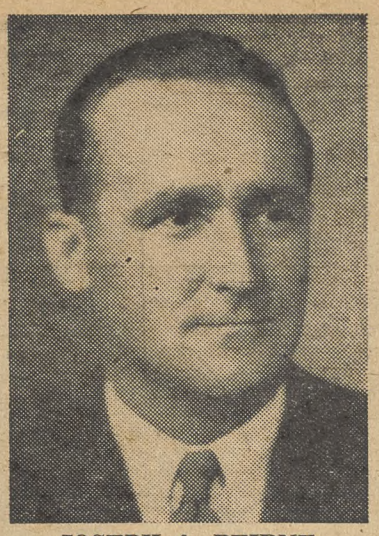
Secy.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council was elected chairman, S. E. Thistle of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen was named vice chairman and Secy. W. J. Bassett of the AFL Central Labor Council was chosen secretary.

MORE THAN 5000 local union officials and other active unionists heard Pres. Michael J. Quill (at speaker's rostrum) of the CIO Transport Workers and other labor leaders at the anti-inflation rally sponsored by the New York City CIO Council and the AFL Central Trades and Labor Council. Quill was co-chairman of the rally, along with AFL Council Pres. Martin T. Lacey. Left to right: R. J. Thomas, assistant CIO director of organization; Secy.-Treas. Alex Bail of the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers; Warren Bunn of the CIO Chemical Workers; CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Robery Kenney of the CIO Intl. Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union, AFL Pres. William Green, Lacey, Secy.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz of the CIO Council, and Secy. James C. Quinn of the AFL Council. CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, one of the main speakers, does not appear in this photo.

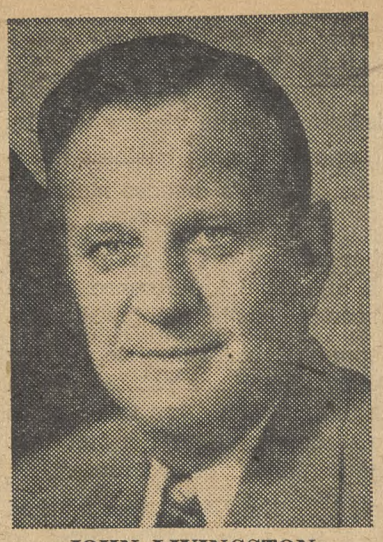
GEORGE M. HARRISON
To Assist Wilson



EMIL RIEVE
Named to New WSB



JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
To Serve On WSB



JOHN LIVINGSTON
Slated For WSB

DAVID J. McDONALD
To Be Johnston's Aide

Change In Capital Atmosphere . . .

Labor Votes Return To Defense Posts

THE UNITED Labor Policy Committee at a meeting Apr. 30 voted unanimously to put organized labor back in the defense mobilization agencies.

The committee — representing the CIO, AFL, machinists and railroad brotherhoods — made it clear that labor still isn't satisfied with the defense set-up.

But, the committee said, "in the two months since labor representatives withdrew from defense posts," a significant change of attitude has taken place in Washington. It said:

"Considerable progress has been made in correcting unjust and unworkable procedures, but much remains to be done.

"We anticipate that substantial progress can now be made through the cooperative efforts of labor, management and farm representatives within the mobilization agencies."

CREATION of the National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy by President Truman, with voices for labor, farm groups, business and the public, made possible labor's return to the defense agencies—but still left a lot of problems unsolved, the committee said.

The ULPC, taking heed of the President's recommendations for revision and extension of the Defense Production Act, served notice that it will put the heat on Congress in a move to get equality of sacrifice in the defense effort and more effective control of prices.

The committee nominated Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers for appointment as special assistant to Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston, a post held by Pres. George M. Harrison of the AFL Railway Clerks until organized labor left its defense posts on Feb. 28.

It recommended the appointment of Harrison as a special deputy to Chales E. Wilson, head of the Office of Defense Mobilization. Harrison thus will become successor, in effect, to Gen. Lucius Clay, who recently resigned. One of labor's major complaints was that it had not been represented in Wilson's office.

SIX MEN were nominated for appointment for the "enlarged" Wage Stabilization Board. They were Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers; Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers and Vice Pres. John Livingston of the Auto Workers, representing the CIO; and Pres. Harry C. Bates of the Bricklayers, Pres. William C. Birthright of the Barbers and Vice Pres. Elmer Walker of the Machinists, representing the AFL. Eli L. Oliver, economist and consultant to several AFL railroad unions will be named the labor members' staff consultant and possibly an alternate member.

A new Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee will be established with a representative from Wilson's office and one from the Dept. of Labor alternating as chairman. The CIO has nominated Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers and Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union; the AFL representatives have not yet been picked.

In other defense agencies, policy-making and administrative positions will be given labor representatives nominated by the ULPC, it is expected.

One probably will be a top post in the National Production Administration, likely to be filled by a CIO man, and another in the Office of Price Stabilization, to be taken by an AFL representative.

New Wage Board Members

The full membership of the new and enlarged Wage Stabilization Board was announced May 3 by President Truman. The members are:

LABOR: Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers, and Vice Pres. John Livingstone of the Auto Workers—representing the CIO; and Pres. Harry Bates of the Bricklayers, Pres. William C. Birthright of the Barbers, and Vice Pres. Elmer Walker of the Machinists—representing the AFL.

PUBLIC: Dr. George W. Taylor, Univ. of Pennsylvania, chairman; Dr. Clark Kerr, Univ. of California, vice chairman; Prof. John Dunlop, Harvard; Dr. Nathan Feinsinger, Univ. of Wisconsin; Dean William Hepburn, Emory Univ. Law School, and Frederick Bullen, former secretary of the New York State Mediation Board.

INDUSTRY: Henry B. Arthur, Hinsdale, Ill., Swift & Co.; J. Ward Keener, Akron, O., B. F. Goodrich Co.; Reuben B. Robertson, Jr., Cincinnati, O., Champion Paper & Fiber Co.; Milton M. Olander, Toledo, O., Owens-Illinois Glass Co.; Alexander R. Heron, San Francisco, Crown-Zellerbach Corp. (paper), and Richard P. Doherty, Washington, D. C., National Association of Broadcasters.

Flexible Pay Plan Urged By TWU

A wage policy flexible enough to assure justice for the nation's wage earners was called for by the international executive board of the CIO Transport Workers at a recent meeting.

At the same time the board asked Congress:

"To review the Defense Production Act to eliminate its dangerous defects and tendency to favor special privileges, to provide for real price and rent controls, to make impossible the acquisition and accumulation of enormous profits through the manufacture and sale of civilian goods and defense materials, and to abolish speculation in foods and scarce commodities . . ."

Murray Better As Week Ends

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, confined to Mercy Hospital in Pittsburgh since Apr. 23 with a pancreatic disorder, was reported much improved at the end of last week.

Doctors indicated he was responding well to medical treatment and doubted that an operation would be necessary. Murray was rushed to the hospital after attending a dinner in Steubenville, O. His illness was first described as an abdominal upset and later diagnosed as a disturbance in the pancreas, a digestive gland.

CIO Will Be Represented On New Manpower Unit

CIO WILL be represented on a new high-level manpower policy board now being set up by the federal government.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union will serve on the new agency. Two AFL representatives will be appointed soon.

Plans for development of the labor - industry - agriculture-government board were made public in a joint statement issued by Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin and Charles E. Wilson, head of the Office of Defense Mobilization.

Wilson, in answer to a long-standing complaint from organized labor, approved the establishment of a Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee. It will have two co-chairmen: Arthur S. Flemming, Wilson's assistant on manpower problems, and Dr. Frank P. Graham, the Dept. of Labor's Defense Manpower Administrator.

Labor, industry and farm groups will be asked to serve on it.

Graham, former liberal Senator from North Carolina, has been given a three-month leave of absence by Secy. Tobin, in order that he may serve as mediator in an international dispute between India and Pakistan.

According to Wilson's order, the committee will have referred to it "all questions of policy relative to the mobilization, training and maximum utilization of manpower in the defense program, and shall make recommendations as to the action which in its judgment should be taken by the Office of Defense Mobilization."

The committee also was authorized to volunteer recommendations.

"This order means," said the joint announcement by Wilson and Tobin, "that before policy decisions are made in the manpower field by the Office of Defense Mobilization, recommendations will be made both by the Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee and by the already existing Manpower Policy Committee.

"THE LATTER consists of representatives of government agencies with operating responsibilities in the manpower field."

Tobin, on his part, issued an amended order naming the 13 regional directors of his department's Bureau of Employment Security as regional directors of the Defense Manpower Administration. They also will serve as co-chairmen of Regional Committees on Defense Mobilization, an inter-governmental agency group.

Tobin again issued an earlier order naming the regional directors to the chairmanships of eight-member labor - management committees in each region, which are being established now.

In addition, the order provided for area committees. Organized labor and industry groups will nominate the members, and Tobin will appoint them.

Tobin's order said the regional and area labor-management committees were being established "to obtain the advice, cooperation and leadership of management and labor in the solution of manpower problems at the regional and area levels . . ."

Guild Gets Blood From Red Beet

Peter Apriensky left the Daily Worker, voice of the Communist party, in August, 1950. He got two weeks' pay.

Six months later Mrs. Apriensky told the CIO New York Newspaper Guild that Apriensky was fired, got no severance pay. Management told the Guild that Apriensky quit. The Guild persisted, and finally it was agreed to settle the claim for $900.

The money arrived—in time to pay for Apriensky's funeral and final doctor bills.

Victory For The People

There's cause for solid satisfaction in the victory won by the United Labor Policy Committee over the big business interests that dominate so much of the country's defense mobilization effort.

In the two months since labor walked out of its positions in the defense agencies, the wall of official indifference to the public's demands for equality of sacrifice has been chipped away.

There has been progress—though it's not complete, by any means. As the United Labor Policy Committee pointed out in its statement, "a significant change of attitude has taken place in Washington." The ULPC also made very clear the fact that it is not yet "satisfied with all defense policies or programs."

The "change in attitude" noted by the ULPC was marked enough to win approval for the Wage Stabilization Board to handle non-economic disputes. The change was marked enough to reverse the decision that manpower problems would be settled by Charlie Wilson's office, in its own sweet way. It was marked enough to permit far greater participation for labor in the defense effort than the businessmen were willing to grant two months ago, and to win establishment of a top-level advisory committee reporting directly to the President.

When labor's representatives resigned from the defense agencies in February, they emphasized their desire to help the country's mobilization program, not to hurt it. In returning to the agencies, they have not only won a better voice for labor and the public, but they have been directly responsible for focusing public attention on conditions that needed improvement.

But it would be playing a pollyanna role to think that every problem has now been solved in the defense program.

There will be plenty of battles ahead, for the unions will continue to fight for the principles in which they believe. They will battle for a fair and flexible wage policy within the stabilization board. They will insist on decent, voluntary manpower rulings. They will continue to demand that the defense program be operated for the benefit of the people as a whole, not just for a few corporations which are now amassing tremendous super-profits.

Appeasement of the forces which have done so much to cause inflation and to throw the defense program out of kilter simply isn't in the books, so far as the United Labor Policy Committee is concerned.

Having won a battle for the people's rights, the unions will be seeking other over-due changes that will help the nation and build our strength to ward off any aggression that the Kremlin rulers may have approved in blue-print form.

Trouble In Paradise?

Col. Bertie McCormick's Chicago Tribune—which for years has had a well-deserved reputation as the most reactionary of any of the major papers in America—now produces the ticket it hopes will carry the GOP convention in 1952.

The Tribune would like to see MacArthur run for president, Taft for vice-president.

Much as the Ohio Senator has professed his devotion to the General, we cannot imagine his working up enthusiasm for the Tribune's latest brain-child. Nor would we be surprised to hear another great GOP "stateman"—Jumpin' Joe McCarthy, the Wisconsin smear artist—denounce the Tribune as un-American, for Joe has yet to run away from suggestions that he campaign for vice-president himself.

Somewhere, in the dark and mouldy rooms where Republican policy is made, there must be mutterings and confusion.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV May 7, 1951 No. 19

SPRING FEVER?

'Damned Old Crank' Liked Unions

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

E. W. SCRIPPS, one of America's most famous newspaper publishers, had a twist to his character that made him like to do things differently from most people. His request to his heirs that the story of his life, which he had been writing on and off for many years, be withheld from publication until 25 years after his death, was quite typical.

The period is up. Now a quarter-century after his death, Scripps' "self-portrait" has appeared in book form as "Damned Old Crank," his favorite name for himself.

Aside from being a lively and original story of a fascinating period in the pioneer days of American journalism, told from the personal point of view of one of the leading figures in the newspaper world, the book has special interest for labor.

E. W. considered himself a warm but rough-and-tough friend of labor at a time when it was very unpopular. His views on the subject were a mixture of a perverse kind of idealism and a regard for money which made him emphasize that his attitude really paid off.

"I am one of the few newspapermen," he wrote, "who happens to know that this country is populated by 95 per cent of plain people, and that the patronage of even plain and poor people is worth more to a newspaper owner than the patronage of the wealthy five per cent."

Scripps regarded this as the secret of his success and the foundation of his fortune.

Another time he said:

"A newspaper fairly and honestly conducted in the interests of the great masses of the public must at all times antagonize the selfish interests of that very class which furnishes the larger part of a newspaper's income.

"In order to maintain a newspaper's entire independence, it is necessary that the newspaper shall be so conducted that its revenue from the advertising class will be the smallest possible that the class can afford to get on with."

And again:

"Too many capitalists really wish to, and are striving to, reduce labor to the position of practically dependent slaves. And there are too many capitalists who are unable to comprehend that their own existence depends upon the support of willing labor."

E. W. clashed often with his older half-brother, James E. Scripps, about the way newspapers should be run. On one occasion, he said James "was trying to make a great and powerful paper by making it extremely respectable—that is to say, respectable to capitalists and corporate interests."

After a number of bitter quarrels, the brothers broke off relationship completely in 1890. James fired his younger brother from the presidency of both the Scripps Publishing Co. and the Detroit News Association.

Scripps regarded his greatest service to the country to be the creation of United Press, by which he said he thwarted "the plans of greater, abler and richer men than myself to establish a monopoly of news in the United States."

IT'S A COLORFUL portrait of a strange and forceful eccentric character that emerges out of the pages of "Damned Old Crank," the sort that could be produced only in America and only during the era in which Scripps lived.

Edward Wyllis Scripps was born in 1854 on a farm in Illinois, the 13th child of an English immigrant father, and died of appoplexy on his yacht off Liberia in 1926.

He left his only living son the controlling interests in daily papers in 15 states, among them the Cleveland Press, Cincinnati Post, Toledo News-Bee, Columbus Citizen, Pittsburgh Press and San Francisco News, besides such other news enterprises as the United Press Associations, Newspaper Enterprise Association (NEA), Acme Newsphotos and United Features Syndicate.

It's typical of that "disposition to boast and bully" which he described so frankly in his writing that E. W. pointed with pride to what he had contributed to America, without mentioning that it was America and its people that made his millions and his fame possible.

Damned Old Crank, a Self-Portrait of E. W. Scripps edited by Charles R. McCabe; Harper & Bros., New York; price $3.50.

$5 Million In 'Gifts' Elected Congress

By GERVASE N. LOVE

Contributors to the two major parties kicked in with a total of $5,788,218 to help elect Congress in 1950, according to an analysis of receipts, reported to the Clerk of the House, just completed by Congressional Quarterly.

Congressional Quarterly is a privately-owned news service which concentrates on congressional activities.

Its survey shows that the Republicans collected $3,006,766 during 1950, of which $1,405,377 went to four national Republican groups and $1,601,389 to 10 branch or local committees, according to the reports.

The Democrats collected $2,781,452. This sum included $2,351,643 to six national committees and $429,809 to six local or group branches.

The CQ survey shows that a lot of this money came in important chunks from people who are sometimes regarded as important.

The Republicans got $273,760 from five individuals and eight family groups in lumps of $5000 or more.

The Democrats got $108,500 from 11 individuals and four family groups at the rate of $5000 or more each.

The Republicans got more gifts exceeding $5000, the Democrats more over $100. The GOP got more than 25% of its total out of 12 individuals and family groups.

Highest in the Republican hierarchy of financial angels was the duPont family, which also has kicked in generously to such other reactionary organizations as the Committee for Constitutional Government and the National Economic Council. Thirty-four members of the family and seven company executives contributed a total of $98,590.

Assorted members of the Mellon family gave the Republicans $42,500. Alvin M. Bentley, of the Owosso (Mich.) Manufacturing Co., and Arvilla P. Bentley yielded $36,000. Rockefellers donated $23,000, Wideners $10,875 and Pews a mere $9500.

At the head of the Democratic list stood the Frankel family, Texas and New York oil people, who were tapped for $12,000. Gifts of $10,000 each came from J. Spencer Love, head of the non-union Burlington Mills at Greensboro, N. C.; James W. Gerard, onetime U. S. Ambassador to Germany, and Mrs. Gerard, and the Spiegels, of the Chicago mail order and retail firm. Louis A. Wehle, Rochester, N. Y., brewer, gave $8500.

Some cautious souls contributed to both parties. Among them were R. Stanley Dollar, who is contesting ownership of the Dollar Steamship Line with the U. S. government; Seton Porter, president of W. & A. Gilbey, Ltd.; Robert F. Six, president of Continental Airlines; Spyros P. Skouras, president of 20th Century-Fox, and William Zeckendorf, president of the Hoboken Railroad.

Most of the money for both parties came from the District of Columbia and five states—New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan and California.

The CQ survey shows the Republicans got about 80% of their receipts from these states and Delaware, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Texas. The Democrats got about the same proportion from them plus Missouri, Ohio, Virginia and Florida.

"The political contributions survey not only indicates a geographical concentration of the money sources but of the individuals and family groups concerned," observed CQ.

"The Hatch Act puts a $5000 yearly ceiling on the contribution an individual may make to a particular national political group. While the letter of the law has been observed, the growing number of specially designed committees had made this ceiling meaningless for all practical purposes.

"CQ's survey shows that the evident pattern of political contributions consists of scattering contributions among several committees, and of splitting gift sources among family members."

The duPonts are a pefect example of what CQ based this observation on.

Lamont duPont contributed a total of $12,000 to six different Republican committees: $3000 each to the Republican Finance Committee of Delaware, Republican National Committee and Republican Finance Committee of Pennsylvania; and $1000 each to the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, Republican Congressional Committee and the campaign of Tyrell Krum, losing GOP candidate for Congress in the Alexandria district of Virginia.

Many of the wealthy contributors donated to the war chests of congressional candidates far from their own homes.

Bentley, for instance, gave $5000 to the campaign of James Marshall Butler, Republican who defeated Millard Tydings for re-election as Senator from Maryland in one of the year's dirtiest campaigns.

Joseph N. Pew, Jr., of the Sun oil and shipbuilding family, donated $1000 to Sen. Homer E. Capehart, seeking re-election in Indiana; $750 to Rep. George A. Dondero, re-elected in Royal Oak, Mich., and $1000 to B. Carroll Reece, former GOP national chairman who was elected to Congress from Johnson City, Tenn.

On the Democratic side, Wehle gave $3000 to Helen Gahagan Douglas for her unsuccessful fight for the Senate in California. The Laskers, of New York, gave $2500 to Sen. Scott Lucas, defeated for re-election in Illinois; $1000 to Joseph T. Ferguson, who failed to unseat Sen. Robert A. Taft in Ohio; $500 each to Sen. Elbert Thomas, defeated for re-election in Utah, and Sen. Wayne P. Morse, liberal Republican re-elected in Oregon; and $250 each to the campaigns of Rep. William T. Granahan, re-elected in Philadelphia, and Rep. Henry M. Jackson, re-elected in Everett, Wash.

HCL Gets H'er Monthly

THE RISE in the cost-of-living reported by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics in its disclosure of the index figure for March 15 was the fifteenth in the last 15 months.

Here's how the Consumer Price Index has moved month by month since Jan. 15, 1950, as well as in years past. (A revised index, showing a somewhat lower figure, has been used effective Jan. 15, 1950).

Period	Index	Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: Jan. 15	166.9
1943 monthly average	123.6	Feb. 15	167.9
1944 monthly average	125.5	Mar. 15	168.4
1945 monthly average	128.4	Apr. 15	168.5
1946 monthly average	139.3	May 15	169.3
1947 monthly average	159.2	June 15	170.2
1948 monthly average	171.2	July 15	172.0
1949 monthly average	169.1	Aug. 15	173.4
1950 monthly average	171.9	Sept. 15	174.6
		Oct. 15	175.6
		Nov. 15	176.4
		Dec. 15	178.3
		1951: Jan. 15	181.5
		Feb. 15	183.3
		Mar. 15	184.5

Investment (Gambling) Know-How Wins College Student A Prize

Would you be adding to the inflationary picture if you played the stock market for a period of a year and made a profit of $14,290.20 on an initial investment of $25,000?

The Pierre A. Duval Foundation of New York apparently doesn't think so—for it recently awarded a student of the City College of New York $500 for accomplishing the feat—in theory.

The Duval Foundation, a New York stock market consensus firm, gave three awards this year in an effort "to encourage the study of profitable investment methods and to discourage speculative trading and gambling in stocks."

Norman Reibstein, the winner of the top prize, was one of a group of college students competing for the awards on the basis of the best "investment" described in a letter to Pierre A. Duval, president of the company.

Duval said the winners showed a "remarkable grasp of finance" and indicated that the students of finance are "not gamblers" but, "on the other hand, are careful investors,"

Oil Union Researcher Finds ECA Abroad Doing Good Job

"I WENT OVER to Europe pretty critical of the European Cooperation Administration. I had feared it would turn out to be some sort of rich man's RFC with just a banker's approach to the problems.

"But I found the ECA people were making every effort to achieve the goals to which the Marshall Plan is dedicated—and the labor boys in the ECA set-up are listened to and their advice is given real weight."

That was the reaction of E. E. (Shorty) Phelps, research and education director of the CIO Oil Workers, who returned to the United States last week after a seven-week visit to Europe.

As CIO member of an ECA Workers' Education team, Phelps visited France, Italy, Austria and Scandinavia. While in France, he attended schools run by non-Communist unions in Paris and the provinces, and talked with hundreds of French union members.

"They asked questions and we gave answers," Phelps said. "And I think we did a pretty good job of cutting through the confusion which has been spread by the Communists about America and the American unions.

"Those workers have been given a constant stream of misinformation about America by the Communists. It is no wonder they are confused.

"One of the attitudes we found in a lot of places was that American unions somehow work in collaboration with Wall Street. Some of those French workers think there are no labor-management struggles in America—that Wall Street just gives, and that we just take whatever they offer.

"On the basis of our experience, we were able to tell them that that just wasn't so."

Phelps also found that the Communists have done a thorough job of exploiting Negro discrimination cases. He was asked a host of questions about them.

"A third attitude in French workers' minds reflects a considerable amount of defeatism," Phelps said.

"You folks have a lot to learn about criticism" was a remark he heard from the lips of many French workers.

"They just can't conceive of anybody getting a better deal out of capitalism," he explained.

"The trouble is that the old French ruling class has done everything to give the workers a feeling of resignation about the poverty in which they live. They find it difficult to realize that through greater productivity, they can increase their earnings and better their way of life."

The Oil Union official said that some of his earlier personal criticism of ECA had developed because "I just didn't understand how sick French society had become, both economically and socially."

But after he crossed the Atlantic, Phelps said he found the ECA was trying to do a real job to revive the French economy. He continued:

"In ECA many of the top administrative people have a business background but they are working with a realistic approach to the problem. They are making every effort to do a real job to help the French people.

"The Labor Section is doing an unusually good job, and I was impressed with the way its advice is thoroughly considered. It is not just a matter of the labor boys talking for the record in ECA.

"In France they now have the capacity and machinery to really improve living standards."

But he warned American workers not to expect French workers, with their background of desperate poverty, to be very enthusiastic about cutting their living standards again in order to provide armament.

"To cut the living standards of the French workers for any reason would jeopardize everything we have been able to do," he said. "We would lose the moral support of the people which is absolutely necessary for the future of the French democracy."

Other members of the Workers' Education group were John Connors, director of education for the AFL, and Prof. Frank McAllister of Roosevelt College, Chicago.

UAW In Detroit Backs AFL Transit Strike

Emil Mazey, secretary treasurer of the CIO Auto Workers, nas asked all UAW locals in Wayne County, Mich., to support an AFL strike against the Detroit Street Railways.

He said the union has made "every effort to reach a fair settlement on the basis of logic, justice and truth."

"Their efforts in that direction has been met with stalling, evasion, attempted chiselling and just two-faced double dealing by Detroit's Mayor Cobo and the DSR management," he reported.

Kroll Argues For Redistricting:

Your Voice In Congress Is Small If Over 350,000 Are In District

YOU, MR. VOTER, may have a very small voice in Congress. If you live in a district with a population of 500,000, you have half as much voice in government as another person who votes in a district having a population of 250,000.

PAC Director Jack Kroll made that point when he appeared recently before the House Judiciary Subcommittee.

There are 50 congressional districts with populations of less than 250,000, and 50 others with populations of over 450,000, he said.

Kroll said that Congress should enact a sound reapportionment law. The Celler Bill—HR 2648—would provide reapportionment of congressional districts, Kroll said, and he urged its enactment.

At present, congressional districts are cut up to block in or block out voters for political advantage. The result is districts do not represent the population fairly, as the Constitution provides.

"The States have allowed their congressional districts to become a nationwide web of rotten boroughs," Kroll told the subcommittee. He pointed out that in his own state of Ohio, the 22nd District had a population of nearly a million, while five other districts had populations of less than 250,000.

Fairly represented districts on the average should contain about 350,000 persons—based on U. S. population figures. And they should be composed of compact and contigious territories.

Congress should act on a sound reapportionment law, Kroll urged, and not allow fears of its effect in the next election influence them.

THE CELLER Bill, introduced in the House by Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) Feb. 14, Kroll pointed out, is drawn up to give all Americans "an equal voice in the government."

The bill would require:

1. " . . . States (to) establish single-member districts, so that every citizen will have a representative to speak for him in the House.

2. " . . . Districts be composed of compact and contiguous territory—a clear declaration of policy against the wicked practice of gerrymandering.

3. " . . . Districts be as nearly as possible equal in population . . . the bill retains in the law the wise provision of the 1929 Act, by which reapportionment is automatic, according to an equitable formula.

4. " . . . a Representative elected from a district too large or too small shall be denied his seat and the Clerk of the House shall refuse his credentials." (Sub-section [d]).

Celler's bill thus could bar any congressmen who did not come from a closely-knit district from taking his seat.

Kroll pointed out a fair reapportionment law could apply first to the 1954 election. Even a longer delay in bringing an effective law about, he said, would be better than doing nothing about the unfair districting now prevailing.

"Indeed, Mr. Chairman," Kroll said, "rather than see the Congress pass a bad statute, I would favor adopting (the bill) and letting it take effect in 1960 . . . That would give the states a full nine years to clean house."

But Kroll is optimistic the states wouldn't need nine years. "I believe that inside of three years the majority of the states would revise their districts to meet the standards laid down by Congress," he said.

OTHER bills on formation of districts have been introduced in Congress. Most of these provide only that new districts be added to take care of an increase in population. But adding districts doesn't solve the problem. Overcrowded districts still would be under-represented and small districts still would have too much representation.

Authority for Congress to make changes in redistricting is provided for by the Constitution. Congress, it says, "may at any time by law make or alter . . . regulations, except as to place of choosing Senators."

CIO Man Decorated As Hero In Korea

IT WAS DURING a crossing of the Naktong River in Korea. A small boat, brought almost to the water's level by its cargo of American combat infantrymen, had started across the muddy current when it met a hail of fierce enemy fire.

Cpl. L. E. Purvis

One GI rushed to an exposed position to engage enemy fire while his comrades sought safety. Infantry communications soon brought UN air support and the patrol was able to consolidate a position on higher ground and answer the Communist barrage.

Cpl. Lloyd E. Purvis, of the 34th Infantry Regiment, the lone GI whose heroic action saved his comrades, miraculously emerged from the engagement unscathed. For his conduct under fire Purvis was awarded the Bronze Star. The Army citation read:

"From an exposed position and with disregard for personal safety, Cpl. Purvis returned the enemy fire until air support was received, making it possible for the patrol to withdraw to higher ground."

In civilian life, Purvis was a member of the CIO Paper Workers in Dayton, O., and worked as a stripper at the Gebhart Folding Box Co. He joined the Army in 1949.

The young combat veteran has written his sister, Mrs. Margaret Grimes, that he is scheduled to return to the U. S. soon on leave.

CIO Leaders Plead For Life Of Convicted Miss. Negro

CIO LEADERS have asked Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi to commute the death sentence meted out to Willie McGee, Negro former soldier, when he was convicted of rape.

Last week Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers wired Wright, pointing out that the request was made in full knowledge of the fact that McGee "has received consideration in the many avenues of due process open to him since the day of the alleged crime in 1945."

"However," he added, "we feel that you can perform a great service to your state and to our country in furthering the cause of justice by granting clemency in this case. This decisive action on your part will add immeasurably to the strengthening of national unity . . . of our nation in its effort to beat back Communist aggression.

"Unmistakably, the granting of the petition for clemency will be a blow to Communist forces in America and abroad and deprive them of another weapon in the propaganda campaign against the free world."

Earlier CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, in another wire which also conceded that the case had received much consideration, noted that "nonetheless certain incidents in connection with various of the legal proceedings raise the possibility of reasonable doubt as to whether justice has been done."

"My main consideration, however," he said, "is the fact that the American Communist Party, as part of the world Communist conspiracy against the free countries, has made this case an effective vehicle for the misguidance of peoples of other races, particularly in the Far East, where the Communists are determined to make race a major issue in world politics.

"I DO not believe that we should permit the Communists to make such important capital out of a possible injustice occurring in the United States. . . .

"I suggest that if you commute this sentence, that you make it clear that you are doing so at the request of loyal American citizens in the national interest, so as to preclude the Communists from claiming that they obtained the requested commutation."

Michigan Bill Asks 17% Rate Increase

Just as pro-consumer groups were getting ready a rate reduction request, the Michigan Bell Telephone Co., announced it was seeking a 17% increase.

The increase would mean a $22 million annual dip into the pockets of Michigan Bell users.

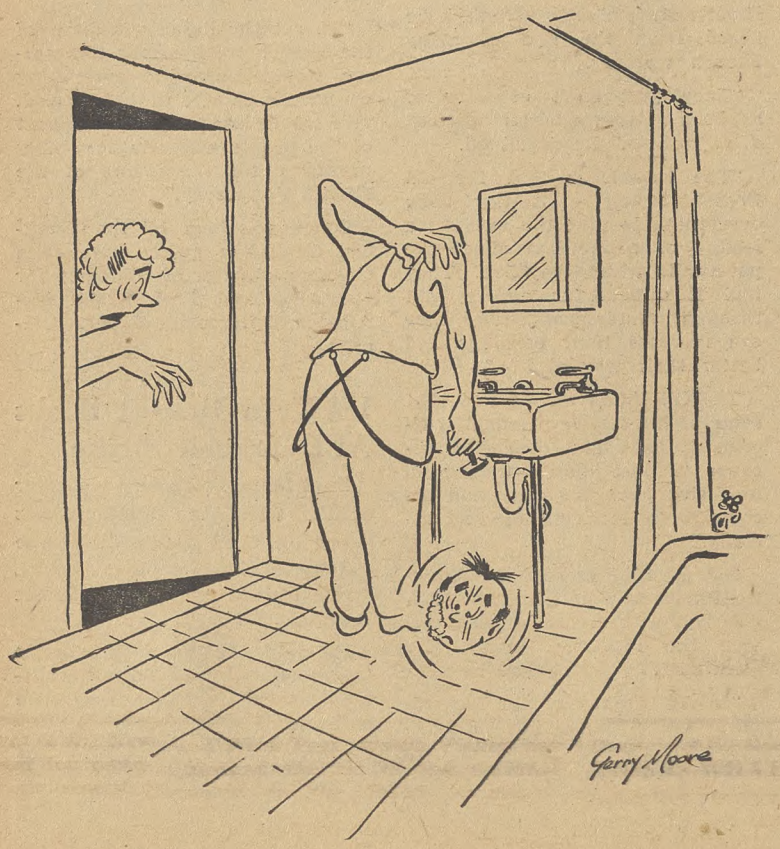
Graham Named UN Mediator

Dr. Frank P. Graham, former Democratic Senator from North Carolina, was named last week by the United Nations Security Council to mediate the long-standing dispute between India and Pakistan over the state of Kashmir.

He is expected to spend at least three months in Kashmir trying to work out a formula for its demilitarization and a plebescite.

He has had some experience in this field, having been a member of the UN Good Officers Committee that helped Indonesia get started on the road to independence. He became defense manpower administrator in the U. S. Dept. of Labor two months ago.

Graham is a former president of the Univ. of North Carolina and served in the War Labor Board during World War II.



"Herbert, you've nicked yourself shaving again!"

House Group OKs 'Voice' Muffling

The Senate Appropriations Committee on Apr. 30 endorsed House muffling of the Voice of America by concurring in its 90% slash of funds to carry the war of ideas into foreign lands.

The Senate group, by a strict party vote of 10 to nine, approved the House action in slicing the $97.5 million asked by the State Dept. down to $9,533,939. The House had acted on the recommendation of its Appropriations Committee.

The State Dept. had asked for the full amount to build up the broadcasting facilities by which the Voice beams ideological warfare programs to Russia, other nations behind the Iron Curtain, and Europe, Asia and South America.

The request was for a supplementary appropriation to increase the number and strength of broadcasting stations and for additional employes during the rest of the fiscal year that ends June 30.

Work Week Averages 41.1 Hours In March

Factory workers averaged 41.1 hours a week in March, or approximately the level of the last eight months, according to preliminary estimates of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

Gross weekly earnings of the 13.2 million production workers averaged $64.36, or 60c higher than in February and nearly $8 more than in March, 1950. Gross hourly earnings, including all premiums and overtime, averaged $1.57, about 1c higher than in February.

Wisconsin CIO Meet Finds McCarthy Harming State

Some of the people who have to cringe and admit that Sen. Joe McCarthy (R) represents them in the upper house of Congress declared last week that he "has soiled the reputation of the State of Wisconsin."

They were about 150 delegates to the Wisconsin CIO Legislative Conference, which met over the weekend in Milwaukee.

"He has soiled the reputation of the State of Wisconsin by slanderous statements against distinguished citizens, by irresponsible actions and by a total disregard for ethical and moral decency," they said in a resolution. "He has maliciously attacked the character of the President of the United States."

The reference was to McCarthy's insinuation—which he later denied—that President Truman was drunk when he dismissed Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

The conference praised the President for ousting MacArthur, and said that the latter's policies "might well lead to a third world war which the people of the United States do not want."

Fellow Congressmen:

'The Work Buchanan Started Must Go On'

REP. Frank Buchanan, liberal Pennsylvania Democrat and chairman of the House committee that investigated lobbies last year, died Apr. 28, in the Bethesda, Md., Naval Hospital.

A fellow Democratic Representative from Pennsylvania, George M. Rhodes, paid tribute to Buchanan for the job he did as chairman of the lobbying committee in uncovering the activities of pro-Fascist groups. "The work Buchanan started must continue," Rhodes said.

Buchanan had been suffering from a stomach ailment that became intensified during the lobby committee hearings, when he was under heavy pressure to whitewash big business lobbies. Death came two days after an exploratory abdominal operation.

Rep. Buchanan, formerly a teacher, was elected mayor of his home city, McKeesport, Pa., in 1942 with strong labor support. In 1946 he was elected to Congress to fill the unexpired term of former Rep. Samuel A. Weiss, who had resigned to become a judge.

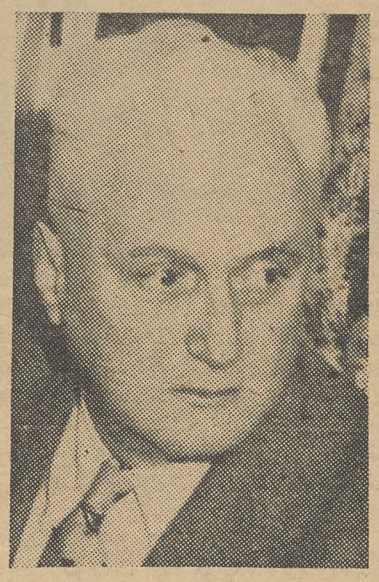
He was re-elected at each election since, always with labor support, and won in 1950 by a majority of more than 35,000. He was a member of the House Banking and District Committees.

He was graduated from the Univ. of Pittsburgh and did graduate work at Columbia Univ. Surviving are his wife and their daughters, Joan and Jane.

Rep. Rhodes said in his tribute to Buchanan:

"Buchanan will be remembered because of the great service he rendered as chairman of the House Committee to Investigate Lobbying Activities. He worked hard and diligently as head of that committee.

"Some day when the average American learns the whole truth about what this committee has uncovered, the name of Frank Buchanan will win far greater respect and far more recognition than it has won today."



Rep. Frank Buchanan

RHODES pointed out that "several days before Buchanan died, Frank A. Rumely, executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government, was convicted by a federal grand jury for contempt of Congress.

"Rumely's conviction, which took the jury less than 20 minutes was not only a vindication of Buchanan but a stinging rebuke to the peddlers of hate and confusion like Westbrook Pegler and his ilk, and the reactionary bloc in Congress that opposed Rumely's indictment.

"The work Buchanan started must continue. It is obvious that the tax laws are being evaded in phony educational contributions to the Rumely outfit by corporate interests and that the law governing political spending is being violated."

URW Local Exposes Gadsden Merchants' Efforts To Aid Rumely's Pro-Fascist Outfit

THE reactionary, anti-labor Committee for Constitutional Government and its local stooges ran into unexpected, hard-hitting opposition recently in Gadsden, Ala.

Members of Local 12 of the CIO United Rubber Workers punched back, and hard, when CCG propaganda endorsed by local businessmen began to appear in rural mail boxes.

They passed a resolution exposing the CCG as "the mouthpiece for a small group of reactionary Republicans and Dixiecrats who are bent on sowing dissension, fanning the flames of prejudice and pitting neighbor against neighbor at a time when genuinely patriotic Americans should be working for national unity."

Then they bluntly warned local merchants that members of the union and the friends of organized labor will no longer "spend their wages with those who endorse and support the enemies of labor and the traitors to our country's welfare and security."

"Certain individuals having decided to do business with the Committee for Constitutional Government," the resolution explained, "organized labor and their friends can't be expected to do business with them or to contribute towards further fattening the purses of local or national individuals and lobbies that spread propaganda alien to our democratic American tradition and foreign to our present way of doing things in Gadsden."

Copies of the resolution, which stated that the "friendly relations between labor and industry in Gadsden are being threatened by an unholy alliance of local businessmen and a powerful lobby with headquarters in New York," were made public.

A campaign was authorized to acquaint the people of Gadsden with the program of organized labor so they "may be able to choose between the program of the CCG and the sound policies and programs of all organized workers."

The resolution went into detail about the CCG and its executive secretary, Edward A. Rumely, who was convicted Apr. 18, on a charge of contempt of Congress growing out of his refusal to answer questions about CCG financing put to him last summer by the House Lobby Investigating Committee.

It also quoted from speeches by Rep. Patman (D. Tex.), who has exposed Rumely and CCG operations in several addresses.

The resolution said:

"THE CCG, one of the best-financed lobbies in the country, makes use of business men in spreading its anti-labor, anti-semitic, white supremacy and other anti-American doctrines.

"In a mailing sponsored by certain Gadsden business men, labor was described as 'the 15% organized in tight pressure groups who are seeking for themselves an island of privilege, and handouts of taxpayers' money,' and the leaders of labor branded as 'racketeers.'

"The local business men signed a telegram soliciting contributions to be used by the CCG in distributing anti-labor propaganda to farmers, ministers, teachers and other 'opinion moulders.'

"Organized labor is against the tax program of the CCG, which seeks to do away entirely with taxes on excess profits and to limit taxes on the rich and add to the taxes of the workers and farmers; and is against the committee's proposal that the legal rights of unions be taken away, that the Reconstruction Finance Corp. and the Soil Conservation program be eliminated.

"The union members do not agree with the CCG that the clock of social progress should be turned back to 1932, or that the Wage-Hour Act is socialistic or communistic.

"Labor is for social security, old age assistance, aid to the blind, veteran pensions, federal aid to education, public housing, government aid to farmers, etc., which the CCG says breed 'dependence upon the government's nursing bottle.'

McDermit Honored

STATE REP. Raymond McDermit, Pennsylvania, was honored at a testimonial dinner recently for services to the CIO Steelworkers and the community. Labor representatives, industrial and businness leaders were present.

Frank Hoffman, USA legislative director, charged large companies are contributing money to "build a propaganda machine." He cited U. S. Steel Corp. and Bethlehem Steel Co. as being among this group. "They are trying to control your minds," he declared.

Big business is "waiting for the day when the slack-off comes," to use the Taft-Hartley Act and break the union, he said. Hoffman urged a unified labor front as a protection against the problems facing unions.

Regional Director Eugene Maurice of the Steelworkers said there is too much concentration of wealth in a few hands. He referred to profits of the large industries.

McDermit is president of Local 1288 at the Carnegie Illinois Steel plant at Johnstown and heads the Greater Johnstown CIO Council which sponsored the tribute.

Others present included Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, and State Rep. H. G. Andrews, House minority leader.

Ship Yard Strike Again Postponed

A strike of 50,000 shipbuilding workers on all coasts was postponed until June 3 following a meeting of CIO Shipbuilding Workers officials with Wage Stabilization Board Chairman George W. Taylor at Washington.

This is the third deferment. Union officials explained the action was taken to give the board time to pass on a 15% wage increase negotiated Feb. 18. Previous postponements were in March and April.

UTSE Signs Union Shop Agreement

THE FIRST union shop agreement in the history of the railroad industry was signed Apr. 26 by the CIO Transport Service Workers with the New York Central Railroad, UTSE Pres. Willard Townsend reported. It climaxed a long series of negotiations.

Negotiations for a union shop were sharpened after passage of the Railway Labor Act amendment in 1950 providing that railway unions may negotiate for a union shop.

Townsend said the agreement became effective May 1. All red cap employes of the railroad must now be members in good standing with the UTSE-CIO.

"Once again our union," Townsend said, "has demonstrated its ability to produce for our members in the best CIO tradition. Equal credit should go to the enlightened management of the New York Central Railroad for recognizing the justice of our request.

"This agreement will serve to strengthen our ranks and improve employer-employee relationships on the New York Central."

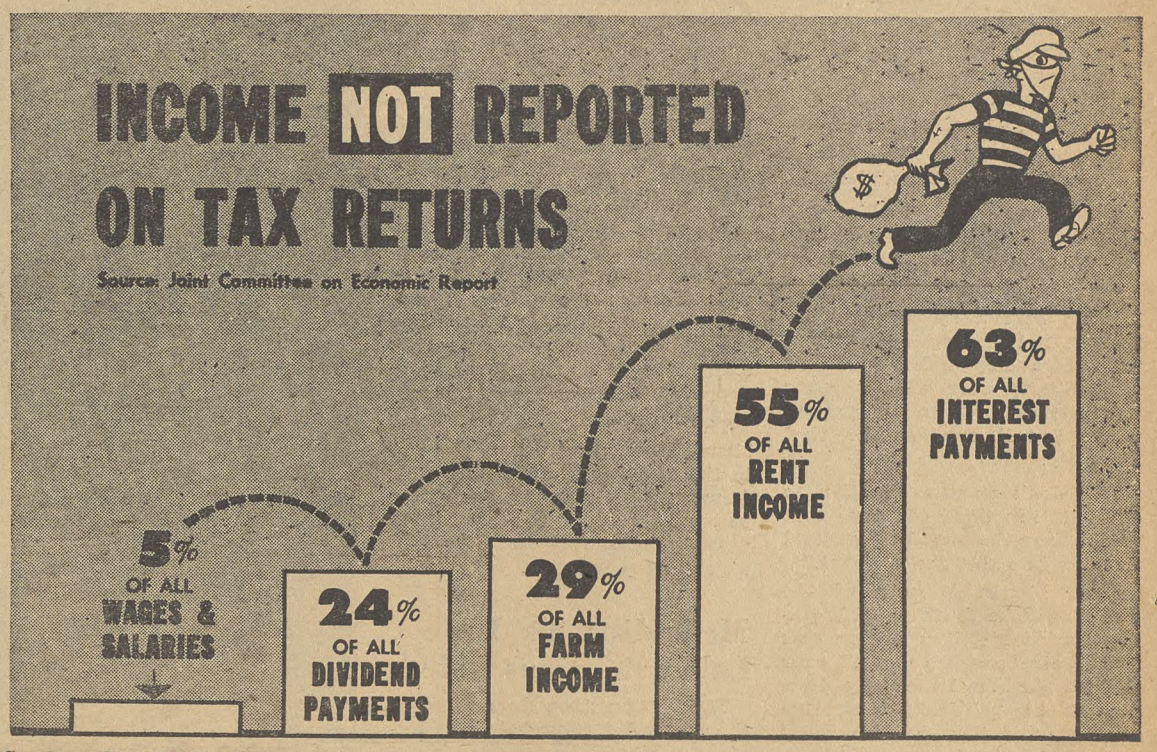
Utility Union In PG&E Drive

The CIO Utility Workers have undertaken an all-out organizing campaign to regain bargaining rights for 12,000 production workers of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. in northern California.

The UWUA is seeking a system-wide election. According to Harold Doyle, UWUA executive board member, more than 2000 workers have already signed UWUA pledge cards asking for an election.

PG&E is the second largest public utility system in the nation. Until last year, the UWUA represented 5000 workers in four Bay Area divisions while the AFL Electrical Workers held contract rights for 7000 workers in all other divisions. In January, 1950, the IBEW won a system-wide election.

UWUA Pres. Joseph Fisher has pledged the aid of the national union to the PG&E employes, who, he says, "are fed up with the contract losses and breakdown of working conditions under IBEW."



Courtesy of the Machinist

THIS IS WHAT happens when Uncle Sam tries to collect income taxes: He gets practically all the tax due on wages and salaries, much smaller proportions on other income sources like dividends, farm income, rents and interest.

Courtesy of the Machinist

The House Ways and Means Committee has voted tentatively to try out the withholding technique on the less productive sources in the hope of getting an additional $330 million a year—about half of it from dividend payments.

TWU Board, Haywood Support Truman In MacA Controversy

THE INTERNATIONAL executive board of the CIO Transport Workers formally commended President Truman for his "firm and statesmanlike act" in recalling Gen. Douglas MacArthur and for "restoring to the civilian authority the determination and control of our foreign policy."

At a meeting in New York, the TWU board stressed that "one of the cardinal principles upon which our great American democracy is founded is the supremacy of the people and civil authority over the military." At the same time the board expressed pride in our armed forces and their leaders, and admiration for the fighting qualities of the American soldier. But . . .

"We hold firmly to the basic principle that the armed forces are the servants of the people—not their masters," it continued. "Where the military is supreme, there is totalitarian dictatorship . . .

"We are in accord with the foreign policy pursued by President Truman, who seeks to contain aggression with the minimum of slaughter—and then through the United Nations to disseminate truth, economic help to impoverished people and by other methods characteristic of the enlightened and human policies of free democratic peoples, bring about the ultimate overthrow and extinction of Communism.

"WE FIRMLY believe that the refusal of Gen. MacArthur to carry out the orders and instructions of his Commander-in-Chief, his unwillingness to adhere to the policy determined by the civil authority, and his inexcusable refusal to carry out the very policy he was sworn to effectuate, and his deliberate disregard of the constitutional limitations in his authority, made him unfit to remain in Army command."

In a speech at a mass meeting called by the CIO Organizing Committee in Chattanooga, Tenn., CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood praised MacArthur as a fighting man, but refused to recognize him as a diplomat.

"They are trying to put you in a position of not paying tribute to MacArthur as a hero," he said.

"I will pay tribute to him as a hero, but I will not pay tribute to him as a statesman.

"This is a civil government, and it must be run by the civil authority, not the military. When there is a dispute between civil and military over who is going to fix policy and run the government, I will support the civil authority.

"We don't want a situation to develop in this country that would clear the way for a general to move into the White House."

Pres. Martin Wagner of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers warned members of Congress that their "political binge" over the MacArthur issue may turn out to be politically expensive next year if they neglect badly needed legislation.

After all, he reminded them, the MacArthur fuss may be of minor importance in 1952, especially if the war situation gets worse.

But the people back home, he added, "will have little mercy on a member of Congress who lets the big utility combines sabotage the effort to extend vital electric service and facilities in defense areas; who fails to enact a new defense mobilization act before the present inadequate law expires next month, and who otherwise proves false to the trust placed in him as a representative of the people."

"UNBRIDLED emotion" sweeping the country as a result of the MacArthur ouster is being "agitated deliberately by political opportunists," he asserted.

"But the fact remains," he added, "that to the average layman the price of pork chops, the rent he has to pay, and a fair rate of taxation based on ability to pay are tangibles on which the future political success of many members of Congress will depend."

He pointed out that the utilities are quietly taking advantage of the MacArthur dispute to block the construction of transmission lines from public power plants to defense areas—"apparently by influencing House members to reduce appropriations for this work."

The House Appropriations Committee on Apr. 20 reported out a Dept. of the Interior appropriations bill for the coming fiscal year that was $39 million below the President's budget request and $58.6 million less than the current year's appropriation. Most of the slash was made in the public power and reclamation sections.

Since then the House has cut it still further—with special emphasis, as Wagner complains, on budget allotments for new power transmission lines.

It voted to eliminate the entire $3.4 million asked by the Southeastern Power Administration to continue construction of the Buggs Island Dam-Langley Field, Va., transmission line. Rep. Gary (D. Va.) made the motion.

ON MOTION of Rep. Harris (D. Ark.) and over the strenuous objections of Speaker Rayburn, it cut $550,000 from transmission line funds sought for the Southwestern Power Administration. On motion of Rep. Short (R. Mo.) it barred the SPA from even operating in western Missouri.

Then, on motion of Rep. Ford (R. Mich.), it trimmed $5.5 million from the request of the Bonneville Power Administration for transmission lines. The entire Pacific Northwest delegation recommended that the request be approved, but was ignored.

The Northwest, despite construction of many power projects in the last few years, still suffers from an acute shortage of electric power because of the mushroom growth of industry and a rapidly expanding population.

Methodists To Have Labor Relations Aide

The Boston Area Committee of the Methodist Church has recommended establishment of a Christian ministry in the field of labor and management relations on a two-year trial basis.

The committee proposed that an ordained clergyman be named Secretary of Industrial Relations.

GOV. LEE E. EMERSON of Vermont signs the occupational disease bill which provides a maximum of $4000 for death from silicosis or asbestosis under certain conditions. Left to right, Pres. James F. Christie of the Vermont CIO Council; Pres. Sydney Edward of the Vermont Federation of Labor; W. John Mitchell, CIO legislative representative; Heber G. England of the Barre Granite Association; Exec. Vice Pres. Theodore Kane of the Associated Industries; Rep. Cornelius Granai, Rep. Ralph H. Smith, Lewis D. Shonyo, chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce and Labor, and Walter A. Mamquist, chairman of the House Committee on Labor and Industry. Organized labor fought long and hard for the bill.

Two State Universities Ease Ban On Negro Students

FOR THE FIRST time in its history the Univ. of North Carolina has accepted a Negro student. Thus a wedge has been made into its trustees' "white supremacy" policy.

The university's trustees recently voted 61 to 14 to admit qualified Negroes to the graduate and professional schools when study in their field is not provided in state-supported Negro schools.

The admissions committee followed up this vote by ruling six to one that Edward Diggs, a Negro from Winston-Salem, is "competitively qualified" to enter its medical school in September.

Still seeking admission to the medical school are two other Negroes whose applications had not yet been acted on. The university also is fighting admission of four Negroes to the law school as ordered by the U. S. Court of Appeals.

And in Baltimore, Md., applicants to the Univ. of Maryland will be considered "without regard to race, color or creed." President H. C. Byrd of the college said the Board of Regents will admit qualified Negroes as recommended by its 1951 General Assembly Committee.

NEGROES HAVE attended the university's law school since 1936 but it wasn't until last year that a Negro girl, Esther McCready, won her case for admission to the School of Nursing.

Actually the school's Board of Regents ruled three years ago the college was open to Negroes on the same basis that white students are admitted. But in Miss McCready's case, she was forced to go to the courts before being admitted.

CHARTER as CIO affiliate was presented last week by CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood (left) to George Maher, executive secretary of National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians, at brief ceremony in CIO national headquarters. Newest member of CIO family has headquarters in Chicago, contracts with ABC and NBC chains and more than 70 independent radio and television stations.

Dayton CIO Paper Sued

A $100,000 libel suit was filed May 1 against the Dayton (O.) CIO News by Marion E. Patten, chairman of the Montgomery County Labor League for Taft during last year's election campaign and an active worker for Henry Wallace in 1948.

Patten formerly was a stalwart of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, which was expelled from the CIO because of its Communist domination, and is now a reluctant member of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

He charged the CIO paper libelled him by hinting that he had misappropriated campaign funds. In actual fact, he claimed, he has filed a full accounting with the Ohio Secretary of State as required by law.

"I don't think he has grounds for the suit," said James E. Kraft, president of IUE Local 755 and a member of the paper's editorial board. "We'll be very happy to fight the case at a public trial.

"We're a little better equipped than a lot of people think we are."

CIO Groups Plan Defense Meets

The National CIO Community Services Committee and the CIO Dept. of Organization and Councils have planned jointly to sponsor a series of regional conferences on civil defense and defense mobilization.

The conferences will be primarily concerned with the following: the CIO and CIO-CSC programs in the defense emergency, civil defense, national mobilization and stabilization, health, welfare and housing programs for defense workers, and programs for servicemen and veterans.

The first of the conferences will be held in Cleveland May 19 and 20 at the Hollenden Hotel and will be open to representatives of CIO councils and international unions in the following states and areas: Ohio, western New York, western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Kentucky.

The second will be held in Chicago at the Morrison Hotel, May 25, 26 and 27 for Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana and eastern Missouri.

Famine Stalks India While Congress Stalls

By CONSTANCE BEESON

ALMOST everyone in the United States — except, apparently, the Congress — wants to send grain to the starving people of India.

While Congress continued to stall debate on a bill for emergency relief for India, the CIO in letters to the Senate and House urged that grain be sent on a gift basis.

The CIO, through Chairman Jacob Potofsky of the CIO International Committee, and Legislative Director Nathan Cowan, said present bills are "half-hearted humanitarianism."

"It comes as a distinct shock . . . to find Congress preparing to furnish grain to the starving people of India only through a loan arrangement, or a plan for half-gift, half-loan shipments," Potofsky and Cowan said.

Meantime, deaths by starvation in India are becoming a disaster problem.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) on Apr. 30 suggested a "friendship grain" program to send wheat to India. He attacked "delaying tactics," saying the stall "is playing directly into the hands of the Soviet's aggressive imperialism."

INTERPRETER for a group of Bolivian Indians at a meeting of the Intl. Labor Organizations Committee on Indigenous Labor at La Paz, Bolivia, is Elizardo Perez, Bolivian member of the committee (left). The Indians came from distances as great as 300 miles to plead for better schools, housing and health services. The committee's recommendations for improving their conditions were approved later by the ILO's governing body.

HUMPHREY urged the American people to "take it upon themselves" to supply grain for the millions in India who face starvation.

"The American Congress is guilty of a tragic delay in providing food for the starving millions of the Republic of India," the Minnesota Senator said.

"While we debate . . . on how to stop Communism by arms and military power, Communism is conquering the minds of millions who are victims of economic injustice and mass starvation. The one weapon we have in abundance in this war for the minds of men and their loyalty is food."

India can be helped in one of two ways, Humphrey announced.

1. Donations and collection of grain: CROP, the Christian Relief Overseas Program, will coordinate activities in the nationwide collection of grain.

2. Collection of money to buy needed food: Commodity Credit Corp. has surpluses of dried eggs, powdered milk and dried beans.

Voluntary donations can be sent through the American Red Cross by addressing "Friendship Grain, American National Red Cross, Foreign Operations, Washington, D. C."

Humphrey said he is discussing with officials of CARE the possibility of using that agency as another way to get food to India.

"What we need is action—not talk; food not debate," he added.

Students from three colleges already have taken the problem upon themselves. From Minnesota, students of Macalester College, the Univ. of Minnesota and the College of St. Thomas were due in Washington last weekend with a truck load of wheat. They are meeting at the Indian Embassy this week to plan further action to spur congressional approval of India's request for two million tons of grain.

DEBATE scheduled to start on the House floor last week was postponed to this week because Prime Minister Nehru indicated India would accept no aid with "political strings."

"While we welcome all the help we can get from foreign countries," he said, "we have made it clear that such help must not have any political strings attached to it, any conditions which are unbecoming to a self-respecting nation to accept, any pressure to change our domestic or international policy."

Under the House bill, India would have to pledge repayment in cash or strategic material over a long period.

According to newspaper reports in India, the Indian Government may not rely any longer on U.S. grain.

COMMUNIST China and Moscow have offered grain to India immediately. Agreement already have been made for 50,000 tons of rice from China, according to information received from Peiping, an official of the Food Ministry said.

Other agreements made with Chinia to alleviate starvation in India will yield 50,000 tons of milo sorghum grain. The Chinese also plan to ship 100,000 tons of grain to India as part of a one million ton allotment.

Negotiations for an exchange of 500,000 tons of wheat for India's jute are under way with Moscow.

U. S. Labor Seeks Larger Role In World, Potofsky Declares

THE INTENTION of American labor to take an increasingly active role in world affairs was reaffirmed by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO Intl. Committee, in a May Day statement last week.

At the same time he stated again the CIO's solidarity with the world labor movement, and emphasized that "just as the United States must accept its world responsibility, so must the American labor movement acquit itself nobly and actively as a responsible force in the world."

Potofsky, who also is president of the CIO Clothing Workers, added:

"The CIO believes that labor's representation in all the agencies of the American government dealing with foreign policy is essential because it can make a significant and unique contribution to the security and peace of the world. CIO believes that the safeguarding of the peace is too important a matter to be left entirely to the diplomats.

"American labor aims to inject into the conduct of American policy an ever greater awareness of our responsibility toward the working men and women of the world and to assume an ever greater responsiveness to their problems and their aspirations.

"Our purpose, too, is to work directly with other labor movements of Europe, Asia, South America, and Africa through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

"In and out of government, we have one great objective: to demonstrate that democracy is the real revolutionary force in the world today, the only force that can not only promise the workers a better life but fulfill that promise. Communism is the false remedy of desperate men for social and economic ills that need more, not less, freedom for their cure . . .

"There is an urgency in this task, but there is a permanence as well. American labor joins with world labor not merely to defeat Communist totalitarianism, but to contribute a measure of the strength and resources we Americans are fortunate enough to possess to the never-ending struggle of the world's people."

Asian ICFTU Meet To Be Held Soon

The first Asian regional conference of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions will be held May 28-31 in Karachi, Pakistan.

At least 50 delegates, representing 10 million organized workers in 10 countries, are expected to attend. In addition, observers will be present from other Asian labor organizations not yet affiliated to the ICFTU.

The delegates will come from Ceylon, Formosa, Hong Kong, India, Iran, Japan, Korea, Malaya, Pakistan and Thailand.

First objective of the conference is the establishment of a permanent ICFTU regional secretariat for Asia and the Far East, comparable to those set up in recent months in Europe and the Americas.

It Was Good Commie Trick Until Red Hero Fainted

Voice of America programs beamed to Eastern Europe are leavened with a generous dash of humor—like the recent one about the Communist Quiz Kid who was caught in his own trap.

The Communist Quiz Kid, it seems, was a minor party functionary who was ordered by Red bosses to get on a radio quiz program broadcast from a West Berlin station.

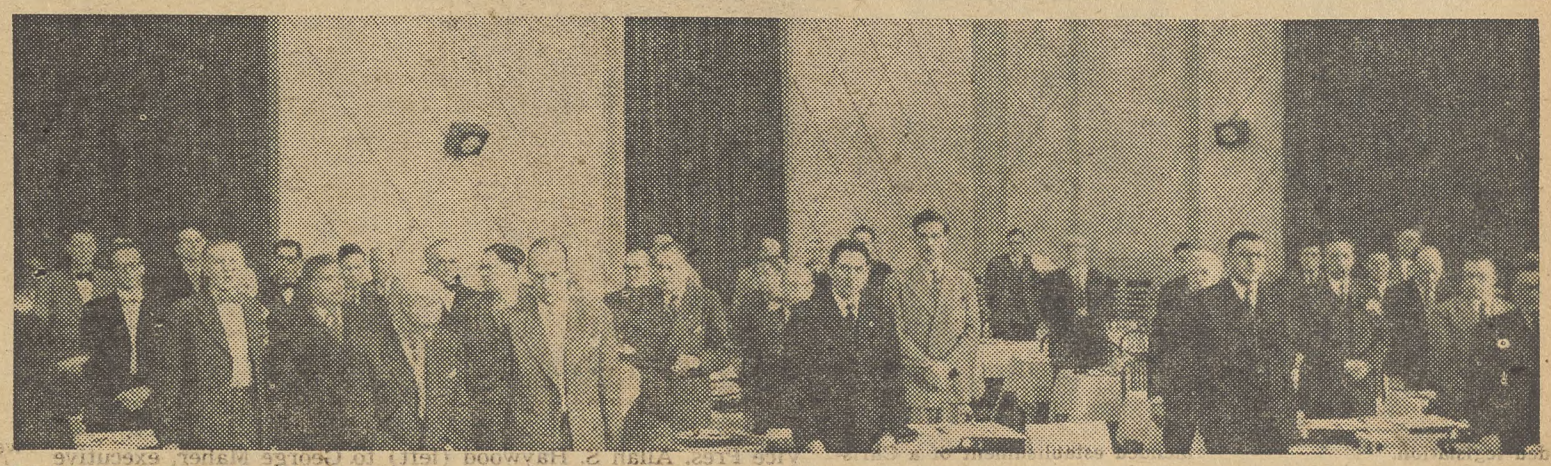
Winners, it seems, are paid off in hard cash. The idea was for the Red to win and then hand over his prize, with a lot of fanfare, to the party. He got on the program, all right, but the station director was tipped off.

"When the program went on the air," said the Voice broadcast, "the Communist was allowed to win an increasing amount of cash. Then came the final, all-important question.

"For a prize of $98, the Communist was told to pick out the one correct answer to the following question:

" 'How many slave laborers are there in the Soviet Union—four million, six million or eight million?'

"The Communist's mouth hung open. For a moment he stood before the microphone, perspiring. Then, without a sound, he fainted dead away."



DELEGATES to the World Congress of Professional Workers at Brussels stand for moment of silence in honor of the memory of the late Ernest Bevin, former British Foreign Minister. The meeting was sponsored by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and was attended by representatives of white collar workers in 20 countries. U. S. affiliates represented included the CIO, AFL and Mine Workers. The congress was the first ever held on a world-wide scale for non-manual workers.

At Wake Forest, N. C., Mill

Strikers Blame Gun-Toting Scabs For Violence

What's happening in the big southern strike of the CIO Textile Workers? Reports in the daily press may lead the public to believe that union members have embarked on a campaign of violence. But in this story from Wake Forest N. C., Veteran Labor Reporter Mary Heaton Vorse tells the facts of unprovoked shooting at peaceful strikers. Her story shows that the violence at Wake Forest came from the strike-bound mill—not from union members—and it happened while the police were conveniently absent.

By MARY HEATON VORSE
For Labor Press Association

"NO ONE on our picket line ever toted a gun, nor even so much as a stick, and it burned us up to see them scabs go in the mills with guns sticking out all over!" the striker said.

"Shotguns and pistols!" put in the woman with snapping black eyes. We were sitting in front of the picket hut near the Royal Cotton Mill in Wake Forest, N. C., reconstructing the Apr. 27 scene when a blast of dynamite seemed to be the signal for the scabs in the mill to fire into the crowd of 200 pickets.

When that happened, no police were there. Now, about twenty yards away, sat a car full of state patrol officers.

The first blast of gun fire from the mill wounded Jim Rankin, reporter for the Raleigh News and Observer. A young girl of sixteen, Ruby Mae Woodlief, was shot in the leg and Purvis Perry, a striker, was hit in the chest. Ruby Mae was wounded by a 32-caliber pistol, the others by buskshot, none seriously. It is amazing that in the two-hour pitched battle which followed, no one else was shot.

"We had a little fuss earlier over stopping the supply truck trailer," said Dean Culver, the union's representative. "We were not expecting anymore trouble that day."

"We was having us a chicken stew—down there by the trees, singing and having fun, when the dynamite went off," interrupted the woman.

DEAN CULVER took up the story, "They often tried to send supply trucks through our picket lines and we always stopped them. We turned that big truck trailer back Friday."

"We sent them off twice!" said the woman. "Then, they come back with the law to help 'em get in!"

"They had along Chief of Police Whitman and a deputy named Moore. The truck inched along in spite of the crowd of strikers in front of it. They knocked down a couple of women with their truck and Moore flourished his tear gas gun.

"Knocking the women down riled the strikers, and they cut the truck's tires. The driver, the chief of police, and the deputy went away and everything was quiet. The 'bossmen' came and got their wives who were working in the mill. About ten or twelve scabs stayed behind in the mill," said Culver.

"Them scabs stayed behind to shoot us!" said the woman.

"Now, this is what you want to remember," said Culver, "We have been protesting against those scabs being armed. I've gone to Chief Whitman about it time and again. He denied ever seeing any guns."

"He's lost his eye sight, then," said the woman. "All the rest of us have seen them guns!"

"We raised all the ruckus we could about them guns being carried in the mills," she said.

"How many usually work here?" we asked.

"THERE are three shifts of eighty-five each; they work around the clock. Since the strike, they have only worked one shift from seven to four. About eighteen to twenty-two scabs go in."

"They send in them few just to make trouble," said the woman.

"Who threw the dynamite?" we asked.

"There are two accounts of that. The paper said it was tossed over the fence."

"'Twas tossed from the window," interrupted the woman. I went back to my car, and my eye caught a window opening, gently, on the second floor. I saw something thrown out. Then, came the explosion."

"THERE are twenty of our strikers who saw something dropped from that window," said Dean Culver. "After the explosion, Jim Rankin (the reporter) and some strikers went up to see what had happened."

"And, them skunks fired on 'em," said the woman.

"Fury broke loose, our people scattered. The scabs had the best of it for the first ten minutes.

"After that, they didn't," said the woman, grimly.

"Our people hid behind trees and the scabs kept firing from the mills. We hid in the ditches. We hid anywhere. There must have been two thousand shots exchanged. Then, they stopped, and we quit, too."

DURING the two-hour battle, no police appeared. Up until 9:15 p.m., there was no local officer on the scene. Then, Wake County Sheriff Robert Pleasants rushed from a political meeting at Raleigh, 20 miles away, bringing with him a number of deputies.

There was plenty of law later on when Gov. W. Kerr Scott ordered all state highway patrolmen within a distance of fifty miles to move in. Many state patrolmen were stationed in cars along the road as we walked down to the picket line.

The road was enlivened by home-made signs giving pithy advice to scabs. Not more than half-dozen men and women were standing around the picket hut which looked as it had begun life as the top of a delivery truck.

Norman E. Holford, president of the TWUA local, repeated the charges that armed scabs had been going into the mills, or, as one of the many affidavits signed by twenty strikers has it, "transported weapons openly and visibly, and in full view of Chief of Police Whitman."

"There's too much politics around here," Holford says. "That's why we get no protection or cooperation from the police or state patrol."

We discovered that by "too much politics" he meant that the State Executive Democratic Committee Chairman, Everett Jordan, is the president of the Royal Cotton Mill, and its largest stockholder is U. S. Sen. Willis Smith.

THERE is no more beautiful town than Wake Forest. Its core it the famous Wake Forest College. Beautiful homes surrounded by big trees and gardens line the streets.

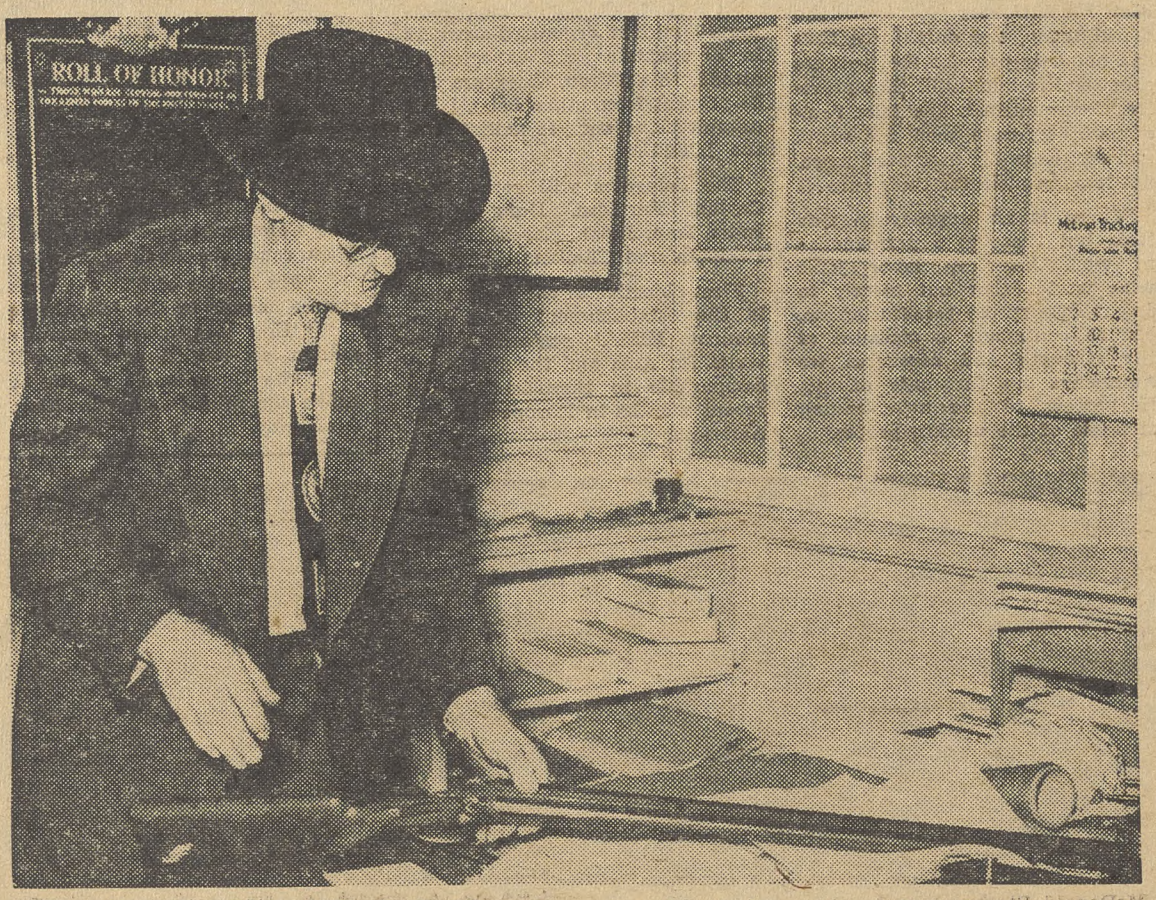
Straggling off at the end of town is the run-down mill and mill village, a sorry reminder of the bleak mill hills of former days. The Royal Cotton Mills are a strange appendix to the town's mellow beauty.

This mill is notorious for paying about the lowest wages in an industry that pays 35c less an hour than the average in the United States.

"Our pattern is not the pattern of the rest of the strike," Dean Culver explained. "We're fighting for recognition, for the right to have a union. Last September, we had a union here for the first time, and we aim to keep it.

"We are not even making the demands made by the rest of the strikers. All we want is our first contract and to get what other Textile Workers around here get."

WHO'S SHOOTING: A group of CIO Textile Workers on strike at the Royal Cotton Mills at Wake Forest, N. C., peers cautiously around the corner of a building to see where the shots were coming from during the gun battle Apr. 27.



EVIDENCE OF VIOLENCE: J. C. Rheuark, superintendent of the carding room of Royal Cotton Mills, Wake Forest, N. C., examines a double-barreled shotgun found in a mill office by state highway patrolmen. The patrol says they found the weapon when they entered the mill following a two-hour gun battle which the CIO Textile Workers Union declares was started Apr. 27 by strikebreakers in the mill firing at pickets.

TWUA Studies Mediation Plea

As the CIO News went to press, the CIO Textile Workers' policy committee was preparing to meet at Charlotte, N. C., to consider the plea of Chief Federal Mediator Ching that the strike at southern mills be called off immediately.

"Industrial peace to the fullest extent possible in this period of world tension is essential to the national safety and welfare," Ching said.

The Mediation Chief proposed —if work is resumed—a three-man mediation panel representing labor, management and the public, which would act as a "special representative" of the Mediation Service in arranging bargaining sessions. Ching made the proposal to the union and 25 companies.

Another late development was the arrest of 29 persons at Wake Forest, N. C., as a result of the gun battle at the Royal Cotton Mills Apr. 27. One of those arrested was Norman Holford, president of the TWUA local. Early stories did not say how many — if any — strikebreakers were arrested.

TWUA Peace Plan Rejected

Long before the attack on striking CIO textile workers at Wake Forest, N. C., the union had protested the carrying of weapons by scabs and strikebreakers—and had proposed a plan to insure peace in the town.

The union had proposed that the company not try to reopen the mill; that picketing be limited to three workers at the plant gate; that caretakers and maintenance men be allowed to enter; that there be no name-calling, and that there be no carrying of arms by anyone connected with the strike.

The proposal was rejected by the textile mill.

Mine Owners Lose 'Seizure' Loss Suit

THE U. S. Supreme Court on Apr. 30 took a slap at the phony flag raising "seizures" which the government has sometimes urged to break strikes.

In the United Mine Workers' case, decided four years ago, the government successfully argued that when it "seized" the mines the miners became government employes outside of the protection of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. On that theory, the court enjoined the miners from striking.

Actually, as every one knows, nothing happened when the government "seized" the mines except that the American flag was raised and the workers were ordered to go back to work. The government did not keep the profits or bear the losses.

Recently some of the companies which were operating at a loss during the government "seizure" brought suit against the government to recover their losses, and the government in these suits had the cheek to assert that its seizure had been purely nominal. Last week the Supreme Court said "nuts."

Justice Black pointed out that when the government had seized the mines it had "formally and ceremoniously" proclaimed that it was taking possession for the purpose of operating the mines. He pointed out that the government had required the mine officials to agree to act as agents for the government, that it had required the American flag to be flown at every mine, had posted placards reading "United States Property!" in the mines, and had appealed to the miners to dig coal for the United States as a public duty.

Therefore, Justice Black declared, "It should not and will not be assumed that the seizure of the mines was a mere sham or pretense to accomplish some unexpressed governmental purpose instead of being the proclaimed actual taking of possession and control."

In the particular case decided by the Supreme Court the mine was running at a loss and the court declared that the government must reimburse the owner for the losses. The court also pointed out, however, that in these seizure cases "the United States normally is entitled to the profits" during the period of seizure. No doubt that is why the liberal justices voted to hold that the seizure could not be regarded as a sham.

Thus phony seizures seem to be out the window for the time being. No doubt Sen. Taft and his cohorts will now sponsor a bill waiving the government's rights to the profits when it seizes property, while leaving the government liable for losses.

"Now you can see why good union officials must be rather thick-skinned!"

House Unit Considering Workers Recreation

A recreation program for Federal employes is being considered by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, according to its chairman, Rep. Murray (D. Tenn.).

A bill to create a Federal corporation which would establish a recreation program for all U. S. workers employed in concentrated areas was introduced early in this session of Congress by Rep. Klein (D. N. Y.). The measure has the full backing of the Governvent & Civic Employes Organizing Committee-CIO.

URW Seeks Pay Raise; Spiraling Prices Cited

A BROAD-SCALE economic program headed by a demand for a "substantial" wage increase was unanimously adopted by the international policy committee of the CIO Rubber Workers at a meeting last week in Detroit.

The meeting, which drew 150 representatives of locals in all parts of the United States and Canada, acted after finding that "the entire mobilization program has failed to stabilize our economy."

"Prices have spiraled so rapidly that wage increases won in 1950 have been wiped out," the delegates declared in a forward to the economic program.

"Corporate profits have been permitted to attain unparalleled peaks while wages and salaries have been limited by a rigid and inequitable wage policy. This is not 'equality of sacrifice.'

"The benefits of pension and insurance programs negotiated in 1950 have been made less adequate as the result of this inflationary trend and existing inequities in wages have been frozen."

The program calls for:

"1. A substantial wage increase. This increase is justified on the basis of increased living costs, fabulous and unprecedented profits of the rubber and allied industries and the increase in man-hour productivity.

"2. Extension and improvement of pension, insurance, surgical, medical and hospitalization programs.

"3. Continuation of efforts to obtain full union shop contracts.

"4. Correction of intra-plant, inter-plant and area inequalities and inequities.

"5. Improvement of night shift bonus, holiday pay and vacation programs and other fringe benefits.

"6. That a meeting be called of the Canadian section of the policy committee for the purpose of formulating an economic program consistent with this policy.

"7. Adequate contract provisions to prevent speedups, to prevent rate reductions, and to insure reasonable and uniform work loads.

"8. Contract provisions providing for the right to reopen wages for negotiation at any time upon notice of 30 days or less, with the right to cancel the agreement if the wage demand is unsettled.

"9. Improved benefits for employees entering the armed services and their dependents."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

GREAT NEWS! Pres. Murray is well on the road to recovery. The writer, representing Pres. Murray, attended a huge joint CIO-AFL mass meeting in New York, presided over by Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers, CIO, and Pres. Martin T. Lacey of the Central Trades and Labor Council, AFL. The writer and CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey spoke to the gathering for the National CIO, and Pres. William Green and other AFL officers also addressed the meeting. The issues discussed dealt largely with the Defense Mobilization Program and how it is being handled in Washington. It was pointed out how Labor is continuing the battle against the unfair monopoly of big business in the defense structure.

Allan Haywood

The writer traveled to Birmingham, Ala., where he addressed one of the largest State Council conventions ever held in the State. The issues here, as elsewhere, concerned the defense structure and how it is being handled in Washington.

The workers are familiar with what goes on, they are vitally interested, they are a part of such structures, and they want a voice in running it. They voiced their support of the stand taken by the United Labor Policy Committee and the CIO, and loudly protested the tactics of big business. They, as workers all over the country, want equality of sacrifice and equality of responsibility.

From Birmingham, the writer continued on to Chattanooga, Tenn., where he and Southern Dir. John Riffe addressed a meeting attended by members in Tennessee and the surrounding areas. It was well attended, and here, as mentioned above, the issues centered on our defense efforts.

The Wage Stabilization Board has been reestablished, thanks largely to the efforts of Pres. Murray to help resolve some of the conflicting issues. The CIO members of the board are: Pres. Emil Rieve, Textile Workers; Pres. Joseph Beirne, Communications Workers, and Vice Pres. John Livingston, Auto Workers.

It has been announced that Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald, Steelworkers, has been appointed to represent organized labor in the Office of the Economic Stablizer, headed by Eric Johnston.

The workers everywhere are demanding that the present price control law be repealed and a new more effective price control be set up, one that will insure an equality of sacrifice. The fight must be carried on for the benefit of the people of the nation. Organized labor is the only real force that can make this fight. Remember, organization is our strength! Continue to organize the unorganized.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election at the Swan Rubber Co., Carey, O., the workers voted for the Rubber Workers, CIO, by 155 to 92 against. Intl. Rep. Curtis Treen handled this campaign. In a union shop election at the Goodyear Rubber & Tire Co., St. Mary's, O., the workers voted for the union shop by 881 yes, 82 no. Intl. Rep. Newton Vermilion handled the situation for the URW-CIO.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, Intl. Woodworkers, reports that at the Harbor Lumber Co., Coos Bay, Ore., the workers voted 14 to 2 for the union shop. Intl. Rep. James E. Lee handled the situation for the IWA-CIO.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that in a representation election at the Allen-Smith Lumber Co., Lake Charles, La., the workers voted as follows: eligible 47, IWA-CIO 24, no union 18, 1 challenged.

Acting Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports that in a representation election at the Roach-Appleton Co., South Bend, Ind., the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers-CIO was victorious over District 50 by a vote of 151 to 6.

REG. DIR. Hugh Thompson reports the following representation elections in the Buffalo, N. Y., area: Martin Fireproofing Co., United Stone and Allied Workers CIO 46, no union 2; National Lead Co., UAW-CIO 8, no union 0; Irving Air Chute Co., Textile Workers CIO 348, no union 188. The Martin Fireproofing and National Lead elections were conducted solely by the CIO Regional Office.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports that in two representation elections in Illinois the results were as follows: J. H. Junod and E. C. Hein, d/b/a Illinois Engine Exchange, Chicago, eligible 33, Steelworkers CIO 28, AFL 2, against 1, challenged 1; Gear Specialties, Inc., Chicago, eligible 157, IUE-CIO 92, neither 1, UE 64. The following union shop elections were also won: Belke Manufacturing Co., Inc., Chicago, eligible 95, USA-CIO 86, against 4; Cans, Inc., Chicago, eligible 258, USA-CIO 199, against 7; Sun Steel Co., Chicago, eligible 41, USA-CIO 31, against 7; M. Block & Sons, Chicago, eligible 91, USA-CIO 68, against 10; John Gillen Co., Cicero, eligible 50, USA-CIO 44, against 2; L. A. Cohn Bro., Inc., Chicago, eligible 58, USA-CIO 52, against 1; Bond Stores, Inc., Chicago and Oak Park, eligible 192, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union-CIO 150, against 25, challenged 8.

Killing Union With Kindness Doesn't Work

SOMETHING WAS cooking in plant. Working conditions improved almost overnight.

Rest periods, coffee-time, three weeks' paid vacations for employes with five or more years service were some of the things granted. Coke and candy machines were installed, and workers were invited to help themselves.

Foremen who had been driving and bullying employes for years suddenly became their buddies. Top management dropped the "Mister Boss" relationship with the workers and took on a "call-me-Joe" manner.

The CIO United Paper Workers —no novices at this sort of thing —knew what all this meant when it started happening recently at the United Autographic Register Co., Cleveland, Ohio. The firm makes those pesky paper forms that have to be filled out.

It meant that the date for a National Labor Relations Board election to choose or vote down the union as collective bargaining agency had been set.

Just before the election date, the employes from two shifts were treated to anti-union talks given by the company president in the plant cafeteria. But somehow this fell flat, for the workers listened in stony silence. And they were bitter about the anti-union literature handed out daily.

All that trouble and it didn't work! An overwhelming majority of the 200 or so eligible employes voted for the CIO Paper Workers.

Hearing Told Of Bias Harm

Exclusion of minority groups from jobs hurts the national defense effort and increases the relief burden, labor, church and civic leaders declared at a public hearing on FEPC legislation in Michigan.

Roy Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers Political Action Dept. charged that manpower is wasted and citizens capable of productive work are kept on the welfare rolls because of discrimination against them. This was confirmed by Harry Markle, director of the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission, who said the employment service is handicapped because of "discriminatory specifications . . . by employers."

CIO Reprints Asia Article

Reprints of an article by Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas which appeared in the Jan. 16 edition of Look Magazine, entitled "We Can't Save Asia by War Alone," may now be ordered from the CIO Education and Research Dept.

A plea for a political approach rather than a military plan to solve the problems of Asia, the article was the result of the jurist's personal inspection trip through the Middle and Far East. Reprints are priced at 5c each; $4 per 100, and $35 per thousand. Address orders to the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

'Respectable' Bosses Use Thugs To Break Unions

"SOCIALLY respectable employers in Detroit are using thugs to handle their labor problems, according to the Senate Crime Investigating Committee.

The committee, whose hearings kept the eyes of thousands of Americans glued to television screens, last week issued its report, accusing three large Detroit manufacturers of entering into "intimate business relationships with racketeers" to break unions in their plants.

Two of the companies investigated by the Kefauver Committee on crime followed similar patterns in giving "fake" jobs to thugs as cover-ups for their real work—"to keep labor unions out of (their) plants," the committee reports.

The companies are the Detroit Michigan Stove Works and the Briggs Manufacturing Co., both of whose presidents denied knowledge of underworld links.

Shortly before a violent strike in 1934, Michigan Stove suddenly promoted Sam (Santo) Perrone, an illiterate, from a $1.65 an-hour core maker to a $60,000 a year "scrap dealer." Actually, the committee believes, he was hired to supervise strike breakers.

The company's president, John Fry, admitted he "had asked various persons, including Perrone and his brothers, to bring in a lot of strikebreakers and that they had done so."

Attempts were made by the CIO Auto Workers to organize shortly after Perrone and his brother went to jail for six years for illegal manufacture of whisky, the committee finds. But when the Perrones were released from prison, the union local "disintegrated."

The report states ". . . the committee must point out the sinister relationship between the lucrative contracts granted to the gangster Perrones and the ability of the Detroit, Mich., Stove Works to keep labor unions out of its plant."

IN APRIL, 1946, the Briggs Manufacturing Co. was bothered by strikes. Apparently noting the success of Michigan Stove in busting union organization, the company hired Perrone's son-in-law, Carl Renda, under a similar set-up with a scrap contract. Presidents of the two companies are close friends, the committee says.

"The inference is inescapable," the committee declares, "that what Renda, the entirely unequipped college student, was being paid for was the service of his father-in-law, the 'muscle' man, San Perrone."

Less than a week after granting of the contract "the first of the notorious Briggs beatings" occurred. Six prominent officers of the union at Briggs Co. were beaten during the ensuing year.

One of the victims, Kenneth Morris, president of UAW Local 212 at Briggs last week sued the company for $100,000 damages for injuries received during a beating. Also named by Morris as defendants were Perrone, Mr. and Mrs. Renda and Briggs president, William Dean Robinson.

The committee also reports on relationship of the Ford Motor Co. with the underworld.

The story of Harry Bennett, the committee says, is "sordid." As the late Henry Ford's "chief of staff" he "employed virtually a private army recruited from ex-convicts and criminals to engage in battles against labor."

CIO Against Rackets, Haywood Declares

The CIO is flatly against racketeering, CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood last week told a mass meeting in Chattanooga, Tenn., sponsored by the CIO Organizing Committee.

His declaration was made in connection with praise for Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) and the work done by the Senate committee he headed which investigated organized crime. It was Haywood's own answer to a question he asked the audience: "Has anyone heard the names of any CIO officials being implicated in the crimes uncovered by your Senator?"

"Let us find a member of our organization racketeering," Haywood continued, "and we will expose him and put him out. The Kefauver Committee won't have to do it."

5-7

Potofsky Says Big Growers Back Measures To Lower Migratory Workers' Standards

PRESSURE BY big growers is behind migrant farm labor bills now in Congress. The Ellender Bill in the Senate and the Poage Bill in the House both would lower the standards of already poor migratory farm workers.

Jacob Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO International Committee, called for defeat of the two bills.

In statements filed with the Senate and House Committees on Agriculture, Potofsky called instead for the support of the Chavez Bill (S 949) and the Yorty Bill (HR 3048).

Working conditions among Mexican immigrants are so bad the Mexican Government refuses to allow the continued use of Mexican help unless working standards are raised.

The Ellender and Poage Bills, Potofsky said, "ignore the problems of American workers, and without proper safeguards, would flood the nation with foreign workers, many of them illegal entrants."

A SOUND program for supplying an adequate number of workers to harvest crops is provided in the Chavez and Yorty Bills, Potofsky pointed out. These bills would set up national standards for working conditions controlled by the Secretary of Labor.

The Washington Post has pointed out that ". . . responsibility for determining whether foreign workers are actually needed should be vested directly in the Secretary of Labor and not left to the discretion of State and regional directors . . . the latter are simply too susceptible to the pressure of the big growers."

Standards, Potofsky said, should include payment of wages at no less than prevailing rates. And employers would have to comply with laws governing workmen's compensation and other safeguards for workers.

The Chavez and Yorty bills also would make farm jobs more attractive and thus increase the number of migratory workers willing to fill the jobs, he said.

Persons from Puerto Rico, Hawaii and the Virgin Islands should have preference over those from foreign countries, Potofsky said, "since our obligation to the former is greater." The Chavez and Yorty Bills contain such a provision.

If the supply of farm labor is still too limited, Potofsky pointed out, then the Chavez and Yorty Bills allow for a constructive program for the importation of foreign farm help, without lowering working standards.

The Ellender and Poage Bills ask that foreign farm labor be brought in immediately, and provides no wage standard. Each contract would be solely between the worker and the grower.

THE CIO also opposes the Ellender and Poage Bills because they would legalize the employment of Mexican workers who have entered the country illegally, and exempt foreign workers from the payroll tax and protection of the Social Security Act.

"American growers should not be permitted to hire foreign workers more cheaply than Americans," Potofsky said.

The Ellender Bill, which probably will come to vote this week, would bring back the "peonage system" and "lower farm labor standards all over the country," according to Sen. Chavez (D. N. M.)

Chavez told the Senate: "When many people of my state have to leave New Mexico in order to find work in the sugar-beet fields of Colorado or Wyoming or to herd sheep in Montana, simply because a few greedy, selfish slave drivers would bring in — to supplant them at their homes—Mexican labor that is starving to death, I will not agree that that should be done."

Brehm Found Guilty In Pay Kickback Case

REP. WALTER E. Brehm, Ohio Republican, was found guilty last week on five counts of violating the Corrupt Practices Act by taking $1000 in salary kickbacks from a clerk in his House office.

A jury in U. S. District Court at Washington returned the verdict Apr. 30 after deliberating four hours and 18 minutes. He faces three years in prison and a $5000 fine on each count, but sentences seldom are imposed in that fashion.

Brehm, a dentist, is serving his fifth term in Congress. He was found guilty of taking $200 a month from Mrs. Emma S. Craven for five months in 1948. He was found not guilty of taking $140 from Mrs. Clara Soliday, another clerk.

The indictment under which he went to trial accused him of taking the money he got from Mrs. Craven to help finance his political campaigns. The Corrupt Practices Act forbids soliciting campaign funds from federal employes.

Brehm, who voted "right" on only one of the 12 issues listed in the last CIO Voting Guide published in August, 1950, flatly denied taking the money from his clerks. His attorneys were given time to file a motion for a new trial and said that if it were turned down they would appeal.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Hearings before Senate Banking Com. begin May 7. House Banking Com. starts hearings May 8.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House Ways and Means Com. concluded hearings Mar. 19. Now studying proposals.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
Grain for India S. 872 H.R. 3791	Provides 2 million tons surplus grain for India, now facing serious famine.	Senate and House action due any day. Senate bill provides half-loan, half-gift plan; House bill is on loan basis only.	Ask Senators and Representatives to provide grain for India on an outright gift basis.
Importation of Mexican Farm Labor S. 984 H.R. 3283	Provides for importation of cheap foreign labor; encourages extension of substandard conditions for both domestic and imported farm workers.	Senate now debating bill. House Agricultural Com. has approved measure.	Urge Senators and Representatives to oppose bills unless amended to provide fair labor standards for all migrant farm workers.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Committee to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. House Com. on Interstate Commerce holding hearings.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 14, 1951 82 No. 20

Murray Asks Unions Push Campaign To Strengthen Anti-Inflation Law

(See Story on Page 3)

FREEDOM PLEDGE: Victor Reuther, CIO representative in Europe (back to camera), gives a pledge of support to a half million west Berlin trade unionists in their struggle for economic justice. Reuther, who is also education director of the CIO Auto Workers, said that American workers "are determined to give added weight to this pledge by common trade union action together with you, against threats from the extreme right and the phony left." The occasion was a rally on May 1, in the Platz der Republic. In the background are the ruins of the Reichstag Building.

As 'Great Debate' Rages, Housing Bill Gets Knife

Republicans and Southern Democrats last week joined forces to slash to 5000 the number of low-rent public housing units that can be built in the fiscal year ending July, 1952.

This happened while the nation's attention was riveted on the controversy between Gen. MacArthur and the Truman Administration over Far East military and foreign policy. (See Page 2.)

Fisher And Rudge Perfect Strikebreaking Technique

Time was when a strikebreaking outfit needed only a dozen—or less—thugs, plus sufficient gats and lead pipes.

Today much more than brute force is needed in the strikebreaking "art." The new technique is being used by Fisher and Rudge, Inc., of New York City. They have been operating lately against the CIO Textile Workers. (See story on Page 5.)

Packers And Cattlemen Gang Up On Controls

THE PRICE of beef has become the battleground in the first organized attack on price control.

The regulation on beef prices was the first action by that agency that begins to look like real price control.

Meat packers and cattlemen and their lobby have massed in Washington to destroy that regulation and to prevent any attempt to control meat prices.

With consumers paying 16 to 25c a pound more for various cuts of beef than a year ago—a rise of 20 to 30%—and with beef cattle bringing 52% more than parity prices to producers, this drive to destroy the beef ceiling order is likely to determine whether there is to be any real effort at all to control prices.

If beef prices can't be controlled, other meat prices will not be controlled.

If meats are not controlled, food prices generally will not be controlled.

Will the government give in to the beef boys? First reaction from Price Administrator DiSalle is to stand firm. He slugged it out toe to toe when the beef country congressmen ganged up on him.

DiSalle has a perfect case to take to the people, as far as his fairness to packers and cattlemen goes.

His order rolls back the prices that packers can pay for cattle, but does not roll back the prices consumers pay for beef. That widens their margins, which, says OPS, have been squeezed during the months of the so-called price freeze.

The rolled-back prices on live cattle still leave cattle raisers 135% of parity, and gives feeders larger net returns than they received before last June.

They have been making double the usual net profit on a normal feeding operation during the past season.

As for consumers, the new DiSalle order merely holds beef prices about where they are, but it does provide, for the first time, fixed posted retail prices.

THIS kind of a campaign put the finishing touches to the crippled price control law in the summer of 1946, when the withholding of meat supplies became a major factor in the President's decision to abolish all price controls.

These groups don't lobby with telegrams and postcards. They have what it takes. They have just thrown a dinner at the National Press Club for 250 members of Congress and 100 news men. It didn't come off too well, but that wasn't for lack of money to spend.

On Capitol Hill, they are already getting the kind of help they want.

Senators and Congressmen who last year took an active part in getting price control legislation enacted are now working just as hard to undermine price controls by lining up with the beef bloc against the reasonable, and indeed generous, regulation which OPS has issued.

While 'Great Debate' Rages, Housing Bill Is Knifed

By CONSTANCE BEESON

WHILE THE nation's attention was riveted on the MacArthur controversy, a surprise House vote virtually killed low-rent public housing May 4.

A coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats voted 181 to 113 to slash to 5000 the number of dwellings in the low rent class that can be built in the year ending July, 1952. Absent or not voting were 139 members of the House.

Supporters of public housing were not able to delay the vote a week until they could rally their forces.

President Truman, because of defense needs, had proposed the number of public housing units for the 12-month period be cut to 75,000. The House Appropriations Committee cut this to 50,000.

It was Rep. Gossett (D. Tex.) who introduced the amendment to the annual appropriations bill to slash low rent constructions to 5000 units. Actually he didn't want any new low-rent housing. But he said 5000 units would take care of communities where housing needs might be "desperate."

Rep. Yates (D. Ill.) said in the debate on the amendment: "The public housing program was initiated for the purpose of giving hope, of resurrecting the hundreds of thousands of people who are doomed to a blighted life in the slums of the metropolitan communities of this country, and offering them a decent place to live."

Yates said the amendment would "gut the bill completely and take away the last ray of hope for every person who lives in crowded slums like those of Chicago."

House debate on the amendment indicates the move was in line with the long-standing fight of private interests against the national public housing policy. Rep. Sabath (D. Ill.) said an unholy alliance of Republicans and Dixiecrats supported the amendment.

Gossett told the House the purpose of his amendment was to cut down public housing to protect "private enterprise." He said private builders should be protected against competition for materials.

Thus his arguments followed along lines made familiar by real estate and private housing lobbyists against public housing.

The amendment provides the number of dwelling units that can be constructed in the fiscal year beginning July 1 must include those in construction before the new fiscal year begins.

David W. Snow, information director for the Public Housing Administration, said passage of the amendment "means our national program is completely emasculated as the bill now stands . . . We might as well have nothing as this; it is no program at all."

Private builders say they will build rental housing, but they repeatedly failed to meet the need for such units at sufficiently low rents.

The Senate still can restore authority to go ahead with low rent housing construction. The bill passed by the House is expected to go before the Senate in two or three weeks. The measure then would have to go to conference for adjustment between the two chambers.

The present law allows 135,000 low rent dwelling units in any fiscal year to be constructed, subject to whatever limitations are set out in the annual appropriation bills.

MANY cities would be hit by the Gossett Amendment. In St. Louis alone more than 5000 units are needed. Already planned is a development of 1740 units for Negroes.

The Census Bureau report for 1950 shows the need for housing, particularly among Negroes. There is a marked difference in housing standards for white and Negroes, according to the report.

Twenty-seven per cent of Negro homes, compared with 7% of white homes, were described as "dilapidated." Forty per cent of Negro urban families lacked bathtub or shower, in rural nonfarm areas, 94%.

Only half of Negro families in the cities had hot and cold running water.

The same marked difference was found in Negro rental units. Overcrowding is four times as common in housing for Negroes as for all households combined, and it is worse now than it was in 1940, according to the report.

House Vote On Limiting Public Housing Units To 5000

Here is the vote by which the House limited to 5000 the number of housing units that can be constructed with federal funds in the fiscal year beginning next July. This limitation was contained in the Gossett amendment to the appropritions bill. The amendment was adopted by a vote of 181 to 113. R means right or a vote against the amendment, W is wrong, or a vote for the amendment. Z is paired right, and X is paired wrong. A is absent or not voting.

ALA.—Andrews (D) ....R
Battle (D) ....R
Boykin (D) ....W
deGraffenried (D) ....Z
Elliott (D) ....R
Grant (D) ....R
Jones (D) ....R
Rains (D) ....R
Roberts (D) ....R

ARIZ.—Murdock (D) ....R
Patten (D) ....W

ARK.—Gathings (D) ....W
Harris (D) ....W
Hays (D) ....R
Mills (D) ....W
Norrell (D) ....W
Tackett (D) ....W
Trimble (D) ....R

CAL.—Allen Jr. (R) ....W
Anderson (R) ....W
Bramblett (R) X
Doyle (D) ....R
Engle (D) ....R
Havenner (D) ....Z
Hillings (R) X
Hinshaw (R) X
Holifield (D) ....A
Hunter (R) ....W
Jackson (R) ....W
Johnson (R) ....A
King (D) ....R
McDonough (R) ....W
McKinnon (D) ....Z
Miller (D) ....R
Phillips (R) ....W
Poulson (R) ....W
Scudder (R) ....W
Shelley (D) ....R
Sheppard (D) ....Z
Werdel (R) ....A
Yorty (D) ....R

COLO.—Aspinall (D) ....R
Chenoweth (R) ....W
Hill (R) ....W
Rogers (D) ....R

CONN.—McGuire (D) ....A
Morano (R) ....A
Patterson (R) ....A
Ribicoff (D) ....A
Seely-Brown (R) ....R
Sadlak (R) ....Z

DELA.—Boggs (R) ....W

FLA.—Bennett (D) ....W
Herlong (D) ....W
Lantaff (D) ....W
McMullen (D) ....A
Rogers (D) ....W
Sikes (D) ....W

GA.—Brown (D) ....R
Camp (D) ....A
Cox (D) ....W
Davis (D) ....W
Forrester (D) ....A
Lanham (D) ....R
Preston (D) ....R
Vinson (D) ....A
Wheeler (D) ....W
Wood (D) ....W

IDAHO—Budge (R) ....A
Wood (R) X

ILL.—Allen (R) ....A
Arends (R) X
Bishop (R) ....W
Busbey (R) ....W
Chiperfield (R) ....W
Church (R) ....W
Dawson (D) ....A
Gordon (D) ....R
Hoffman (R) X
Jenison (R) ....W
Jonas (R) ....W
Kluczynski (D) ....A
McVey (R) ....W
Mack (D) ....R
Mason (R) X
O'Brien (D) ....R
Price (D) ....Z
Reed (R) ....W
Sabath (D) ....R
Sheehan (R) ....W
Simpson (R) ....W
Springer (R) ....W
Vail (R) X
Velde (R) ....W
Vursell (R) ....W
Yates (D) ....R

IND.—Adair (R) ....W
Beamer (R) ....W
Bray (R) ....A
Brownson (R) X
Crumpacker (R) ....W
Denton (D) ....R
Halleck (R) X
Harden (R) ....W
Harvey (R) ....W
Madden (D) ....R
Wilson (R) ....A

IA.—Cunningham (R) X
Dolliver (R) ....W
Gross (R) ....W
Hoeven (R) ....W
Jensen (R) ....W
LeCompte (R) ....W
Martin (R) ....W
Talle (R) ....W

KAN.—Cole (R) ....W
George (R) ....W
Hope (R) ....W
Rees (R) ....W
Scrivner (R) ....W
Smith (R) ....W

KY.—Bates (D) ....A
Chelf (D) ....A
Gregory (D) ....A
Golden (R) ....A
Morton (R) ....W
Perkins (D) ....A
Spence (D) ....R
Watts (D) ....A
Whitaker (D) ....A

LA.—Allen (D) ....W
Boggs (D) ....R
Brooks (D) ....A
Hebert (D) X
Larcade (D) ....A
Morrison (D) ....A
Passman (D) ....Z
Willis (D) ....W

ME.—Fellows (R) ....W
Hale (R) ....W
Nelson (R) ....A

MD.—Beall (R) ....W
Devereux (R) X
Fallon (D) ....A
Garmatz (D) ....Z
Miller (R) ....A
Sasscer (D) ....W

MASS.—Bates (D) ....W
Donohue (D) ....R
Furcolo (D) ....R
Goodwin (R) ....W
Herter (R) ....W
Heselton (R) ....R
Kennedy (D) ....R
Lane (R) ....R
McCormack (D) ....R
Martin (R) ....W
Nicholson (R) ....W
Philbin (D) ....A
Rogers (R) ....W
Wigglesworth (R) ....W

MICH.—Bennett (R) ....A
Blackney (R) ....W
Crawford (R) ....W
Dingell (D) ....A
Dondero (R) ....W
Ford, Jr. (R) ....W
Hoffman (R) X
Lesinski, Jr. (D) ....R
Machrowicz (D) ....A
Meader (R) ....W
O'Brien (D) ....R
Potter (R) ....W
Raubaut (D) ....R
Shafer (R) ....W
Thompson (R) ....W
Wolcott (R) ....W
Woodruff (R) X

MINN.—Andersen (R) ..W
Andresen (R) ....W
Blatnick (D) ....R
Judd (R) X
Hagen (R) ....A
McCarthy (D) ....R
Marshall (D) ....R
O'Hara (R) ....W
Wier (D) ....R

MISS.—Abernethy (D) ..W
Colmer (D) ....W
Rankin (D) ....R
Smith (D) ....W
Whitten (D) ....R
Williams (D) ....W
Winstead (D) ....W

MO.—Armstrong (R) ....A
Bolling (D) ....A
Cannon (D) ....R
Carnahan (D) ....R
Curtis (R) X
Irving (D) ....A
Jones (D) ....A
Karsten (D) ....R
Magee (D) ....R
Moulder (D) ....R
Short (R) ....W
Bakewell (R) ....A
Welch (D) ....R

MONT.—D'Ewart (R) ..W
Mansfield (D) ....Z

NEB.—Buffett (R) ....W
Curtis (R) ....W
Miller (R) ....A
Stefan (R) ....W

NEV.—Baring (D) ....A

N. H.—Cotton (R) ....W
Merrow (R) ....W

N. J.—Addonizio (D) ....Z
Auchincloss (R) ....W
Canfield (R) ....R
Case (R) ....A
Eaton (R) X
Hand (R) X
Hart (D) ....R
Howell (D) ....A
Kean (R) ....R
Rodino (D) ....Z
Sieminski (D) ....R
Towe (R) X
Widnall (R) ....A
Wolverton (R) ....R

N. M.—Dempsey (D) ..W
Fernandez (D) ....W

N. Y.—Anfuso (D) ....Z
Buckley (D) ....Z
Butler (R) ....W
Byrne (D) ....A
Celler (D) ....Z
Clemente (D) ....R
Cole (R) ....A
Coudert (R) ....Z
Delaney (D) ....R
Dollinger (D) ....Z
Donovan (D) ....A
Fine (D) ....Z
Gamble (R) ....W
Greenwood (D) ....A
Gwinn (R) ....W
Hall, L. W. (R) X
Hall, E. A. (R) ....R
Heffernan (D) ....Z
Heller (R) ....Z
Javits (R) ....Z
Kearney (R) X
Keating (R) ....W
Kelly (D) ....Z
Keogh (D) ....Z
Kilburn (R) ....W
Klein (D) ....Z
Latham (R) X
McGrath (R) ....R
Miller (R) ....A
Multer (D) ....Z
Murphy (D) ....Z
Ostertag (R) ....W
O'Toole (D) ....R
Powell (D) ....A
Quinn (D) ....R
Radwan (R) ....A
Reed (R) X
Reihlman (R) ....W
Rooney (D) ....Z
Roosevelt (D) ....Z
St. George (R) ....W
Taber (R) ....W
Taylor (R) X
Williams (R) ....W
Wharton (R) ....W

N. C.—Barden (D) ....A
Bonner (D) ....W
Carlyle (D) ....W
Chatham (D) ....A
Cooley (D) ....W
Deane (D) ....R
Doughton (D) ....A
Durham (D) ....W
Jones, H. C. (D) ....W
Jones, W. W. (D) ....W
Kerr (D) ....R
Redden (D) ....A

N. D.—Aandahl (R) ....W
Burdick (R) ....R

OHIO—Ayres (R) ....W
Bender (R) ....W
Betts (R) ....W
Bolton (R) ....W
Bow (R) ....W
Breen (D) ....R
Brehm (R) ....W
Brown (R) ....W
Clevenger (R) ....W
Crosser (D) ....A
Elston (R) X
Feighan (D) ....R
Hays (D) ....R
Hess (R) ....W
Jenkins (R) ....W
Kirwan (D) ....A
McCulloch (R) ....W
McGregor (R) ....W
Polk (D) ....R
Reams (Ind.) ....A
Secrest (D) ....R
Vorys (R) ....W
Weichel (R) ....W

OKLA.—Albert (D) ....R
Belcher (R) ....W
Jarman (D) ....W
Morris (D) ....R
Schwabe (R) ....W
Steed (D) ....R
Stigler (D) ....R
Wichersham (D) ....R

ORE.—Angell (R) ....R
Ellsworth (R) ....W
Norblad (R) ....A
Stockman (R) ....A

PA.—Barrett (D) ....A
Bush (R) ....W
Chudoff (D) ....A
Corbett (R) ....A
Dague (R) ....W
Denny (R) ....W
Eberharter (D) ....R
Fenton (R) ....W
Flood (D) ....A
Fulton (R) ....A
Gavin (R) X
Gillette (R) X
Graham (R) ....W
Granahan (D) ....A
Green (D) ....A
James (R) X
Kearns (R) X
Kelley (D) ....R
Lind (D) ....R
McConnell (R) ....W
Morgan (D) ....R
Mumma (R) ....W
O'Neill (D) ....A
Rhodes (D) ....R
Saylor (R) ....R
Scott, Hardie (R) ....R
Scott, Hugh (R) ....R
Simpson (R) ....W
Sittler (R) ....W
Van Zandt (R) ....W
Vaughn (R) ....W
Walter (D) ....R

R. I.—Fogarty (D) ....R
Forand (D) ....R

S. C.—Bryson (D) ....W
Dorn (D) ....R
McMillan (D) ....W
Richards (D) ....W
Riley (D) ....W
Rivers (D) ....W

S. D.—Berry (R) ....W
Lovre (R) ....W

TENN.—Baker (R) ....R
Cooper (D) ....R
Davis (D) ....R
Evins (D) ....R
Frazier (D) ....R
Gore (D) ....R
Murray (D) ....A
Priest (D) ....R
Reece (R) ....W
Sutton (D) ....R

TEX.—Beckworth (D) ..A
Bentsen (D) ....R
Burleson (D) ....W
Combs (D) ....Z
Fisher (D) ....W
Gossett (D) ....W
Kilday (D) ....W
Lucas (D) ....W
Lyle (D) ....W
Mahon (D) ....W
Patman (D) ....Z
Pickett (D) ....W
Poage (D) ....W
Rayburn (D) ....Speaker
Regan (D) ....A
Rogers (D) ....W
Teague (D) ....W
Thomas (D) ....R
Thompson (D) ....W
Thornberry (D) ....W
Wilson (D) ....W

UTAH—Bosone (D) ....R
Granger (D) ....Z

VT.—Prouty (R) ....W

VA.—Abbitt (D) ....W
Burton (D) ....W
Fugate (D) ....W
Gary (D) ....W
Hardy (D) ....R
Harrison (D) X
Robeson (D) ....R
Smith (D) ....W
Stanley (D) ....W

WASH.—Holmes (R) ....R
Horan (R) ....W
Jackson (D) ....Z
Mack (R) ....W
Mitchell (D) ....R
Tollefson (R) ....R

W. VA.—Bailey (D) ....R
Burnside (D) ....R
Hedrick (D) ....R
Ramsay (D) ....A
Staggers (D) ....R

WISC.—Byrnes (R) ....W
Davis (R) ....W
Hull (R) ....R
Kersten (R) ....A
O'Konski (R) ....R
Murray (R) ....A
Smith (R) ....W
Van Pelt (R) ....A
Withrow (R) ....R
Zablocki (D) ....R

WYO.—Harrison (R) ..W

New Wage Board May Lift 10% Ceiling

THE NEW Wage Stabilization Board waded into a large backlog of work last week, with review of the 10% wage ceiling formula subject to possible early review.

The formula now permits wages to go up only 10% over the level Jan. 15, 1950.

Fifteen of the 18 new members representing the public, labor and industry—six each—were sworn in May 8 by Associate Supreme Court Justice Black.

Dr. George W. Taylor of the Univ. of Pennsylvania who headed the War Board during World War II, is WSB chairman.

After the ceremony, the board met in executive session to consider 1100 pending wage cases involving several million workers and to plan its over-all policy as to the best method of handling the big load. Cases have accumulated since Feb. 16 when labor members walked out of the old nine-man wage board.

First point on the board's agenda, according to Dr. Taylor, is a group of 50 cases and problems on which the board will initiate immediate action—with no top priority on any particular item. Some of these problems, he said, are vital to defense production.

Most of the cases present new policy questions which the former WSB had no authority to deal with. The new WSB has broader jurisdiction that the old board and may deal with both economic and non-economic problems.

MEMBERS of the new Wage Stabilization Board are sworn in by Supreme Court Associate Justice Hugo Black (left). Others in the photo include Dr. George W. Taylor of the Univ. of Pennsylvania, board chairman, and the members representing the CIO, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Vice Pres. John Livingston of the Auto Workers and Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers. Eleven hundred cases have piled up.

The new WSB has authority to handle problems involving union security, seniority, grievances and other contract matters not directly involving wages.

Business groups, particularly the National Association of Manufacturers, still oppose handling of non-wage disputes by the WSB.

Taylor voiced optimism about the board's workability. He said the board is "well balanced" and will "move ahead to perform the job entrusted to it." He said it will give the lie to the Communist ideology, which maintains there must be class war between management and labor.

"Our job is to solve problems," he pointed out. "Problems that arise between labor and management can be resolved."

To deal with the many cases, WSB divided them into categories and then began appointing public members to head special tripartite panels to make studies and recommendations.

LABOR AND industry as well as public will be represented on each panel. Their recommendations will not be final but will carry much weight, Taylor says.

Panel members will have the authority to make recommendations of wage increases which exceed the 10% wage freeze.

The present 10% formula, contained in Regulation 6, continues to apply, Taylor said, but there is the probability of a review of the formula, because of rising prices to be shown by the Bureau of Labor Statistics' cost of living index of Apr. 15.

At its first meeting the new board decided to set up four public-labor-management panels to consider pay increases for packinghouse, construction, agriculture and railroad workers.

Dr. Clark Kerr of the Univ. of California was chosen to head the panel that will consider the agreement of the CIO, AFL and independent packinghouse workers unions and the packers to increase the wages of 200,000 workers by 11c an hour.

Other panels are scheduled for textiles, atomic plants, shipbuilding, and aircraft.

All cases coming to the board for wage adjustments have been jointly submitted by the parties to the WSB for approval. None so far have been non-wage cases.

Other CIO cases pending before the WSB are:

Shipbuilding—The CIO Shipbuilding Workers' agreement with East, West and Gulf Coast yards for a wage increase of about 15% for 50,000 workers.

Textiles — The CIO Textile Workers' settlement with the New England manufacturers for hourly increases of 12c and 10c in woolen and cotton-rayon plants, respectively.

Aircraft—The 15c an hour pay increase agreed to by the CIO Auto Workers and the Fairchild Aircraft Corp., Hagerstown, Md.

Labor members of the new WSB are:

Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers, and Vice Pres. John Livingston of the Auto Workers—representing the CIO; and Pres. Harry Bates of the Bricklayers, Pres. William C. Birthright of the Barbers, and Vice Pres. Elmer Walker of the Machinists — representing the AFL.

A few hours before the WSB was sworn in, a special Salary Stabilization Board was created by Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston. It will handle pay boost problems of executives and administrative employes.

CIO Opens Fight For Stronger Defense Production Act

PRES. Philip Murray of the CIO last week called on all CIO affiliates to launch a "vigorous" drive to win a two-year extension and revision of the Defense Production Act—the country's basic anti-inflation law.

"In order to obtain improvements in the Defense Production Act to provide adequate protection against inflation," Murray declared, "there must be an immediate outpouring of expression by the American people to their Senators and Representatives.

"The cost of living is far too high.

"Continued inflation such as we have experienced since Korea will depress the standard of living of most of the American people while leaving virtually untouched the standards of luxury of a profiteering few."

Murray's letter was sent as the battle for effective control against inflation got under way in Congress. Both the Senate and House Banking Committees began hearings on amendments to the act, with government officials leading off.

First of the business groups to put in an appearance before the committees was the big beef boys, representing the cattle raisers.

Industry spokesmen bluntly warned that unless the government's 10% roll back on wholesale beef prices is repealed, little meat will be available for consumers in the near future.

"You can't have cheap dollars and cheap meat," was the claim made by Loren C. Bamert, president of the American National Cattlemen's Association and a big cattle raiser himself.

The beef lobby's arguments against present price controls on meat and the roll back on beef were so weak and ineffective that even their most enthusastic supporters in Congress showed concern.

"They failed woefully to make their case," said one of the industry's most powerful friends, Chairman Cooley (D., N. C.), of the House Agriculture Committee.

In his message to the CIO unions, Murray listed a nine-point program he said was necessary for economic stabilization:

1. Real price control, including the use of subsidies to control retail food prices.

2. Use of grade labelling and maintenance of quality standards, and the continuation of low priced lines.

3. Real rent control.

4. Fair credit regulations, including bank credit.

A GROUP OF CIO STEELWORKERS conferred with Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) in Washington as hearings on the extension and revision of the Defense Production Act started last week before the Senate Banking Committee. Each week, rank and file members from various CIO unions will come to the Capital to sit in on hearings before both House and Senate Banking Committees. Left to right, sitting: Albert Krywonos, District 31, Chicago, Ill.; Sen. Douglas; Jim Payne, District 35, Atlanta, Ga.; standing: Frank N. Hoffman, USA legislative director; John Connelly, District 15, Homestead, Pa.; and Hugh Carulla, District 11, Harrisburg, Pa. The CIO members will carry detailed reports to their local unions.

5. Expansion of production.

6. Regulation of commodity speculation.

7. Voluntary methods of civilian manpower utilization.

8. A fair tax law, including an adequate excess profits tax.

9. Fair and flexible wage stabilization and adjustment of disputes to supplement, not to do away with, free collective bargaining.

"Our duty, as union members and as good Americans," wrote Murray, "requires that we recognize the danger, the need for improvement of the Defense Production Act, for a fair tax law, and for further reform of administrative policies in the entire mobilization effort.

"THROUGH THE United Labor Policy Committee, we have made some progress in these reforms and in recommendation for new legislation.

"The American people have a long way to go to achieve the real equality of sacrifice that is essential to victory in the years ahead."

As both House and Senate committees began hearings on President Truman's request for extension of the act, Charles E. Wilson, director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, delivered an urgent appeal for adoption of the whole control program, including rent ceilings.

Wilson urged the approval of the subsidy powers that would permit direct payments to farmers on high-cost food and agricultural items.

A Big Battle Ahead

There's a big battle ahead for every American consumer.

Big business groups are mounting a major campaign to end price controls. The propaganda bugles are already blowing; the foot soldiers of the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce are fixing their bayonets for action.

What is the object of this great campaign by the business groups? Simply this: (1) to end all price controls; (2) to end the power of the Wage Stabilization Board to handle non-economic disputes that might otherwise affect defense production.

There's not much statesmanship in this campaign of the NAM-Chamber of Commerce leadership.

But there is a greedy desire to get more and more profits out of the American economy.

Americans don't need very long memories to recall what happened when big business was successful in scuttling price controls shortly after the end of World War II. Prices moved up faster than a businessman's blood pressure—and profits right along with them.

The same upside-down economists who told us in 1946 that the end of OPA would mean lower prices are now "assuring" the public that the abolition of price controls on June 30 would stop inflation. This is obvious tommyrot—sillier than most reactionary propaganda.

What is needed is a far better, much stronger Defense Production Act—a law with powers that will permit the government to hold prices down.

It behooves every union, every consumer group in the country to fight—right now—for a better Defense Production Act. As CIO Pres. Murray pointed out last week, continued inflation will depress the living standards of most of the American people. The only ones to benefit will be the "profiteering few."

You'd better write your Congressmen and Senators today. A 3c investment in U. S. postage may save you $300 on your food bill later on.

Which Ruffin Do You Hear?

Some presidents of the National Association of Manufacturers impress us as funnier than others. But Mr. William H. Ruffin, the NAM's current prexy, strikes us as a man whom NAM leaders of the future will find hard to beat.

Prexy Ruffin's latest crusade is directed at the power of the Wage Stabilization Board to make recommendations in disputes where such non-money issues as seniority, union security, grievances, etc., are involved.

The United Labor Policy Committee—representing CIO, AFL and the railway brotherhoods—successfully won for the wage board the power to handle such non-economic disputes, in order to guarantee a minimum of interruptions to defense production.

"I wonder if the United Labor Policy Committee really wants freedom," Prexy Ruffin pontificates. "The United Labor Policy Committee does not want honest collective bargaining."

You might gather, from these angry words, that Prexy Ruffin is the strongest advocate of collective bargaining anywhere in sight.

Yet Prexy Ruffin is also prexy of the Erwin Mills in North Carolina. And at the Erwin Mills, Prexy Ruffin "practises" collective bargaining so passionately that his employes—members of the CIO Textile Union—had to go out on strike for weeks in support of their moderate demands.

What we're saying is this: we wish NAM Prexy Ruffin would either practise what he preaches, or else just keep quiet.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV May 14, 1951 No. 20

What—No Pruning?

What ILO Is, What It Does

By David A. Morse, ILO Director-General

WORKERS, employers and governments share in making the decisions and shaping the policies of the Intl. Labor Organization.

The ILO is the specialized agency which works out international solutions of pressing labor and manpower problems.

Its aim is to help put peace on a solid base of social justice. It believes that poverty anywhere is a menace to prosperity everywhere.

David A. Morse

The representatives of management and labor who attend its meetings vote according to the wishes of the employer and worker organizations in their respective countries. They, together with the representatives of member governments, form the "tripartite" structure which makes the ILO different from all other intergovernmental agencies.

The ILO is the sole survivor among the intergovernmental bodies set up after World War I. It has more than 60 member-countries.

These countries have already given their approval to more than 60 Intl. Labor Conventions currently in force. These conventions are something like treaties but differ from treaties in one important way. They do not become mandatory in a country until its national legislature or ratifying authority has approved them. Up to the present time the member countries have deposited more than 1200 ratifications of conventions at ILO headquarters in Geneva.

Some of these ratified conventions call for freedom of association, an eight-hour day, improved working conditions aboard ship, protection of wages and holidays with pay.

Some of them forbid night work of women and young workers, employment of women underground in mines and forced labor.

ILO conferences also have adopted more than 85 official recommendations to governments. These do not require ratification. They, together with the conventions, help to round out the body of world labor standards which has become known as the International Labour Code.

ILO helps its member governments by sending advisory missions to guide them in the preparation of laws and establishment of social services, and technical assistance missions to the less developed regions to help with problems of industrial and agricultural development.

ILO sends missions of inquiry to investigate charges of substandard conditions and to give friendly expert advice on how to improve them.

Its field missions in Europe, South America and Asia are permanently available to help governments on problems of migration, manpower and training.

AT ITS PRINCIPAL working center in Geneva is conducted the year-round research on which are based its numerous studies and periodicals.

Under my leadership 600 members of the full-time staff at the ILO in Geneva and in its branch offices and missions throughout the world are constantly busy.

The Intl. Labour Conference, the supreme authority of the ILO, usually meets once a year. Each member country is represented by a national delegation consisting of two government representatives, one employer representative, one worker representative and their advisers.

The 32-member Governing Body is composed of the representatives of eight governments of chief industrial importance, eight smaller countries, eight employers and eight workers.

The ILO Constitution declares that "universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based upon social justice."

It proposes the following measures to reduce the injustice, hardship and privation which threaten peace:

Regulation of the hours of work, regulation of the labor supply, prevention of unemployment, an adequate living wage, protection against sickness and injury arising from employment, protection of women and children, equal remuneration for work of equal value, protection of foreign labor, vocational and technical education and freedom of association.

Watch Out For:

Fisher And Rudge— Strikebreakers, Inc.

THE LATE Pearl Bergoff, self styled "King of the Strikebreakers," may have been tops in his field during the early '30s—but compared to some of the slick "public relations package" dispensers of today he would be classed a piker.

Bergoff was a tough character. When he approached an employer and offered his "services," the owner of the plant or mill knew exactly the type of man with whom he was doing business. The gat and the lead pipe were his tools in trade.

Nowadays, if a company is having what is known in the trade as union trouble," it can call — for a price — on the streamlined services of a firm like Fisher & Rudge, Inc., of New York City. Offered for sale is "management consulting service in industrial, labor and community relations."

This sounds harmless, even imposing. The individuals who operate the firm, as described in an elaborate brochure, are made to sound imposing, too.

Here is a partial description of the two men who make up the firm of Fisher & Rudge, termed by one union official, "the Bergoffs of Park Ave."

- Austin M. Fisher—graduate of Wesleyan Univ. and an industrial engineer. He is listed as a consultant to the Committee on Christian Social Relations and is treasurer and a director of the New York State Committee for Equality in Education.

- His partner, Fred Rudge, is a graduate of Haverford College and Columbia Univ. He formerly ran a printing business which specialized in corporation annual reports "and other public relations brochures." Rudge is a public relations specialist.

The firm claims to represent approximately 60 firms throughout the country, among them being U. S. Tobacco, Bristol-Meyers, General Electric, Champion Sparkplug and Lever Bros.

A PARAGRAPH in the brochure headed "Union Relationships," contains an innocent sounding description of the nature of the services offered by Fisher and Rudge.

"Even in tense situations where strikes have been threatening or were actually under way," the statement reads, "unions have found our philosophies, advice and procedures such as to lead to greater mutual understanding and constructive labor peace."

Let's take a look at a typical case where the firm of Fisher & Rudge brought "constructive labor peace," to a strike bound plant.

Last year, the officials of the American Enka Corp. at Morristown, Tenn., decided to get rid of the CIO Textile Workers local, which represented the majority of its workers.

To assist in the undertaking, the company employed the firm of Fisher & Rudge to break a strike which had been called when the company rejected the union's proposals for a new contract.

Representatives of the firm carried out their assignments by recruiting of strikebreakers and creating incidents which brought on violence, and in turn led to the dispatch of a troop of state patrolmen and a company of National Guardsmen to Morristown.

In addition, the firm used a batch of public relations techniques to cloak the dirty work and make it look like "good community relations."

These, and other fear-creating techniques, broke the strike and Fisher & Rudge had for themselves a new, satisfied client.

The firm was also hired for anti-union work during the recent southern textile strike.

PLAN ICFTU CONFAB POSITIONS: Members of the CIO and AFL delegations to the worldwide conference of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Italy in July, met in New York last week to talk plans. Around the table: Martin Kyne, CIO Retail Wholesale Union; A. Philip Randolph, AFL; Luigi Antonini, AFL; Matthew Woll, AFL; Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO delegation; David Dubinsky, AFL; Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald, United Steelworkers; Director Michael Ross of the CIO Intl. Affairs Dept.; Serafino Romauldi, AFL; Anthony Andrea, AFL. CIO and AFL will each have 10-man delegations.

American Delegates To ICFTU Seek Strong Unions And Peace

AMERICAN delegates to the July convention of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions agreed last week to bring a joint two-point program before the world labor gathering.

Meeting in New York, representatives of the CIO and AFL delegations to the conference, which will be held in Milan, Italy, on July 4, declared:

"Our aims are two-fold—to protect and promote world peace without appeasement and to strengthen free trade unions in the struggle against totalitarianism whether Communist or Fascist."

The conference will be the second convention of the ICFTU and will bring together delegates from trade union movements in 60 countries with a total membership of 53 million members.

The CIO will be represented by a ten-man group headed by Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee.

The AFL group is of similar size and will be led by Matthew Woll, AFL vice-president.

In setting forth their goals for the meeting, the delegates voiced American labor's hope for cooperation with trade union movements in other countries and through the United Nations.

SUCH cooperation they said, can pave the way for highest living standards, improved social security and welfare programs, a general strengthening of democracy and the chance for maintaining world peace.

Their statement added:

"We believe that through the efforts of the ICFTU—which the American labor movement helped to organize almost two years ago —we will be able to strengthen democratic resistance to the Soviet imperialists, who are trying to subvert free trade unionism to Communist ends and to overthrow the independence and sovereignty of other peoples.

"We firmly believe that the ICFTU Congress in Milan, opening auspiciously on a memorable day in the world history, is one of the most formidable threats to the extension of Communist dictatorship.

"Where free trade unions are strong and alert and uncompromising with totalitarianism, neither Communism nor Fascism nor any other form of totalitarianism can thrive.

"We believe that a strong free world labor organization, as represented by the ICFTU, is the most effective weapon in defense of democracy and a most powerful barrier against totalitarianism.

"We pledge collectively here today, on behalf of our respective organizations, to strengthen the ICFTU in every manner possible so as to ensure the final triumph of democracy and peace over every brand of dictatorship."

In addition to Potofsky, the CIO delegation will include: Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union; Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO General Counsel; Allan S. Haywood, CIO Vice-President and Organization Director; Vice-Pres. Martin Kyne, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers Union; Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers; Secy-Treas. William Pollack of the Textile Workers Union; Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union; Victor Reuther, CIO representative in Europe; Director Michael Ross of the CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs; and Boyd Wilson of the Steelworkers.

Potofsky, Kyne, Ross and Wilson will leave for Europe in advance of other members of the group in order to attend a worldwide conference of the Intl. Labor Organization to be held at Geneva, Switzerland, starting June 6.

It will be the first time since 1946 that the CIO has taken part in ILO activities.

The ILO, originally created by the League of Nations, is now a subsidiary organization of the UN. The American delegation will consist of government, industry and labor representatives.

Union Aides Write Book On Labor's Many Jobs

TRADE unions have an infinite variety of activities, contrary to the popular belief that calling strikes and bargaining with management for more pay comprises the major part of union business.

What some of these many endeavors are and how they are carried out inside the union is the subject matter of a new book, "The House of Labor," edited by J. B. S. Hardman and Maurice F. Neufeld, and published by the Inter-Union Institute, Inc.

The book has 49 co-authors, most of them staff members and officers of outstanding American unions, both CIO and AFL. The others are academic and government specialists in various fields of interest to labor.

Crammed into this 555-page book is a lot of information on what unions are doing in politics, education, publicity and public relations, the labor press, health and community services, insurance programs and other "extra-curricular" activities.

The complicated problems of administering a union and the functions of the staff are explained in detail. Hardman calls "House of Labor" the "first full-sized, privately-produced book in which the 'union staff' dominates the writing."

CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll gives the history, structure, and functioning of the CIO's political arm, and George Wartenberg, editor of the CIO paper, Cincinnati Sun, tells how PAC functions locally.

National CIO Publicity Director Henry C. Fleisher takes an inventory of the labor press and examines its effectiveness, which he says "is based squarely on the health and vitality of the American labor movement itself."

Katherine Ellickson of the National CIO's research staff explains what labor gets out of cooperating with government agencies and Sol Barkin of the CIO Textile Workers describes the preparation of a case for a government board.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey writes of the diverse abilities that labor leaders and union staff members need today to do a good job, in contrast to the more simple demands made upon them during labor's early years.

He finds no justification for the fear of some of the "old-timers" still around that the labor movement may become "a bit panty-waisted" in developing its activities along so many lines.

Other CIO contributors to the book Joseph Glazer, Lawrence Levin, Leo Perlis, Nora Piore, Victor Reuther, Lawrence Rogin and Esther Peterson.

H. R.

The House of Labor, edited by J. B. S. Hardman and Maurice F. Neufeld; Prentice-Hall, 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y. Price, $7.65 (education discounts upon application).

Carey To Address ADA Parley

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey will be one of the principal speakers scheduled to address a conference sponsored by the Americans for Democratic Action in Washington May 18.

The meetings, called for the purpose of formulating a strong anti-inflation program to combat "dangerous complacency" regarding the nation's economic condition, will be attended by representatives of labor, church, civic, consumer and business groups.

Francis Biddle, ADA national chairman, declared his organization "is alarmed at the dangerous complacency in many influential quarters about the state of our country's economic health."

"The present plateau of prices is not, as the wishful thinkers considers it, an indication that the worst is over," he warned. "It is rather the lull before the storm which will break when the impact of defense spending hits the consumer market."

Intense Poverty Is Basis Of Asian Ferment

THE FERMENT going on in the Far East is far more than a sloughing off of the chains of colonialism and the heady after-effects of the first breaths of freedom.

It goes deeper than political emancipation: it is economic as well, and it is reflected in the determination of the great mass of workers to build strong unions that will help them to a rightful share of the vast wealth they produce.

That's the conclusion of Paul Schuler, CIO Textile Workers field representative in New Orleans, who has just returned to this country after spending nearly three months in the Philippines and Indonesia as a CIO special representative.

"The poverty in both countries is extreme," Schuler said. "In the Philippines, especially in Manilla, prices are higher than in the United States and wages incredibly low. In Indonesia prices are lower than either here or the Philippines, but wages are still lower.

"The people are friendly to the United States in the Philippines. But in Indonesia—and most of the rest of Asia—they're burned up about racial discrimination in this country.

"I had it thrown at me wherever I went. People in Indonesia wanted to know why the United States is saying it wants to help the colored people there, when in parts of the United States they won't let native American Negroes ride in the same railroad cars or eat in the same restaurants with them.

"THE BEST I could do was tell 'em that discrimination at home was like low wages in Indonesia. Most of the people in both countries don't want either, and are fighting them; someday we'll get rid of both of them."

In the Philippines Schuler found:

"The worst situation is on the Manila water front. Eight thousand longshoremen are registered for work. At the most, there are jobs for about 1800 of them on any one day. For years they have worked under the 'cabo' system—something like the padrone system which has been used for some types of labor, especially migrant farm labor, in this country.

"The employer hires the 'cabo' and pays him for the gang he recruits. The cabo in turns pays the men who do the actual longshore work. The possibilities for abuses of any system like this are numerous, and the 'cabos' usually took advantage of them."

The "cabo" system led to the formation of the independent Associated Workers Union, spearheaded by Rev. Walter J. Hogan, a Jesuit priest from Philadelphia who lives and works among the longshoremen. An affiliate of the Free Workers, its members have flatly refused to work under the 'cabo' system.

Its success was great enough to move the United Federation of Longshoring Workers (UOEF), the old-line waterfront union, to call upon its employers to end the system.

The Philippine labor movement is not strong, Schuler said. He estimated no more than 150,000 workers belong to all unions, including the CIO. But the high prices and low wages, plus the fantastic contrast between the lot of the wealthy and that of the worker, has given them a determination not yet reflected in their actual numbers.

"The slums are beyond comprehension," he said. "They're far worse than the worst Negro slums in New Orleans. Whole families live in one-room shacks made of tin walls, thatched roofs and dirt floors, with no windows. They sleep on mats and have no furniture."

The cost of living is about 12% higher than in the United States, he said, and wages less than half. The average longshoreman, when he works, earns eight pesos, or about $4 a day. Wages in a textile mill he visited ranged from a minimum of about two pesos to a top of about six pesos.

SCHULER attended a dinner given by Secy. of Labor Jose Figueras that led to a running newspaper fight with Congressman Tizon, chairman of the House Un-Philippine Affairs Committee. Tizon, at the dinner, described the extensive legislation his committee was preparing against Communists.

When Schuler was asked to speak, he bluntly told Tizon that if his committee spent half the time it was spending on anti-Red legislation in doing something about the appalling poverty and living conditions of the workers, its job would be much easier. It went on from there.

In Indonesia, Schuler found that in addition to the powerful SOBSI, there were a number of strong anti-Communists unions. The unaffiliated PERBUM, made up of oil workers at the Soconv-Vacuum and British Petroleum plants, has 60,000 members—the largest organized industry group. In addition there are the non-Commie POB, a central group; a central organization confined to Moslems, and several independent unions.

"The Moslem group has no great strength at the moment," he said, "but appears to be getting ready to do a thorough organizing job. Its chances of becoming strong are very good, as a large majority of the workers are Moslems."

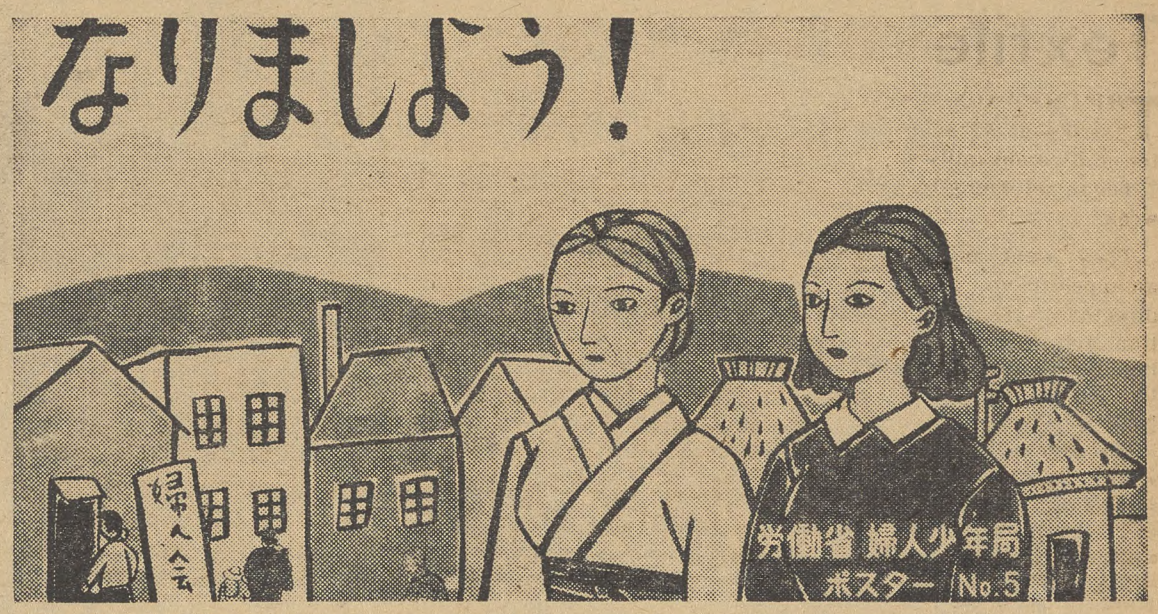
INDONESIAN workers said they had two main complaints: The wide fluctuation in the price of rice, the staple of life, and discrimination against the promotion of Indonesians in U. S.-owned plants (Goodyear and General Motors have operations there as well as Socony-Vacuum).

Schuler talked with the managements of American-owned plants in his investigation of anti-Indonesian discrimination in promotions and was able to straighten out several rankling situations.

The usual minimum wage—a recomendation, not a law—is two rupia a day, or 26.2c. Unionized oil workers get 11.55 rupia daily, including their rice, cost of living and housing allowances, and employes of the General Motors assembly plant at Jakarta (known as Batavia under the Netherlands regime) about the same. Schuler found a textile mill where loom fixers got 10 to 15 rupia a day—$1.30 to $1.96, compared to about $1.50 an hour in the United States.

A worker can get living quarters, such as they are, for about $5 a month. Rice costs 1.10 rupia a kilogram (2.2 lbs.). Sarongs—worn by every woman—range in price from about 20 rupia for a cheap one to 400 rupia for a hand-painted batik job.

"Things are so bad," said Schuler, "that even the beggars have their own union."



ONE OF THE POSTERS displayed throughout Japan during Women's Week. Only part of the words ars shown here, but the poster reads: "Lets Us Become Women Useful to Society."

Gladys Dickason On Japan Visit Lauds Women On Their Progress

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

GLADYS Dickason stood on the platform in front of the mike and looked out at a vast and strange audience.

Nearly 4000 Japanese women were crowded into Hibiya Hall in Tokyo that April day—it was Friday the 13th—and were waiting in deep, polite silence to hear her speak. Thousands of other women were milling around outside unable to get into the hall.

The occasion was one of the thousands of mass meetings being held all over Japan in celebration of Women's Week. On Tuesday of that week, Gladys had spoken at another big meeting in Kyoto as part of the Women's Week program.

Before that she had been seeing posters on Women's Week displayed on factory bulletin boards everywhere and had heard union committees in a number of plants report on their plans for Women's Week.

She had been impressed with the interest and zeal of the women, but the huge meeting in Tokyo was the most impressive.

MISS DICKASON, who is a vice-president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, went to Japan in March for six weeks at the invitation of SCAP (Supreme Command Allied Powers) as a consultant on problems of women in the labor movement. She had been in Japan about five weeks at the time of the Tokyo meeting.

Gladys brought greetings from CIO Pres. Philip Murray to the women of Japan, and gave an address which was translated into Japanese.

Murray's message expressed "particular pleasure to know that the trade union women of Japan are participating in the celebration of Women's Week."

He pointed out that "more than one million women union members in Japan have a great opportunity to help in bringing peace, freedom, and prosperity to a war-torn and war-threatened world."

In her speech Gladys said that women's suffrage should have bememoration of the granting of "in four short years the comcome an institution.

"The significance of the celebration of Women's Week does not lie in this one meeting in Hibiya Hall, nor in all the meetings in Tokyo, nor even in this prefecture, but in the thousands of meetings that are being held throughout the country.

"These meetings could not be held if they did not answer a need of the women of Japan. They represent a recognition by the women of Japan of the great gains which they have made through the Constitution, the Labor Standards Law, the Trade Union Law, and the many other laws which have benefited women in all walks of life in Japan."

Gladys told the Tokyo meeting of speaking at a meeting of the All-Japan Dormitory Self-Government Committee convention held by the Zensen Textile Union in Kishiwade.

The alert faces of the several hundred young women who took part in that meeting, she said, made her think "of how great the change had been when the tens of thousands of people who live in dormitories could make their own rules instead of having them handed down by the employer."

(Around 80% of the half million women employed in Japanese textile factories live in dormitories attached to the enterprise. Before the country's defeat in the war, the women and girls in the textile industry lived under feudalistic conditions, with their lives strictly controlled both inside and outside the dormitories.)

Under the occupation, labor laws to protect these women workers are enforced by a corps of women factory inspectors, numbering 53 as of March 1949.

VICE-PRES. GLADYS DICKASON of the CIO Clothing Workers speaks to 4000 Japanese women at a Tokyo mass meeting in celebration of Women's Week, held each year to focus the attention of the nation on women's problems. More than a million women unionists took part in the celebration.

Ching Names Panel As Textile Strike Ends

THE CIO Textile Workers, on strike at 42 southern cotton and rayon mills since Apr. 1, began returning to work last week.

They went back following an appeal from Cyrus S. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, that the walkout be called off in the interest of "national safety and welfare."

The TWUA Policy Committee, meeting May 6, in Charlotte, N. C., recommended that the workers return to their jobs despite the apparent refusal of several major companies, notably Dan River Mills, to go along with Ching's offer of mediation.

THE LATTER, however, proceeded to appoint a three-man panel to consider the wage issues involved. He named Ray Nixon, CIO Rubber Workers southern regional director; Francis O. Clarkson, Charlotte attorney, who will be chairman, and Taylor R. Durham, secretary of the Southern Hosiery Manufactures Association, also of Charlotte.

In announcing appointment of the panel, Ching emphasized that its efforts would be limited to mediation only, and that it would have no fact finding or arbitration powers. Its primary function is to help the parties arrive at a settlement. It will not lay down any formula if the union and the companies failed to agree voluntarily.

Ching expressed a hope that the companies would change their minds about participating when they received direct word that the panel would not be authorized to recommend terms of a settlement.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said he expected the government to take "appropriate action" if the panel failed to function or failed to effect an agreement.

The Cone Mills Corp., Greensboro, N. C.; Fieldcrest Mills, Leaksville-Spray, N. C.; and the Erwin Mills at Durham, N. C., also were reported to have rejected the mediation plan. The Erwin company is headed by William H. Ruffin, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, who in speeches around the country has been calling for "genuine collective bargaining" and "the American way" in management-labor relations.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN could refer the dispute to the Wage Stabilization Board. He would have to base his certification on a finding that the dispute was substantially impeding the national defense effort.

The strike was called by TWUA in an effort to get a 12½c an hour wage increase and other benefits for the union's 40,000 members in the South. Such a boost would bring their wages up to the level of northern workers. The present average wage in the South is $1.21 an hour.

Union officials called on the Senate subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations to investigate what they term "the most glaring misuse of court injunctions in years" in Polk County, Ga., during the strike.

Robert S. Cahoon, TWUA southern legal representative, charges that every time the Bachman-Uxbridge Co., of Cedartown, or the A. D. Julliard Co., at Aragon, started a determined back-to-work movement with a view of resuming operations, a court order was the signal.

CAHOON POINTED out that the injunctions were issued without hearings, at which the union might be heard. He said the actual effect of the Aragon injunction was to prohibit any group of workers from meeting casually and talking about anything at all.

"No violence had occurred at either mill until 'incidents' were provoked by the employers or by individuals acting in their behalf," Cahoon declared. "Right after that the courts acted with amazing speed."

He termed the injunctions "as bad or worse than anything that happened before the Norris-LaGuardia Act was enacted."

Denmark's 4th Largest Union Is For Unskilled Women

THE ONLY UNION in the world made up exclusively of unskilled women workers has just celebrated its 50th birthday.

It's the Women Workers' Federation of Denmark. With 32,000 women in 90 locals, it is the fourth largest federation affiliated with the Danish Federation of Labor.

Its members work in the iron and metal, wireless, textile, rubber, match and canning industries, and do cleaning work.

The federation has come a long way since it signed its first contract in 1903, thanks to the firm solidarity of its membership and its wise leadership. It started with a loan of 100 kroner, or about $12. Today its members have a well-organized unemployment insurance plan, good contracts with reasonable wages, hours, and working conditions, and a modern, well-equipped headquarters.

One of the firms with which it has a contract is that of Jacob Holm & Son, a 157-year-old shipping and rope-making firm in the picturesque seaport of Christianshavn. All of the 260 women among the 660 employes are members. Among them is Mrs. Gerda Christiansen, who has worked for the firm for 43 years and is well aware of what the union has done.

"I STARTED in 1906," she said, "and in those days I earned just about 10 kroner a week (approximately $1.50). Now, I'm earning 12 times as much with shorter working hours.

"Our federation has been invaluable. The security it offers is of untold benefit. I only hope that the young people who are entering industry today will understand the many sacrifices which the pioneers had to make to build our strong trade unions."

The federation has two major goals at present: equal wages for equal work (they average about two-thirds of men's wages), upon which a good start has been made in textiles and tobacco; and more activity by its members and other Danish women in political and organizational work.

THE DAILY CALENDAR showing committee hearings in the Ohio House of Representatives in the Capitol at Columbus gets a close scrutiny from Cincinnati CIO'ers. Almost a thousand CIO members have visited the State House this year.

CIO'ers Visit Ohio Capitol, Spur Interest In Politics

By AL ZACK

OHIO CIO members are getting first-hand, up-to-date reports of the activities of their law-makers.

And they are getting these reports from fellow workers in the shops and factories, who have kept a personal eye on the Legislature.

It's part of a program of the Ohio CIO Council, designed to bring the legislative picture as it develops home to the grassroots.

Nearly a thousand CIO members, representing local unions in the biggest industrial centers and the smallest towns of the state, have pounded the lobbying beat in Columbus this year.

WEEK after week groups of CIO members, ranging from 25 to nearly 100, have gone to Columbus to see for themselves what's going on in the State House.

Back home, their reports have spurred wide-spread interest in this legislative session, and a new determination to do a better job of political action in the next election, they report to state CIO officials.

Typical of this new kind of CIO legislative activity was the trek of Cincinnati CIO members to Columbus a few weeks ago.

The delegates arrived five hours before the Legislature convened for its weekly session, and devoted that time to getting a thorough briefing on major legislative matters.

Ohio CIO representatives discussed pending legislation; told what had happened to important bills to date. The representatives also outlined the tugging and pulling going on between proponents and opponents and described the behind-the-scenes activities of big business lobbyists.

BEFORE the evening legislative session began, the Cincinnatians were in the House and Senate chambers, getting copies of pending bills.

They learned what Harold Baun, a Cincinnati Steelworker, called the "first hard lesson on lobbying: You spend much of your life waiting for legislators to put in an appearance."

As soon as Cincinnati members of the House and Senate arrived, they were greeted by CIO folks from their home town, who made dates for heart-to-heart talks with each member.

The delegates then sat in the galleries as the sessions got underway, making full notes of what they saw and heard. The following morning they were back to attend sessions of the Senate Commerce and Labor Committee, holding hearings on vital workmen's compensation measures.

That afternoon, the delegates again observed the legislative sessions and later conferred with individual law-makers.

"We told them, firmly but politely, how our members felt about some things like Unemployment Compensation and Workmen's Compensation and FEPC," William Martin of the Playthings and Jewelry Workers later reported. "We were pretty blunt about some bills that are absolutely anti-labor, like that little Taft-Hartley law."

SOME OF the legislators listened intently, some appeared bored and others were ready to pounce on every statement in an attempt to confuse the delegates, they reported later. "We kept careful notes on all this," said Auto Worker Joseph White. "When we get back home we're going to report in detail . . .

"And we're going to name names, too. Our people ought to know how their views are received by these men."

"What I liked most about the program," said Brewery Worker Steve Chevalier, executive secretary of the Greater Cincinnati CIO Council, "was that men and women right out of the shops were getting a personal view of legislative processes and legislative problems."

AND Walter Grainger, president of the Cincinnati CIO Council and a Clothing Worker, agreed, calling the program "PAC in action."

"We've got to make sure our members get a continuing report on what's going on up here in Columbus," he said. "One of the main jobs of PAC, it seems to me, is to report on real activities of law-makers."

Typical of the reaction of every group that has come to Columbus, was these unanimous recommendations of the Cincinnati group:

1. That better legislators be sent to Columbus . . . "and that means more PAC, not less."

2. That weekly visits by CIO rank-and-file be a regular part of every legislative session. "Maybe the legislators will do a better job if they know the eyes of the people are upon them."

THE PLEASANT GRINS on the faces of these CIO "lobbyists" from Cincinnati result from talking with a good friend. Holding a bill in his hands is State Sen. Charles J. Carney, Democrat from Youngstown, Ohio, who is a CIO Steelworker staff Representative. Ohio CIO rank and filers plan to attend each session.

A Negro Ball Player Needs Lots Of Guts

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

WHEN Branch Rickey, then owner of the Brooklyn Dodgers, announced in 1945 that Jackie Robinson, a Negro, had been signed to a Montreal contract, it created a minor sensation in the major leagues.

It was understood until then that it was perfectly all right for Negroes to participate in other professional sports such as basketball, football and boxing. But the great national pastime, baseball, by "gentlemen's" agreement, was strictly Jim Crow.

Jackie would undoubtedly have become a big leaguer long before Rickey brought him up to Brooklyn in 1947, had it not been for the lily white provision of baseball now extinct "unwritten law."

While it took a lot of courage for Rickey to defy the other club owners, it required infinitely more courage for Robinson to face not only his new teammates, but also the opposition, some of whom made no effort to conceal their hostility.

ROBINSON WAS like a ball player in chains that first year. He realized he had to be careful, for if he became involved in open dispute with another player, the incident could have led to a full fledged riot.

Before Rickey announced his decision to bring Jackie up to the Dodgers, he had a long talk with him in Montreal. He told him that there were better Negro players in the minors. But Robinson had been selected to be the first, he went on, because he had self-control and intelligence in addition to his ability.

Rickey declared that he had the stuff to succeed in the big leagues but warned him that the way would be rough.

"No matter what happens," he told Jackie, "don't lose your head, don't fight back—just close your ears, keep your eyes open and play the best kind of baseball you know how."

Even before Jackie arrived in Brooklyn, an incident occurred which indicated that Rickey's fears about the youth's future were well founded. Six of Jackie's teammates-to-be signed a petition protesting his joining the club. Rickey wasted little time in putting down the revolt. He called the six players together, told them what he thought of their manuever, and declared that Jackie was going to get his chance to play whether they liked it or not.

Jackie was careful to avoid getting into verbal battles with umpires during that first year.

"For a long time, I never said anything to them," he recalls "regardless of how many they missed."

IN HIS FIRST season, Jackie was hit nine times by pitched balls, mostly early in the season. The previous year, no National League player had been hit more than six times. It looked like a deliberate bean-ball campaign. Jackie took it in stride.

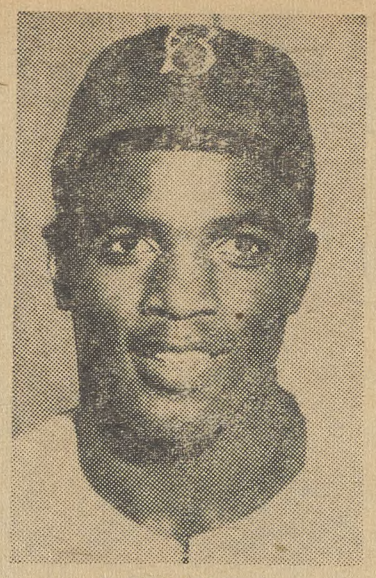
"I was hit so many times that first year that I was certain the pitchers were throwing at me," he relates. "But now I know they do the same thing to all rookies. They throw at them the first year to see if they can take it. If they can't, they're usually not back the next year."

Jackie came back the next year and the year after that and is still considered one of the best second basemen in the National League. He is also one of its most feared hitters. (He is currently batting around .400.)

What is more important, his exemplary conduct and sportsman-like behavior have paved the way for other Negro players who have followed him. Now, four years from the time Jackie first walked out to his position at Ebbets Field, 13 Negroes are playing on major league teams—nine in the National and four in the American League.

DURING THE current season, Jackie has had several run-ins with opposing players. The latest incident occurred during a recent series with the New York Giants. After Sal Maglie, Giant pitcher, threw several fast balls at Jackie's head, the latter deliberately dragged a bunt along the first base line. When Maglie ran over to field the ball, Jackie ran over him. Ford Frick, president of the National League, later termed the bean ball feud which has developed between the two teams "a very small mole hill."

Perhaps if Frick was down on the field every day ducking high hard ones, he would realize that it takes a lot of guts to stand up at the plate in the big leagues these days — especially if your skin is black.



Jackie Robinson
Brooklyn Dodgers Star

Labor Dearth Often Ended By FEPC

WITH THE demand for workers in defense areas becoming more critical, many city and state governments are passing their own Fair Employment Practices Commission Acts.

The most recent state to pass an FEPC law is Colorado.

Fourteen other states are carrying on campaigns: Arizona, California, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, Ohio, West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

Ten states already have FEPC laws: New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Washington, Oregon, Rhode Island, New Mexico and Colorado, and eight cities have their own local FEPCs. Indiana and Wisconsin have such laws but no machinery to carry them out.

In Connecticut, the Connecticut State Inter-racial Commission changed its name to the Connecticut Commission on Civil Rights, according to Rabbi Morris Silverman, its chairman. The commission administers the FEPC and Public Accommodation statutes.

"These laws prohibit discrimination because of race, religion, ancestry or national origin, in employment opportunities and in all public places, including public housing developments," Silverman said.

In some states Republicans, who for years have given lip service to Negroes, are being put on the spot in their FEPC votes.

A proposed FEPC law was killed in House committee in Michigan when two Republicans who had promised to vote for it failed to show up. Only five members were present, one voted against it. Five votes were needed.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will hold a conference of national organizations interested in FEPC in Washington May 22-23. Since the war in Korea began, the NAACP has urged President Truman to issue an executive order similar to President Roosevelt's "as an integral factor in the mobilization of manpower."

In Paducah, Ky., there are Negroes available for work at an atomic energy project. But they can't get jobs because of discrimination.

But in other areas with FEPC laws, labor shortages are met as job discrimination against Negroes is ended.

Clemency Plea Failed To Save McGee's Life

WILLIE McGEE of Mississippi is dead at the age of 36. Though once a soldier, he didn't die in battle.

He joined a long list of Negroes convicted of rape in the southern states and sentenced to execution.

No white man found guilty of the crime in Mississippi ever has received the death penalty.

McGee's case received worldwide attention since 1945 when he was first convicted by an all-white jury after a Laurel, Miss., woman, Mrs. Troy Hawkins, claimed he raped her.

McGee had three trials, all resulting in convictions. The Supreme Court three times refused to review the case. His execution date had been postponed six times before he finally went to the electric chair on May 8.

CIO leaders and other liberal groups had asked Mississippi's Gov. Fielding L. Wright to commute the death sentence meted out to McGee.

The Communist Party had sought to turn the case into a major propaganda campaign.

Pointing out how the Communists use injustice in racial matters as weapons in their propaganda war against democracy, Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers appealed two weeks ago to the Governor.

"Unmistakably, the granting of the petition for clemency will be a blow to Communist forces in America and abroad and deprive them of another weapon in the propaganda campaign against the free world," Reuther said.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey, who also sought commutation of the death sentence, said ". . . the American Communist Party, as part of the world conspiracy against the free countries, has made this case an effective vehicle for the misguidance of peoples of other races, particularly in the Far East, where the Communists are determined to make race a major issue in world politics."

THURMOND MARSHALL, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, wired Wright:

"From our investigation, it is apparent that whereas laws of Mississippi provide for death penalty in rape cases, the death penalty is in fact only given to Negroes.

"This unequal application of Mississippi laws is not in keeping with American idea of equal justice vouchsafed by our Constitution."

Any Reference To Truth An Error: Red Press Rule

THE ALLEGED free press of the Soviet satellite countries often comes up with gems like these, according to the Upsidedownia Dept. of the Intl. Conference of Free Trade Unions' publication Spotlight, a monthly recounting of life behind the iron curtain:

"In our country a permanent end has been made to poverty and unemployment.

"Soviet sailors returning from foreign voyages relate that in England crowds of emaciated, hungry people come to the Soviet ships every time and beg for bread.

"Having got their bread, the starving English whisper only one word of thanks: 'Stalin!'" (Sovietskaya Latvia, Dec. 12, 1950.)

* * *

"In Sweden and Holland unemployment and poverty rage. Sweden was not involved either in the first or second world war, but its economic situation is not enviable.

"Rows of men stand at the doors of shops in the streets of Gothenburg begging for bread . . . The capitalist government is incapable of providing the people with the most indispensible thing they require for existence—work." (Sovietskaya Latvia, Jan. 7, 1951.)

* * *

"In May of the following year (1945) the strategic war aim as set by Stalin, namely not only the defeat, but the complete liquidation of the Hitlerite army and the Nazi State, was attained. That was the historic service of the Soviet Army and the Soviet people.

"The leaders of the armed forces of the Western allies contributed very little to that historic achievement.

"On the contrary, their strategic aim was to preserve the remnants of the Hitlerite army and the reactionary German State as their future colony." (Lt. Col. Plonski writing in the Polish trade union paper Glos Pracy, on the 33rd anniversary of the Red Army, Feb. 25, 1951.)

"How's th' wife and kids, Al?" "Fine, Charlie, how's yours?"

Come Revolution (Chinese), Eat Rice And Like It

IT'S TOUGH enough for a teacher to make ends meet in this country, but in China, under the new "peoples'" regime, they're being paid off in rotten rice.

And when they squawked about it, they were indignantly bawled out by the Kaoyang Trade Union Council, in Hopei Province, by the county magistrate and by Communist Party authorities.

According to word received by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the teachers' complaint was not against being paid in rice instead of in cash, but against rice "which had fermented and clotted in little blocks, or had turned color and smelt of mildew."

The county magistrate—the representative of the central government—accused the Educational Workers Union of trying to stir up trouble. He just couldn't believe that the teachers were unwilling to accept the rotten rice. Apparently they're still getting it.

The moral, the ICFTU points out, is clear: Under a Communist regime a union cannot defend the economic interests of its members.

IUE Shuns Wage Bid Tied To Price Rise

A WESTINGHOUSE proposal that wage be lifted only if the company gets government permission for price increases was turned down as "unacceptable" last week by the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey said the company's offer for a 9c pay boost was "hedged with unacceptable qualifications."

The IUE's negotiating committee, Carey said, spent three full days of meetings to emphasize "how fantastic it was for a company which in 1950 made a net profit of $78,000,000—far and away the greatest in its history—to be seeking price 'relief' at the expense of the nation's consumers."

IUE-CIO, which represents some 50,000 Westinghouse's 60,000 workers, met with Westinghouse under a reopening clause after the union's conference board and locals drew up proposals.

THE IUE-CIO proposals included: (a) a 9c per hour raise retroactive to April 1, based on living costs and the recent GE escalator increase; (b) an employment security fund, to be established by Westinghouse, to minimize workers' hardships in transferring for defense work; (c) an increase in the pension minimum to $125 per month; (d) a profit-sharing plan; (e) a cost of living escalator; (f) a union shop.

The company offered a 9c wage increase, retroactive only to April 30, hedged as follows:

1. The 9c raise must be authorized by the Wage Stabilization Board before going into effect; 2. The increase would be denied unless Westinghouse was assured full price relief for the wage increase.

The union claims 5c of the raise can be put into effect without WSB approval.

The company added another qualification. If both the WSB approval and the price increase were not obtained on or before May 28, the wage increase would be retroactive only to a date four weeks prior to the day on which both approvals were obtained.

If approval were not received by Dec. 31, the wage increase would be automatically canceled, the company said.

THE COMPANY rejected all other demands, including a union shop. This rejection of the union shop was made despite the fact that the various Westinghouse locals have been voting by margins of from 80 to nearly 100% in favor of union shops in NLRB elections.

Carey said: "After three days, the Westinghouse officials made it clear that they were willing to let the company's adamant position disrupt the negotiations."

The union has notified the company it flatly rejects the counter-proposals and informed Westinghouse it is prepared to meet with management at any time to conclude an agreement "on the basis of the union's demands."

Javits Says Voters' Apathy Aids Crime

If as many people as are interested in the findings of the Senate Crime Investigating Committee went to the polls to vote—there might not be so much crime.

That's the opinion of Rep. Jacob Javits (R.N.Y.) who last week requested a hearing on his resolution (HR 89) for the appointment of a special committee to investigate why so many eligible Americans do not vote.

Javits wrote House Rules Committee Chairman Adolph Sabath (D. Ill.) that the report of the Crime Committee showed more widespread voting is the principal remedy for the conditions it uncovered.

Briggs Co. Is Finally Shamed Into Canceling Gang Pact

THE RECENT Senate Crime Investigating Committee and the CIO Auto Workers together have accomplished what the UAW alone has been vainly trying to do since 1946.

Between them they forced the Briggs Manufacturing Co. of Detroit to terminate its $100,000 a year scrap contract with Carl Renda, son-in-law of Sam Perrone, an underworld leader and convicted criminal.

Pres. W. Dean Robinson of the firm announced the contract's ending May 4. This was just after the Kefauver committee released a report detailing its investigation into tie-ins between Detroit industrial plants and gangster elements. It was more than a month after the UAW had demanded cancelation of the agreement because its real purpose is to buy underworld protection from the union.

In making the decision public, Robinson declared that "in order to avoid further controversy, instructions have been issued to discontinue the sale of any scrap material to the Carl Renda Co. immediately."

In the committee's report, Robinson and John A. Fry, president of the Detroit-Michigan Stove Works, were politely accused of lying in testimony concerning their relationship to gangsters.

The committee said its discovery that "some manufacturers have entered into and are today continuing business relationships with racketeers for the purpose of affecting their labor relationships" was the most important fact uncovered in Detroit.

THE REPORT strongly condemned the Renda-Briggs scrap contract and a similar contract between the stove works and Perrone.

Also cited in the report was the fact that six UAW members at the Briggs plant "were beaten in a most inhuman fashion by unknown persons in the year that followed the granting of the otherwise inexplicable Renda contract."

The UAW filed National Labor Relations Board charges of unfair labor practices against Briggs when the company delayed canceling its contract with Renda.

Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the UAW said he "was glad the Briggs company has ended its contract with Renda, thus confirming its commitment made to me early in March."

BURL PHARES
Glass Workers' New President

Glass Workers Elect Phares In Run-off

BURL PHARES defeated Joseph Froesch as international president of the CIO Glass Workers by a landslide vote in a run-off election held May 8.

A third candidate, Leon Bouchat, president of the union's Creighton, Pa., local, was eliminated at the regular referendum election held Apr. 10.

Phares, president of the union's District 2, Charleston, W. Va., received some 18,000 votes—to 8000 for Froesch. The official count had not been completed at press time.

Secy.-Treas. Lewis McCracken and Vice-Presidents Leland Beard and Ralph Reiser were re-elected to office Apr. 10.

Don Berger, Charleston, W. Va., was elected District 2 president to replace Phares, and presidents of the other four districts were re-elected. They are Willard Pelican, District 1, Brackenridge, Pa.; Henry Winger, District 3, Toledo, O.; Neil Brower, District 4. Festus, Mo.; and Herman Leiner, District 5, Buffalo, N. Y.

The union—full name of which is the Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers—has a membership of 30,000 workers employed in plate and window glass plants, mirror, ceramic and other allied branches of the glass industry. Union headquarters are at Columbus, O.

Bulk of the members work in plants of Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Libbey-Owens-Ford. Its largest local is made up of workers employed at LOF's big plant in Toledo, O.

CIO Woodworkers Sign 800 Pacts

The CIO Woodworkers have completed negotiations with more than 800 firms and employer groups in the Pacific Northwest and won a 12½c wage boost, three more paid holidays, and an improved vacation plan for 60,000 members.

Pres. J. E. Fadling said that application for the wage raise is being prepared for presentation to the Wage Stabilization Board and that "we have no doubt that it will be approved." New scales range from $1.55 to $1.62½ an hour minimum, depending on the area.

Court Lashes Trumpet, Anti-Union Sheet

"THE TRUMPET," the braying anti-union sheet southern employers have often used to fight unionization of their plants, has been stilled by the usually reactionary U. S. Circuit Court of Appeal at New Orleans.

The court in an unanimous decision upheld the National Labor Relations Board's finding that the Bibb Manufacturing Co., one of the South's bitterest anti-union employers, was guilty of coercing its employes when it distributed copies of "The Trumpet" among them during a CIO Textile Workers' organizing campaign.

The firm's headquarters is in Macon, Ga. Its mills are scattered throughout the State.

The decision came down five years after the TWUA began its organizing drive, which started in the spring of 1946. The decision said:

"It ('The Trumpet') dealt almost exclusively with current labor developments, and consistently attacked the organization activities of the CIO in southern textile mills." Certain issues of the publication threatened employes who favored the union with actual force and violence, and advocated the use of strong-arm methods against union organizers.

"IN SOME instances it threatened the employes with loss of their employment if they joined the union, and on other ocassions promised them increased benefits if the union were rejected . . .

"We are of opinion substantial evidence supports the board's findings that 'The Trumpet' contained coercive anti-union statements, and that respondent, by adopting and distributing that publication among its employes for the purpose of defeating their organizational activity, thereby violated Section 8 (1) of the (National Labor Relations) Act."

The court also upheld the board's order directing the company to stop interference with organization of its employes.

"The Trumpet" has been published since 1932 in Columbus, Ga., by a character who uses the name "Parson Jack." He is alleged to be a Baptist minister, and his real name is E. C. Johnston. He has been peddling hate around the South for some years, most of it directed against the CIO.

He also has a reputation for not paying his bills, as several suits filed in the courts attest. The paper, a weekly, hasn't been seen lately.

A sample quotation taken from copies distributed among Bibb employes:

"THE SOUTH will not take it any longer and it will be a mighty good idea for that gang to decide that we are not going to move one inch. We advise all organizers to close up their affairs, and get back to where they belong, and to those Southerners who have been hoodwinked by the wild offers of the CIO, money hungry yaps, you better mind what you are doing, for once the Southern people get awake, they get up and do something about it . . ." (Aug. 2, 1946.)

While the court found that the Bibb firm had broken the law insofar as use of the Trumpet is concerned, it applied its usual coat of whitewash to the company's other anti-union activities.

It upset the NLRB order to reinstate four employes discharged for union activity.

The Court also rejected the board's contention that Bibb was responsible for the anti-union activities of two other employes, one a foreman and the other the brother of an assistant superintendent.

And it held that the board erred in finding the company responsible for police surveillance of union organizers in Porterdale, Ga., a town the firm dominates completely.

Grogan Re-elected To Hoboken Post

John Grogan, president of the CIO Shipbuilders, last week was re-elected a city commissioner of Hoboken, N. J. Grogan, a member of the CIO executive board, had the support of the State CIO Political Action Committee. He polled the largest number of votes among the five successful candidates.

Soap-Selling Dirty Business, FTC Complaint Indicates

THE BIG THREE among the nation's soap manufacturers have been cited by the Federal Trade Commission on charges of violating anti-trust laws by illegal price discrimination and other monopolistic practices aimed at weakening competition.

The firms are Lever Bros., Procter & Gamble, and Colgate-Palmolive-Peet. They have been asked to appear before an FTC trial examiner in Washington June 18 to answer complaints containing earlier charges made by the federal agency, plus amendments broadening the monopoly issues.

Each firm is accused of charging certain customers—usually small businessmen—higher prices than are charged "competing customers who are generally larger customers."

FTC says they have been granting "rebates" to certain customers when price changes were being made. The rebates go to favored customers on products purchased but not resold before the new price goes into effect—usually at a lower price.

On another count in the complaint, the three firms are charged with having paid favored customers for advertising services and facilities without offering competing customers proportionate terms.

The agency reports that amounts paid to large purchasers for advertising "are grossly in excess of the cost of the advertising which they furnish, whereas purchasers of lesser quantities receive much lesser amounts in relation to the cost of the advertising they furnish."

Steelworkers Report:

$30 Million Paid In Hospital Benefits In Year

CIO PRES. Philip Murray had one of the busiest weeks of his busy career during the 1949 CIO convention at Cleveland.

As president of the striking Steelworkers, Murray—during the convention week—also negotiated a contract with Bethlehem Steel. The pact broke the solid front of the big companies against granting company-paid pensions and a social insurance program.

The agreement, Murray said, was "a great moral gain, a great material gain, for the Steelworkers. . . . I am proud of the Steelworkers."

The extent of that victory became more apparent last week with the issuance of the steel union's report on one major aspect of the settlement—hospital care.

Hospital plan includes semi-private room and meals or diet

THE UNION found that during the first year of the hospital insurance plan, 263,000 members, their wives and children received hospital benefits worth $30,136,000.

The Steelworkers and their families—a total of 2,484,000 persons—are covered either by the Blue Cross Plan, which actually pays the hospitals, or by commercial insurance companies which reimburse the individual.

"The report of the first year's experience under the hospital program," Murray said, "simply emphasizes the absolute need that has existed for such a plan and proves conclusively the union's position in 1949.

"The report shows that much good has come about under the union-industry hospital program, but the plan, obviously, needs improvement.

"An outlay of $30 million shows indeed that doctor, medical and hospital bills are beyond the budget of the ordinary workingman; that such bills, especially burdensome when illness is long, may mean financial ruin to a family.

"This particular study deals only with hospital benefits, but other studies are being made by the union on other phases of the social insurance program. As these studies are completed, they, too, will be made public."

In submitting data to help compile the report, Abraham Oseroff, vice president of the Hospital Service Association (Blue Cross), said that hospital bills paid by the plan ranged from a few dollars to more than $2200.

Under Blue Cross every Steelworker and every enrolled member of his family are entitled to 70 days' care for each stay in the hospital. Re-admission to the hospital within three months of a prior discharge is considered part of the original stay in computing the 70-day allowance.

But hospital care is just part of the 1949 agreement. The pension plan—which is entirely company-financed—provides a minimum of $100 month, including social security, at the age of 65 years after 25 years' service, and disability pensions after 15 years' service with a minimum of $60.

THE HOSPITAL program is part of the social insurance section of the agreement. The social insurance plan is jointly financed by the company and the worker. The worker's share is 2½c an hour.

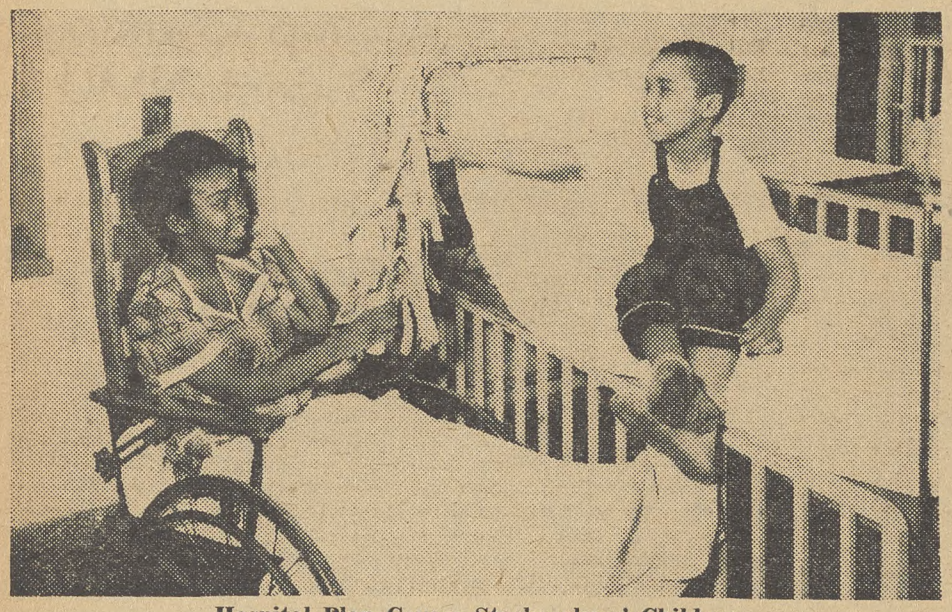
In addition to hospital benefits, the social insurance plan provides:

A life insurance policy averaging about $3000 to protect the worker's family during his employment.

A paid-up life insurance policy of from $1250 to $1500 upon the worker's retirement.

Payment of $26 for 26 weeks for illness or injuries not connected with work. (Industrial accidents or sickness are covered by workmen's compensation laws.)

All and all, the bitter 1949 strike is paying off handsomely for the Steelworkers.



Hospital Plan Covers Steelworkers' Children

Patient's Bills Paid in Full, Thanks to Hospital Plan

U. S. Labor Aid Pledged West German Unions

ORGANIZED American labor will not abandon free German trade unionists in their militant stand against Communist aggression, Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, told 500,000 Berlin workers at a giant May Day rally.

"You have given the whole world," he said, "the evidence so badly needed—evidence that the most effective answer to Stalinist aggression lies not in the negative and sterile anti-Communism of reactionaries, but in the determination of free men everywhere to make democracy work by translating democratic idealism into practical postive programs of social and economic action."

Reuther congratulated the German workers on their recent co-determination victory. He described it as "a powerful weapon . . . to establish greater democratic influence in the direction of industry, and a strategic weapon in your efforts to raise your standard of living."

The U. S. manufacturers who went to Germany to oppose co-determination — unsuccessfully— do not speak for the great mass of Americans, he said, adding:

"Nor do they express the desires of the American people who know that any action which strengthens the democratic trade union movement is a step forward on the road to social justice."

REP. JOHN KEE

Liberal West Virginia Democrat died May 8 while presiding over a closed meeting of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Italian Civic Employes Strike For More Pay

ANTI-COMMUNIST and Communist unions in Italy joined forces again last week to call a 24-hour strike of over a million state and government employes in protest against rejection of demands for wage increases and cost of living adjustments in their pay.

The walkout was termed 90% successful by the unions.

Most employes of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Presidency of the Council worked as usual, but absenteeism ran as high as 100% in some other departments. The strikers included teachers and professors in schools and colleges, who are paid by the Ministry of Education, and all mail carriers and telegraph operators.

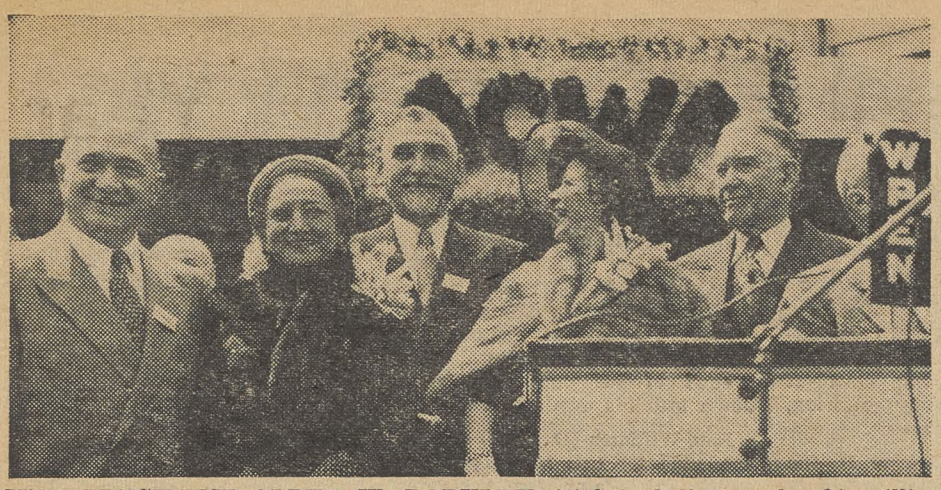
Train service on government-owned lines was interrupted only by half-hour stoppages ordered by the unions as an indication of solidarity with the strikers.

The day after the strike, on May 8, the Council of Ministers met to consider a bill aimed at restricting the right of government employes to strike. They adjourned without taking action.

4 New Types Of Jobs Go On 'Critical' List

The Dept. of Labor has added four types of jobs to the list of "critical" occupations which may make a worker eligible for deferment for military service.

They are commericial airplane navigator, metal spinner, ship fitter and farm operator.



VICE PRESIDENT ALBEN W. BARKLEY (right) dedicates the $1 million Sidney Hillman Health Center at Philadelphia. Left to right, Charles Weinstein, vice president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and manager of the Philadelphia Joint Board of the Union; Mrs. Bessie Hillman, ACWA vice president and widow of Sidney Hillman, former ACWA president; ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Mrs. Alben Barkley and Barkley.

A PARTIAL VIEW of the crowd that attended the dedication ceremonies at the Sidney Hillman Health Center is shown in this photo. The center, which is owned and operated by the Philadelphia Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers and the Philadelphia Clothing Manufacturers Association, will provide 25,000 ACWA members with free care in all branches of medicine and surgery. The center appears in the left background.

Veep Dedicates Philadelphia's Hillman Center

THE Sidney Hillman Medical Center was dedicated last week by Vice President Alben Barkley.

The hospital will provide free medical and diagnostic treatment, thus taking care of actual illnesses as well as catching cases before they develop into serious illness.

Charles Weinstein, Philadelphia joint board manager of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, said the medical center is the 10-year dream of the union. The idea of a medical center was conceived in 1946.

The Hillman Center cost $1.3 million and was paid for with funds accumulated through contributions from union members and payroll contributions from clothing, shirt and cotton garment manufacturers. It is named in honor of the first president of the Amalgamated, who died in 1946.

It is estimated $300,000 per year will be required to operate the center. This fund will be provided by contributions based on the payrolls of the members of the Philadelphia Clothing Manufacturers Association and its affiliates.

The two story building, made of steel and marble, covers 45,000 square feet. It is modern in design and equipment, using the latest medical equipment, including X-ray units and an electrocardiograph.

The center can handle between 200 and 250 workers daily, according to preliminary estimates. All members who come to the center receive a complete physical examination, including a blood study, chest X-ray, fluoroscopy, and cancer detection.

Air-conditioning is provided, and all consulting rooms are sound-proofed. There is also a large auditorium for lectures on preventive medicine.

The staff is composed of 40 of Philadelphia's leading specialists and general practitioners, and has an auxiliary staff of 15 technicians, nurses and secretaries.

Administration of the medical center will be by a 20-man board of trustees, with equal representation for union and employers.

Erection of the center marks a period of more than 20 years of peaceful bargaining between the manufacturing group and its workers.

At the dedication ceremonies, Vice-Pres. Barkley said the medical center symbolizes a "cooperative element between management and labor . . . that will glorify the American ideal and fortify our barricades against an infusion of the Communist ideal among the people of America."

Also speaking at the event was ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky.

Sidney Hillman Health Center was dedicated recently in New York. It provides members of locals of the New York Joint Board, ACWA with free medical services.

Schoolbell Rings For Organizers

The first of a series of schools for CIO organizers in the South is being held this week at the Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn.

About 25 organizers from seven states are receiving training in modern organizing techniques, Wage Stabilization Board procedures, Taft-Hartley Act blocks to organization, injunctions, publicity, visual education facilities and union association with community groups.

The program is sponsored by the CIO Organizing Committee, CIO organizing arm in the South. Lecturers include John V. Riffe, organizing committee director; Dr. George S. Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council; Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the CIO Education and Research Dept.; his associate director, George T. Guernsey, and members of CIO and organizing committee staffs.

30,000 Strike; Franco Cops Use Bullets

FIVE disgruntled Spanish workers striking against the high cost of living were shot down by civil guards on May 9 in the country's fourth such outbreak of recent weeks.

About 50 others were battered by the clubs of police who were trying to halt a parade of strikers to the palace of the civil governor in the industrial city of Pamplona, in the basque province, near the French border.

The shots were fired directly into the ranks of the marchers.

The battle was fought on the second day of the walkout. Some 30,000 workers made desperate by increasing prices and the failure of the Franco dictatorship to do anything effective about them or about black markets, stayed out despite official warnings of "grave sanctions" unless they returned to work.

The previous day the guardsmen had fired over the heads of the strikers to halt a demonstration. Several persons were injured by police clubs in sporadic fighting in different parts of the city.

Earlier on May 8 angry crowds stoned the food rationing office. Women invaded grocery stores and broke eggs, which have been selling at 43c a dozen in contrast to the ceiling price of 30c.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE WRITER, along with CIO Civil Defense Director Irving Abramson, Reg. Dir. August Scholle, CIO Community Service Reps. Robert Kenney and Leo Perlis, and CIO Rep. Philip Weightman, attended the Civil Defense Conference in Washington, presided over by Civil Defense Administrator Millard Caldwell. Civil defense is vital to the protection and preparedness of the American people. The tragic thing in the present Federal Civil Defense Administration's program is the failure to recognize labor as an integral part of the program. The Administration prefers to deal with labor representatives as individuals as the need arises. Administrator Caldwell and his associates fail to recognize that in case of a disaster, the need is for a well-organized, coordinated group to aid the workers in both city and plant. Organized labor knows what to do and how to do it. An organized approach is needed.

Allan Haywood

The CIO will continue to hold the scheduled civil defense conferences in Cleveland, on May 19 and 20, and in Chicago, beginning May 27.

In these uncertain times it pays to be prepared. We never know when our enemies will strike first. I pray that the day never comes that we have to apply the knowledge gained by our conferences. We must strive for a true peace. We must strive to maintain our democratic way of life. We must continue to render every cooperation to workers of other lands to obtain this end.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports that Local 1657, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee and the Univ. of Chicago signed a renewal contract. This contract, for the first time in the history of the union and the employer contains a check-off and other substantial benefits, strengthening the GCEOC-CIO structure and laying the basis for a firm, sound and healthy trade union affiliation. Negotiations were handled personally by GCEOC Vice-Chairman John Yancey, who did a masterful job in handling the situation. Both he and the officers of the union are to be highly commended for bringing about this progressive step.

Reg. Dir. William Smith reports that in a representation election at the Ridge Fertilizer Co., Lake Wales, Fla., the CIO United Fertilizer Workers, LIU 1758, was victorious by a vote of 8 to 1.

THE BEST news of the week—Pres. Murray is well on the road to recovery from his recent illness.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in a union shop election at the Proctor Electric Co., Baltimore, Md., the workers voted in favor of the IUE-CIO by a vote of 123 to 14. Rep. Joseph England was in charge of the campaign.

William Donovan, director of District 28, USA-CIO, reports three union shop elections won in his district: Triplex Screw Co., Cleveland, eligible 273, for 217, against 7; Chandler & Price Co., Cleveland, eligible 252, for 154, against 47; and Cleveland Crane & Engineering Co., Wickliffe, O., eligible 352, for 242, against 71.

Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett of IUE-CIO reports the following representation election victories: Elliott Addressing Co., Cambridge, Mass., IUE 353, UE 21, no union 12; Gear Specialties Co., Chicago, IUE 92, UE 64, no union 1; Video Television, Red Bank, N. J., IUE 103, no union 58; Akeley Camera & Instrument Corp., New York, IUE 40, no union 4; Darling Manufacturing Co., Cincinnati, O., IUE 194, no union 7 (AFL withdrew).

Ship Owners Reject NMU Wage Plan

THE CIO NATIONAL Maritime Union opened negotiations for a new contract with the East and Gulf Coast steamship operators in New York last week.

The latter promptly rejected two of the union's four major proposals.

The meeting was exploratory in nature. It was the first between the NMU and the Committee for the Companies and Agents—Atlantic and Gulf Coasts, which handles contract negotiations for some 40 steamship concerns.

Pres. Joseph Curran of the NMU said the union had asked a 25c an hour wage increase and a reduction to 40 hours of the work week at sea. The present work week is 48 hours, Curran said. The operators rejected both proposals.

Frank J. Taylor, chairman of the operators' committee, indicated his group might offer counter proposals at the next scheduled meeting on May 15.

Curran said he saw no reason why a new agreement could not be reached "in short order." He described the union's proposals as "reasonable" and added that if the shipowners would bargain in good faith there would be no need for any last minute deadline settlement.

The CIO Marine Engineers and American Radio Association have also scheduled meetings with Taylor's group. The former will meet the employers next week and the latter a week later.

Both unions have asked for wage increases, increased vacations and other benefits.

While MacArthur Gets Headlines . . .

Dixiegops Axe Fair Deal Projects

This is the first of a series of articles on some of the things that have been going on in Congress while public attention has been focused on President Truman's ouster of Gen. Douglas MacArthur. The second article will appear next week.

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE REACTIONARY Dixiegop coalition that runs Congress and the lobbies which pull the strings that make it work have been getting away with murder while the rest of the country has been concentrating on the MacArthur firing.

In committee and on the floor—especially in the House—the conservative pressure groups have been quietly socking it into the average American in a way that will have him screaming in anguish before long.

The big-money, tory Republicans and the Dixiecrats who make up the coalition may be split, so far as joint action on foreign affairs is concerned.

But they've been doing business at the same old stand on the pocketbooks of the workers, the farmers, and small business men and the housewives who make up the bulk of the country's population.

Some of it has been done under the guise of "economy." This is the well-worn battle-cry of such labor-baiting, anti-Fair Deal outfits as the Committee for Constitutional Government, Merwin K. Hart's National Economic Council, the National Committee to Limit Federal Taxing Powers and the other bellwethers of great wealth.

THESE GROUPS want a pipeline from the Treasury into the pockets of big business, but brand all aid to the great mass of Americans as "statism," "communism" and other unsavory names. The housing, oil, power and other lobbies have been having a field day.

By cutting appropriations for the year beginning July 1 in committee and on the floor, the House has managed to make a mockery of its own policies. By posing as custodian of the public purse, it has destroyed or damaged long-range programs in which the federal government already has made heavy investments.

The coalition has taken actions which may hamper defense production, cut down food production, cripple hospitals, leave the permanently disabled on the relief rolls, and do perhaps irreparable harm to some natural resources.

In its penny-pinching blindness it has blocked planned increases in the distribution of government-produced power, virtually thrown public housing out the window—and lots more.

At the same time the House Ways and Means Committee, where tax legislation originates, has decided to keep the 27½% depletion allowance by which natural gas and oil producers have ducked equitable taxation—thereby increasing YOUR taxes—voted to increase from 5% to 10% the depletion allowance on coal, and added eight new nonmetalic minerals to the list enjoying 15% exemptions.

Typical of congressional myopia is the action of the appropriations for the National Labor Relations Board and the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service—two agencies of the utmost importance in keeping industrial strife to a minimum at a time when the existence of the country may well depend on uninterrupted defense production.

After one committee cut $282,000 from the $8,252,000 asked by the NLRB, the House—at the behest of labor-hating Rep. Smith (D. Va.)—sliced it by another $300,000.

This means that at a time when expansion of demands on the NLRB seems logical, it will have to discharge perhaps 60 employes instead of hiring more.

In addition to clerks, typists, etc., it will have to get rid of examiners and attorneys in the regional offices whose day-to-day job is to keep unions and employers from each others throats.

Unions will find greater delays in NLRB cases as a result of House action.

On the other side of the coin, the Mediation and Conciliation Service appropriation was cut $200,000 in committee and another $97,300 on the floor on motion of Rep. Rees (R. Kan.).

This left the bureau with the same appropriation as last year. But last year Congress provided some funds to pay an expanded staff of conciliators. This year the House doesn't want to pay them.

They'll have to be fired—10 or 12 of them. And no more will be hired.

As a result, about 225 conciliators will have to carry the load that 238 are carrying now. If past experience is any criterion, that load will be greater.

Just before World War II, the service was involved in about 2000 disputes a year. At the wartime peak it got into 24,000 cases in a year. The total for the fiscal year 1951 will be about 16,000. One medium-size strike would wipe out the mis-named saving voted by Congress.

THIS IS bad enough. But it is made worse by a screwball amendment sponsored by Rep. Jensen (R. Ia.) and attached to appropriation bills for about a score of departments and agencies. It's simple enough. It just prohibits them from filling more than 25% of their job vacancies during the fiscal year.

Its effect—unless it is killed in joint conference with the Senate as it was last year—will be disastrous. Job turnover, normally high in government, is higher than ever now, with new agencies established almost daily.

Some time in the next fiscal year many government agencies may have to close up shop, because they won't have enough people to do the work. This is particularly true in field and regional offices, where one person may service a large area.

If a job falls vacant, three others must also become empty before it can be filled. Department and agency administrators say it will produce chaos rather than savings.

The Federal Security Agency really took it on the chin. The Dixiegops don't like Administrator Oscar Ewing. He's too liberal for them, and too strong a supporter of President Truman. So they hamstrung almost every branch of his operations—right down into his own office.

Rep. Williams (D. Miss.) was responsible for this bit of piddling politics. His amendment slashed $229,000 from the Administrator's fund to "cut down his propaganda for socialized medicine." Ewing hasn't been propagandizing for socialized medicine, as Williams knows.

Elsewhere in the FSA appropriation Rep. Keating (R. N. Y.) had $137,000 cut from Bureau of Public Assistance salaries and expenses. Effect: A dozen firings, 40 projected jobs unfilled, expanded programs cut back; serious cut in growing services to totally and permanently disabled Americans who will be deprived of government aid in rehabilitating themselves.

Public Health Service: Cut of $110,000, at the behest of Rep. Davis (D. Ga.). Effect: discharge of about a dozen scientists and physicians, commissioned officers, working on emergency sanitation programs. In case of bombing, they might well be worth their weight in gold.

The Jensen amendment does not apply to doctors, nurses, orderlies and three low-paid classifications of maintenance workers in the 26 Public Health-operated hospitals. But its effect could be to leave them without sufficient clerical and laboratory employes, dieticians, engineers, electricians, etc.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate & House Banking Comms. now holding hearings. CIO to testify in House May 21.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House Ways and Means Com. concluded hearings Mar. 19. Now studying proposals.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
Grain for India S. 872 H.R. 3791	Provides 2 million tons surplus grain for India, now facing serious famine.	Senate now debating S. 872, which provides half-loan, half-gift plan; House bill is on loan basis only.	Ask Senators and Representatives to provide grain for India on an outright gift basis.
Importation of Mexican Farm Labor S. 984 H.R. 3283	Provides for importation of cheap foreign labor; encourages extension of substandard conditions for both domestic and imported farm workers.	Senate passed Ellender bill (S. 984) which CIO opposed as too weak. House Agricultural Com. has approved measure.	Urge Senators and Representatives to oppose bills unless amended to provide fair labor standards for all migrant farm workers.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. House Com. on Interstate Commerce holding hearings.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

House Unit Adds Holes To Tax Law

THE HOUSE Ways and Means Committee voted tentatively last week to add more than $5 billion to the nation's tax bill.

On May 9 it approved an increase of almost $2 billion in individual income taxes. The next day it voted to boost corporation income taxes by more than $2 billion.

Individual income tax rates were increased three percentage points in all brackets. Under the present law the levy on incomes up to $2000 is 20%; it will go up to 23% if the committee's tentative action becomes final and is accepted in both houses of Congress.

The 22% levy on incomes from $2000 to $4000 will go to 25%, and so on up the line.

In dollars, increases will run from $6 for a single person earning $800 to $30,000 on an income of $1 million—both after exemptions and deductions.

The proposal was adopted by a vote of 13 to 12 after a Republican substitute to raise all taxes by a straight 10%, offered by Rep. Simpson (Pa.), was rejected by a straight party vote of 15 to 10.

On corporation incomes, the committee voted to add five percentage points to the present rates. These are now 25% on earnings of less than $25,000 and 47% on those above that amount.

THE INCREASE was approved by a straight party vote of 15 to 10 after a GOP proposal to make it three percentage points instead of five was turned down by the same margin.

No direct increase was made in the excess profits tax, but it will automatically rise from the present 77%—or 30 percentage points above the top rate on income—to 82%. Likewise, the ceiling on all taxes that a corporation would pay would go from 62% to 67%.

Both proposed taxes fall considerably short of what President Truman asked in his tax message to Congress.

He had recommended increases of four percentage points in the individual income rate to raise about $4 billion additional, and of eight points in the corporation rate to get about $3 billion in new taxes.

Effective dates for both increases will be determined later.

The committee had voted earlier to let the big oil and gas producers keep the key to the Treasury they have been using for some years.

It left unchanged the shameful 27½% depletion allowance by which they have been dodging taxes that have to be made up from the pockets of the people and other corporations—a loophole that accounts for the large number of oil and gas millionaires in the Southwest. The Treasury had recommended cutting the allowance to 15%.

At the same time the committee increased the depletion allowance on coal from 5 to 10%. Then it made a gift of a 15% depletion rate to producers of eight nonmetallic minerals.

It also gave a 5% depletion rate to producers of sand, gravel and similar materials.

The bill did put plugs in a few loopholes, too. One will no longer permit the expense of running a farm as a hobby to be charged against income from other sources.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 21, 1951 82 No. 21

Killing Controls Would Peril U.S., Administration Leaders Warn

(See Page 3)

CIO DELEGATIONS MEET THE SENATORS: On the Senate Office Building steps, delegations sent to Washington by CIO internationals to urge congressional support for a stronger Defense Production Act take time out to pose for the CIO NEWS photographer. With them are Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) and Sen. Moody (D. Mich.), pictured, respectively, at the right of the only woman delegate, Miss Tommie Ross, Alabama, representing the Communications Workers. (See story, page 3.)

WSB Is Slated To Pierce 10% Limit On Pay Hike

IT'S POSSIBLE the first major decision of the reconstituted Wage Stabilization Board will result in the piercing of the 10c wage increase formula.

Public members were reported last week in favor of approving a wage raise in the meat packing industry, even though it is more than 10% above the level of Jan. 15, 1950, set by the formula.

The six labor members already favor the increase.

Public members recognize that meat industry contracts contain no escalator clauses allowing increases as the cost of living jumps. But they say the result is the same, since both the unions and the packers agreed upon the increase.

Wholesale Beef Prices Jump 12c A Pound

As early as May 17, four days after the price rollback went into effect, The New York Times reported that the big packers and large wholesalers had already jumped beef wholesale prices an average of 12c a pound.

That means retailers, now unable to sell at higher prices, may be unable to continue to handle such meat on the open market.

The industry members were studying the proposal.

Some 200,000 packinghouse workers are involved. WSB approval would give them an 11c an hour increase. CIO, AFL and unaffiliated packinghouse unions and the packers already have agreed to the raise.

The unions argue that 9c of the increase is based on the rise in the cost of living since their previous increase in August, 1950. Other adjustments in the rate would give them about 2c more.

Clark Kerr, public member of the board, heads the panel that reviewed the case.

Non-wage agreements also were taken up by the WSB during its first two weeks of operation. It agreed to consider special treatment for companies that want to extend insurance and pension plans to new plants in different areas.

It also is considering a scheme to allow new plants to set up their own rate-range wage machinery in areas where a single rate for a job classification is customary. Neither problem came under the original Regulation 9, which covers wage rates in new plants.

The board told its staff that when reviewing cases involving construction projects, to consider the payment of prevailing federal construction wage scales.

The WSB also turned out a recommendation that can affect 80% of the country's agricultural workers. Farm workers who make under 95c an hour now can get an increase in pay, if employers agree, without WSB approval.

The board will permit increases for these workers up to the base rate for the summer of 1950, plus 10%.

The ruling clears the way for increases above the base rate plus 10% in areas where crops must be harvested immediately. It is considered a hurry-up measure which will be necessary during the next four or five months.

A special panel on agriculture, established before labor's return to the WSB, had reviewed farm wages.

THE CIO Paper Workers are awaiting action on an agreement with the Consolidated Paper Co., Monroe, Mich., for a raise up to the 10% limit. Locals 1000, 1004 and 1006 are involved.

The agreement, if approved by WSB, will not waive the locals' reopening rights on wages which fall due in August, after the board reconsiders the 10% formula.

Average straight time earnings in the Monroe mills are $2 per hour, highest in the U. S. paper manufacturing history.

Most of the one million CIO Auto Workers are due to get pay raises of 6 to 7c an hour effective June 1. Responsible are 2 to 3c under contract escalator clauses, and the 4-cent annual improvement factor.

The exact amount will be determined when the Bureau of Labor Statistics publishes its new Consumer Price Index figure, perhaps this week. The escalator clauses provide a rise of one cent for each advance of 1.14 points in the Index.

MEANWHILE WSB Chairman George W. Taylor told the House Banking Committee that wage stabilization doesn't mean "an absolute freeze."

The 10% formula of the WSB, he said, is "only one step in the direction of a unified program."

Taylor was testifying in connection with President Truman's proposals to extend and amend the Defense Production Act of 1950, due to expire June 30 unless Congress acts before then.

A rigid, inflexible wage freeze would hamper defense production, Taylor said. Rep. Cole (R. Kans.) said he thought the flexibility appeared to be "upward." Taylor answered that "I don't think our job is cutting wages . . . I think it is stabilization."

Taylor pointed out that the board lacks the authority to assert itself in disputes. The War Labor Board in World War II could act without regard for the wishes of the parties and if necessary could issue subpoenas.

Taylor said if present machinery doesn't work, it may be necessary to give the board "compulsive" powers. He indicated this is impossible under the law as it stands.

The WSB, he explained, can consider non-economic disputes only when:

1. The parties agree to present their agreements to the board and receive its "recommendations."

2. When the President sends a dispute to the board if he thinks national defense is involved. Even then the board can make only recommendations, not decisions.

Senate Unit: Labor's Demands 'Deeply Rooted In Democracy'

SIX DAYS after labor returned to the WSB on May 8, the Senate Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations gave its idea of the role labor should play in the mobilization set-up. The committee issued a report on its findings, saying:

"Labor's demand for participation in defense mobilization is not a power squabble, but an issue which is deeply rooted in the principles of wise public administration in a democracy."

The report says labor should participate in mobilization to serve major objectives:

- Help make policies which affect labor's 16 million members, plus unorganized workers.
- Help win public acceptance of mobilization policies by helping to administrate them.
- Help convey the facts of mobilization to its own members and to the general public.

It said labor should function at at all levels of the mobilization set-up, and be on advisory committees and in consultative posts.

"It is clear," the report read, "that recognition of interest groups is not only good democracy—it works, too."

Members of the committee are Chairman Humphrey (Minn.), and Sen. Neely (W. Va.), Sen. Douglas (Ill.) and Sen. Pastore (R. I.), Democrats; and Sen. Taft (O.), Sen. Morse (Ore.) and Sen. Ives (N. Y.), Republicans.

Taft added "supplemental comments" in which he said the subcommittee was trying to divide people into classes.

With the Senate report in, the House Labor Committee last week decided to set up an 18-man subcommittee (there are 25 members of the full committee) to look at the problem of wage board handling of non-economic disputes.

Heading the sub-committee is Rep. Wingate Lucas (D. Tex.), who has voted down the line against labor on a number of past issues.

THE committee will hold hearings on the matter, and representatives of business groups—which have strongly protested the lodging of power to make recommendations in non-economic disputes—will probably testify at length.

The WSB's power in non-economic disputes was granted to it by President Truman, after his top-ranking advisory committee on mobilization policy voted 12-4 in support of the unions' position.

Members of the Labor sub-committee are: Reps. Lucas (Tex.), Kelly (Pa.), Powell (N. Y.), Kennedy (Mass.), Bailey (W. Va.), Irving (Mo.), Perkins (Ky.), Packet (Ark.) and Greenwood (N. Y.), Democrats; and Reps. McConnell (Pa.), Gwinn (N. Y.), Smith (Kans.), Kearns (Pa.), Werdel (Calif.), Velde (Ill.), Potter (Mich.) and Berry (S. Dak.), Republicans.

'Irresponsible' Propaganda Of Beef Lobby Rapped

WHILE farm-bloc Congressmen were attempting to take the hide off Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle for his order rolling back beef prices, the CIO hit back at the big cattlemen's and meat packers' propaganda campaign to have the rollbacks rescinded.

Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, branded the cattlemen's attack as "irresponsible."

"The declaration of war by the big cattlemen and meat-packers against the Government's beef price control regulation represents an irresponsible attack on the program to combat inflation," said Rieve, who is also president of the CIO Textile Workers.

"The retail ceiling prices on beef that went into effect today are the first significant price control orders to directly effect the consuming public.

"If the OPS holds to its commitment, beef prices at the neighborhood butcher shop should be rolled back on Aug. 1 and again on Oct. 1.

"By autumn, beef should be selling at about 9c a pound below current prices.

"The big cattlemen's fight to decontrol beef prices places the entire stabilization program in jeopardy. Aligned with the cattlemen in this battle are the forces of profiteering and greed who seek to kill any hope of effectively holding the price line . . .

"The well-financed meat lobby in Washington is spending money lavishly in an effort to convince Congressmen and government administrators that it is evil to control meat prices. From the big cattlemen come threats of black markets in their attempt to coerce the government to follow their dictates.

"An examination of the OPS beef price regulation proves that it is fair and just.

"Beef prices at the time of the OPS order, were at 152% of parity —52% over the price that has been traditionally judged to be fair and equitable. The OPS aims to roll back beef prices to about 125% of parity by Oct. 1.

"Even after the roll-back, beef prices will still be some 25% above what has long been considered a fair price by the Department of Agriculture and the great farm organizations.

"IN ADDITION, fair profit margins are assured to the meat-packers and retailers.

"The OPS deserves the support of an alert citizenry in this fight to control meat prices.

"If the big cattlemen and meat-packers succeed in their fight against this eminently just attempt to control the cost of living, the entire price control program will be seriously damaged."

Bulletin

CIO Unit Wins Hancock Vote

The CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee won its first major victory when tabulations last week disclosed that agents of the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. picked it as their bargaining representative in a nationwide National Labor Relations Board election.

The CIO affiliate polled 3063 votes to 1499 for the United Insurance Agents of America, an offshoot of the old United Office & Professional Workers which was expelled from the CIO because of Communist domination. A total of 5293 valid votes was cast out of 6001 eligible, only 78 of them for no union.

FCC Lawyer Urges Revoking Licenses Of Biased Stations

BECAUSE THEIR owner forced his employes to slant news to conform to his bias, the licences of the three radio stations controlled by G. A. Richards should not be renewed, the Federal Communications Commission has been advised by its general counsel.

The stations are KMPC, Los Angeles; WGAR, Cleveland, and WJR, Detroit.

In two briefs just filed, FCC General Counsel Benedict P. Cottone charged that Richards instructed staff members to discriminate in news broadcasts against Democrats, including a number of administration officials, and Jews generally, as well as certain particular Jews or persons whom Richards believed to be Jewish.

Richards also insisted upon discrimination against other individuals whom he disliked, among them, the Roosevelt family, the CIO, John L. Lewis, Charles Chaplin and Clarence Dykstra, west coast educator.

At earlier hearings, Richards had argued that his stations were "fair and impartial." At the same time he challenged the authority of the FCC to "censor" his news programs.

One of Cottone's briefs was a motion "to expunge as scandalous, scurrilous, sham and frivolous" the evidence relating to newscasts that Richards had filed.

The three stations were used by Richards to advance his political, social and economic views, Cottone said.

Moral Is To Keep In Good Standing

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that employes who lose their union membership because of failure to pay dues on time may be lawfully discharged under a valid union shop contract.

A four-man majority of the board also ruled that a worker's offer to pay delinquent dues before he is actually expelled from union membership does not protect him from discharge. The ruling was made in a case involving the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers and the Chisholm-Ryder Co., Niagara Falls, N. Y.

The board found that the Taft-Hartley Act provides that, under a union shop agreement, a union may obtain discharge of an employe who is denied or loses union membership because of his failure to pay the required initiation fees and dues.

Administration To Congress:

Ending Controls Would Spell Disaster

By MILTON PLUMB

IF THE DRIVE by big business to remove controls from the defense economy is successful, the result will be national disaster.

That point was pounded home over and over again by Administration spokesmen in daily testimony last week at Congressional hearings to determine the fate of the Defense Production Act.

Cabinet officers and the heads of the several defense mobilization agencies were unanimous in urging that the continuation and revision of this law are essential to preserve our national economic life.

The Defense Production Act, enacted last September, is due to expire June 30 unless extended.

HEARINGS to determine the fate of this basic law governing wages, prices and other factors of our economy during the present emergency are being held before the Banking and Currency Committees of both the House and the Senate. They are expected to continue three more weeks.

Leaders of the CIO are scheduled to testify before the House group on May 21. They will be given two opportunities before the Senate committee on May 30 and June 4.

The United Labor Policy Committee—representing CIO, AFL and railway brotherhoods — has given strong support to the legislation. But the ULPC has coupled with it a demand for amendments to insure firm price and rent controls.

Labor also is insisting that American workers and small businessmen be given fairer treatment and a voice in its defense mobilization administration.

Although the law is the country's only weapon agains ruinous inflation, last week's hearing made clear that the American people again face a real battle against strong vested interests.

Many business groups are determined either to kill the act, or to emasculate it so that effective economic controls will be impossible.

Hordes of business lobbyists seeking to remove the control provisions and increase the "gravy" for those they represent have been at work in Washington for several weeks. Their efforts are proving dangerously effective.

Especially obvious was the angry pressure coming from Congressional stooges fronting for the strong cattle lobby. The cattlemen are furious over Price Stabilizer Mike DiSalle's order cutting back the price of beef by 10%, beginning May 14.

Through free entertainment and other lobbying techniques they have "convinced" a number of Congressmen on the committees that this order—the first important effort at price stabilization under the act—should be rescinded.

The effectiveness of their pressure was revealed by the tough opposition which DiSalle and other administrators encountered from some members of Congress.

Least subtle of all was the observation made by the chairman of the Senate group, Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), who told DiSalle that he doubted that a new bill could be enacted before the present one expires, and that the Administration will have "a very hard time getting a bill passed at all."

DiSalle replied: "Senator, I just can't believe that the Congress could have so little concern for the welfare of this country."

Maybank voiced belief that "there is very little interest" in the legislation, and remarked that his mail and other evidence of support for the program is very slight, compared with last fall.

Maybank characterized the public apathy as "surprising," and pointed out that there is considerable opposition in Congress to extending the act.

Union legislative representatives, who have been leading the battle in support of the President's request for a two-year extension, also have noticed the comparative inactivity of consumer organizations and other groups which should be immediately concerned.

Some observers attributed this apathy to a general failure on the part of the public to understand the seriousness of the need for their support.

The need for price and rent controls will be especially acute during the coming year, when the real inflationary pressures will begin. In a few months' time, the government will be spending money at the rate of nearly $1 billion a week on defense production.

Particularly noticeable last week was the absence of many Democratic Congressmen from their places at the committee table. That left the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition an opportunity to attack the President's program without proper reply.

To counteract this situation, the CIO Legislative Dept. has warned that "it is absolutely necessary that Senators and Representatives hear from the people back home in an increasing volume of protest against the continuing skyrocketing of prices and rents."

Letters, postcards, wires, petitions and resolutions to Senators and Representatives now appear to be essential if the law is to be extended and improved.

AMONG the Administration spokesmen who testified last week were Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston, Wage Stabilizer George W. Taylor, Munitions Board Chairman John D. Small, Secy. of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan, Secy. of the Interior Oscar Chapman, Secy. of Commerce Charles Sawyer, Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin and Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods.

All urged that Congress pass a stronger controls program.

Meanwhile, to lend support to the Administration's request, the first delegations of representatives from CIO international unions, and from State United Labor Policy Committees began to arrive in Washington. On the House side, at least, they secured immediate results.

Chairman Spence (D. Ky.) of the House Committee told the Kentucky United Labor Policy Committee delegation that he thought it was "absolutely essential" that the act be continued.

"I hope we can report a bill that will meet the approval of the American people and be just to labor," he added.

Pressure To Control Beef Prices? Lots Of It—From Mrs. Brannan

Efforts by congressmen fronting for cattle and business interests to smoke out a "conspiracy" of pressure behind the recent rollbacks in the prices of beef were effectively exploded by Secy. of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan before the House Committee on Banking and Currency last week.

Asked by Rep. Talle (R. Ia.) who had tried to influence him to cut the prices of beef, Brannan replied that he knew of no organized pressure put upon the Dept. of Agriculture.

"I must say, Congressman," he continued, "that I have been subjected to some pressure on this matter. I get it when I get home at night and Mrs. Brannan tells me about her budget difficulties with the high cost of meat."

Committee Chairman Spence (D. Ky.) took the occasion to comment: "I'll tell you who exerted the influence—the American people. They know nothing about ranches, for the most part. All they know is that beef is unreasonably high. I think they are entirely justified in demanding a full investigation."

Inflation Racket Hit By Carey

"Racketeers of inflation" were likened to the Frank Costellos and "Greasy Thumb" Guziks by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey in an address before the Anti-Inflation Conference of Americans for Democratic Action in Washington on May 18.

Carey said that they should be investigated by the Kefauver Senate Crime Committee.

"These racketeers of inflation who have been milking the public cannot protest that they are the victims of the slums, or lack education," he stated. "In many cases they are the most respectable, cultured citizens, graduates of our best colleges, members of our best clubs, pillars of the churches.

"Yet they have used the urgent necessities of our defense, the shortages to which we have been subject, to enrich themselves at the expense of the nation."

No-Strike Pledge Held Unneeded

There is no need for a no-strike, no-lockout pledge by labor and management "at this time," Chairman George W. Taylor of the Wage Stablization Board told a Senate Labor subcommittee on May 17.

Taylor said he wants to keep collective bargaining on a "voluntary" basis, and that such a pledge would require the government to set up an enforcement agency.

Earlier in the week, Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin told Congress that it should not attempt to spell out a detailed wage formula in legislation.

21,000 Urge Defense Act Alterations

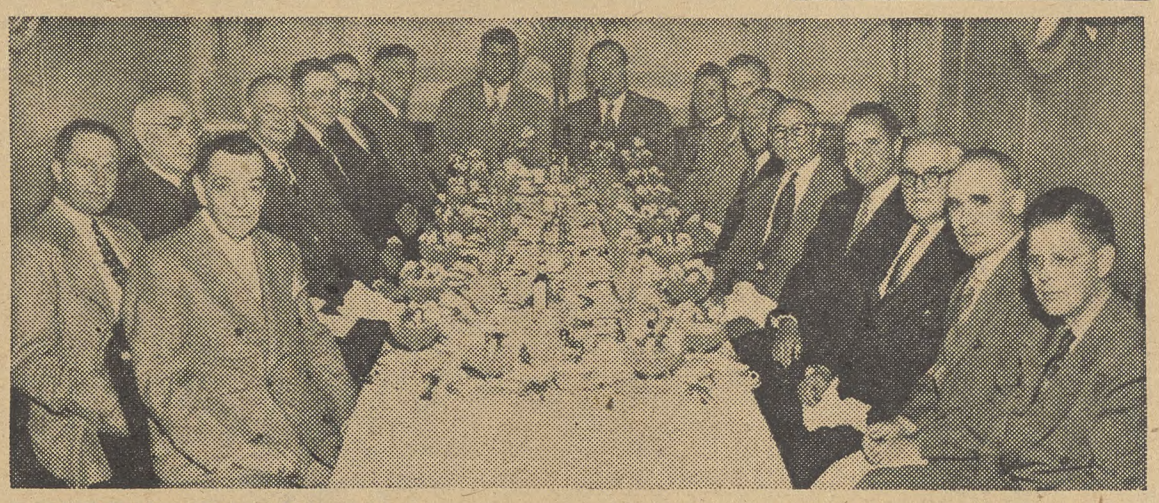
KENTUCKY'S Senators and Congressmen were informed last week of just how their constituents felt about the need of their support for amendments to the Defense Production Act.

Petitions signed by 21,000 Kentuckians, gathered in a four-day drive, were turned over to the congressional delegation by the Kentucky United Labor Policy Committee at a luncheon in the Capitol on May 15. The petitions requested extension of the Act, due to expire June 30, and revisions to provide stiffer enforcement.

The delegation from Kentucky was the first state-wide united labor group to visit Congressmen in support of labor's legislative program. They asked the government to establish tight price and rent controls, to assure adequate defense housing projects, and to provide effective representation of labor, agriculture, small business and independent groups on mobilization agencies.

Other demands were for a fair tax program "in accordance with the ability to pay" and a voluntary, cooperative solution to manpower problems.

The petitions will be forwarded to President Truman.



KENTUCKY SENATORS and Congressmen learn first-hand how the people in their State feel about the need to strengthen price and rent controls as they lunch with members of the Kentucky Labor Policy Committee at the Capitol on May 15. They are shown here with members of the committee, composed of representatives of the CIO, AFL and railway brotherhoods. At the far right end of the table, is Al Whitehouse, district director for the CIO United Steelworkers, who is president of the Kentucky CIO and chairman of the Kentucky United Labor Policy Committee. Other CIO members of the delegation were Fred Foss, secretary of the Kentucky CIO, and Henry Seibert of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. The group carried a petition calling for extension of controls.

Delegations From Unions Urge Controls

DELEGATES came to Washington last week from CIO international unions to demand continuance and strengthening of price and rent controls. Steel, Auto Workers and Communications Workers were represented. (See photograph, page 1.)

They arrived and joined CIO legislative representatives in the effort to stem the drive to kill such legislation.

The group from the United Auto Workers included the following UAW-PAC representatives: Willoughby Abner, Illinois; Eugene Souders, Ohio; Ed Purdy, Michigan; John O'Hara, Missouri; Dan Bedell, Indiana and Kentucky.

From the Communications Workers came Miss Iommie Ross, Alabama; E. C. Curran, Georgia; D. M. Deschilds, Virginia; C. O. Monford, Arkansas, and Lester Parker, Kansas.

The Steelworkers sent Gene DiCola, Pennsylvania; Gerald Conway, California; Morris Miller, Pennsylvania; Edwin Abbott, Maryland; William Moran, New York, and Jack Powell, Michigan.

They attended hearings of the House and Senate Banking and Currency Committees on the Defense Production Act.

Taxes For Equal Sacrifice

The House Ways and Means Committee—where all revenue bills get their start—has been working for months on a tax measure to help finance the cost of the defense program.

Sometimes the committee works in ways wonderful to behold.

It has, for instance, raised the annual tax on bowling alleys, billiard tables and pool tables from the old $20 rate to a new rate of $25. This will contribute an estimated million dollars to Uncle Sam's Treasury.

But while the committee has been giving close attention to billiard tables, other sources of taxation seem pretty well to be overlooked.

For instance, it refused to touch the 27½% depletion allowance through which the owners of rich oil and mineral properties get around much of their fair share of the tax burden.

The committee has been adding to the load of excise taxes, which the average consumer—already burdened with higher living costs—must pay for many of the near-necessities of every-day living.

On the other hand, the committee has paid little attention to proposals to place a greater share of the common burden on people in the higher income brackets.

The CIO pointed out, at its convention last year, that to restore tax equity between low income families on the one hand and wealthy families and corporations on the other, would produce "at least $10 billion" in revenue.

Before socking the consumer again, Congress would do well to pay some attention to this shocking lack of balance in the country's tax structure.

Ask Us Another

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce, which wants the repeal of price controls, has issued a new report on "Do Profits Cause High Prices?"

We can guess the Chamber's answer to that one.

But we wish they'd try another: "Do High Prices Cause High Profits?" The public relations boys of the Chamber might have more trouble with that.

Cats Out Of Bags

A little magazine that specializes in telling how rosy life purports to be behind the Iron Curtain has some interesting—and unintentional—disclosures about real life in Soviet Russia and the satellite "people's democracies."

For instance, there's an article about the super-efficiency of the Russian government-controlled labor unions. Though the article maintains that in Russia "the interests of the workers and management are one," some of the Russian comrades don't seem to realize it.

So the Russian workers gripe about a "soulless or bureaucratic attitude toward the needs of the working people" by both management and unions.

And the Russian fishery workers obviously have had a rough time trying to find decent living quarters. The Ministry of the Fishing Industry got a scolding for that situation, but the unions—judged by the standards of poor old capitalist America—obviously were something less than militant about the situation.

In fact, the Russian unions were criticized for trying to make a "family matter" out of the problem, in order not to "spoil relations" with the Ministry of Fishes.

Sounds like company unionism to us.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV May 21, 1951 No. 21

Meat Bawls!

'Steadfast Patience'

Following are excerpts from the testimony of General of the Army Omar Bradley concerning U. S. policy throughout the world:

By GEN. OMAR BRADLEY

THREE TIMES in the past five years the Kremlin-inspired imperialism has been thwarted by direct action.

In Berlin, Greece and Korea, the free nations have opposed Communist aggression with a different type of action. But each time the power of the United States has been called upon and we have become involved. Each incident has cost us money, resources and some lives.

But in each instance we have prevented the domination of one more area and the absorption of another source of manpower, raw materials and resources.

Korea, in spite of the importance of the engagement, must be looked upon with proper perspective. It is just one engagement, just one phase of this battle that we are having with the other power center in the world which opposes us and all we stand for. For five years this "guerrilla diplomacy" has been going on. In each of the actions in which we have participated to oppose this gangster conduct we have risked World War III. But each time we have used methods short of total war.

As costly as Berlin and Greece and Korea may be, they are less expensive than the vast destruction which would be inflicted upon all sides if a total war were to be precipitated.

I am under no illusion that our present strategy of using means short of total war to achieve our ends and oppose communism is a guarantee that a world war will not be thrust upon us. But a policy of patience and determination without provoking world war, while we improve our military power, is one which we believe we must continue to follow.

THE STRATEGIC alternative, enlargement of the war in Korea to include Red China, would probably delight the Kremlin more than anything else we could do. It would necessarily tie down additional forces—especially our sea power and our air power—while the Soviet Union would not be obliged to put a single man into the conflict.

Under present circumstances, we have recommended against enlarging the war. The course of action often described as a "limited war" with Red China would increase the risk we are taking by engaging too much of our power in an area that is not the critical strategic prize.

Red China is not the powerful nation seeking to dominate the world. Frankly, in the opinion of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, this strategy would involve us in the wrong war, at the wrong place, at the wrong time and with the wrong enemy.

* * *

Statements have been made that the President as Commander in Chief, and the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense, have a policy all their own, and that the Joint Chiefs of Staff have been overridden.

This is just not so. The Joints Chiefs of Staff have continually given their considered opinion—always from a military viewpoint—concerning our global capabilities and responsibilities and have recommended our present strategy in and for Korea. This has been the course of action which the Secretary of Defense and the Commander in Chief have adopted as far as practicable.

THERE ARE many critics who have been impatient with this strategy and who would like to call for a "showdown." From a purely military viewpoint, this is not desirable. We are not in the best military position to seek a showdown, even if it were the nation's desire to forfeit the chances for peace by precipitating a total war.

Undoubtedly, this statement will be misconstrued by some critics who will say, "Why are the Joints Chiefs of Staff advertising the fact that we are not militarily in a position to have a showdown?"

I would not be a proponent of any policy which would ignore the military facts and rush us headlong into a showdown before we are ready. It is true that this policy of armed resistance to aggression, which we pursue while we are getting stronger, often risks a world war. But so far we have taken these risks without disastrous results.

I think our global strategy is paying off and I see no reason to let impatience alter it in the Far East. Certainly the course of action we are pursuing has avoided a total war which could only bring death and destruction to millions of Americans, both in the United States and on the battlefield. Our present course of action has at the same time won us respect and admiration everywhere in the world, both inside and outside the Iron Curtain.

SGT. HUGH O'REILLY, former New York City bus driver and Omnibus Branch section officer of the CIO Transport Workers Union Local 100, is welcomed by a little Japanese orphan as he goes "home" to the orphanage at Osaka, Japan, on his first leave from the Korean front in seven months. Through O'Reilly's initiative the 27th Regiment adopted the orphanage two years ago. Led by his interest in the orphan tots, his regiment has raised $38,000 for its support.

FUNDS FOR THE OSAKA, Japan orphanage are being raised by Omnibus Branch of Local 100, CIO Transport Workers, in New York, in tribute to Sgt. Hugh O'Reilly, former member and section officer who saved it from closing its doors. The drive yielded $500 on "O'Reilly Orphan Fund Day." Here Martin Keaney (left), chairman of O'Reilly's old section and head of the drive, checks some of the receipts while Vice Pres. John Hamilton of Local 100 lists donors.

TWU Branch Joins Ex-Member In Aiding Japanese Orphans

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

THE OMNIBUS Branch of the CIO Transport Workers Local 100 in New York City recently conducted "O'Reilly Orphan Fund Day" in honor of a former member of the union, now serving with the 27th Infantry Regiment in Korea.

While in Japan, Sgt. Hugh O'Reilly and his buddies in the "Wolfhounds," the 27th Regiment of the 25th Infantry Division, adopted an orphanage in Osaka and saved it from folding.

The "Wolfhounds" raised sufficient money to stave off the landlord and kept the orphanage which housed 150 children from closing its doors.

Contributions from the men's mess rations and voluntary assistance from medical officers kept the project going for a time. Then the idea spread.

Now every pay day at the front in Korea, collections are made for the orphans. In two years a total of $38,000 has been donated.

Sufficient money has been raised to buy some new equipment for the orphanage.

His former fellow workers in New York learned of the project through newspaper stories and resolved to do their bit. So on "O'Reilly Orphan Fund Day" a check for $500 went to the sergeant and his buddies to help carry on the good work they had started.

Informed of his union's action, O'Reilly wrote TWU that the lesson he learned as a member of the union of the personal satisfaction from lending a helping hand to a fellow man was mainly responsible for the action taken in saving the orphanage.

"IT IS just like you fellows to jump to the aid of someone in need," O'Reilly wrote to the TWU. "I have seen it happen before."

"When I told the boys in my regiment what my old buddies back home in Omnibus had done, it really brought home to them the unity of purpose which binds Americans together wherever they may be."

The orphanage is now operated by Vincentian nuns on behalf of the "Wolfhounds." The mortgage on the property is now paid off, but the men in O'Reilly's regiment haven't forgotten their "children."

O'Reilly said the regiment has "a new plan now."

"We hope to start giving older boys and girls instructions in trades that will help them make a living.

"We need typewriters and business machines so we can teach the girls to be stenographers and secretaries and things like that, and we'll get them too."

How To Tell If You're A Good Union Member

YOU CAN find out how good a union member you are by scoring yourself on questionnaires made by the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations of the Univ. of Illinois.

The questionnaires are in two sets, the first to rate your union meetings and the second to help you judge yourself as a union member. The questions were prepared by Dr. Richard Murphy of the Univ. of Illinois.

The first set in 20 questions asks "Was It a Good Union Meeting?" The second set in 35 questions tests "How Good a Union Member Am I?" Sample, questions are "Did the meeting start on time?" and "Do I complain about the union at meetings rather than to outsiders?"

The questionnaires are intended to be helpful in determining why more members don't attend meetings and how to make meetings run better. They can be obtained free from the Editor, Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations, Univ. of Illinois, 704 South Sixth St., Champaign, Ill.

ORIT Inaugurates Radio Program

The Inter-American Regional Organization (ORIT) of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has inauguarated a bi-weekly radio program in Montevideo, Uruguay—practically at the gate of Peron-controlled Argentina.

The program is broadcast from Radio Station "El Espectador," CXA-19 at 7:45 P.M. Mondays and Thursdays, Uruguayan time. Ordinary short wave sets can receive it in practically every part of South America.

Subscribe Today!

Only through the CIO News can you get full, complete, reliable reporting on the news of the CIO—throughout the country, in Washington and overseas.

Subscription price is only $1 a year (bundle orders on request).

The CIO News
718 Jackson Place N.W.
Washington 7, D. C.

Enclosed find $1—and send me the CIO News for one year.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Fisher & Rudge Claims Called 'Outrageous' By CIO Leaders

TWO CIO leaders last week branded as "an outrageous piece of effrontry, with no foundation of fact," the claim by the New York management consultant firm of Fisher and Rudge, Inc., that its officers "stand in good repute" with their unions.

In a joint statement, Presidents Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers and Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers declared that the firm "has no reputation whatever with the auto union and a most obnoxious one with the textile workers."

"As a general proposition," the statement read, "we deplore the interference of any such 'consultants' in our relations with management.

"Even when they are well meaning, they clog the channels of communication between union and employer and make mutual understanding all but impossible.

"When, like Fisher and Rudge, their purpose is destruction of trade unionism, they insure ill will and industrial strife."

The statement reviewed TWUA experience with the firm during the strike at the American Enka Corp., Morristown, Tenn., last year. It accused Fisher and Rudge of conducting a "union-busting campaign of unparalleled viciousness" at the Dan River Mills, Danville, Va., during the recent southern textile strike.

Drive Set Up By Shoe Union

THE CIO Shoe Workers will shortly launch an intensified organizing drive beamed at the thousands of unorganized shoe workers in Pennsylvania and several other states.

The decision to step up organizational activities was made at the union's executive board meeting in Washington last week.

The board also approved a wage policy statement to apply in all cases where wage increases are negotiated. An attempt will be made to have a uniform wage reopening clause inserted in all contracts so demands may be made simultaneously.

All negotiating units will bargain for a 3% payroll contribution toward a health and welfare fund and improvements in existing health and life insurance benefits.

CIO GIFTS FOR GIs: Representatives of veterans' organizations look over contents of CIO packages for GIs in Korea. A thousand of the packages are being distributed by Catholic, Jewish and Protestant chaplains as a gift from the CIO Community Services Committee. The packages contain candy, cigarettes, cards and other items not usually found in Army rations. Examining the packages are: Charles Slayman, AMVETS; Joseph Feighner, Disabled American Veterans; Lou Pakiser, American Veterans Committee; Chairman Irving Abramson and Director Leo Perlis of the CIO Community Services Committee.

Education Group Fights Tory Book Censors

THE PUBLIC Education Association of New York has stepped into the battle against ultra-reactionary organizations which are trying to censor school textbooks and turn education into a tory monopoly.

The PEA has opened a campaign "to keep our schools free" with a charge that "front organizations, masked by high-sounding names, are directing a propaganda barrage" against the schools.

It named five such groups as being active in attacking modern or progressive education. They are:

The National Council for American Education, Friends of the Public Schools of America, Educational Reviewer, Sons of the American Revolution, and American Education Association.

The National Council for American Education, described as the "most notorious" among the five, was founded in 1949 by Allen Alderson Zoll, an isolationist neo-fascist whose pre-World War II outfit, American Patriots, Inc., is listed as "fascist and subversive" by the U. S. Attorney-General.

The Public Education Association has warned against confusing Zoll's National Council for American Education with the bona-fide American Council on Education or the National Education Association.

The Zoll group publishes a monthly newsletter, bulletins listing "Communist" affiliations of teachers at every level, and reviews of textbooks it condemns more often than not for what it calls "Communist" or "Socialist" influences.

The Public Education Association bulletin said the Friends of the Public Schools publishes a newsletter composed of "one diatribe after another, now anti-Catholic, now anti-federal aid for education, now anti-'progressive' education, but always savage."

The Educational Reviewer is not published by educators, but by the Conference of American Small Business Organizations, a fake front that purports to act for small business.

Congressional investigating committees have found CASBO reflects the selfish aims of big business. It specializes in finding "Communist," "Socialist" and "statist" propaganda in textbooks, and its definitions of these terms are very loose.

THE PUBLIC Education Association bulletin described SAR and AEA as "well-intentioned but misinformed."

"Cooperating closely," said the bulletin, "these agencies circulate each others' advertising and exchange mailing lists.

"Whenever they learn of a locality in which school issues are being hotly contested, they rush their materials to members of the board of education, to ministers, editors, leaders of patriotic organizations."

The association warned that school administrators must enlist the support of citizens in making policy unless they wish to be vulnerable to attack.

AT&T Claim Fools Public, Beirne Says

HAVE YOU been reading those little pamphlets enclosed with your telephone bill lately?

If you have, you've likely noticed the phone company's claim that the bulk of American Telephone and Telegraph stock is widely dispersed—that "no individual owns more than ½ of 1% of all AT&T stock."

President Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers calls statements like that "a shallow and cheap device to fool the public." And he tells why.

"Company figures show that 7.5% of the stockholders own over half the outstanding shares," he points out.

"Conversely, the remaining 92.5% of the shareholders combined don't even have a majority control of the company. The 7.5% minority are majority owners in this $11 billion enterprise."

He also criticized the company's claim that no one individual owns more than one-half of 1% of all AT&T stock.

"That's probably true," he says, "but certainly misleading. AT&T has 29 million shares outstanding. One half of 1% of 29 million shares is 145,000 shares. At present market prices, these would be worth about $22.5 million.

"The 30 largest stockholders collectively own 1,265,777 of the 29 million shares. These 30 holdings average 42,193 shares. This averages, at present market value, $6,539,915 for each of the 30 individuals.

"That's a pretty good sized holding of one company's stock for any individual to own."

Georgia College Torn Apart By Hate Group's Offer

LITTLE PIEDMONT College, Demorest, Ga., is being torn apart by an offer of a $500-a-month endowment by the hate-spreading Texas Education Association.

The Texas Education Association is the outfit that about two years ago offered $50 million to tiny Jefferson Military College, Natchez, Miss., if it would close its doors to all but white Christian students and teach a doctrine of white supremacy.

It is financed by George Armstrong, Texas oil and cattle millionaire, and is headed by Maj. Gen. George Van Horn Moseley. Moseley, retired from the army for many years, made an unenviable name for himself as a friend of pro-fascist groups in this country.

Piedmont College, tucked away up in the mountains of northeast Georgia in a community witl. less than 1000 population, hasn't made up its mind about the hate gift. The trustees probably will decide at a June 2 meeting.

Pres. James E. Walter has said "no strings are attached" to it, and Moseley has agreed Without committing himself openly, Walter has indicated he favors accepting it. But there is considerable opposition from the faculty of about 25, the 300 students and the alumni.

David Eddy, college treasurer, was ousted in March after he had denounced the endowment as evidence of "anti-democratic ideologies." Dean A. R. Van Cleave is also reported to have objected. As a result, his status "is being held in abeyance."

W. E. BOWEN, alumni president, also an opponent, was not offered renewal of his contract as an instructor in English. His offer to resign as head of the alumni association was rejected.

Piedmont College was founded in 1897 and is supported largely by the Congregational Church. Its purpose is to help mountain boys and girls get college educations.

Union Label Dance Held At College

No one had to ask "where's the union label?" at a recent union label campaign party on the American University campus, Washington, D. C.

The union label was everywhere. It showed up on enough bottles of soft drinks for a year's supply—one of the prizes. And it was on other prizes—a man's suit, hat and two pairs of shoes.

The union label campaign dance was sponsored by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the American University Student Chapter of the Society for the Advancement of Management.

Institute Isn't, FTC Charges

The Federal Trade Commission has charged the National Coaching Service Institute of Denver, Col., with misrepresentation in the sale of correspondence courses it claims prepare students for U. S. Civil Service examinations.

In fact, said the complaint, the coaching service is not an "institute in the accepted sense of the term." The FTC charged it with false advertising claims and making deceptive statements to prospective students—such as intimating that it is officially connected with the U. S. government

Soviet And Satellites Try To Legislate For World

THOSE RUSSIAN reefers must be terrific. Now the Soviet and its satellites are making laws covering the rest of the world as well as their own blood-stained dominions.

The idea is to scare the free peoples of Western Europe and Asia into submission and surrender. But by using a little imagination, it isn't hard to figure out what would happen in any corner of the free world should the Soviet take over and apply its "legislation" retroactively.

If an observer's imagination runs really wild and he assumes that Russia will seize the United States, the laws the Reds have already passed fix it so he can make a reservation in a concentration camp now for a mere 30c.

All one has to do is send three thin dimes to the Superintendent of Documents at the Government Printing Office in Washington and ask for Dept. of State Publication No. 4107, a 108-page, gray-covered booklet entitled "Confuse and Control: Soviet Techniques in Germany."

Among other interesting things, the booklet recalls that the East German "law for safeguarding peace," which became effective Dec. 16, 1950, specifically states that West Germans are bound by it. It says, in effect, that anyone in Germany who opposes the Communists or fails to cooperate with the party is a criminal.

"Those who understand the Soviet plan of conquest and oppose it know well enough that law or no law, our necks are forfeit if the Soviets ever catch us," the booklet continues.

"This pamphlet, for instance, is a criminal offense under a Soviet government, and anyone who can be proved to have read it will be punished if the Soviets should get control of the United States."

The Russians' aim is to let the West Germans know that if they oppose the Reds, they will pay for it in blood should the iron curtain be moved further westward.

THE BOOKLET details specific examples of the Soviet technique of confusion and terrorization in several fields, and relates some of the difficulties encountered by those West Germans who are trying sincerely to make their country a working democracy. German labor unions, it adds, "are the backbone of Western German resistance to Communist infiltration."

The publication leaves one with ungrudging admiration for the people of West Berlin.

Separated by a mere step from the Soviet zone, pounded day and night with propaganda, lies, threats, hypocrisy and confusion, the majority of them are still untouched — and gleefully seize upon every chance to needle the conquerors on the other side of the line with an irreverent sarcasm for which the Communists have found no defense.

Labor Encyclicals Have Same Foes As Unions

THE ANNIVERSARIES of the two great papal encyclicals on labor were observed May 15.

The day marked the 60th anniversary of the proclamation of "Rerum Novarum" by Pope Leo XIII, a bold demand for justice, charity and decency in economic affairs, and a counter-attack against Marxism and uncontrolled "free enterprise."

It was also the 20th anniversary of Pope Pius XI's "Quadragesimo Anno," a restatement of the teaching of the Catholic Church on economic affairs and an extension of the tenets laid down by his predecessor.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey spoke on the encyclicals in Toronto, Canada. James Cardinal McGuigan, Archbishop of Toronto, presided. More than 2300 persons attended.

CAREY RECOUNTED the development of the encyclicals and the conditions that led to them. He recalled the historic role of James Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore, in getting the modern labor movement off to a good start in the United States by refusing to denounce the Knights of Labor. After reviewing the teaching of the encyclicals, he said:

"I believe that the programs of our great labor organizations on this continent reflect the teachings of the papal encyclicals.

"Because of the neutral form of organization we follow as a rule in America, our philosophy is not openly identified as papal social teaching. Nevertheless, the logic and the reasoning of the natural and divine laws dominate the policies of our organizations.

"We have taken these documents seriously. Catholic workers, of course, have an added motive for looking to the encyclicals for guidance. But workers of every religious belief, or of no belief, recognize the logic and reasoning set forth by the papal teaching."

Both the labor movement and encyclical teaching have met resistance in high places, Carey recalled.

"Just as narrow men still persist in misinterpreting papal teaching," he said, "they also persist in misinterpreting our position.

"We do not believe in expropriating the private property of owners of capital. We only insist that they use that property to promote the common good.

"WE ARE not for socialization of all industry. We maintain, however, that when any industry attains a position where it exercises life and death control over the people, then it should be publicly owned and controlled.

"We likewise maintain that where private industry fails to meet the needs of the people the state must step in and meet those needs. We are encouraged by the fact that Pope Pius XI took precisely that same position on public ownership."

The Industry Council Plan which the CIO favored as far back as 1940, Carey said, is an approach to the organized vocational group held out as the ideal type of economic structure by Pope Pius XI.

Murray Says Workers Owe Debt To Popes

CIO Pres. Philip Murray was unable, because of his illness, to fill an engagement to speak at a Chicago observance of the anniversaries of the papal encyclicals sponsored by the Catholic Labor Alliance.

In a telegram, he told the alliance that "all the laboring men of America, and indeed of the world, owe a debt to the memory of the two great Popes." Secy.-Treas. Milton Murray of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee spoke in his place.

"The businessmen can thank the labor movement for saving capitalism in this country," said Bishop Bernard J. Sheil.

"Labor saved it from being overthrown, saved it from destroying itself from within, saved it by seeking and finding a middle way between rugged individualism and rugged collectivism."

PRES. EDWARD HASS of the Berks County, Pa., CIO Council presents a counseling certificate to Mrs. Marie Ruoff, member of the CIO Clothing Workers. She was one of sixteen members of CIO unions who received certificates on the completion of a six-week course. Left to right, seated, James B. Bamford, Community Chest director; Pres. Harry Boyer, Pennsylvania CIO Council, and Mrs. Ruoff; standing, Burris Latshaw, council secy.-treas.; Hass, and Theodore Bricker, chairman of the council's community services committee.

Big Biz Could Have Saved Worry; Bill To End Captive Audiences Dies

THE WISCONSIN CIO Council wasn't able to push a bill outlawing captive audiences through the State Legislature, but it gave big business a bad time.

And down in Searcy, Ark., Doc George C. Benson, president of Harding College probably gnawed at his fingernails until the Republican majority controlling the Assembly Labor Committee killed the measure outlawing his anti-labor "Freedom Forums."

Workers frequently have been compelled to attend the forums.

Five Republicans voted to inter it, one Republican and a Democrat to approve the bill.

The measure would have made it an unfair labor practice for employers to force their workers to attend lectures unless discussion is allowed.

At a hearing Assemblyman William Proxmire (D.), one of the sponsors, charged that employes "have been compelled and coerced to listen against their will."

"This bill," he explained, "would guarantee the fundamental freedom not to listen."

CIO LEADERS from the witness stand identified the following "reactionary Wisconsin corporations" as among those which have sponsored Freedom Forums:

Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., Milwaukee; Associated Industries of Oshkosh; J. I. Case Co., Racine; Cornell Wood Products Co., Milwaukee; Kohler Co., Kohler; Delfox Rug Co., Oshkosh; Madison Bus Co., Madison; Globe-Union, Inc., Milwaukee; Morgan Co., Oshkosh; Nordberg Co., Milwaukee, and Wisconsin Electric Co., Milwaukee.

Assemblyman Joseph Lourigan, the Republican Labor Committee member who voted to recommend the bill to the Assembly for passage, said that "the Freedom Forum does everything the Ku Klux Klan does except sell bedsheets."

William Abbott, legislative representative of the CIO Council, told the committee the forums were featured by "outright lies and distortions of facts," and that they violate the principles of collective bargaining by refusing to permit questions or replies.

"THE biggest bigots in America sit behind the scenes and plan to conquer not only labor, but all American principles," testified Charles Kieker of Steelworkers Local 1173, Milwaukee.

Charles Schultz, president of Auto Workers Local 248 at Allis-Chalmers, protested the injustice of company lectures at which the workers have to listen and cannot reply to company charges. A grievance against the stunt has been filed on behalf of a member of Local 248 with the Wisconsin Industrial Relations Review Board, he said.

NAACP Launches Two Attacks On Va. Segregation Laws

THE NATIONAL Association for the Advancement of Colored People has launched two attacks on Virginia segregation laws.

W. Lester Banks, executive secretary of the Virginia NAACP Conference, filed a motion in Pulaski County Court requesting that Negro children be admitted to the county's public schools.

He said Negro students are now required to ride 60 miles a day to receive an inferior education in an adjoining county because the three high schools in Pulaski County are restricted to whites. He also termed elementary school facilities in the latter county for Negro pupils "vastly inferior" to those provided for white students.

NAACP in 1947 filed the Pulaski suit in Federal District Court, which upheld the school board. The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the District Court's ruling and ruled against the school board.

In another Virginia action, NAACP filed a petition with Prince Edwards County officials seeking nonsegregated educational facilities for Negro high school students in the county. If county officials refuse to comply with the petition, it is expected that Negro students will file a suit.

In Columbia, S. C., the South Carolina Baptist Educational and Missionary convention went on record as opposing segregation in every form and called for the use of every means of legal redress to end the practice.

The stubborn resistance of the Univ. of Tennessee to admitting Negro students will be tested in the U. S. Supreme Court by NAACP attorneys, representing four Negro applicants.

A petition to the high courts was granted recently by Federal Judge Darr at Knoxville.

Welfare Needs Are Shunned As In World War II—Carey

THE COUNTRY'S welfare needs became a major problem that "was taken care of miserably" during the World War II defense period, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey reminded the National Conference of Social Work at Atlantic City, N. J., on May 15.

"Today," he continued, "I'm almost impelled to say: 'This is where we came in.'

"Just as in 1939 and 1940, defense conversion is starting to throw thousands of men and women out on the streets. In Philadelphia, we have had the spectacle recently of nearly 10,000 men and women in the electrical and television industry alone being laid off for varying lengths of time. Nearly 30,000 have been laid off throughout this industry.

"And once again there was no planning, although these changeovers could have been and undoubtedly were foreseen . . .

"As a matter of simple humanity and decency, we asked the employers in our industry to take precautions which would avoid such unemployment suffering as happened during 1939 and 1940.

"If they could not plan their production in that manner, then we proposed that—out of the enormous net profits they accumulated during and after the war—they pay their laid-off workers special conversion unemployment benefits. The profit-swollen manufacturers either ignored our appeal or lifted their hands in horror."

Panamanians In Canal Zone Hard Hit By Price Rises

By CONSTANCE BEESON

A REVOLUTION in the Republic of Panama brought about a quick change in the government—but the headlines do not tell of the plight of Panamianans working in the adjacent U. S.-controlled Canal Zone.

Their working and living conditions haven't changed much since 1903. They still are tied to the "Caribbean Wage Scale"—a system devised to meet prevailing rates of pay in neighboring countries at the turn of the century.

There are about 15,000 local rate workers employed on the canal and on the Panama Railroad. They work on the 10-mile wide strip of land leased by the U. S. Government from Panama, and are employed by the Panama Canal and chiefs of military operations in the zone.

In addition, 4600 native workers are employed by the Army, Navy and Air Corps in the zone.

THEY EXIST on a living standard set up for them in 1903. U. S. citizens get the prevailing U. S. rate plus a bonus of 25%, but they, too, are feeling the pinch of higher prices.

The CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee began organizing the Panamanian workers in March, 1950. Already 8000 of a potential 20,000 have joined the GCEOC.

In keeping with CIO President Philip Murray's pledge to wipe out insecurity and distress "everywhere in the realm of the United States," initial steps have been taken by Local 900, GCEOC, to get better conditions for the native workers.

John Yancey, GCEOC assistant director, reports that he, Anthony Federoff and Milton Murray, chairman and secretary-treasurer respectively of GCEOC recently conferred in Washington with Brig. Gen. Francis K. Newcomer, Governor of the Panama Canal. They seek fundamental improvements for the workers.

YANCEY in addition had a conference with Gen. Newcomer in the zone on wage increases and other benefits. No decisions have yet been announced. The Governor last March made an increase in native workers' pay of 5c boosting the minimum from 26c to 31c an hour.

The U. S. citizen working on the canal gets an average wage of $1.99 an hour. On the railroad he receives an average of $2.46 an hour.

A Panamanian working on the canal is paid an average of 53c an hour. If he is a railroad employe, his pay averages 45c an hour.

The avenues open to the CIO for bettering the lot of the native workers are strewn with obstacles and governmental red tape. Every major decision regarding the zone must be made in Washington, either by Congress, the President, or, under a recent law, by a board of directors. The natives have no representation in Congress.

In 1936 the U. S. signed a treaty with the republic in which it agreed to "maintain as its policy, the principles of equality of opportunity and treatment . . . as will assure to Panamanian citizens employed by the Canal or the Railroad, equality of treatment with employes who are citizens of the United States of America." But this agreement has not been fully observed.

Yancey said the present increase in the cost of living in the zone puts an added burden on the native workers. They already are at starvation wages, he reported.

The majority live in housing that is old, dilapidated and disease-ridden, and facilities are available to them only on a segregated basis. The Panamanians are mostly of West Indian origin. Latin American countries also are represented among the local workers.

The plight of the natives makes them ready for any system that could offer relief from poverty.

Living costs have skyrocketed in the zone so much this year that even the U. S. citizens are complaining. Government commissaries are charging the high prices in an attempt to raise money to pay for the costs of the government.

YANCEY SAID Public Law 841, which makes the canal company responsible for civil government, should be amended to provide for a civil government appropriation.

"It isn't fair," he said, "that the over-burdened workers should have that burden increased to provide for sustaining such an important defense project of the U. S. Government."

Panamanian Dictator Yields To Revolting People's Desire

The recent revolution in Panama was a victory for the great mass of citizens, according to John Yancey, vice-chairman of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

Yancey returned to this country last week after spending 10 days in Panama and the Canal Zone on GCEOC business.

"When Pres. Arnulfo Arias tried to take over as a dictator," he explained, "the people just closed up practically everything in the country with a general strike—transportation, communications, stores, business, even banks.

"Then they forced the real dictator of Panama, Col. Jose Antonio Remon, chief of the National Police and the 'Maker of Presidents,' to reverse himself. Remon had indicated his support of Arias when the President threw out the comparatively democratic 1946 Constitution and sought to restore the 1941 Constitution, which gave him virtually dictatorial powers.

"The people marched on Remon and demanded that he withdraw his support of Arias. He yielded to them, and Arias fell."

New Contract Yields 15c To Woodworkers

The CIO Woodworkers have signed their first contract with Timber Structures, at Peterborough, Ont., Canada.

It provides for a wage increase of 15c an hour, with 10c retroactive to April 30. The agreement also gives a week's vacation after six months, five paid holidays and an irrevocable checkoff.

MEMBERS OF A TEAM of German trade unionists are honored by CIO leaders at a luncheon in Washington. Left to right, seated, Werner Hansen, president of the North Rhine-Westphalia region of the German Trade Union Federation (DGB); CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Everhard Esser, vice president of the DGB chemical union; standing, left to right, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers. Other members of the team do not appear in this photo.

Filipino Union Thanks CIO For Help

THE INDEPENDENT union of Philippine Longshore Workers has expressed its thanks to CIO Pres. Philip Murray for work done in that country by Paul Schuler, CIO special representative.

Schuler has just returned to the United States after spending several weeks in the Philippines and Indonesia helping anti-Communists unions to affiliate in national confederations.

The report of the U. S. commission which studied conditions in the Philippines, headed by former Under-Secretary of the Treasury Daniel W. Bell, had recommended that U. S. unions assist Philippine workers to organize themselves properly.

"He (Schuler) did not think everything we did was right," the letter to Murray said. "When he thought we were wrong he told us so.

"But he was sympathetic, which is something we have not had in our troubles. We feel that he had a great effect in having us agree to give up the cabo system of payment in keeping with the Bell Report.

"For all of this, we thank you and express our friendship and brotherhood with the Industrial Congress of Organizations of the United States."

Japanese Teachers Win ICFTU Support

The Intl. Conferation of Free Trade Unions is squarely behind the demand of the Japanese teacher's union for repeal of restrictions on teachers' political activity.

So said J. H. Oldenbroek, ICFTU general secretary, after conferring with Akira Inamura and Takaoshi Oshika, of Japan's Teachers' Union. Japanese labor also has ICFTU backing in its demand for repeal of the ban and other anti-labor legislation.

LILLIAN HERSTEIN

Chicagoans To Honor Teacher

ARTHUR GOLDBERG, CIO general counsel will speak May 25 at a testimonial dinner in Chicago for Lillian Herstein, Chicago teacher long active in the labor movement of the Windy City. Goldberg was once a pupil of Miss Herstein.

The dinner will mark the retirement of Miss Herstein from Wilson Junior College, Chicago. For nearly 25 years she was the only woman member of the Chicago Federation of Labor (AFL). Principal speaker will be Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.)

Other speakers will include Pres. William A. Lee of the Chicago Federation of Labor (AFL) and Mrs. Helen B. Hubbard, a colleague of Miss Herstein at Wilson Junior College.

Miss Herstein has been an active member of the Chicago Teachers Union since its organization in 1937 and helped the Jewish Labor Committee in fighting religious and racial discrimination. She was an adviser on children to the U. S. and labor delegate to the Intl. Confederation of Labor in Geneva in 1937.

CIO World Affairs Pamphlet Revised

"Unionism cannot stop at the national boundaries," CIO Pres. Philip Murray says in the revised edition of the pamphlet "The CIO and World Affairs."

An up-to-the-minute summary of CIO policy statements on labor's position and role in international affairs, the pamphlet shows why American unions have become increasingly interested in world problems.

The pamphlet was published by the CIO Intl. Committee, whose chairman is Jacob S. Potofsky.

Copies of "The CIO and World Affairs" may be ordered from the CIO Publications Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington, D. C. Rates are 10c per copy, 50 for $4.50 and 100 for $8.

Michigan CIO Aide In Welfare Fund Post

Tom Downs, legislative representative for the Michigan CIO Council, was named CIO member of the admissions and budget committee of the United Health and Welfare Fund of Michigan. Thirty health and community service organizations are affiliated with the fund.

Trenton Six Trials: A Blot On Democracy's Shield?

The story of the Trenton Six is one of those American tragedies which crop up now and then in this country, despite our democratic principles.

No matter which part of this case you touch, you can uncover injustices to the poor and lowly.

The story of these six illiterate and underprivileged defendants unfolds a strange and terrible tale which springs from years of neglect of our migrant labor and years of discrimination against our Negro citizens.

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE TRENTON SIX have spent more than three years in jail and courts for a murder they say they did not commit. Left to right, front row, Collis English, James Thorpe and Horace Wilson; back row, Ralph Cooper, McKinley Forrest and John McKenzie.

A DINGY old red frame shack with a yellow store front just two blocks from the center of town is where it all started that cold winter morning in 1948.

The store is vacant now. The side windows facing on a narrow alleyway are boarded up with pieces of scrap lumber. Cardboard placed against the front window glass inside hides the interior.

An air of tragic defeat, misery and frustrated hope hangs over this tired old two-story building sagging on its foundations at 213 North Broad St., Trenton, N. J., and something sinister and evil too.

It is the kind of a place you might say looked like a fitting scene for a murder.

And that is just what it was.

Storekeeper Slain

Poor old William Horner, a second-hand furniture dealer, met his death there in the 72nd year of his life, on the morning of Jan. 27, 1948.

His common-law wife, Mrs. Elizabeth McGuire Horner, described later at the trial as a prim, proper appearing lady, was brutally struck from the rear and knocked unconscious in the front of the store. Her husband was attacked in the back room.

Mrs. Horner lived to tell the tale—several tales in fact, differing in important respects as time passed. But she did say repeatedly that she did not see who struck either her husband or herself.

If robbery was the motive of this murder, it was bungled. More than $1600 was said to have been found on old Mr. Horner after he was killed.

The scene now shifts to a small handsome oak-paneled courtroom on the fourth floor of a big gloomy stone building a few blocks down the same busy street on which the murder was committed.

In the County Courthouse, at South Broad and Market Streets, a trial of six Negroes charged with the murder of Mr. Horner is in progress. It is more than three years later.

This is the third trial for the Trenton Six. It has been going on for nearly three months with no prospect of an ending in sight. Behind the present trial and the earlier ones lies a story, on one side, of American democratic beliefs weakly betrayed, and on the other of a two-fisted fight to preserve them.

Tactics Questioned

During the week or 10 days following Horner's murder, a practical reign of terror fell upon the Negro sections of Trenton and surrounding areas. Frightened colored citizens were rounded up during day and night raids and questioned.

On Feb. 6, 1948, the first of the Trenton Six was arrested. The other five were arrested soon afterward.

Charges against police authorities for the way in which the defendants were arrested and questioned were later made an important part of the defense's case.

The men were brought to trial June 7, 1948, before Judge Charles P. Hutchinson, and a few weeks later all six were convicted and sentenced to be executed on Sept. 19.

The defense appealed, and on June 30, 1949, the State Supreme Court threw out the verdict, declaring that the defendants had not been given a fair trial. A retrial of the case was ordered.

With rumors of bungling and disagreements among the forces of law and order filling the air, the prosecution apparently sought to delay the new trial as long as possible, while scrambling to find new evidence.

It was nearly two years after the first verdict was overthrown before the second trial started last Feb. 5, before Judge Ralph J. Smalley. Before this trial got very far, however, Judge Smalley declared a mistrial when Prosecutor Mario Volpe was taken to the hospital for an appendectomy.

The third trial opened Mar. 5. After days of tedious questioning, a jury was chosen. Eight women and six men were selected to decide whether the Trenton Six should live or die. Perhaps the seriousness of their task was eclipsed somewhat by three weeks of gay leisure—which included dancing, playing cards and visits to Atlantic City.

The Judge had ruled that the jury should be kept out of the courtroom while the defense and prosecution argued heatedly over the question of admitting the "confessions" five of the defendants were reputed to have signed.

The Judge finally permitted three of the "confessions" to be read to the jury and ruled out two—those of James Thorpe and John McKenzie. Horace Wilson never signed any.

A surprise witness for the prosecution was George Washington English, father of Collis English, one of the defendants, and a man of low moral character with a prison record as a sex offender.

Refutes Testimony

One of the high dramatic moments of the recent trial sessions came when Mrs. Rubie English, former wife of George English, was wheeled into the courtroom in an invalid chair.

Her hands and feet in bandages from an infection, she gave testimony refuting her ex-husband's.

The defendants themselves—sometimes almost lost sight of in the social issues raised by such a trial as that of the Trenton Six—sit in a row on the left as you come in the door.

- First there's Ralph Cooper, a nice-looking man of 26, with dark deeply rippled hair and a Don Ameche mustache.

- Next to him sits Collis English, also 26, a Navy veteran with a thin brooding face and a tiny mustache. He was described by a colored doctor at the time of his arrest as an undersized, undernourished, depressed, confused and psychoneurotic man with a bad heart.

- McKinley Forrest is one of the two oldest of the six men. He's 38, and has a 12-year-old daughter, Jean, a thin, sober little girl who comes to the trial when not in school.

On one of her visits she brought tears to a lot of eyes in the courtroom by rushing over with a cry and grabbing her father by the hand as he was being led in by guards.

- John McKenzie, 27, has a round face, close cropped hair and wears a plain dark suit. A police guard testified that McKenzie had been put in solitary confinement—as was Forrest—for eight days because he became irrational.

Have Faith

- James Thorpe, also 27, has slightly oriental-looking eyes. His mother is dead and he lived with his grandparents, who go faithfully to the courtroom daily to see him.

They speak of "my boy" with great pride and affection. The grandfather, Thomas Thorpe, a fine-looking gray-haired man with a kind face and friendly manner, is always glad to explain how he knows his grandson was framed. The grandmother, Mrs. Suzanna Thorpe, if queried tells you firmly, "I know my boy never done it, because he was home with me that day."

- Sixth and last in the row as they sit in the courtroom is Horace Wilson, oldest of the defendants. He is now 40. Aside from being the most mature of the group, Wilson also has the distinction of being the only one who resisted all attempts to force him to sign a "confession."

It is hard to believe, watching this row of nicely dressed young men in their clean light-colored shirts and colorful ties, as they sit listening intently to the proceedings, that they are charged with committing a brutal murder.

They might be a group of colored YMCA members, or students from some Negro college—unless you know they are all illiterate.

Of course, they didn't always look like this. Relatives and friends helped them get spruced up.

Never Had A Chance

Only one or two of the Trenton Six can as much as painfully write his name. School opportunities were never part of their lives. They are migrant farm workers for the most part, or the sons of migrant Negro workers from the South, who went North and worked on some of New Jersey's fine vegetable farms.

Not long ago a commission appointed by President Truman made an extensive investigation of migrant labor and turned in a report exposing some of the terrible wrongs being committed against these essential workers who help harvest the fruit and vegetables that feed the nation.

The Trenton Six case can be held up as a star exhibit to illustrate the effects of callous neglect on migrant workers and their children, particularly Negroes.

Here are six young men who grew up in a country noted for its compulsory free education, living in the capital city of a wealthy state only a few miles from one of the cultural centers of the nation—Princeton University—and they have never been taught to read or write.

AN IMPOSING ARRAY of lawyers fights to prove the innocence of the Trenton Six. Left to right, Clifford Moore, Trenton; Raymond Pace Alexander (seated), NAACP, Philadelphia; Frank Katzenbach III, Trenton; Arthur Garfield Hays (seated), American Civil Liberties Union, New York; J. M. Burrell, Newark, and George Pelletieri.

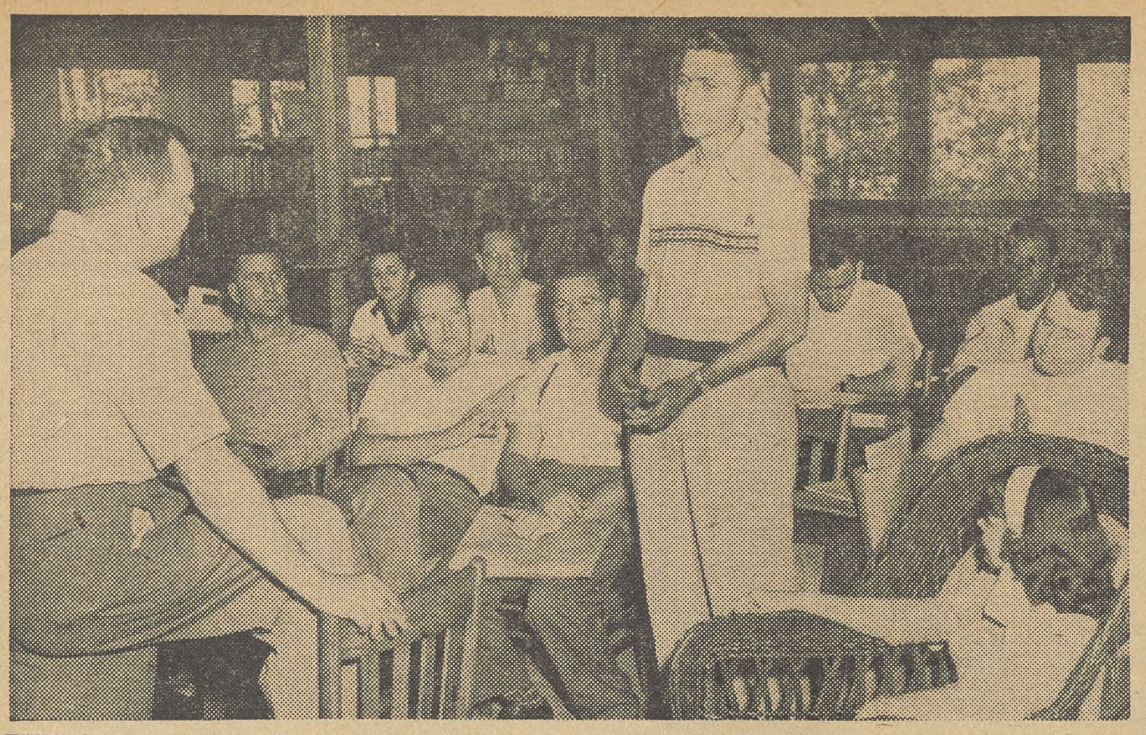
CIO Drive Aids Trenton Six

The New Jersey CIO Council announced last week that more than $600 has been contributed to its Trenton Six Defense Fund. The goal is $2000.

A check for $95.14 contributed by members of Local 447, CIO Intl. Union of Electrical & Machine Workers, Nutley, N. J., was among the recent donations.

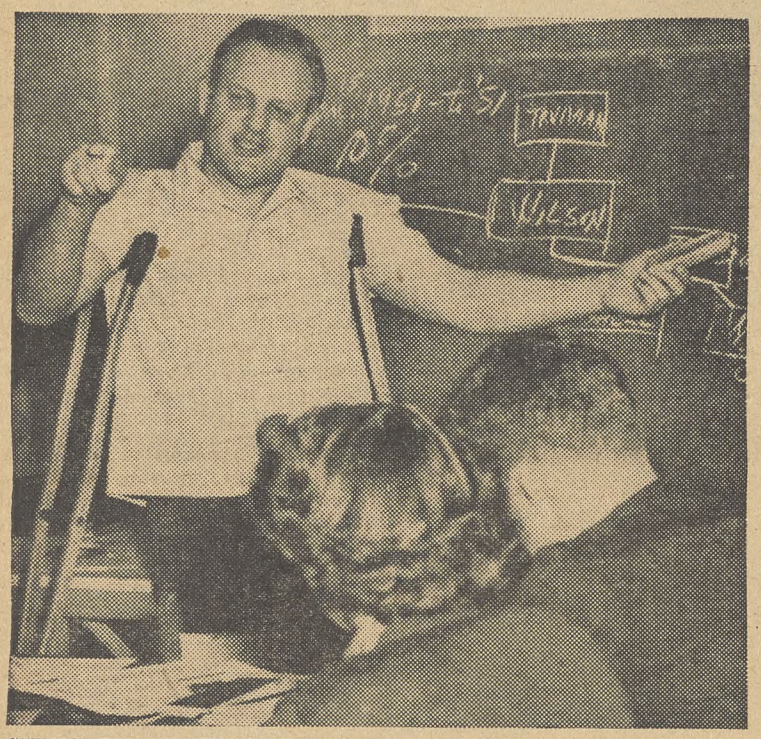
One contribution came from Donald L. MacNeal, Denton, Tex., who wrote that he was sending it "for principle and because I am a relative of William Henry Seward." Seward was Lincoln's secretary of state.

Arthur Chapin, New Jersey CIO director of civil rights, is chairman of the Labor Committee for the Defense of the Trenton Six, 772 High St., Newark 2, N. J. The committee invites anyone interested in aiding the fund to send donations to that address.



THIS CLASS at the CIO school for the South is as attentive when a student speaks as when a teacher is talking. M. M. Tramell, member of the Rubber Workers from Tuscaloosa, Ala., holds the class' attention while the teacher, Daniel Powell, PAC's southern director (left foreground), also listens. The school was held at the Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn. Additional schools will be held soon at New Windsor, Md., and near Boone, Ia.

STAFF MEETING: Four of the staff hold informal meeting. Left to right, Paul R. Christopher, CIO's Tennessee director; Elliot Bredhoff, CIO assistant counsel; Miss Lucy Randolph Mason of the CIO Organizing Committee staff, and Daniel Powell, PAC's southern director.



GIVES THE LOWDOWN: George T. Guernsey, CIO associate director of education, explains the U. S. defense mobilization set-up to a class at the CIO school for the South. Thirty-two persons attended the classes. This was the largest attendance at the school, which has held four sessions. The school struck a nice balance between study and recreation, a balance Guernsey plans to maintain at other CIO schools.

Never A Dull Moment At CIO Schools

CIO'S SERIES of summer schools got off to a flying start with the school for the South held at the Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn. Attendance at the school—the fourth session held for the South—was the largest ever.

A nice balance was struck between fun and education. It is a balance which George T. Guernsey, CIO associate education director, is determined to maintain at other CIO schools this summer.

An example of the serious side of the school was discussion of the church's role in labor. An organizer started the ball rolling with a story about a minister who knew that he should tell his members to join a union but said; "If I tell them to join, I'll be fired."

But the school was not all serious talk. The school had its own song. The music and the lyrics were written by Joe Glazer, Rubber Worker' education director.

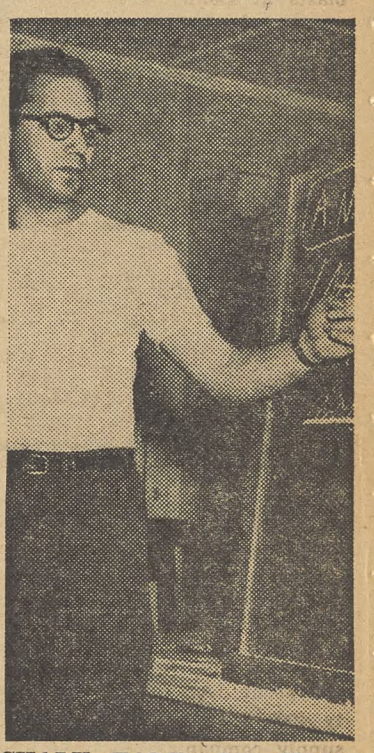
The passion of Harry Zebal, president of Local 179, Chemical Workers, New Orleans, for a New Orleans bean dish, gave Glazer the idea for the song.

One afternoon Zebal with other New Orleans students took over the kitchen. With the help of the school cooks they whipped up the bean dish which was served at dinner. The students called it Zebal's beans.

Glazer's song was a hit. Soon everybody was singing it.

Two more CIO schools soon will be held. The first will be held for students from Virginia and Maryland June 3-8 at the Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md. Tuition is $37.50 per pupil.

It will be followed by a school for students from Iowa and Nebraska to be held at the YWCA Camp, near Boone, Iowa, June 10-16. Tuition is $40. Applications should be sent to George T. Guernsey, CIO associate director of education, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.



CHALK TALK: Joe Glazer, CIO Rubber Workers' education director, conducts a class in labor history. Glazer wrote the music and lyrics for a theme song for the school that quickly became a hit.

JUDGING by the expressions on the faces of the students and of the staff members of the CIO school for the South, everybody had a pleasant time. The school was not all work and no play. Every day of the week there was a recreation period to help keep bodies fit and spirits high.

Utah Council Hears Attack On Tories

DELEGATES to the 15th annual convention of the Utah CIO Council in Ogden heard a vigorous defense of the nation's foreign policy and a slashing attack on the activities of reactionary groups.

The defense of the foreign policy was presented by R. J. Thomas, assistant CIO director of organization, and Assistant Secy. of Labor Robert T. Creasey.

In his defense of the country's foreign policy, Creasey labelled the opposition "confusionists." He said it had no foreign policy of its own and that its domestic policy "consists of trying to win the next election regardless of the effects."

He argued that the only choice in Korea was to intervene with force or announce to the Soviet Union that it was free to overrun all of Asia and Europe.

Thomas leveled his strongest blasts at Communists and their propaganda. He warned, however, that organized labor must continue to fight against reactionaries on the right, lest they succeed in depriving the people of the freedoms which the Communists are attacking.

He staunchly defended organized labor's action in refusing to participate on the mobilization board until changes had been made in its setup. It wasn't sabotage of the program, he declared, because labor had never been taken into it in the first place.

Clarence L. Palmer, president of the Utah CIO Council, assailed the Republicans, the American Medical Association and the National Association of Manufacturers for tactics used in the last election.

HE ALSO criticized some members of organized labor for being "misled" by the propaganda of these groups and called upon the delegates to do a better job of acquainting the membership with the program of the CIO.

The convention passed a unanimous resolution opposing any group which seeks to dominate any "policy-making body" in the state government.

Another resolution demanded that the Walsh-Healey Act be amended so that disabled veterans can be given some preference in obtaining employment in industry.

A third called for the immediate establishment of the advisory board provided for in the Occupational Disease Act and asked that labor members be appointed to it.

Palmer was elected by acclamation for another two-year term as president.

Nine Improvements Urged In Consumers Price Index

THREE CIO economists took the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Consumers Price Index to pieces before a House committee last week and offered a series of recommendations to bring about "immediate improvements" they said are needed.

Spokesman for the trio was Solomon Barkin, research director of the Textile Workers. With him were Nat Weinberg, research director of the Auto Workers, and Mrs. Katherine Pollak Ellickson, associate research director of the CIO.

They appeared before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor charged with studying the index, chairman of which is Rep. Steed (D., Okla.).

The economists told the committee the index is important because it is used for national wage policy determination and as a basis for cost-of-living wage adjustments for more than three million workers.

While it is "the only presently available measure for assuring workers some degree of protection against runaway inflation and is the best such index now available," they said, it is still "not a full measure of changes in the cost of living."

Two important recommendations were made. The first provided for establishment of a tripartite committee to advise the BLS and to have "the responsibility, the funds and the staff to explore the problems concerned with the index and the measurement of changing costs of living." The committee would be composed of representatives of labor and management, with independent professional statisticians satisfactory to labor and management.

THE SECOND major recommendation was for continued publication of the old index "as long as needed for collective bargaining purposes." A new index was installed in January. The BLS Labor Advisory Committee, on which the CIO is represented, had made this recommendation earlier.

However, the CIO spokesmen said, the Labor Advisory Committee has had increasing difficulty in persuading BLS officials to consider its recommendations.

"Another disturbing factor," they said, "has been the influence of the Deputy Commissioner of Labor Statistics (Mrs. Aryness Wickens), who is close to the Business Advisory Committee and has little, if any, effective contact with the Labor Price Committee and who is administratively responsible for the index and participates in the making of basic decisions."

In a detailed analysis of many phases of the index, the economists made specific basic policy recommendations for the thorough-going revision which the BLS plans for next year. These were:

"1. The index should continue to be based on the expenditure patterns of wage earners and lower salaried clerical employes."

"2. We urge that consumer price indexes be developed for the lower income groups corresponding more nearly to the level of income represented by the Works Progress Administration emergency sustenance level."

"3. The Consumers' Price Index should continue to be based on a fixed market basket so that it can be used to measure real changes in wages and salaries."

"4. We urge that the committee which we have proposed and the BLS be instructed to develop a technique for the measurement of these changes in the cost of living arising from factors other than price changes."

"5. Full publicity be given to the changes which are being made (in BLS procedures), methods of calculation, and that the full price change of all forced substitutions of higher-priced goods be reflected in the index."

"6. All increases in cost due to the disappearance or decline of special sales and the appearance of black market operations should be reflected as price increases."

"7. More deliberate efforts to establish quality standards in specifications so long as specification pricing is utilized."

"8. We urge the bureau to give full publicity to its findings" of changes in relationships between prices of foods which normally tend to move in unison.

"9. We urge that careful consideration be given to the differences in methods of pricing used by the BLS for the Consumers' Price Index and by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics for its Index of Prices Paid by Farmers for Family Living."

The BAE Index shows a rise of about 33% more than the BLS Index over the prewar base.

End Kickbacks On Spectacles Court Rules

SUCCESSFUL conclusion last week of Federal anti-trust actions to stop kickbacks on eyeglass purchases may drastically cut the price of spectacles.

Consent decrees, covering nearly 4000 doctors and four optical supply companies and their subsidiaries, were entered May 16, by Federal Judge Walter J. Labuy, Chicago.

The firms agreed to refrain from giving rebates to oculists on the glasses they prescribed for their patients; the oculists, in turn, agreed to refrain from allegedly illegal acceptance of such rebates.

The companies covered are the American Optical Co., Southbridge, Mass.; Bausch and Lomb Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y.; House of Vision—Belgard-Spero, Inc., Chicago, and the Uhlemann Optical Co., Detroit.

Provisions to permit entry of similar decrees also were made for the N. P. Benson Optical Co., Minneapolis, and the White-Haines Optical Co., Columbus. O.

IUE Wallops UE At Emerson Radio

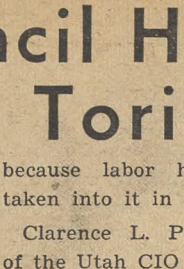
The CIO Electrical Radio and Machine Workers last week defeated the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers in a NLRB representation election at Emerson Radio and Phonograph plants in New York City and Jersey City, N. J. IUE won by nearly two to one.

The vote was: IUE 1211, UE 739, challenged 163, void 13, no union 30.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

GREAT NEWS! Pres. Murray is now up and around and feeling fine. The writer had the pleasure of being the guest speaker at a meeting of Chapter 5, United National Association of Postal Clerks, at Boston, Mass. The meeting was presided over by Pres. John Bercury. The writer pointed out to these workers the value and advantages of industrial unionism and how it has been developed by the CIO. In the postal field today, there are something like 17 different unions representing the workers. With a few exceptions these unions are weak and unable to perform the service required by the workers. Being employes of a government agency, these workers have no right to strike for just demands; however, a negotiating procedure can be worked out by a unified group. One large organized union among this group of workers could secure for them union recognition, a grievance procedure, and all of the other benefits of a strong, big union. Sound and fair machinery can be established to settle the problems facing postal workers.



Allan Haywood

The writer then traveled to Providence, to attend a very nice affair given in the honor of Frank J. Benti, president of the Rhode Island State Industrial Union Council. Brother Benti has served the Council well in his capacity as president these many years.

A delegation of German workers visited the writer this past week. They were keenly interested in the CIO, its structure and development. Organization Director Rep. Adolph Germer of the CIO Woodworkers will accompany them on their visits to the industrial heart of the United States. These workers are guests of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

Pres. Morris Pizer of the CIO Furniture Workers reports the following representation election victories: Conant-Ball, Templeton, Mass., UFWA 23, no union 9; Olive & Myers Furniture Co., Dallas, Tex., UFWA 95, UIU-AFL 40, with CIO Reg. Dir. C. A. McPeak in charge of the campaign; Prock Cabinet Co., Glenside, Pa., UFWA 203, no union 73, with Intl. Rep. William Gasamo in charge; Welch Furniture Co., High Point, N. C., UFWA 59, no union 27, with Intl. Rep. Edwin Waller in charge; Umphold Mfg. Co., San Francisco, Calif., UFWA 12, no union 5; Hoosier Panel Co., New Albany, Ind., UFWA 232, no union 112, with Intl. Rep. Douglas MacMahon in charge. The UFWA also won the following union shop elections: B. H. & F. Furniture Co., Baldwinsville, Mass., for 25, against 1; Ohio Valley Furniture Co., for 37, against 7; Conant-Ball Co., Templeton, Mass., for 22, against 8.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in a union shop election at the American Can Co., Baltimore, Md., the workers voted CIO Steelworkers 811, no union 56.

CIO Field Rep. Joseph Lovas reports that in a representation election held at the McKaig Hatch Inc., Buffalo, N. Y., the workers voted in favor of the CIO by 186 to 64 for an independent union. There were 2 challenged and 2 neither.

REG. DIR. IRWIN DeSHETLER reports that in a representation election at the King Maljan Carrott Shed, El Centro, Calif., the workers voted in favor of CIO Local Industrial Union 78 by a vote of 21 to 6 against. The Furniture Workers won a union shop election at the L. Kauffman Co., Inc., Los Angeles, Calif., by a unanimous vote.

Martin Kyne, executive secretary of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, reports the following representation election victories for the RWDSU: F. W. Woolworth, Birmingham, Ala., RWDSU 111, no union 38; Peter Reeves (grocery chain), New York, RWDSU 81, no union 72; Shelby Gum Corp., Shelby, O., RWDSU 18, no union 16; Allen Jemison, Tuscaloosa, Ala., RWDSU 26, no union 13; Donaldson Bread, Columbus, O., RWDSU 64, no union 32, and Sumpter Farms (grocery), Tuscaloosa, RWDSU 16, no union 4.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers won two representation election victories: Oberman & Co., Harrison, Ark., eligible 300, ACWA 139, no union 124, challenged 13, void 1; Oberman & Co., Morrilton, Ark., eligible 300, ACWA 145, no union 135, challenged 3.

Adolph Germer, director of organization of the CIO Woodworkers, reports the following representation election victories: Independence Lumber Co., Independence, Ore., eligible 188, IWA-CIO 109, AFL 56, challenged 5, void 1; Blue River Lumber Co., Blue River, Ore., IWA-CIO 48, AFL 16, no union 0; Hanson-Pacific Lumber Co., IWA-CIO 11, AFL 0, no union 0; J. B. Brown Lumber Co., Dorena, Ore., IWA-CIO 10, no union 3. In a union shop election at the J. B. Brown Lumber Co., the result was 9 for, 3 against.

The Civil Defense Conference scheduled for Chicago, Ill., will start May 25, instead of May 27, as reported here last week.

Steelworkers' Aide Heads L.A. Council

Robert R. Clark, assistant district director of the CIO Steelworkers, was named president of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council in the first election since a major reorganization in 1949 broke Communist control.

Clark was elected without opposition. He succeeds Clarence H. Stinson of the Auto Workers, who was not a candidate for re-election and was given a vote of thanks for his work during the interim period.

Albert T. Lunceford of the Rubber Workers was unanimously re-elected secretary-treasurer, and E. J. Franklin of the Auto Workers was chosen vice president.

The council represents some 120 locals with about 100,000 members.

People Will Pay For MacArthur 'Field Day'

This is the second of a series of articles on the activities of reactionaries and the lobbies in Congress while the country was concentrating on the issues of the MacArthur ouster. The third and last will appear next week.

By GERVASE N. LOVE

MONTHS MUST elapse, probably, before the full impact of the tory-lobby field day in Congress is fully felt by the American people.

But it is the people who will pay for concentrating their full attention on President Truman's dismissal of Gen. Douglas MacArthur. For while they were enjoying—if that's the word—the fireworks, their enemies were at work as usual.

Not only will they be paying higher taxes than equity and justice demand. They will find that a lot of the services they have a right to expect from their government will be cut down or eliminated, because the Dixigops who run Congress have cut 1952 appropriations down below the danger point.

And they will find, too, that thanks to the unholy alliance of reactionary Northern Republicans and Southern Democrats, big business will be more firmly entrenched than ever under the open end of its pipe line to the U. S. Treasury.

Last week the stories behind some of the cuts, and what they mean, was told. Among them was an account of the House's maltreatment of the Federal Security Administration appropriation—probably because Administrator Oscar Ewing is too liberal for the ruling clique.

The Interior Dept. also was manhandled—again, perhaps, because the Dixiegops don't like liberal Secy. Oscar Chapman.

Funds for construction of new transmission lines from U. S. power projects in all parts of the country were cut drastically—just what the power lobby wanted.

The House knocked out all Southeastern Power Administration funds for planning and construction—thus helping the Virginia Electric & Power Co. to bottle up power generated at Buggs Island, Va.

The amendment also would halt extension of transmission lines to load centers of utilities, municipalities and Rural Electrification Administration co-ops in Virginia and North and South Carolina. The company is trying to make a marketing deal with House members, but hasn't approached the SPA.

The Southwestern Power Administration was barred from completing its Western Missouri projects. So the city of Springfield and four large rural co-ops won't get as much power as they need and a large U. S. investment may be lost.

In the Pacific Northwest the power output of new facilities nearing completion at Bonneville Dam will just have to stay there, because the House won't let new lines be built to carry it to consumers.

The Geological Survey got something around $1 million less than it needs to continue investigation into basic data and mineral resources. It will have to cut $500,000 from its fund for topographic mapping of the country, and another $250,000 each from water resources investigation and the geologic and mineral resources survey.

This comes at a time when the cry for water in the semi-arid West grows louder each year as population increases and agriculture expands, and when industry and national defense are calling more and more urgently for greater quantities of more different minerals.

The Bureau of Land Management suffered such a cut that it will have to raise fees for cattle grazing on public lands.

At the same time it will give ranchers less for their money, because grazing administration service will have to be cut by discharges and the money spent on soil and moisture conservation will be wasted because the lack of administration inevitably will lead to over-grazing.

Those mistreated wards of the nation, the Indians, will suffer more than ever unless the Senate restores some of the Bureau of Indian Affairs appropriation. The House voted 16% less than in the current fiscal year—a $12,475,000 slash.

The Appropriations Committee talked piously about "active, tangible process toward the assimilation of Indians into the general population." Then it shortchanged them, so assimilation is farther off than ever.

The National Park Service request was slashed mightily—at a time when it is doing the biggest business in its history. The Fish and Wild Life Service lost $171,000 for its investigations of resources — probably cutting down on development of additional fishing resources when they are needed for food.

And so on down the line throughout the Interior Dept.

The Appropriations Committee used an old-fashioned meat ax on the Dept. of Agriculture budget, hacking out $110,598,000. The House, in its first couple of days of work, bludgeoned off another $2 million. Secy. Charles F. Brannan, like Ewing of Federal Security and Chapman of Interior, also is regarded as a liberal.

Several hundred employes will have to be fired, some of them men and women of long experience in agricultural affairs. Programs will have to be cut back. Farmers charged with producing more food will have less help in the form of technical advice, cash assistance and reimbursement for money they spend.

The Farmer's Home Administration will have $10,750,000 less for crop production loans. This means that much of the production such loans would finance will be lost, because borrowers do not become eligible until they have been turned down by banks as bad risks.

Without the loans, such farmers will be unable to buy seed, fertilizer and other necessities—and just how much food will be lost to a hungry world cannot be forecast.

The committee cut $28.5 million from projected expenditures for conservation of use of agricultural land resources. This is not an appropriation, but a limit on what the department can spend in the 1952 crop year to repay farmers who have spent money on recommended conservation practices.

This year the Production and Marketing Administration, which administers the program, got an appropriation of $256.5 million. The smaller payment means less conservation of soil—a course from which the nation may suffer in the future.

Rep. Taber (R. N. Y.) tried to push through an additional $75 million cut in the 1952 commitment when the bill reached the floor, but was defeated. The move was engineered by the American Farm Bureau Federation, which largely represents the biggest and most prosperous farmers.

Senate Puts Aid To India On 'Pawnshop' Basis

THE SENATE voted on May 16 to drive a hard bargain with the starving millions of famine-stricken India.

It completely ignored the long-standing American tradition of help to the unfortunate in any part of the world, and demanded "substantial quantities" of monazite and manganese in part payment of a $190 million grain loan.

Congress has been stalling on grain for India since February, when President Truman asked that two million tons of wheat—about $190 million worth—be given that nation's hungry people. Crops of grain, the staple of Indian diet, have been ruined by drought, floods, earthquakes and insects.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee recommended that half of the grain sought be given as a grant, the rest as a loan. The Senate, however, voted by 52 to 32, to insist that the life-saving grain be given on a strict loan basis.

The amendment was sired by Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.) and was pushed through by the Dixiegop coalition. Voting for it were 15 Democrats and 37 Republicans. Opposed were 30 Democrats and two Republicans — Sen. Morse (Ore.) and Sen. Young (N.D.).

The demand that India repay part of the loan in monazite and manganese was sponsored by Sen. Bridges (R. N.H.). Earlier the Senate had rejected another Bridges amendment requiring part payment in monazite.

The two metals are strategically important, and India has them in large quantities. Manganese is used to harden steel. Monazite, a sand, can be used as a source of atomic energy materials, and is essential for making jet plane engines. The Senate demanded it even though Sen. Hoey (D. N.C.) disclosed there is an "inexhaustable supply" of it in his state.

Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.), the Senate's atomic energy expert, pointed out that the country doesn't need India's monazite so far as atomic energy is concerned. India has prohibited its export since 1946.

The amendment was passed by a voice vote. Thus no Senator was put on a spot that might be uncomfortable should the House in its pending bill refuse to accept the Senate stand. The House is due to act this week.

McMahon warned that the Bridges amendment might well result in India's rejection of the transaction because it would be impossible for Prime Minister Nehru to accept it.

THE BILL provides that the Economic Cooperation Administration lend India $190 million on "special and easy terms." Half of the amount would be taken from the current ECA appropriation and be spent before June 30. The rest would be appropriated for spending during the fiscal year beginning July 1.

ECA loans usually provide for repayment in 25 to 35 years, with a six- or eight-year period of grace before payments start. Interest on most of them has been 2½%.

An amendment by Sen. Mundt (R. S.D.) set aside the interest for the first five years to help bring Indian students to schools and colleges in this country for training in modern agriculture, and to permit sending technical agricultural missions to India in an effort to increase food production. The interest is expected to run about $5 million a year.

The Senate also accepted an amendment by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) permitting the ECA to pay the cost of shipping food parcels from private relief agencies in the United States to India.

Another amendment by Sen. Saltonstall (R. Mass.) requires the Secretary of Agriculture to certify that any grain shipped to India under the program is surplus to domestic needs.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate & House Banking Comms. now holding hearings. CIO to testify in House May 21, in Senate May 28.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House Ways and Means Com. concluded hearings Mar. 19. Now studying proposals.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
Grain for India S. 872 H.R. 3791	Provides 2 million tons surplus grain for India, now facing serious famine.	Senate passed loan bill with weakening amendments. House vote due this week.	Ask Representatives to provide grain for India on an outright gift basis.
Importation of Mexican Farm Labor S. 984 H.R. 3283	Provides for importation of cheap foreign labor; encourages extension of substandard conditions for both domestic and imported farm workers.	Senate passed Ellender bill (S. 984) which CIO opposed as too weak. House Rules Comm. now has bill.	Urge Senators and Representatives to oppose bills unless amended to provide fair labor standards for all migrant farm workers.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. House Com. on Interstate Commerce holding hearings.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00 A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV | WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 28, 1951 | 82 | No. 22

Improve Anti-Inflation Law Now, CIO Spokesmen Warn Congress

(See Pages 6 & 7)

...NESDAY, JULY 3, 194...

STOP-GAP PRICE CURBS ABANDONED; TREASURY WARNS TAXES MAY GO UP; MEATS SOAR, OTHER RISES ARE LIKELY

CITY RISE UP TO 50%

Meat Increases Up to 20 Cents a Pound Reflect End of Subsidies

VEGETABLES, FRUITS DOWN

Milk Producers Say a 2 or 3 Cent Jump Is Needed to Pre...

Truman Talks With Snyder On Anti-Inflation Policies

Higher Tax Rates, Halt in Cutting of Public Debt, Excess-Profits Levy and Ban on State Aid Are Discussed

By JOHN H. CRIDER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 2—Presi- fiscal year which ended June 30. dent Truman conferred with advis- Further retirement was regarded, ers today on measures to com... inflation should ...

NEW BILL PLANNED

Barkley Maps Strategy in the Belief Senate Won't Revive OPA

MEETS TAFT AND WHERRY

They Are Open to Suggestions —Leaders Block Moves to Take up Rents Alone

Effort to Exempt Meat In Senate OPA Bill Expected to Carry

Senate First Must Act On Amendment Covering Extensive Decontrols

By J. A. O'Leary

The Wherry pro... leave meat an... the new price ... carry by 5 or 6 ...

Meat Supply Shows Increase, But Wholesale Costs Mount

Clearing House to Receive Complaints; Hours Set for Thursday Buyers' Strike

While an increasing meat sup- ply continued to fall far short of demand here and reportedly en- countered some sales resistance because of higher wholesale ... According to Robert R. Nathan, ... chairman, it is a price-patrol ... than a buyers' strike. A ... from D to F streets and the Four- teenth and U streets sections. The clearing house move is spon- sored by the Washington Chapter of the American Veterans' Committee. ... (See NOYES, Page ...

Commodity Prices Rise Sharply During Week Since OPA's Lapse

By the Associated Press

NEW YORK, July 6.—A sharp ... of $22.50 before sliding back to $22.25 under a flood of receipts.

Hog prices at Chicago broke all records since 1919 by advancing ... a hundredweight a week ... See A-3.

VOL. XCV..No. 32,303. Entered as Second-Class Matter, Postoffice, New York, N. Y.

FOOD PRICES RISE SHARPLY WITH BUTTER UP 13 TO 17C; MILK ALSO UP, BUT NOT HERE

INDEX CLIMBS FAST

31-Commodity List Is at $4.54 Against High of $4.57 in 1920

Barkley Proposes OPA Bill, Similar to Vetoed Measure

Only Modification Is Made in Taft, Wherry Cost Formulas—Price Officials Reported Opposed to New Plan

Nation Is Facing Another Week Without OPA

Drive Against Meat Control May Decide Fate of Measure

By J. A. O'Leary

Congress has called time o... until Monday in the battle ov... revival of OPA, with little ho... of settling the issue in less tha... another week.

In the Senate a drive by OPA opponents to leave meat uncon- trolled may make or break the bill Majority Leader Barkley is trying to get through as a substitute for the one President Truman vetoed last Saturday.

Senator Wherry, Republican, of Nebraska struck the first blow at the new bill late yesterday by offer- ing separate amendments to leave meat and dairy products free from controls even if OPA is revived for another year.

OPA Foes Confident.

Foes of OPA believe enough Demo- crats will join the Republicans to adopt one or both of these amend- ments, which the Senate wrote into the earlier bill, only to have them knocked out in conference with the House. At the same time, there are indications that if Majority Leader Barkley can beat off ...

Continued on Page 30, Column 2

Continued on Page 7, Column 1

U.S. Survey Shows Food, Rents Up, Clothes, Durable Goods Unchanged

By FRANK S. ADAMS

Retail and wholesale markets all over the country were closed yes- terday as the 170th anniversary of the nation's independence was cel- ebrated, but a survey of the effects of the ending of Federal price con- trols indicated that food prices and rents had risen generally, with clothing, household effects and dur- able goods remaining unchanged.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics in Washington reported that spot- market prices of twenty-eight basic commodities had risen 8 per cent since the ending of the OPA last Sunday. The Associated Press reported. Dispatches to The Asso- ciated Press and The United Press indicated that the advances were most acute in the big cities, but that smaller communities also were affected.

With the markets confused and uncertain whether Congress would enact price control legisla... ceptable to Presi... situa...

as Chicago, Shreveport, La., Co- lumbus, Atlanta, Birmingham and Little Rock, Ark., reported that the prices of meat, butter, bread, milk, restaurant meals, rent and clothing were steady.

On the other hand steak was selling for as much as $1 a pound in Los Angeles, with roasts quoted at 90 cents and hamburger at 65 cents. Wholesale meat prices were up 50 per cent in Portland, Ore., and in Omaha, Neb., a leading cen- ter of the livestock industry, one steak house doubled its prices be- cause, it told its customers, it was paying twice what it formerly had paid for meat.

Increases of as much as 40 per cent for beef, 20 per cent ... try, 25 ... per ... New ... thre... alle... con...

SENATE BODY VOTES OPA BILL STRIPPED OF TAFT PROVISIONS

Barkley-Revised Measure Sets 1940 as Profits Base and Extends Controls a Year

BULK OF VETOED BILL KEPT

Truman Acceptance Foreseen but Opponents Say Porter Is Author and Plan Battle

Text of Senate Committee OPA compromise bill

20% Rise in Meat Cost Expected When Stocks Reach D. C. Markets

Large Supplies Due Few Days,

Brick Works Closed By OPA Price Ceiling Prepares to Reopen

Frederick (Md.) Plant Suspended 6,000,000 Output in 1944

By Robert J. Lewis
Star Staff Correspondent

FREDERICK, Md., July 4.— The Frederick Brick Works, Inc., which for more than two years has been closed down while it battled with OPA over a price in- crease that never was forthcom- ing, is preparing to resume pro- duction now that OPA cont... have expired.

This was disclosed today b... Walker Carry, president of the ...

25 Cars of Meat Here, Cost Up; Wholesale Butter Falls 3 Cents

Beef Moving Better, But Railroad Wreck Halts One Shipment

Between 25 and 30 carloads of meat arrived here this morning, with another 25 carloads of per- ishable foods and considerable meat held up by a railroad wreck in Pennsylvania but expected later today.

Additional supplies are looked for Thursday or Friday to give the Dis- trict its largest quantity of meat since expiration of OPA on July 1.

Wholesalers and hotel and restau- rant supply houses indicated prices would be "a little higher" during the next few days. But one wholesaler ... prices on many cuts would ... within a week

Consumer Resistance To High Quotations Credited for Drop

The first major break in the upward swing of food prices since the July 1 termination of OPA occurred today when the whole- sale price of butter dropped 3 cents a pound. The quoted price in New York was 72 to 73 cents.

The wholesale price may not be reflected immediately in all retail stores. The Great Atlantic & Pac- ific Tea Co. here continued to sell butter at 79 cents a pound and has received no instructions concerning a possible change.

The same price prevailed in the company's stores in the New York metropolitan area because present supplies were bought at a different price, a spokesman announced in New York. ...sistance to the retail ... of to-

CONSUMERS can expect to see stories like these in their news- papers if efforts of industry lobbyists to have the teeth taken out of the Defense Production Act are successful. The act expires June 30. Big business has set up a "wailing wall" in Washington, warning that price controls will cause shortages and create black markets. Their arguments are familiar. The stories above show what happened after they were used in 1946 and OPA controls were junked: Prices went up and up . . . and up.

CIO Lawyer Rebuts NAM Attack On WSB Powers

THE CIO charged last week that the National Association of Manufacturers is trying to "obscure" the issues involved in the handling of non-economic disputes by the Wage Stabilization Board.

In a letter to Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), chairman of a Senate Labor Subcommittee, Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO General Counsel, snapped back at an NAM broadside recently distributed to all members of Congress.

The CIO attorney asked Humphrey for time to appear before the Senate Subcommittee to answer the charges in detail. In his letter, he took sharp issue with "certain extreme and unwarranted statements made by the NAM to the Congress."

THE BIG business organization has claimed that President Truman acted illegally and unconstitutionally in giving the Wage Board its present limited authority to handle disputes. The NAM has also maintained that this disputes power in the hands of the Wage Board will destroy collective bargaining.

"The devotion of the NAM to genuine collective bargaining would be welcome if it were not hypocritical," Goldberg told Humphrey.

"This is the same organization which has consistently employed every weapon in the legal arsenal, and some weapons of other arsenals, to hamper the self organization of workers and to prevent social progress."

The CIO counsel added that the files of congressional committees and decisions of the Labor Board and the courts "contain ample evidence that the opposition of many NAM members to genuine collective bargaining unfortunately still continues."

In answering the NAM charge of illegality in the granting disputes powers to the WSB, Goldberg noted that three leading American lawyers who are members of the President's Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy, voted to grant such authority to the President.

In addition, he cited precedents by Presidents Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, William Howard Taft—"the distinguished father of Senator Taft"—Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Harry S. Truman, to prove the legality of the action.

Sen. Morse (R. Ore.), himself a lawyer, also showed that there is no conflict between the President's action on non-economic disputes and the provisions of either the Taft-Hartley Act or the Defense Production Act.

Goldberg noted that the Wage Board has not been given authority to "impose any settlement on anyone." He said it has been empowered "only to find the facts and to make recommendations."

IF MEMBERS of the NAM would follow the "collective bargaining preachments of their spokesmen" the disputes machinery of the WSB would need to be used only "sparingly," the CIO official told Humphrey.

But, he added:

"The conclusion is inescapable that the arguments of the NAM concerning the disputes machinery are willfully designed as a propaganda smoke screen to conceal the desire to do business as usual, make higher profits than usual, and obstruct social progress as usual."

CIO Aide Wins Suit Against UE

CIO REG. DIR. Joseph M. Walsh, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., won a $2500 award from a jury at neighboring Scranton in a libel suit against the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and its Local 125.

Walsh had asked $25,000 damages on the basis that a handbill issued by the UE on the eve of a representation election at the General Electric Co. plant in Scranton had attacked his character. The UE was expelled from the CIO because of its Communist domination.

The handbill referred to Walsh as "Preacher Joe." Issued in May, 1950, it alleged that on "last April 20" he had had a secret meeting in a Scranton hotel with Carl Lenge, GE vice president in charge of labor relations, and Neil Mulcock, manager of the Scranton plant.

Walsh denied that he had ever met with any GE executives. He testified that the only time he had ever met Lenge was on Apr. 20, 1949—a year before—at a reception in the hotel arranged by the Industrial Relations Institute of the Univ. of Scranton. Lenge was one of the speakers at the institute.

High Court Weakens State Fair Trade Acts

A 6-3 DECISION by the Supreme Court on May 21 may save American consumers at least $1 billion annually.

That is the amount which price-fixing, permitted in 45 states, is estimated to have cost the American public.

In an opinion written by Justice William O. Douglas, the court held that state "fair trade" laws cannot force a retailer in interstate commerce to abide by no-price-cutting agreements he did not sign.

The effect of the decision, government experts say, will be lower prices on many nationally advertised products.

Drugs, cosmetics, cigarettes, home appliances, clothing and some household goods are the major items sold under "fair trade" agreements.

Price fixing was made illegal by the Sherman Anti-Trust Act in 1890. But in 1937, over President Roosevelt's protests, Congress passed the Miller-Tydings amendment which exempts re-sale contracts from the earlier statute when they are permitted under state laws.

Such laws have been enacted in every state except Missouri, Texas, Vermont and the District of Columbia.

President Roosevelt signed the amendment only because it was presented to him as a rider on an essential tax measure. Both the Dept. of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission have sought its repeal.

The decision does not invalidate state laws permitting fair trade agreements by which manufacturers and retailers fix minimum retail prices. But it killed the "non-signer" provision found in all such laws.

Such provisions have been used to try to bind all sellers to the terms of any price-fixing contract made within the state, whether they signed it or not.

Douglas' opinion holds that such an extension "is not price fixing by contract or agreement; it is price fixing by compulsion."

Attorneys for the defense had stated in advance that the effect of such a decision would be to kill all state fair trade laws. Widespread price cutting was predicted.

Actually, the decision does not invalidate fair trade contracts in interstate commerce, and it does not automatically invalidate state laws. Dealings entirely within a state are still affected by them.

PERHAPS the most immediate result of the decision was the initiation of action by many interstate concerns to place all of their dealers, as well as wholesalers, under price contracts as quickly as possible.

Nevertheless, legal experts generally agreed that the decision will tend to weaken existing contracts. It is believed that few if any courts would uphold them where a dealer was confronted with price-cutting competitors.

The case in which the court acted was appealed by Schwegmann Brothers, owners of a New Orleans supermarket. They had been sued under Louisiana's fair trade law by the Calvert and Seagram distilling companies for selling their whiskeys at prices lower than the legal minimums.

The distillers had fixed retail prices in agreements with other dealers in the state, but the Schwegmanns had not signed.

The firm told the court that "140 million customers in 45 states are paying more for the goods they buy than they would pay in a free competitive market."

Ohio And S. F. Form United Labor Groups

ORGANIZED labor in Ohio is the latest to set aside internal differences and join forces in a State United Labor Policy Committee.

The committee was established at a meeting which labor leaders described as "historic." It was held in Columbus—in the Neil House, right across the street from the State Capitol.

More than 50 representatives of the CIO, AFL and the railroad brotherhoods voted formally to establish the organization and adopted a policy statement strongly supporting the National United Labor Policy Committee in its fight for inflation controls, equitable taxation and equality of sacrifice.

They also adopted a program of making known to the people of the State the economic and social dangers they face, and of calling on their congressmen for better defense mobilization legislation.

Jacob S. Clayman, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO Council, and Phil Hannah, secretary-treasurer of the AFL Ohio Federation of Labor, were elected permament co-chairmen.

The San Francisco CIO Council has embarked upon a widespread education campaign to familiarize CIO members and the general public with the principles adopted by the ULPC.

A series of public rallies in support of a strong rent control law is being planned under the auspices of the local Tenants Council, which includes representatives of the CIO, AFL, railroad brotherhoods and the unaffiliated Marine Firemen.

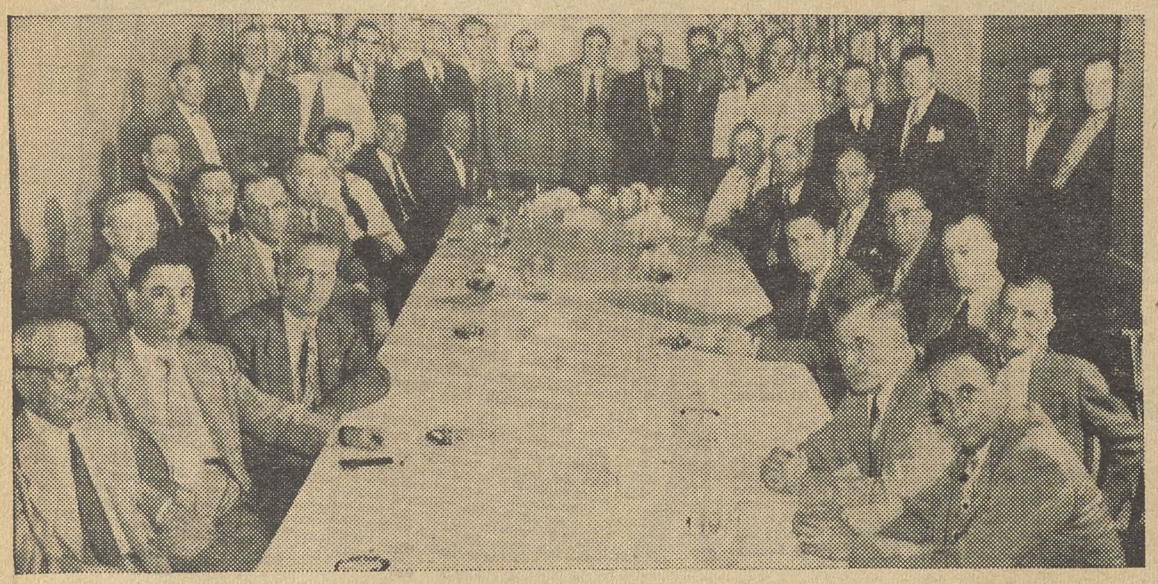
Organized labor in the Grand Rapids, Mich., area, having determined for the first time in history to sponsor a United Labor Day celebration, is talking informally about organizing a ULPC.

Edward G. Tilma of the Kent County CIO Council, and Adelbert J. Miner of the AFL, are co-chairmen of the Labor Day fete. More than 20,000 persons are expected to take part in the event.

PRELIMINARY discussions between CIO and AFL in Billings, Mont., having been successful, the Yellowstone County United Labor Policy Committee has been established on a permanent basis.

The setup is somewhat similar to that of an industrial union council, with each local union naming two delegates. The delegates, who will meet once a month, picked a six-man executive board.

The committee has already taken action to prompt Montana representatives and senators to work for an improved Defense Production Act.



ORGANIZED LABOR in Ohio set up its own United Labor Policy Committee at a meeting in Columbus described as "historic." Here are some of the delegates from CIO and AFL unions and the railroad brotherhoods who helped organize the committee just after they adopted a declaration of principles supporting the stand of the nationwide United Labor Policy Committee on problems growing out of defense mobilization.

Defense Fund Aided By CIO

CIVILIAN workers in defense production areas, as well as members of the armed forces, will receive services from the newly established United Defense Fund.

A number of CIO leaders are serving on the firm's board of directors.

A national goal of $18,624,854 to meet 1952 needs has just been announced by E. A. Roberts, president. The fund will coordinate the special defense mobilization programs of 30 welfare groups.

Local Community Chests throughout the country will be called upon to raise $16,511,854 of the goal through inclusion of their share in next fall's Red Feather campaigns. New York City, which has no Community Chest, will be asked to contribute the remainder.

Irving Abramson, chairman of the National CIO Community Services Committee, is serving as vice-chairman of the fund.

Other CIO representatives on the board of directors include Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers; August Scholle, CIO regional director for Michigan; Tom Jones, Communications Workers, and Harry Boyer, president, Pennsylvania CIO Council.

Packing Union Gets 9c Hike; Will Seek New Raises

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers voted at their biennial wage and contract conference in Chicago to reopen agreements with employers and to demand a general wage increase.

The action was ordered shortly after the Wage Stabilization Board approved 9c of an 11c increase negotiated in February with major packers. The increase was approved only for the "Big-Four"—Armour, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson.

The WSB took under further consideration the additional 2c, which is intended to eliminate some intra-plant inequities. It also assigned its staff to handle approval of the increases in independent plants.

UPW Pres. Ralph Helstein charged that approval of only 9c of the increase "sets up serious administrative problems," and maintained that the full 11c should have been approved.

The action of the union's wage and contract conference was not based on the WSB ruling, but on the economic needs of packinghouse workers.

Current contracts can be reopened on wages and other matters not already included on Aug. 11, a year before expiration date.

A general increase will be sought to boost the common labor rate of $1.35 an hour, including the 9c. About one-third of the workers in the industry are paid at that figure, Helstein said.

The conference—attended by some 300 UPW delegates representing about 250 plants—also approved a proposal to seek a minimum annual wage and abandonment of the hourly rate. Other objectives of the coming negotiations will be:

Periodic wage increases, elimination of area wage differentials, equal pay for women, a union shop throughout the industry, and a social service fund to be paid for by the employer and administered by the union. The social service fund would be used to pay for medical services, attorneys, hospital and clinic care, etc.

The delegate authorized a study of job loads in all packing plants as another step in the campaign against the speed-up. The union hopes eventually to work out fair job load standards and have them recognized by the employers.

THE DELEGATE authorized a study of packing plant job loads as another step in the campaign against the speed-up. The union hopes eventually to work out fair job load standards and have them recognized by the employers.

Business Joins Workers In Asking WSB To OK Productivity Raises

THE WAGE Stabilization Board last week heard strong suggestions from both labor and management that it should o.k. both productivity wage increases and deferred wage boosts.

The productivity pay arrangement is included in a number of escalator cost-of-living contracts, particularly in the automobile industry. They provide for annual increases of several cents an hour to pay workers for improved efficiency of labor and plant operations.

The deferred wage payment plans are more often found in AFL contracts. They provide for advance agreements on automatic future increases during the life of union-management contracts.

First spokesman for the CIO at the hearing was Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Automobile Workers. He told the board:

"It is very clearly understood we are in favor of introducing into the production process the most advanced technology, and we expect to fight for our share of increased productivity."

Reuther said both the auto companies and the UAW have "no question whatsoever about that point."

The board also heard from Harry W. Anderson, General Motors vice-president, who made a strong plea for WSB approval of productivity increases.

Even when productivity raises exceed the board's regular wage formula, the General Motors official said, there is "no basis, economic or otherwise" for the government to risk "stoppages and slow downs" by banning them.

OTHER CIO statements were filed by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel; Ben Sigel, counsel for the CIO Electrical Workers; Sol Barkin, research director for the Textile Union.

Goldberg said it would be a "most unfortunate and unjust intervention" in the sharing of national income "if the board were to rule out productivity wage adjustments.

"It would be ironic indeed for one government agency to disallow wage increases based on industrial efficiency, while other government agencies spend millions of dollars each year to show trade unionists from abroad that the American workers have a stake in improving the industrial processes."

RATHER THAN ENGAGE in collective bargaining, Busch and Son have uniformed guards outside their Newark, N. J., jewelry store, while their employes, members of the CIO Retail Union of New Jersey, picket. The discharge of a union member started the strike Apr. 17.

The Garden Of Eden Was Sorta Nice, Too

A lot of Republicans have been clamoring for a return to the Hoover age, but that isn't far enough back for Rep. Dondero (R. Mich.).

He wants the use of McGuffey's Readers revived in the country's schools to combat what he loosely calls a "socialistic slant" in some textbooks now used.

McGuffey's Readers, strong in moral teaching, were widely used throughout the country in the 1840-1900 period.

Dondero might be fooled, though. In the New York Times, Author Phyllis McGinley described McGuffey as a modern in his own era, who "never would have been so behind the times" as to include in a 20th century reader the last century author still in textbooks.

Living Costs Rise For 16th Month

THE COST of living increased for the 16th consecutive month in the 30-day period ended Apr. 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumers Price Index revealed when it was made public May 23.

The table below shows how it has moved in past years, and month-by-month since January, 1950, when the apparently unending upsurge began.

Period	Index	Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: Jan. 15	166.9
1943 monthly average	123.6	Feb. 15	167.9
1944 monthly average	125.5	Mar. 15	168.4
1945 monthly average	128.4	Apr. 15	168.5
1946 monthly average	139.3	May 15	169.3
1947 monthly average	159.2	June 15	170.2
1948 monthly average	171.2	July 15	172.0
1949 monthly average	169.1	Aug. 15	173.4
1950 monthly average	171.9	Sept. 15	174.6
		Oct. 15	175.6
		Nov. 15	176.4
		Dec. 15	178.8
		1951: Jan. 15	181.5
		Feb. 15	183.8
		Mar. 15	184.5
		Apr. 15	184.6

3c Living Cost Raise Goes To Auto Union

THE COST of living, already at a record high, edged a mite closer to the stratosphere in the month ended April 15.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics announced May 23 that its cost of living index stood at 184.6 in the middle of last month, compared to 185.4 on Mar. 15.

This is an increase of 14.4 points, or 8.5%, since June 15, 1950—just before the Communist invasion of South Korea. It is a jump of 3.1 points, or 1.7%, since Jan. 15, 1951—just before what has been called the price freeze.

The total increase since Jan. 15, plus a rent "bias" of .8 points not shown in the index, means a pay boost of 3c an hour to nearly one million members of the CIO Auto Workers and to many additional workers in other industries.

UAW contracts with most of the industry provide for escalator adjustments every three months on the basis of BLS figures. Wages automatically increase 1c an hour for each 1.14 points increase in the index.

The raise for the Auto Workers does not require approval by the Wage Stabilization Board, as it comes within the 10% increase over rates of January, 1950, allowable without such approval under present policy.

However, the UAW under their contracts are slated for an additional 4c increase on June 1. This is paid annually as an improvement factor and is based on a calculated rise in the worker's productivity. This raise would put the workers over the 10% ceiling.

The board held a public hearing May 24 at which spokesmen for the CIO, the Auto Workers and the industry urged that it be approved, but handed down no decision.

Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston has approved this type of increase in principle.

The WSB also is wrestling with a 15% wage increase negotiated with major employers by the CIO Shipbuilding Workers and other unions. It named a five-man panel headed by John Dunlop, a public member of the board, to study the contracts and report to the full board.

ANOTHER panel, it is expected, will be named to study an increase of 10c an hour under a contract between the CIO Textile Workers and employers of more than 100,000 members in the North.

Both the shipbuilding and textile increases probably will be approved if the WBS applies to them the same reasoning under which it authorized 9c an hour for some 85,000 members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers. The board based its approval on the fact that the packinghouse workers would have had that much due them if their contracts had contained escalator clauses.

Vargas Gives Brazil 40-Hour Week

The new government of President Vargas in Brazil is preparing to institute reforms long sought by organized labor in that country, according to information received by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

He has already published a decree establishing the 40-hour week in all industry and has announced wage increases which raised rates in some states by two and three times the old scales.

CIO Lapel Emblems

Our regular design—CIO in gold on an oval field of blue. Two grades, identical in design and appearance. Price based on materials and Federal tax as below:

Quantity	Permaloy	Gold Plate
10 to 49	25c each	40c each
50 to 99	24c each	39c each
100 or more	23c each	38c each

Available for prepaid shipment from the factory around June 15.

Send your order, with remittance in check or money order, to the Congress of Industrial Organizations, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Unwanted Wage Increases

Several hundred thousand CIO members—in the auto, electrical and other industries with cost-of-living "escalator" contracts—won a wage boost of 3c an hour last week, as a result of the latest Consumers Price Index figures.

In a very real sense, those were "unwanted" wage increases.

For it's our guess that most of the workers getting the benefit of cost-of-living adjustments would rather have seen a halt in the upward inflationary spiral.

It has become the fashion, among some critics of organized labor, to maintain that workers really like inflation—because through their unions they win at least some small protection from rising prices.

Of course, organized workers are better off in this inflationary situation than some groups—people on fixed salaries or pensions—whose standard of living has been seriously undermined by the needless inflation inflicted by profiteers and speculators.

But the efforts of unions throughout America to improve the Defense Production Act, the rent control statute and the tax law, constitute proof positive that workers want inflation checked in its tracks.

It is not labor, but the spokesmen of big business, who are screaming for an end to price controls and rent control.

Congress can do much to help not only organized workers but the millions of unorganized, unprotected people in this country whose future is threatened by the menace of inflation.

So far, Congress, hasn't done much for these folks. The time is long over-due for the Senators and Representatives to enact laws that will help the common people. The corporations—despite the cries of their million-dollar lobbies—are well able to take care of themselves.

Stranger Than Fiction

• The CIO Railroad Workers Union complains that 4000 men who make and repair railroad freight cars have been laid off—at the very moment that an army transport colonel complains we need 10,000 new freight cars each month for defense purposes.

• The same week, a booksellers trade group complained that John Q. Public is cutting down on his purchase of novels and short stories.

Seen from a proper viewpoint, the reason is obvious. Why read novels when the news these days—at home and abroad—is so often stranger than fiction?

Victory For Democracy

The Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee—one or the younger members of the CIO—deserves hearty congratulations for its sparkling Labor Board election victory at the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.

The two-to-one victory of the commitee over a union whose affiliation—until just before the NLRB poll—was with a Communist-dominated organization, is another step forward in CIO's effort to free workers from leaders whose basic loyalty is to an outside political party.

On the other hand, the efforts of John Hancock executives to postpone the election and defeat the CIO constitute a sordid chapter in labor-management relations. The company has a long way to go before it matches the reputation of the illustrious American from whom it has taken its name.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV May 28, 1951 No. 22

The Old Soak!

'Lost Locomotives' Mystery

By CUSHMAN REYNOLDS,
For Labor Press Association

CAPITAL REPORTERS—not to mention members of the House Subcommittee on Monopoly Power—were completely baffled by the Mystery of the Lost Locomotives.

As developed at two subcommittee hearings, main fact was that through skullduggery, punk administration or both in the National Production Authority, activities of four big locomotive makers were sharply curtailed in March and April because papers allowing them steel disappeared.

At the same time, General Motors, the biggest locomotive maker, obtained all the steel it asked for.

Net result was a production loss, testimony before the subcommittee indicated. Baldwin Locomotive alone didn't make 44 locomotives it might have put together had enough steel been made available, a Baldwin spokesman reported.

Right in the middle of the "mystery" sat two dollar-a-year NPA officials from the steel industry.

One was Melvin W. Cole, head of the NPA's Iron & Steel Division and a former sales executive for Bethlehem Steel. The other was Harry P. Rankin of the Steel Division's Bars & Semi-Finished Section, who came to NPA from Republic, Steel, to whom General Motors recently loaned $40 million.

Testifying May 23, Cole said that as a Republic official he used to do a lot of business with GM.

Central to the controversy was a memorandum dated April 5, signed by Robert T. Glenn, head of NPA's Transportation Equipment Division, and drafted by Col. William G. Knight, assistant to Glenn. In the memorandum, it was charged that "favoritism" was shown to GM while the papers of other companies disappeared twice.

Before the subcommittee May 21, Knight said copies of this memorandum were sent to Cole twice. But on May 23 Cole denied having seen the document until a copy was given to him after Knight testified. Cole also denied having showed undue favortism to GM, but took full responsibility for assuring GM steel for locomotives in March.

During Cole's testimony the story unfolded as follows: Early in March, General Motors, Baldwin Locomotive, American Locomotive, Fairbanks-Morse and General Electric asked NPA for special steel allowances so they could make needed locomotives. (All but GM wanted some non-ferrous metals.)

NPA, in the person of Cole, issued DOs (defense orders) for all the companies but GM, giving them a priority in the steel market. On his own authority, with Glenn's concurrence, Cole upped GM's priority to a "directive," a kind of super-priority.

Cole said GM spokesmen convinced him GM might have to close down its locomotive division if he didn't give the company 2663 tons of carbon steel. He insisted he made the decision on the merits of the case, although the GM spokesmen were old friends of his.

He said the other companies never presented as good a case for emergency action but admitted he never pressed them. (Nevertheless, Baldwin thought its case just as good. GE had to lay off men in February due to material shortage while GM was operating at a record level. Little was said about Fairbank-Morse. American Locomotive was struck, Cole said.)

EVEN THEN, the companies might have gotten their steel and other metals had the DOs gone through on schedule, as GM's directive did. But by March 19 it was clear that the four DOs were "lost."

At this point, Cole signed a second set of steel DOs and sent them through NPA channels to pick up authorizations for aluminum, copper, and timken metal.

These DOs were lost too.

They weren't found until late May 22. NPA delivered them to the subcommittee, headed by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), midway through Cole's testimony May 23.

Washington observers saw two questions to be answered by the Celler hearings. Was the GM priority "raised" on its merits or to favor GM? Was the double disappearance of the DOs for four of GM's top competitors an example of inept and wasteful administration or was it outright chicanery—to favor GM again?

In the meantime, one newsman's remark etched the situation sharply.

"What a hell of a way to run a war," he said.

Meaning Of CIO Victory

New Deal Begins For Insurance Agents

THE SMASHING victory won by the CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee at the John Hancock Life Insurance Co., on May 18 marked the beginning of a new deal for insurance agents in the country.

When the CIO expelled the United Office and Professional Workers in Mar., 1950, on the grounds that the leadership was Communist-dominated, the bulk of the 8000 insurance agents who were UOPWA members approved the move, according to IAWOC leaders.

They had seen for themselves what happens to a union when the top men become more interested in promoting a foreign political belief than in fighting for trade union principles. And they didn't like what they saw.

Many Locals Quit UOPWA

Following the expulsion of UOPWA, many locals which had actively opposed the left-wing leaders disaffiliated and became independent rather than remain in the union which had failed so completely to represent them in dealing with the powerful insurance companies.

Delegations of agents came to Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, and asked that they be permitted to remain in the CIO. He promised to help them in every possible way.

On Apr. 22, and 23, 1950, a conference was held in Philadelphia at which the IAWOC was established and an application made for a CIO charter.

The charter was granted May 1, and Pres. Philip Murray named Haywood chairman, Simon Helfgott, vice chairman, and Harold Ash, secretary-treasurer.

IAWOC immediately petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for elections at all the major insurance companies that had been dealing with UOPWA, including John Hancock and Metropolitan.

Then began a year of litigation featured by UOPWA's frantic efforts to avoid holding elections whereby the insurance men could vote for the union of their choice.

Among the various tricks employed to confuse the agents were several affiliation moves, first with the left-wing, catch-all Distributive, Processing and Office Workers Union, then with Leon Berney's brainchild, the United Insurance Agents of America, and finally with an outfit called the National Federation of Insurance Agents Councils.

In addition, Ash charges that during the campaign, the Hancock company entered into a deliberate conspiracy with UOPWA to commit an unfair labor practice by announcing a wage increase while negotiating with IAWOC.

The NLRB however, refused to be taken in by the scheme and ordered the Hancock election held as scheduled. The results were: IAWOC—3064, UIAA—1499, AFL—652, no union—78.

IAWOC Chairman Haywood points out that the relationship which has existed in the past between the average agent and his company, makes it doubly clear why insurance men need a legitimate trade union to represent them.

'Paternalism Fostered'

"For years, these men who make their living selling security to others, have had no security for themselves or their families," he said. "They had none because the companies for whom they worked deliberately fostered a program of paternalism designed to convince the agents that they were totally dependent upon their employers.

"As late as 1931 for example every agent lived in constant fear of losing his job. In that year, it is a matter of record that every other agent in the country was fired for some reason or other."

Between the years 1928 and 1937, the Metropolitan company discharged a total of 65,000 agents and Prudential fired 25,000. Vacations were unknown and agents were forced to make five-day week reports and on some weeks, seven-day written statements.

Working conditions have improved to some extent, but the unorganized insurance man is still at the mercy of the company.

Haywood pointed out that since the Taft-Hartley Act was enacted, a number of CIO unions have objected to their members being subjected to the captive audience provision of the law.

They have contended that the section of the law which makes it permissible for an employer to force his workers to attend meetings where they are bombarded with company-beamed propaganda is a violation of the right of free speech.

Company Propaganda Daily

Fortunately, however, CIO members are subjected to the "canned speeches" at infrequent intervals. Not so the unorganized insurance agent. He hears them every morning at the end of the daily "pep" meeting he is required to attend.

In addition, he is forced to engage in "selling contests" with other agents and is constantly faced with ever increasing production goals. Agents are still grossly underpaid, a condition which the IAWOC intends to correct.

In the short space of 13 months, the CIO union has won contracts at the following companies: Golden Eagle Life Insurance Co.; Unity Life and Accident Association; United Mutual Life Insurance Co.; Lincoln Republic Life Insurance Co.; Home Life Insurance Co.; Monumental Life Insurance Co., and Quaker City Life Insurance Co.

Haywood says plans for the future include a program to integrate local unions and the membership into the IAWOC. A national policy conference will meet in the near future to discuss this matter. The IAWOC, he says, intends to "get the best contract the Hancock agents ever had" and then launch "a successful campaign on Prudential and Metropolitan."

AMA Policies So Unpopular, Even Members Are Balking

THE REVOLT OF the doctors against the policies of their trade group—the American Medical Association—is reaching sizable proportions.

Forty-three per cent of the members of the Massachusetts Medical Society and 42% of the physicians in the New York County Medical Society have failed to pay the $25 AMA advertising campaign assessment.

The AMA advertising and publicity campaign seeks to convince the American people that AMA is completely devoted to their interests. Object of the multi-million dollar campaign is to defeat national health insurance.

The AMA favors voluntary medical care plans, provided they are dominated by the doctors. Aided by the high-powered publicity firm of Whitaker & Baxter, it has been carrying on a campaign of misrepresentation against the national health insurance bill and federal aid to medical schools.

The extent of the doctors' revolt against AMA is revealed by Bernard De Voto, who conducts "The Easy Chair" department for Harper's Magazine.

De Voto last January added to AMA's worries by printing a "letter to a family doctor," in which he took exception to AMA's policies.

He told his doctor: "You and Dr. Henderson (AMA president) are saying what is not so. Your acquiescence in this claptrap withdraws you from my respect."

Many medicos agree with De Voto. In the May issue of Harper's he writes that he has received 91 letters from them.

"Something over 80% of them approve what I said," he writes. "Every letter that was written on the letterhead of a hospital, medical school, or medical foundation is favorable."

THE ACTION of the Massachusetts and New York County doctors is significant, and De Voto quotes from the doctors' letters to show that they are burned up plenty at the AMA.

One of their principal beefs against the AMA and its constituent bodies is that their publications tell only one side of the story—the AMA's side.

De Voto quotes one of his doctor correspondents as saying:

"I have never seen anything published on the . . . contrary to the official AMA stand."

Many of the letter writers implore De Voto not to reveal their names. They fear the AMA's power. They fear that their livelihoods will be cut off through being dropped from their local medical societies and being barred from practice in hospitals.

Will anything come of the revolt? Perhaps the AMA policies will change if enough physicians take a courageous stand such as that of Dr. T. F. McNair Scott.

Dr. Scott is research professor in the Dept. of Pediatrics of the Univ. of Pennsylvania Medical School; director of research of the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, and president of the Philadelphia Pediatrics Society.

He wrote a letter to the Pennsylvania Medical Journal, official publication of the Pennsylvania Medical Society—and got it printed.

EXPLAINING he had not paid his assessment for the advertising campaign or a later assessment of $25 for the AMA's fund to aid medical schools—in lieu of federal aid—Dr. Scott wrote:

"I can only hope that this letter may act as a straw in the wind from which the policy makers of the organization (AMA) may realize that there are a few people who would be glad to back a positive program that squarely faces the issue, rather than the negative program at present under way.

"I look forward to the day when I shall be able to pay all the yearly dues with a clear conscience."

SECY. OF LABOR Maurice J. Tobin was presented with the Torch of Hope Award for 1951 at a recent dinner in New York sponsored by some 90 CIO and AFL international unions and the City of Hope, national non-sectarian medical center at Los Angeles. Left to right are AFL Pres. William Green, Pres. David Dubinsky of the AFL Ladies Garment Workers, Tobin, Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers and Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers. In center background is ILGWU Vice Pres. Charles Kreindler, also chairman of the City of Hope's National Labor Council.

Housewives Cheer

Milk prices in Brooklyn tumbled from 6 to 15c a quart on May 17 as 30 dairies and groceries in the Williamsburg section engaged in an all-out price war.

It began when Morris Sunshine offered his customers milk at 19c a quart, 1c below the prevailing price.

Swedish Prices Also Up

The United States isn't the only country where the cost of living is going up—if that's any consolation.

In Sweden, the Social Democratic Women's Association has called for restoration of the 1947 purchasing power of social welfare cash payments to large families and self-supporting mothers.

Congressional Hearings Spotlight Ine

Workers Not Apathetic, Carey Says

By MILTON PLUMB

THE BATTLE lines have now been sharply drawn in the fight to save America from more inflation.

On one side stands a small but powerful group of selfish interests, determined to reap huge profits from the nation's peril. On the other is the American people.

James B. Carey

Despite strong pressure from the lobbies representing big business, Congress at last seems beginning to realize this fact.

"Absolutely immoral" is the way some congressmen describe the unprecedented profits which most American industries have been earning since the outbreak of war in Korea. Figures on those profits were submitted by representatives of the CIO at congressional hearings last week.

The CIO appeared before the House Banking and Currency Committee on May 21 to urge continuance and strengthening of the Defense Production Act. It called for "equality of sacrifice" and stated labor's willingness to submit to wage controls, provided prices and rents are also brought into line.

On the same day, at hearings on the act before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, spokesmen for profiteers demanded an end to all controls upon prices. They brazenly threatened black market operations and the creation of phony "shortages" unless the government scraps its price control program.

The CIO testimony was presented by Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, whose statement was read by R. J. Thomas, assistant director of organization; and Stanley Ruttenberg, director of research. Frank Fernbach of the CIO Research Dept. also testified in response to committee questions.

Demand Equal Sacrifice

Carey said that if, as some congressmen have charged, there exists an apathy about the national defense program, "that apathy does not exist among the nation's workers."

"It is true that workers are disturbed," he said. "They are disturbed by the widespread evidence of scandalous profiteering on our national necessities. They are disturbed because the promises of equality of sacrifice have not been carried out."

The CIO spokesman told Congress that "the rank and file of the American people want to do their part, are willing to make the necessary sacrifices so long as they are assured that other segments of the population will do likewise."

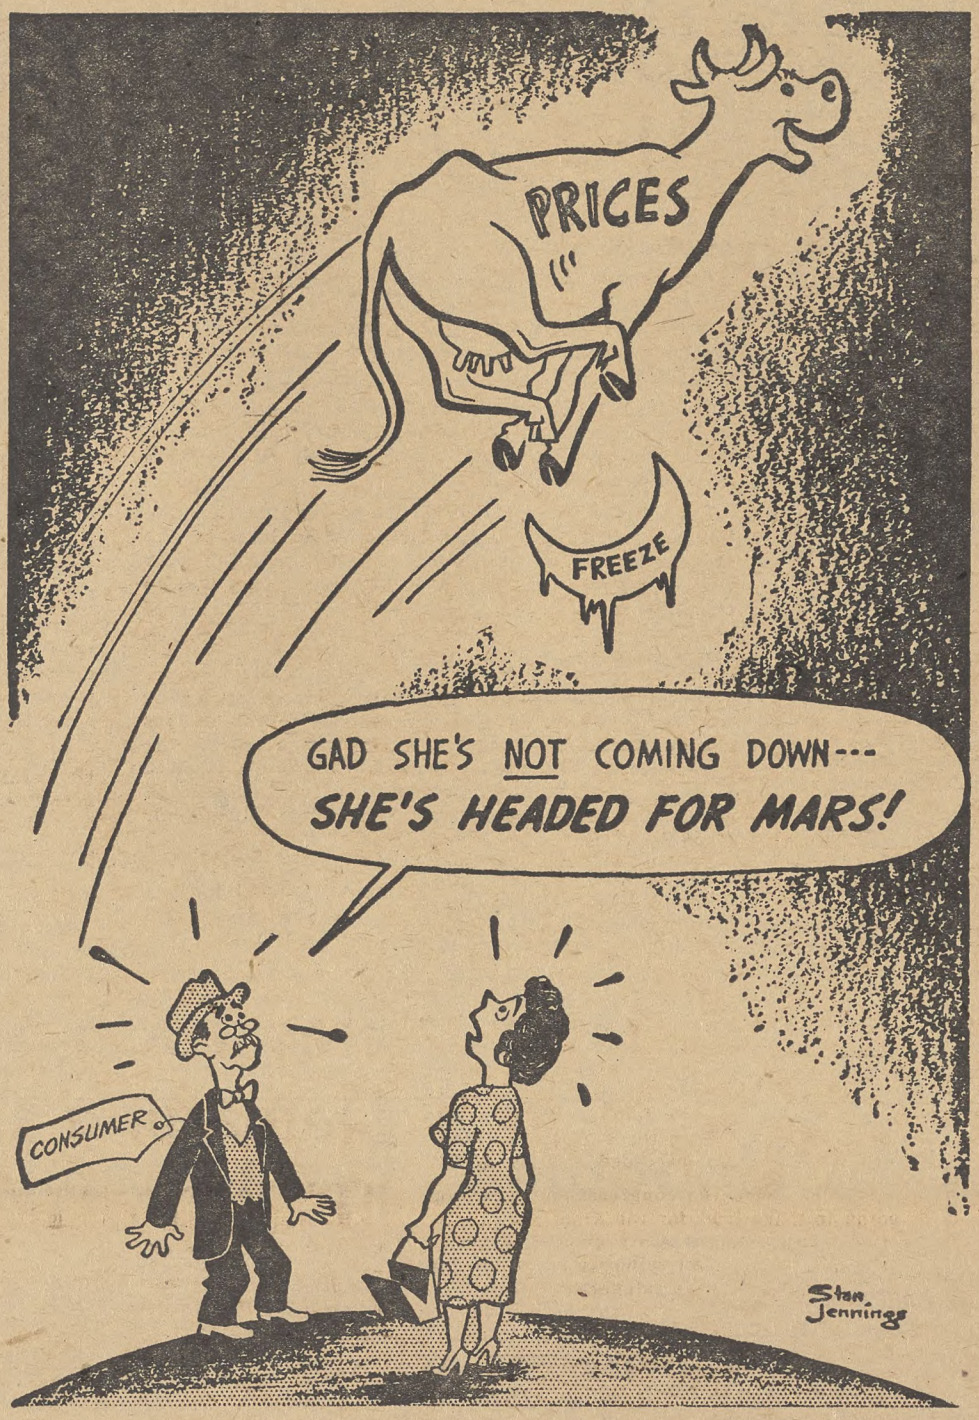
He cited the following figures to show what has happened to the national economy in the last year:

Between the first quarter of 1950 and the same period of 1951 the wages of workers in manufacturing industries increased 14c an hour or 9.8%.

In the same period, the gross profit on the labor of these 13 million production workers increased from 65c an hour in 1950 to an astounding 90c an hour in 1951, or 38%.

Rep. McKinnon (D., Calif.) told the committee that he saw a real "danger" in the figures Carey cited. He said that it indicates a "spreading apart" of earnings that "is concentrating wealth in a few hands."

"Eventually," McKinnon warned, "this trend will end democracy unless it is checked."



—From the Trainman News

Hi-diddle-diddle

Ruttenberg

Carey further highlighted the danger by pointing out that the "take" of U. S. corporations, after taxes, has risen to nearly double the high level of profit during World War II.

"In the same period," he said, "the share of income going to wages dropped from 62% to 61½%." This happened despite the fact that the labor force has increased by nearly seven million people.

The CIO secretary-treasurer told the committee that Congress has a duty to enact new legislation that will provide "the kind of climate in which people will have confidence in justice and equal treatment and, therefore, will cooperate fully in our national purpose."

Carey called for a complete reversal on credit controls, which at present are "discriminatory" against the small consumer.

While he was testifying, spokesmen for the big meat packers and cattlemen were telling the Senate committee that if the new price ceilings on beef are not lifted, they will "have to" flout the government's order through black market operations.

The cattlemen apparently were already backing up their threats. The United Press reported that cattle receipts at the 12 major markets totalled only 41,000 head on May 21, compared with 77,500 a week earlier and 68,700 a year ago.

The number was the smallest ever sent to markets on any day in May.

The "case" for the seller's strike was stated by Loren C. Bambert, president of the American National Cattlemen's Association.

"Under the circumstances," Bambert cynically contended, "the only thing that can save the livestock producers and feeders from a disastrous situation is the development of the black market which apparently is increasing day by day."

Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) replied to meat industry spokesmen by remarking that they were arguing "that there is one sector of the economy that will not submit to this (controls program) and will go into the black market."

The CIO has always supported the "concept of parity and all other measures which seek to achieve a better life for the farm families of this nation," Ruttenberg said. "This is our stand today."

However, "if parity measures a fair return to the farmer for the fruits of his labor," Ruttenberg continued, "it is only logical and proper that the Cattle Growers Association cease their agitation for complete freedom from price stabilization.

"Beef is already in excess of 150% of parity. In other words, their return is already 50% more than 'fair.'"

Writ

THE AMERICAN pe increased prices as th since June, 1950.

You will pay still you—and others like yo

Prices, rents and o be brought under strong have already said that th
people come forward w

Sen. Maybank (D. ple "apathetic" about pr showing a "surprising".

Like most Congress the postcards, letters an

You just aren't writi don't care if prices keep

So, it's up to you.

Send a letter—today
ators. Tell them you wa
tinued beyond June 30,
quate price and rent cont

WRITE THAT LE
SENATORS AN
YOU CAN HE DEFENSE P

Business Paper G

BIG BUSINESS efforts to wreck and wage controls are too muc even the New York Journal of o
merce to stomach.

The Journal boasts that it is "the w foremost business newspaper." Usual reflects the thinking of the business munity in its editorial policies.

On May 22, however, the Journal's torial page discussed one proposa

THEIR EYES ON CONGRESS, c in the textile, steel, communicatio line up at the door of the House E

uality Of Sacrifice In Mobilization Effort

Today

have paid about $17 billion in lt of the higher cost of living

e in the year ahead—unless o something about it NOW.

factors of the economy must ntrols. Members of Congress on't be—unless the American ronger demands for action.

has called the American peo-ontrols. He says that you are of interest.

he measures your interest by grams you send him.

Therefore, says Maybank, you
ing higher.

your Congressman and Sen-
Defense Production Act con-strengthened to provide ade-

R NOW — TO YOUR EPRESENTATIVES.
TRENGTHEN THE UCTION ACT

Legislator (GOP) Told About Life

ONE PLUS two equals only one—in Republican arithmetic on workers' earnings.

At hearings May 21 before the House Banking and Currency Committee on the Defense Production Act, Rep. McDonough (R. Calif.) sought to justify rent increases.

"There are many cases," he said, "where individuals during the last war earned up to $500 or $600 a month—people who got into a house that was frozen under rent control back to the 1942 level. Their earnings increased but rent did not."

R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant director of organization, immediately challenged the congressman's figures on workers' earnings.

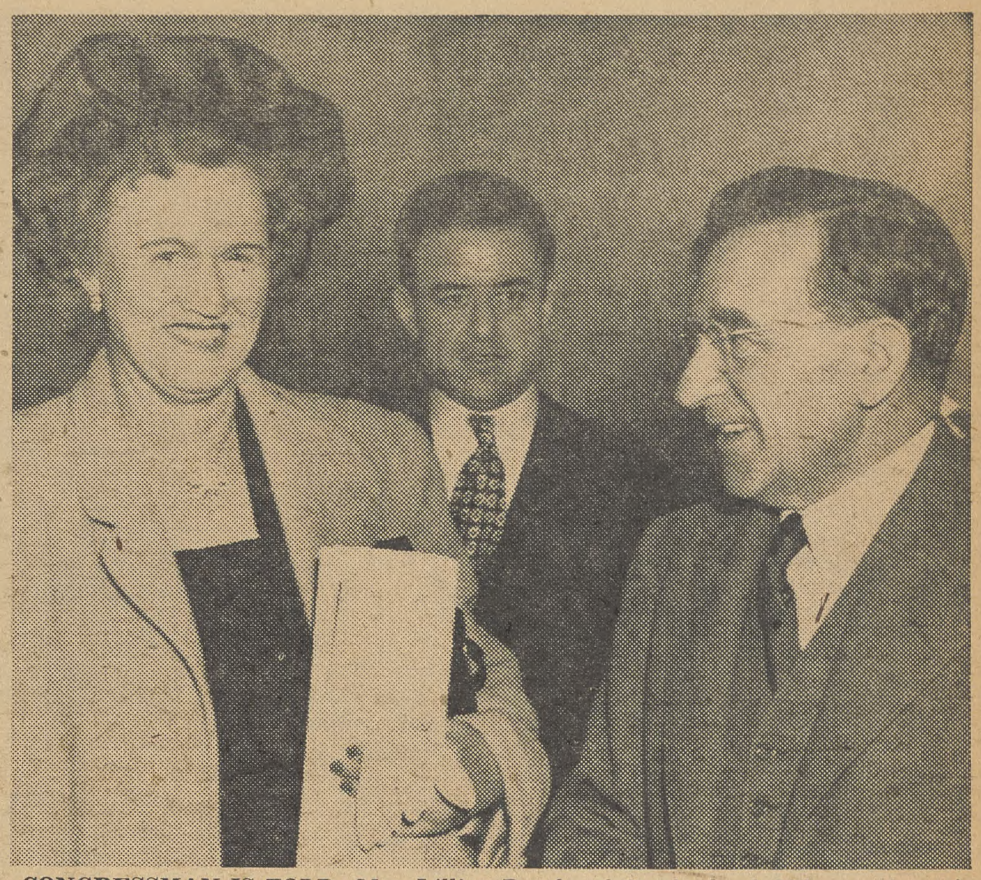
"I happen to know a lot of defense workers," he said, "but I just don't know the kind of people you're talking about."

Thomas pointed to a group of auto workers seated in the committee room. He said that they worked in one of the highest paid industries, but he would like to bet McDonough a new suit that not one was earning even $100 a week in take-home pay.

McDonough then made his arithmetic clear.

"If you don't know who these workers are I am talking about," he explained, "I am talking about a man and wife and maybe other members of the family, living in the same rental unit, with three people working, where the income exceeded $500 or $600."

Thomas asked the congressman, "Are you going to make laws for the American people on the basis of a minority group like that? It was a very small minority of American families who fit that category."



CONGRESSMAN IS TOLD: Mrs. Lillian Burch, of Cumberland, Md., member of the executive board of Local 1874, CIO Textile Workers, tells Rep. Nicholson (R. Mass.) that the people want stronger price and rent controls.

gs On NAM Plan To End Controls

the National Association of Manufacturers "to which we cannot subscribe at this time. That is the termination of all price and wage controls when the present Act expires, June 30."

Saying that it "wished" it could share the NAM view, the Journal admitted that it was "forced to the conclusion that, under present circumstances, direct controls are needed in the fight against inflation and should be continued."

"Were price controls to be removed at this time, we are very much afraid that the result would be a rather chaotic scramble for those supplies not earmarked for military purposes.

"Such a scramble would be the counterpart of 'rationing by purse strings' which would be economically and socially unsound," the Journal warned.

"We cannot subscribe to the view that 'the present price control program has not worked and will not work' and that, therefore, it should be abolished."

es from CIO unions electrical industries and Currency Committee before attending the current hearings on amendments to the Defense Production Act. They heard CIO leaders testify that the act should be strengthened.

Haywood Sees High Rents Damaging Defense Effort

"THOUSANDS OF servicemen and their families and defense workers and their families are being victimized by the absence of adequate low-rent housing," CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood told the House Banking and Currency Committee last week.

He called for an amendment to the Defense Production Act to provide an adequate federal system of rent control and warned:

Allan S. Haywood

"The full import of this tragedy upon the efficiency of our defense effort has not yet been felt."

City by city, and defense center by defense center, Haywood pointed to conditions throughout the country which support his contention that "the housing shortage is a national scandal."

All of the following examples of the current situation, he told the Committee, are taken from official sources:

ATLANTA, GA. Out of a total of 95,000 housing units, 37,000 are listed as substandard and 15,000 are so dilapidated that they "do not provide adequate shelter or protection against the elements."

Yet 1300 families in substandard dwellings and 300 of those in dilapidated housing units are paying over $50 monthly in rent, "just to get a roof over their heads."

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. Nine months after controls had been removed from rents, 71% of all renters had to pay their landlords 35% more. But the poorest families suffered most. Of families that had paid under $30, 86% were given a boost, and the average raise for this group was 50%.

CAMP PICKETT, VA. "Many apartments which are substandard," according to Rep. Hays (D. O.), are "renting at $100 to $125 a month to Army personnel."

CASTLE AIR FORCE BASE, CAL. A total of 1215 families recently found to be without housing or living in substandard, high-rent units.

CHARLESTON, S. C. Mayor Morrison has warned Congress that "War housing, as all other housing in the Charleston area, for all practical purposes, is full."

DETROIT, MICH. Forty-seven thousand families are now living in housing officially labeled "substandard." One out of every nine renters is being forced to pay 35% or more of his income to his landlord.

Yet the homes of hundreds of families are being demolished to make room for new highway construction and other civic improvement. The housing vacancy rate is almost zero, although thousands of additional workers must be brought into the Detroit area if defense production schedules are to be met.

LOS ANGELES, CAL. Two months after rent controls ended, rents jumped an average of 23%. But the landlords shot rents up 40% for those low-income families who had been paying under $30 monthly.

MILWAUKEE, WIS. "It was worse" than Los Angeles.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. Federal aid is "necessitated by influx of defense workers and military personnel," according to Mayor Hoyer. He estimates that additional war housing is needed for 3000 families.

MOUNT CLEMENS, MICH. Gouging of Selfridge Air Base families by local landlords resulted in rent raises of 30% to 60%, following the lifting of rent ceilings two months ago.

NEW ORLEANS, LA. "Present housing needs, especially for families of low-income (less than $3000 annually) are virtually on par with the stringency that existed during and immediately after World War II," according to Mayor Morrison.

PORTLAND, ORE. "Using 1945 costs, it would require $25 million to bring housing to the 1945 level," says Portland's Mayor Lee.

SAN DIEGO, CAL. Mayor Knox has called the present emergency housing situation in his city "unbelievably impacted." He describes it as "worse than at any time in World War II."

Bosses Seek Exemptions In Wage Act

INDUSTRY HAS got out the old chisel and is using it to punch more loopholes in the Fair Labor Standards Act.

In 1949, when the minimum wage was raised to 75c an hour, many employers used the chisel to chop several hundred thousand low-paid workers out of the act's protection.

Now more of them want the same right to exploit the unprotected. Among them are employes of cotton gins, flour mills, vegetable and fruit canneries, and the like. At recent hearings before the Wage-Hour Division, operators of such plants demanded an expansion of the definition of "area of production." If they win, additional thousands of workers will be deprived of the protection of the act, especially in the application of overtime provisions.

UNION witnesses testified that technological changes since 1940 have turned thousands of one-time agricultural workers into industrial or factory employes.

Solomon Barkin, research director for the CIO Textile Workers, who spoke for the CIO, offered the cotton gin as an example.

Once, he said, the gin had to be near the cotton plantation. Now it is usually in the city where the cotton is spun and woven. And it has become a fully mechanical operation, he stressed, requiring employes with mechanical rather than agricultural skills.

He also pointed out that the unfair competition the law is supposed to correct would be strengthened if exemptions were allowed in tobacco sheds, oil refineries, fruit packing sheds, seafood and vegetable canneries and creameries, because so many of them are becoming unionized and wages are being raised.

The city, he said, is moving into the country—and the area of agricultural labor influence must narrow.

Basic Training Begun By UNESCO In Mexico

The United Nations' Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization has opened the first of six regional centers for training specialists in basic education at Patzcuaro, Mexico.

The other centers will be set up in Africa, the Near East, Southeast Asia, the Far East and Australia.

U. S. Puts Halters On 15,000 Drug Salesmen

The Food and Drug Administration has warned the public against house-to-house canvassers selling a vitamin and mineral product called Nutrilite.

An injunction was obtained against the manufactures, Mytinger & Caselberry, Inc., of Los Angeles, Calif., after FDA agents, acting as customers made on-the-spot recordings of sales talks of agents selling the patent medicine.

The decree restrains 15,000 door-to-door-salesmen from making extravagant claims for Nutrilite.

Denham Now Registered Lobbyist

ROBERT N. Denham, whose resignation as general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board was requested — and obtained — by President Truman, has registered as a lobbyist.

He will represent the Continental Baking Co. On its behalf, he said, he will keep an eye on labor legislation and what happens to the Taft-Hartley Act in Congress.

Denham will receive a salary of $10,000 a year plus undetermined expenses—which, incidentally, include "occasional entertainment costs."

Continental Baking is headed into a major NLRB case with the AFL Bakery & Confectionery Workers Union. The union says the firm has 5000 employes in 83 plants throughout the country.

It wants to bargain with the company on a national basis, instead of locally, for all of them it represents except those in Washington, D. C., and Berkeley and Sacramento, Cal.

Denham is reported as saying he will not concern himself with the case, inasmuch as it was started while he was still NLRB general counsel. His term in the NLRB post was marked by endless disagreements with organized labor and constant bickering with the board.

His resignation was asked last September. The day after it became effective he showed up at a desk in the office of the Washington corporation law firm of Gall & Lane.

John Gall, senior member of the firm, formerly was general counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers.

LEGISLATIVE PROBLEMS are being discussed at a meeting of Rep. Case (R. N. J.), seated at left, and members of the Union County, N. J., CIO Council. Others seated, left to right, Pres. John F. Frenkiewich of the Union County Council, Rubber Worker; Anthony McConolgue, Linden, Oil Worker; Lester Weiner, council attorney; Marguerite McCollum, Rahway, Newspaper Guild; John H. Murray, Hillside, Auto Worker; standing, Dave Rifkin, Thomas Breen, both of Elizabeth, and both Oil Workers; John U. Murray, Roselle, Textile Worker, and James Trice, Newark, Auto Worker.

Five Flee Poland In Locomotives

The five Polish railroad workers who refused to return home after taking locomotives to Belgium for repairs are being given emergency aid by the Intl. Rescue Committee.

The five managed to get out of Poland by substituting their photographs for those of trusted Communists on a group passport. They fled when they learned they were to be sent to concentration camps.

Four of them already had been arrested for listening to western radio broadcasts and for sheltering members of the underground anti-Communist organization.

The IRC is a voluntary nonsectarian group specializing in aid to democratic exiles who have established consistent records of opposition to totalitarianism. It is currently engaged in an "Iron Curtain Refugee Campaign" for funds.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and AFL Pres. William Green are members of the national sponsoring committee.

Board Clears Aircraft Worker Discharged As Security Risk

JAMES SCHUETZ, whose worst sin apparently is his union activity, has been restored to his job at the Bell Aircraft Co., near Buffalo, N. Y., by the Industrial Employment Review Board—with back pay to last December.

Schuetz is a member of CIO Auto Workers Local 501. A veteran of two stretches in the Navy, both of which ended in honorable discharges, he was fired under a ruling by the Army-Navy-Air Force Personnel Security Board.

The armed services' board did not advise Schuetz of the reason for his discharge until Jan. 26. Then he was told:

"You do not possess the integrity and discretion essential in the security of classified military information."

Chairman J. Tenney Mason, of the Review Board, advised Schuetz of the reversal by letter. The Review Board's order said:

"The weight of the evidence is insufficient to sustain the action of the Army-Navy-Air Force Personnel Security Board in denying appellant access to classified military information or contract work, and that decision is hereby reversed.

"The appellant is granted the privilege of access to military information and/or material up to and including secret as long as he is employed by the Bell Aircraft Co."

THE MAN WHOSE loyalty was thus vindicated was restored to his job for the fifth time.

Four times in the past Bell Aircraft tried to get rid of him because he was doing an effective and aggressive job as a union man, according to his co-workers. Each time Local 501 took the discharge to arbitration, and each time he was reinstated with back pay.

His firing differed from the usual pattern, inasmuch as he was not accused of Communism. He is chairman of the Erie County Socialist Party. Neither this or any other branch of the Socialist Party has even been classified as "subversive" in any list made public by the U. S. Attorney General. As a matter of fact, the Socialists are among the bitterest enemies of the Communists.

Schuetz had the complete backing of his local and international unions and the Erie County CIO Council. Richard Lipsitz, UAW attorney, represented him in hearings before the Review Board in Washington on Feb. 28.

Rumely Fined $1000 In Contempt Case

Edward A. Rumely, executive secretary of the reactionary Committee for Constitutional Government, has been given a suspended sentence of six months and ordered to pay a $1000 fine. He was convicted last month of contempt of Congress.

Sentence was imposed by Judge Richmond B. Keech in Federal District Court at Washington, who said he had given the case "extraordinary consideration."

"Save for this man's age," he said, "I would commit him." Rumely is 69. He immediately announced that he will appeal.

The chief operating executive of the anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal CCG, Rumely was found guilty on charges growing out of his refusal to answer questions of the House Lobby Investigating Committee headed by the late Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.).

The committee specifically wanted to know the names of purchasers of thousands of copies of CCG publications.

Many of them were books strongly condemning the Roosevelt and Truman administrations and the organized labor movement—usually as "socialistic" or "communistic." Others sang the praises of unrestricted free enterprise. All of them plugged the line most favorable to big business and the country's wealthiest people.

Rumely claimed he and the CCG were protected by the free press guarantee and were not required under the Constitution to answer the committee's questions.

He was tried twice on a similar charge growing out of a 1944 lobby investigation. The first jury failed to agree, the second acquitted him.

He also was convicted of violating the Trading-With-the-Enemy Act of World War I by taking German money to help him buy the old New York Daily Mail for use as a propaganda organ. President Coolidge pardoned him.

New College Draft Rule Urged

THE EXECUTIVE board of the CIO Auto Workers has urged President Truman to abolish the blanket draft-deferment of college students "in order that all youths . . . may receive equal treatment."

In a resolution sent to the President and Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service, the UAW board recommended that qualified youths "be selected from the personnel of the armed services after induction" and sent to college "on completion of basic training."

The present deferment regulation, the board pointed out, permits those who can afford it to "buy" deferment by enrolling in college before induction dates.

The union also suggested a committee representing labor, industry, educational institutions and the public to classify college courses in relation to their importance from the standpoint of the nation's health and security.

The UAW added that selection of qualified students for assignment to college courses should be on the basis of competitive tests or other yardsticks designed by competent technicians.

Same Problem In Canada:

Boost Pay, CCL Urges, As Prices, Profits Rise

THE CANADIAN Congress of Labour has recommended that its affiliated unions "immediately avail themselves of every legitimate means within their power to seek very substantial wage increases."

The recommendation was made by the CCL Wage Policy Committee at a meeting in Toronto.

It marked the failure of months of patient effort by the united Canadian labor movement to induce the Dominion government to set up economic controls to protect the people from inflation and to spread the burden of rearmament.

The parallel between conditions in Canada and the United States is close. The cost of living is going up and up, profits are rising fantastically, wages are virtually frozen, taxes are aimed principally at those of low and moderate income.

The labor movements of the two countries have been fighting pretty much the same kind of fight for the same goals, with the result not clear in either nation.

CIO UNIONS in Canada are affiliated with the CCL. The CCL made known its change in policy in a statement that constitutes a damning indictment of official indifference.

"The CCL, with other central labor bodies, has repeatedly petitioned the Dominion government for action to protect the Canadian public against the ravages of high prices," it said.

"Labor has particularly emphasized the immediate necessity for control of prices and a roll back. In taking this position the labor movement has had strong support from the great majority of the Candian people.

"The government has flatly rejected labor's requests and has brushed aside the obvious demand of the Candian people for price controls. Meantime prices have sky-rocketed beyond the capacity of the average householder to meet ordinary expenses.

"FAMILIES have been forced to curtail their food purchases, and living standards of the average family have been seriously reduced.

"At the same time profits have spiralled to record high figures. While families of wage earners have been subjected to lower living standards, profits have continued unchecked at an increasing rate. Statistics show that profit-taking has been a major factor in the high prices to which the Canadian public is being subjected. While labor struggled unsuccessfully to keep abreast of the cost of living, profits have gone up 102% since 1946."

Report Favors UFWA

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has recommended that the Hibriten Chair Co., Lenoir, N. C., re-employ three members of the CIO Furniture Workers who were discharged in 1949, and to pay them for any time they may have lost because of their discharge.

Big-Hearted House Approves Loan For Starving Indians

THE HOUSE passed a bill on May 24 which like earlier action in the Senate insisted that grain for India's starving millions be provided on a loan basis only.

By a vote of 293 to 94, the House approved a measure lending $190 million to India for the purchase of two million tons of grain in this country.

President Truman last February asked that the food be given as an outright gift. Famine is raging in India as the result of the destruction of last year's crops of grain, the basic part of Indian diet.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee had recommended that half of the grain sought be given as a gift, the rest as a loan. But on May 16 the Senate adopted an amendment proposed by Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.) which put the entire transaction on a strict loan basis.

The Senate also wrote into its measure a demand that India repay part of the loan with "substantial quantities" of monazite and manganese, materials useful in the defense mobilization program.

The House bill differed from the Senate on this important point. It said only that repayment of the loan could be made by transfer to this country of such strategic and critical materials as are agreed upon between the two governments.

The two measures now go to conference.

Elimination of the Senate provision might make it possible for the Indian government to accept the loan. The export of monazite from India has been prohibited by a law against exporting materials useful in producing atomic weapons.

India already is shipping to the United States more than half of the manganese it produces.

DIXIECRAT Rep. Cox (D. Ga.) sought to kill the House measure completely. He called the loan "the height of insanity" and charged that U.S. church groups—which have been among the most active supporters of Indian aid—had been "misled."

Speaker Rayburn (D. Tex.), in a bitter reply to Cox, said:

"If we refuse the starving people of India, I doubt that within the next generation we have any friends in India or any other part of the great East. Sometimes I wonder if some gentlemen have forgotten that we need friends the world around, in the East and in the West."

Rayburn won the House's applause when he added, "we need friends in this world today like we never needed them before."

The House voted down an amendment by Cox which would have required India to repay the loan in six years. Instead, the bill authorizes the Economic Cooperation Administration to lend the money on "special and easy" terms.

ECA agreements usually carry a credit of 35 years.

VISITS GERMANY

Mrs. Marie Mengerson, St. Louis, Mo., (above) represented the CIO on a delegation of American women who recently visited Germany for consultation with German women's organizations.

Harris Heads ECA Mission In Germany

MICHAEL S. HARRIS, former district director of the CIO Steelworkers in Philadelphia and present chief of the Economic Cooperation Administration special mission to Sweden, has been named head of the ECA mission in Germany.

His appointment was announced May 22 by ECA Administrator William C. Foster. It had the approval of John J. McCloy, U. S. High Commissioner for Germany, on whose staff Harris also will serve as director of the Office of Economic Affairs.

Harris succeeds Jean Cattier, New York investment banker. Foster said his appointment will strengthen the U. S. "team" in Germany in its efforts to help build a free and democratic economy.

"As a leader in the international labor movement," said Foster, "he is well equipped to encourage the free German labor movement in its drive for greater productivity, which is the key to a healthy free economy for the country."

Harris, a native of Boston, was brought up in Philadelphia and attended Brookwood Labor College. At 17 he became a representative for the AFL Pocketbook Workers in eastern Pennsylvania. Three years later he joined the CIO Steelworkers. He rose to the district directorship and membership on the international executive board.

Harris was president of the Philadelphia CIO Council and a CIO member of the Regional War Labor Board in 1943 and 1944, leaving to join the Army. He returned after service in the Pacific to Philadelphia and the council post, and took an active part in community affairs, until his ECA appointment in 1948. He is 35, married and the father of a daughter.

Minimum Pay Upped

Minimum wages in the leather, leather goods and related products industry of Puerto Rico will be increased from a range of 17c to 30c an hour to 23c to 50c under an order made public last week by Wage-Hour Administrator William R. McComb.

Courage Pays Off

Austrians Strike, Win At Soviet-Run Plant

A HANDFUL of Austrian metal workers has successfully defied the armed might of the Russian occupation authorities in the eastern portion of their land.

There were 285 of them. They work in the Maschinenfabrik Teudloff-Vamag, a metal fabricating plant at Atzgersdorf, near Vienna, controlled by the Soviet USIA (the organization administering Russian-controlled factories).

One day about a month ago a detective sent by Red occupation authorities went to the plant and demanded all copies of the factory union newspaper. It contained material hostile to the Soviet Union, he declared.

A short time later the chairman of the plant works council was called to Soviet headquarters and told he was fired. He paid no attention, as the law on works councils protected him, and the discharge had come from military authorities.

The next day the management of the factory dismissed him without notice. His fellow-workers promptly went on strike—a major offense in the eyes of the Russians.

Forty-five Communist workers, pressured by the party, tried to continue on the job. But only 15 of them voted at a general meeting to call off the walkout.

The Russian plant manager threatened to have the works council made legally responsible for the strike, but the employes disregarded him.

Only one member of the works council was a Communist. He was called to party headquarters, where he was given an hour and a half to end the walkout or face a military tribunal.

The party spokesman also demanded that he report the names of workers who wanted to continue the strike.

The executive committee of the Metal and Mine Workers Union voted support to the strikers and branded the discharge "a crude violation of the Shop Council Law." Austria's Minister of the Interior Helmer also supported them, declaring in a speech:

"WE ADMIRE the courage of the workers in this plant. We could reach a better understanding with the Russian occupation authorities in the Soviet Zone if it were not for the Communists and their continuous denunciations."

Labor Minister Karl Maisel called the Soviet action an insult to the union and a "gross infringement" of labor legislation.

The Austrian workers were determined to stand firm until the USIA agreed to abide by the law. This called for recognition of the "Einigungsamt," an arbitration agency, as the highest authority in matters pertaining to stewards.

They stuck it out, too. Twenty-eight Communists played the part of strikebreakers, but the rest of the employes remained on strike until the Soviet finally capitulated two weeks later. Then, and only then, did they vote to go back to their jobs.

Norway Has 'Labor Trouble' With Farmers, Employers

NORWAY IS having its first major labor troubles since the end of the war.

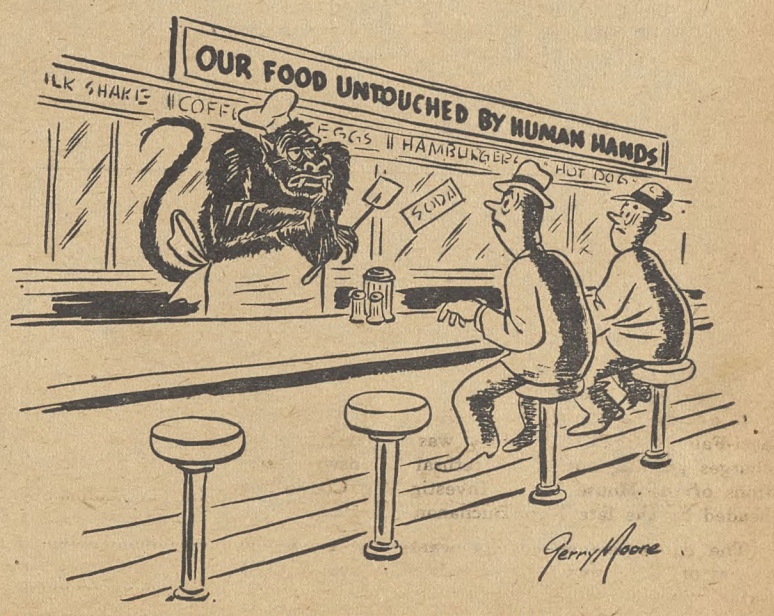
The 96,000 members of the Farmers Association have just ended a strike and resumed shipments of meat and potatoes to markets. They also have agreed to plant wheat in fields originally intended for that grain, but earmarked for barley and oats when their strike started.

Their action was taken in protest against failure of the government to carry out last year's agreement to increase farm incomes by 72.25 million kroner, through higher prices, to match wage adjustments. The association now plans to sue the government to force it to live up to the agreement.

The Norwegian Employers Association has served notice of a lockout of some 40,000 industrial workers, beginning June 2, in a dispute over the right of the Norwegian Federation of Trade Unions to organize foremen.

The NFTU started an organization drive only recently among foremen and technicians.

In some plants they joined readily, in others they delayed. Management, alarmed at the trend, demanded yellow dog contracts pledging them not to join the union.



'In Case Of Emergency'

CIO Asks Larger Role In Civilian Defense Plans

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

"THE EARLIEST possible moment" is the time to set up civilian defense plans for the country, CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood told 200 delegates to the CIO civilian defense conference at Cleveland.

Haywood called for greater participation of labor in national, state and local civil defense programs.

He declared that if World War III is brought about by the leaders of the Kremlin, and America is bombed, the first places to be hit will be the production centers.

"The people who work in these factories are our people," he said, "and we want a voice in setting up emergency measures to protect them in case that does happen. Labor is entitled to a place alongside management in setting up these defenses and we intend to see that we get it."

An Ounce Of Prevention . . .

Most authorities agree there is little immediate possibility that Russia will unleash an atom attack on this country.

But acting upon the theory that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, the CIO Community Services Committee and the CIO Depts. Organization and Councils are sponsoring several regional conferences on civil defense.

At these meetings delegates from international unions and state and city councils are told of steps being taken by the CIO to protect its members and the communities in the event disaster does strike.

Irving Abramson, chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee, also asked that labor be given a larger role in defense plans. He quoted Gen. Omar Bradley, head of the Joint Chiefs of Staffs, as saying that if an atomic attack comes "75% of the bombers would get through to hit our industrial centers."

Abramson said that the CSC program "is designed to prepare our people for any defense emergency. We hope other groups will cooperate with us, but if their cooperation is not forthcoming, we will go ahead with our own program."

"Some civil defense agencies in the country have complained that they have been unable to get a sufficient number of air raid wardens," he said.

"In a number of instances, labor has not been asked to participate. This creates an impossible situation. I hope it will soon be remedied so that labor can assume its rightful place."

He said that most state and local civil defense programs, including plant protection and plant security, have been planned without recognition that the help of organized labor is essential to their success.

"By participation," he asserted, "we mean full partnership with management and other groups at all stages of planning and carrying out needed civil defense measures."

He lashed out at reported attempts of some companies to force employes to submit to a comprehensive loyalty inquiry and to pledge to abide by the "rules and policies of the company."

John Brophy, former director of CIO Councils and at present Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions representative to the United Nations, declared the "CIO has committed itself to supporting our government in the event an all-out war should come."

Brophy declared that "the race against war is a race against poverty in the world." He said there is a chance to avert total war "but we must work with each other and with the people in the rest of the free world to bring about peace."

Justin Morrill, representative of the National United Services Organization, said that the "USO believes that labor unions should be represented on local USO committees."

If a bomb is dropped on this nation, Roy E. Johnson, representative of the American Red Cross, declared, "those who are trained in civil defense will be able to render aid to the civilian population." He called for CIO members, both men and women, to take first aid and nurses' training courses.

CARL W. GABEL of the Federal Civil Defense Administration bluntly told the conference that the increased tension in the world today "may flare into open warfare at any moment.

"The problem of civil defense is jointly a job for labor and management. Bombs, when they fall, do not respect difference of opinion.

Pennsy R.R. 'Furloughs' Peril Defense Plans, Green Says

PRES. JOHN GREEN of the CIO Railroad Workers has charged that the recent layoffs of 4000 railroad car production and repair men by the Pennsylvania Railroad in six cities constitutes "jeopardy to our defense mobilization efforts."

Green called on President Truman, Karl R. Bendetsen, assistant secretary of the Army, and Pennsylvania Railroad Pres. W. S. Franklin for an "immediate investigation" of the layoffs by the PRR and other railroads. Green wrote them:

"This union hereby charges all concerned with causing unnecessary confusion in the railroad industry, and particularly on the Pennsylvania Railroad, and demands that the layoff of the 4000 or more employes be stopped . . ."

He urged that "those already affected by the layoff announcement be rehired immediately to avoid the continued jeopardy to our defense mobilization efforts."

Green said that if the layoffs are a move to increase the profits of the company's stockholders and to gain public support for the railroads' proposed freight increase, the union demands that the Army which is operating the railroads cease aiding "the companies in their sabotage of the defense program."

Green declared that the layoffs in Altoona, Mahoningtown, Enola, and Renovo, Pa., and in Columbus, O., and Terre Haute, Ind., were "neither in the best interests of the defense effort or the common good."

Help Wanted, Male: Jobs For ABs

THE CIO Maritime Union has issued an urgent call for an estimated 16,000 seamen to man the 50 ships a month being taken from the merchant marine reserve fleet and put into active service.

NMU Secy.-Treas. Neal Hanley said a large reserve of trained seamen who served during World War II could qualify for the ratings as green ticket ABs, oilers and firemen-watertenders. Monthly base wages range from $248.41 on freighters for the ABs to $257.84 on colliers for oilers and firemen-watertenders.

There is an eight hour day with overtime for Sunday at sea and Saturday and Sunday in port. The overtime rate of pay for jobs paying less than $262.47 monthly is $1.22 an hour.

Hanley pointed out that Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, head of Selective Service, has recognized the shortage of skilled seamen. He issued a memo asking all local draft boards, state directors and appeal boards to give serious consideration to the deferment of bona fide skilled seamen.

NMU officials in the principal Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Coast ports can give full particulars to any interested qualified applicants, Hanley said.

NLRB Examiner Orders 103 Paid $500,000

A NATIONAL Labor Relations Board trial examiner has ordered the Thayer Co. and the N. H. Thayer Co. of Gardner, Mass., to pay 103 members of the CIO Furniture Workers a total of almost $500,000 in back pay.

The examiner also ordered the workers reinstatement with original seniority rights. He also recommended the disestablishment of the Thayer Workers Councils, company unions formed for the purpose of discouraging UFW organization.

The case involved one of the longest hearings in NLRB history. It arose out of the discharge in 1949 of 18 workers because of activity on behalf of UFW Local 154. Following a strike in protest over the discharges in 1949, the company fired an additional 87 employes.

UFW Pres. Morris Pizer hailed the decision as being of "vital significance" to the labor movement as a whole. He said the NLRB findings "reasserted the legal basis for labor's traditional rights."

TWU To Protest Long Hours On New York Subways

CIO TRANSPORT Workers in New York City have set plans for a half-day work stoppage and City Hall demonstration on June 1 to protest "the stalling tactics" of the city Board of Transportation.

The stoppage will be limited to non-operating personnel and will not affect operation of trains.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill disclosed the 500-man joint executive board of Local 100 has called for immediate strike action to bolster the union's proposal for a 40-hour work week on the city's subways.

"Only the restraint of the union leadership has prevented a full scale stoppage of operation," Quill said. "Our members are disciplined trade unionists and loyal public servants, but the board's indifference to their just grievances and its refusal to bargain peacefully leave us no other course of action."

Subscribe Today!

Only through the CIO News can you get full, complete, reliable reporting on the news of the CIO—throughout the country, in Washington and overseas.

Subscription price is only $1 a year (bundle orders on request).

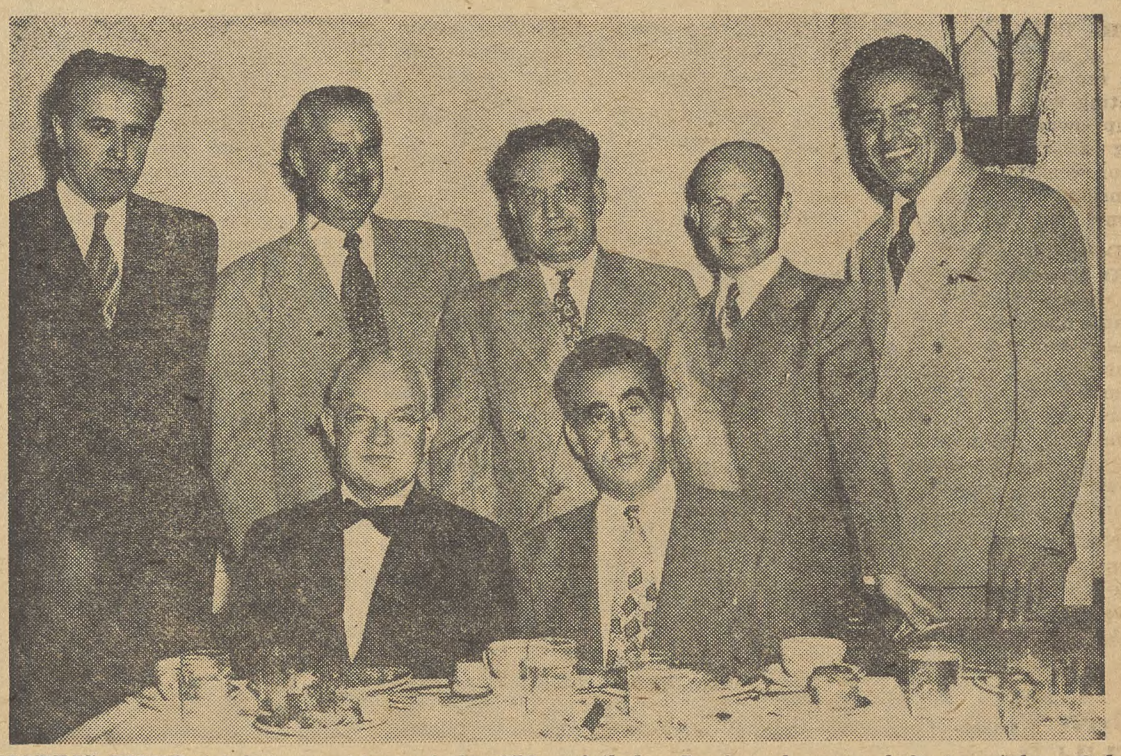
The CIO News
718 Jackson Place N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Enclosed find $1—and send me the CIO News for one year.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....



MORRIS PIZER (right), president of the CIO Furniture Workers, is seated beside Los Angeles Mayor Fletcher Bowron at a dinner celebrating a successful organizing drive by UFW Local 1010, Los Angeles. Raiding efforts of Commie-controlled independent Local 576 have failed. In back row, left to right: California CIO Council Secy.-Treas. John Despol, Greater Los Angeles CIO Council Secy. Albert Lunceford, Southern California Regional Director Erwin DeShetler, UFW Regional Rep. Bill Gilbert and Local 1010 Rep. E. S. Galvan.

MEBA Parley Asks Better Price Curb

THE 75TH convention of the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Association last week lambasted efforts to hold wages down while profits and living costs rise steadily.

The delegates called on Congress to enact a "truly effective price control program to protect the American people against the ravages of inflation."

At the same time the convention of the union—oldest in the CIO—voted "complete opposition" to any wage stabilization program that acts as "an attempted freeze on wages while the cost of living and profits of industry continue to soar."

The union met at Houston, Texas.

THE CONVENTION unanimously supported the demands of its representatives who are negotiating with East and West Coast ship owners. MEBA is requesting a 25% wage increase, 40 hour week at sea, a hiring hall, a pension system, increased vacations, and other improvements.

Delegates to the next national CIO Convention were instructed to introduce a resolution "demanding action on a national scale for repealing the Taft-Hartley Act." The resolution characterized the act as a "law drawn up and passed by the active participation and influence of the big corporations to beat down the living standards of the working people."

Nominated for the MEBA president were Herbert L. Daggett, the incumbent, and Warren C. Evans, business manager of Local 13, Philadelphia. Election will be by membership referendum.

MEBA Organized 76 Years Ago

The CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Association grew out of a Cleveland meeting in January, 1894, when 19 marine engineers formed Local 1, Intl. Marine Engineers. In 1865 the local struck and won a 30% wage increase, but the next year the ship owners blacklisted members of the new organizations and cut wages.

This was followed by dissension in the union, which the ship owners used to their advantage to reduce pay again. In 1875 delegates from several cities met at Cleveland and renamed the local the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association.

In 1917 MEBA joined the AFL, but withdrew in 1923 because of a dispute over its jurisdiction. MEBA applied for reinstatement to the AFL in 1936, but its application was rejected because of the jurisdictional dispute.

Two years later MEBA joined the CIO.

Drive Planned To Cut Child Deaths In Fires

A drive to save 4000 children's lives from death by fire within a year will be launched June 1, by the Fire Prevention Committee of the International Association of Fire Chiefs.

THESE MEN founded the oldest CIO union, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, which celebrated its diamond jubilee last week. Left to right, top row, William K. Kennedy, Cleveland; Thomas Buchanan, Detroit; James V. Hayes, Buffalo, N. Y.; William Sheffer, Baltimore; William Ponsonby, Chicago; bottom, Rodolphus Doty, Cleveland, O.; Garrett Dow, Buffalo, N. Y.; Abner L. Foote, Baltimore; J. W. Shea, St. Louis, Mo.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE JOHN HANCOCK election is over with the following results: eligible 6001, Insurance and Allied Workers CIO 3064, United Insurance Agents of America, an offshoot of the discredited UOPWA, 1499, AFL 692, no union 78. This was a long campaign, one filled with obstacles and delays, with the opposition using every conceivable foul tactic. Through all this, the agents' faith in the CIO remained unshaken and right prevailed. The UIAA resorted to deception and falsehood to discredit the IAWOC-CIO.

Allan Haywood

The writer invites every John Hancock insurance agent to sign up now with the IAWOC-CIO. We extend the hand of welcome and friendship to all agents to join with us in this great crusade for human betterment. I am sure that every member of IAWOC-CIO joins with me in this invitation of fellowship.

There will be an executive board meeting of the IAWOC-CIO on June 2, to be followed by full scale conferences with the company, with representatives chosen by the agents themselves.

I want to extend my thanks and congratulations to Harold Ash, Simon Helfgott and Walter Harris for the fine part they played in bringing about this victory. Congratulations to the CIO field staff and IAWOC representatives who worked so long and so hard to achieve this victory.

The writer traveled to Cleveland, O., and attended an area civil defense meeting. The workers resent the attitude of Federal Administrator Millard Caldwell in his treatment of organized labor in the overall defense program. He is not making full use of the resources of the workers in the plants when he ignores their organization as an integral part of the program.

Edward A. Gaskin, president of Local 900 of the Government and Civil Employees in Panama, visited the writer last week. Brother Gaskin is very hopeful over the future role of the CIO in Panama in helping the workers bring about a strong organization that can present their just demands for economic improvement and obtain them.

REG. DIR. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election at the Westinghouse Electric Co., Bowling Green, O., the vote was IUE-CIO 147, no union 3, AFL 2. The drive was handled by Intl. Rep. Joe Hawkins and Field Reps. Larry Williams and Richard Lynch.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, CIO Woodworkers, reports the following representation election victories: E. C. Olson Lumber Co., Spokane, Wash., eligible 75, IWA-CIO 49, AFL 18, no union 1; Carolina Cooperage Co., Windsor, N. C., eligible 68, IWA-CIO 40, no union 25, challenged 3; W. S. Spruell Lumber Co., Windsor, eligible 17, IWA-CIO 13, no union 4; Rhodes Lumber Co., Windsor, eligible 17, IWA-CIO 13, no union 4; Dierks Lumber and Coal Co.,, Forester, Ark., eligible 231, IWA-CIO 112, no union 109, void, 2, challenged 4; Hiers Planing Mill Co., Waycross, Ga., eligible 25, IWA-CIO 17, no union 7, challenged 1; St. Regis Paper Co. (Suwannee Div.), Fargo, Ga., eligible 135, IWA-CIO 69, no union 51, challenged 4, void 1.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that the Woodworkers won a representation election at the Powell Lumber Co., Lake Charles, La., by a vote of IWA-CIO 52, no union 31.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that the United Paperworkers won a decertification election at the Volney Felt Co., Memphis, Tenn., by a vote of UPA-CIO 231, no union 18.

Martin Kyne, executive secretary of the Retail & Wholesale Union reports the following representation election victories: Michigan Furniture Co., New York, N. Y., RWDSU 7, Harlem Labor Union 4; Heide Candy Co., New York, RWDSU 185, AFL 140; Victory Optical Co., Newark, N. J., RWDSU 107, Optical Workers Union 66; Hotel Mellon, Fall River, Mass., New England Joint Board-RWDSU 32, AFL 2; Garden State Motors, Camden, N. J., RWDSU 21, no union 1.

The Newspaper Guild of New York emerged victor in a representation election held at Macfadden Publications, New York, by a vote of 61 to 41 no union. ANG-CIO will represent employes of the editorial, art and production departments.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a union shop election at the Evening Tribune and San Diego Union newspapers, San Diego, Calif., the San Diego Newspaper Guild, CIO, won by a vote of 165 for as against 28.

REG. DIR. Michael Mann reports that the Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers won a representation election at Wrisley Soap Co., Chicago, Ill., by a vote of UGC&CW-CIO 284, opposed 213, void 10. This campaign was conducted by District Director Chester Walczak, Joe Valattino, executive secretary of the District Council, and Al Kural, president of District Council 7, UGC&CW-CIO.

William Donovan, director of District 28, United Steelworkers, reports that in a representative election at the Corrigan-McKinney mill of the Republic Steel Corp., Cleveland, O., the workers favored the Steelworkers by the following vote: eligible 61, USA-CIO 41, against 8, void 1. Rep. Owen Dixon handled this campaign.

Reg. Dir. Pete Mosele reports that employes of the Crawford Clothes Corp., New York, N. Y., in a representation election, voted in favor of the CIO by the following vote: eligible 109, CIO 98, against 2. The campaign was handled by CIO Rep. Peter Flynn.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the United Rubber Workers reports that the URW-CIO won the following union shop elections: Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. plant, St. Marys, O., URW 881, against 11; Royal Backing Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., URW 15, against 0; Lloyd Mfg. Co., Apponaug, R. I., URW 48, against 6. The URW also won certification elections at the Vogt & National Roller Co., Chicago, Ill., by a vote of 11 to 2; at Swan Rubber Co., Carey, O., 155 to 92, and at the American Foam Rubber Co., Burlington, N. J., 36 to 7 for no union.

Joe Molony, director of District 4, United Steelworkers, reports that the Cracks Brothers Division of Dresser Industries, New York, finally succumbed to the CIO after three previous attempts by CIO unions. The employes voted in favor of the USA-CIO by a vote of 755 to 475 against. There were 1420 eligible. This is a significant victory, considering this company's vicious anti-union attitude. The campaign was conducted by Dir. Molony and his staff, and they are to be commended by the CIO.

URW, General Sign Union Shop Pact

THE CIO Rubber Workers have signed a full union shop agreement with the world's largest independent rubber producer, the General Tire & Rubber Co.

It covers 2500 workers in the firm's Akron, O., and Waco, Tex., plants.

The new contract gives the union the right to reopen the wage question on 30 days' notice, at any time up to Mar. 1, 1953, when it expires. There is no limit to the number of reopenings.

The agreement was the first signed by URW since adoption of a 1951 economic program by the international policy committee on May 1 calling for complete unionization of the rubber industry.

More than 140 URW locals now have union shop agreements. First major producer to fall in line was the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. which signed Mar. 29, 1951.

The new contract must be ratified by both local union memberships and the URW general executive board to become effective.

MEANWHILE, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster announced the union will open wage and contract negotiations with the U. S. Rubber Co. in New York on June 7. A substantial wage increase and a full union shop will be asked for the company's 30,000 employes in 19 plants, Buckmaster said.

U. S. Rubber is the lone member of the industry's "Big Four" which does not have some form of union security at present.

Rieve Will Aid P.R. Wage Study

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers and Walter J. Mason of the AFL Legislative Dept., have been named to the workers' section of Industry Committee No. 10, which will recommend minimum wage rates for six industries in Puerto Rico.

Rieve and Mason will serve as Acting Wage-Hour Administrator F. Granville Grimes, Jr., may direct, but not at the same time. The committee will study the food, beverages and related products industries; jewel cutting and polishing; communications, utilities and miscellaneous transportation; shoe manufacturing and allied industries, and the textile and textile products industry.

The public and industry also are represented on the committee. Minimum wages in these industries now range from 25 to 40c an hour.

Pamphlet Tells Church Stand Against Bias

A compilation of the stand of many faiths against racial discrimination is contained in the pamphlet "The Churches and Brotherhood," issued by the CIO Organizing Committee's Community Relations Dept.

The pamphlet, which is profusely illustrated, was compiled by Miss Lucy Randolph Mason and John G. Ramsey of the Community Relations Dept.

Orders accompanied by a check or money order should be sent to the CIO Organizing Committee, 40 Pryor St., S. W., Atlanta 3, Ga. The price is $35 per thousand.

Congress 'Economy' Perils Natural Resources

This is the third and last in a series of articles on the activities of reactionaries and the lobbies in Congress while the country has been giving most of its attention to the issues raised by the ouster of Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE FIELD day the reactionary Republicans and Southern Democrats have been having in Congress—at the expense of the people and for the benefit of the lobbies—will require more than mere money to correct.

Although the beating the great mass of Americans has been taking has been given under the guise of "economy" and saving them from "socialistic" or "paternalistic" government, many natural resources will be dissipated and perhaps lost forever because of sheer shortsightedness.

Action by the House and its Appropriation Committee on the Dept. of Agriculture appropriation is an example. Some of the dire effects were described last week, including the loss of hundreds of experienced employes for whom no salary appropriations were made.

The Agriculture Production Program appropriation was sliced by $11.7 million. This means that a lot of employes will have to be discharged—people who work directly with farmers, spurring them to increase production and helping them plan acreage allotments and work out production quotas. It also means that farmers will not have as much government aid in getting things in short supply they need to increase crops.

A particularly irritating thing was the committee's chopping from the Forest Service appropriation $4,150,000 earmarked to fight the Englemann spruce beetle in Colorado. Lumber from this spruce is used in building.

When the bill reached the floor, the House showed just how silly it could get by refusing to cut $300,000 from the appropriation for the study and eradication of the white pine blister. The white pine is another economically important tree. The blister is a fungus growth that both kills and spreads rapidly.

On the floor, the service's $100,000 allotment for land purchase, small as it was, took a slash to $15,000.

The Forest Service also had $6 million cut from its appropriation for access roads to government-owned standing timber.

Result: either the biggest operators, who can finance roads, will do all the buying, or less timber will be produced.

The farmer really took it on the chin when the appropriation for the Bureau of Agriculture Economics was cut by $367,000 in committee and by $150,000 on the floor on motion of Rep. Andresen (R. Minn.).

This is the agency that delves into all phases of agricultural costs, tries to find out who pockets the difference between what the farmer gets for his products and what the consumer pays—and, most important, computes parity prices.

Andresen also sponsored another petty little floor amendment that sliced $75,000 from the office of Secy. of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan. Brannan is a liberal. Andresen isn't.

The Soil Conservation Service request for funds for use in conservation of agricultural land resources was cut $28.5 million by the committee. This is the fund from which farmers are paid for installing approved conservation practices which temporarily or permanently take some of their land out of production use.

However, the committee said the department should continue the work at the current level and borrow enough to pay for it from the Commodity Credit Corp., subject to repayment from a later appropriation.

Flood Control was cut $900,000 in committee and another $1,887,200 on the floor, with Andresen again the axe-wielder. The appropriation for the fiscal year beginning July 1 was set at $6,112,800, compared to $9,201,000 available during the current fiscal year.

The department's flood control work augments that of the Soil Conservation Service. It helps farmers install practices and structures to slow down the run-off rate of water.

The program is basic in saving our depleting topsoil. Not only will a lot more priceless soil be lost, but a lot of experts in this field will lose their jobs.

Elsewhere in the Dept. of Agriculture, the Rural Electrification Administration had $750,000 chopped from its administration expense; about 150 people will lose their jobs, and the workloads of those remaining will be increased.

The Farm Credit Administration, which has over-all direction of credit and production cooperatives, was nicked for $280,000.

Agricultural Research was nipped for $3.7 million, and 400 to 500 workers will have to be discharged. Marketing Services was butchered to the tune of $596,000; as a result, about 125 fewer people will be available to give the farmer marketing news services so he can try to get the best prices for his products, inspection of farm commodities will have to be decreased, and cotton classification work will suffer.

And so it goes.

The Civil Defense Agency appropriation finally was passed and sent to the White House—$31,750,000, less than 10% of what was originally asked. In the unlikely event the war moves into this country and cities are bombed, the people will have to learn how to take care of themselves the hard way. And the stockpiles of medicines and other necessities the agency had planned just won't be there.

The CIO News could go on in this vein for several more columns. But after three installments, the idea ought to be clear: Register and vote in 1951.

House Framers Of Tax Bill Heed Voice Of The People

The House Ways and Means Committee was playing ping-pong last week with new tax legislation.

A couple of weeks earlier it had voted tentatively to increase the income tax levy by three percentage points in each bracket, and had rejected a Republican proposal for a straight 10% increase in each individual tax return. It also had tentatively decided to boost the excess profits tax modestly.

But apparently in the interim it was convinced that after all, low and middle income taxpayers are having it tough enough—and the wealthy aren't. The folks back home wrote nasty letters, too.

So on May 23 it reversed itself. It tossed out the whole theory of boosting the rates by adding to the percentage points, rejected for a second time the GOP straight 10% proposal, and adopted a straight 12½% increase.

Then it voted to raise the excess profits rate. At present it is 77% on corporate earnings of more than 85% of the average earnings in the three most profitable years in the 1946-9 period. Last week's action, approved by a straight party vote, was to increase the rate to 88% on corporate earnings of more than 75% of the average for the three best years between 1949 and 1946.

In addition, it raised from 62% to 77% of total earnings the maximum the government can take from a corporation in combined regular and excess profits taxes. The GOP members screamed.

The new regular income tax levy will mean a break for the workers and others of moderate and low income. The committee's experts say single persons earning up to $8000 a year and the married making up to $15,000 will pay less than under the original formula, while those of greater income will pay more. The new formula is simple: compute the tax, then add 12½% to it.

The experts on May 24 told the committee that the 12½% was bearing down too hard on the very wealthy—that a $100,000 a year man would pay 100% of his last $10,000. The committee did some jiggling and voted a limit of 94½% on what an individual would have to pay on any part of his income.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate & House Banking Comms. now holding hearings. CIO to testify in Senate May 30 and June 4.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House Ways and Means Com. concluded hearings Mar. 19. Now studying proposals.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
Importation of Mexican Farm Labor S. 984 H.R. 3283	Provides for importation of cheap foreign labor; encourages extension of substandard conditions for both domestic and imported farm workers.	Senate passed Ellender bill (S. 984) which CIO opposed as too weak. House Rules Comm. now has bill.	Urge Senators and Representatives to oppose bills unless amended to provide fair labor standards for all migrant farm workers.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Now before Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C. Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Bell Accused Of Tapping CWA Lines

CIO Communications Workers said last week that it now has "proof positive" that the Bell System taps private telephones of union officials.

The evidence was revealed in hearings last week before an NLRB trial examiner in New Cumberland, W. Va. A transcript of the proceedings has just now become available to the union.

The NLRB case involved discharge of a Weirton, W. Va., CWA steward, Lois D. Patty, who had been employed by the telephone company for three and a half years. She had become an active union steward only a few months before her discharge.

The discharge took place in February, 1950, over a year ago; the NLRB has been investigating the case ever since. Formal hearings took place from May 9 to 17, 1951.

MISS PATTY testified that she had been warned by fellow workers to be careful about what she said over the telephone in her home, since the company had tapped the line by means of an "observation shoe" connected to the central office equipment that served her home telephone.

This warning came to her on Feb. 16, 1950 on her day off. Miss Patty further testified that she checked this equipment when she went to work the next day and found the shoe removed, but laying on the equipment nearby.

Disclosure of the wire-tapping brought about a motion to amend the complaint to include company "surveillance" of union officials.

The company first made a formal denial of any wire-tapping. It offered two witnesses to impeach the credibility of Miss Patty. These two company witnesses, Warren Miller and Vernon Wright, both central office repairmen in the Weirton exchange, instead of supporting the company, corroborated Miss Patty.

THE COMPANY then took a complete about-face. The company attorney, Howard R. Klostermeyer, placed Miss Rose H. Harrick, Weirton chief operator, on the stand and sought to establish that she had ordered the wire-tapping "to protect the service."

Miss Harrick said: "As chief operator of the Weirton exchange, I feel that I should do anything that I see fit, in any manner, to protect the service of the Weirton central office."

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, commented:

"We have believed for years that the Bell System doesn't hesitate to tap the private telephones of union officials and union headquarters telephones to get information concerning the union. This information is then used to give the company an advantage at the bargaining table. In this West Virginia case, we now have proof positive that our assumption was correct."

Beirne said belief that the company taps union telephones often has forced the union to turn to the telegraph and the United States mails when secrecy is required. He said:

"It is a sad commentary on the integrity of company officials when union officials must fear company surveillance of all their private telephone conversations. Decent labor relations are impossible under these conditions."

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

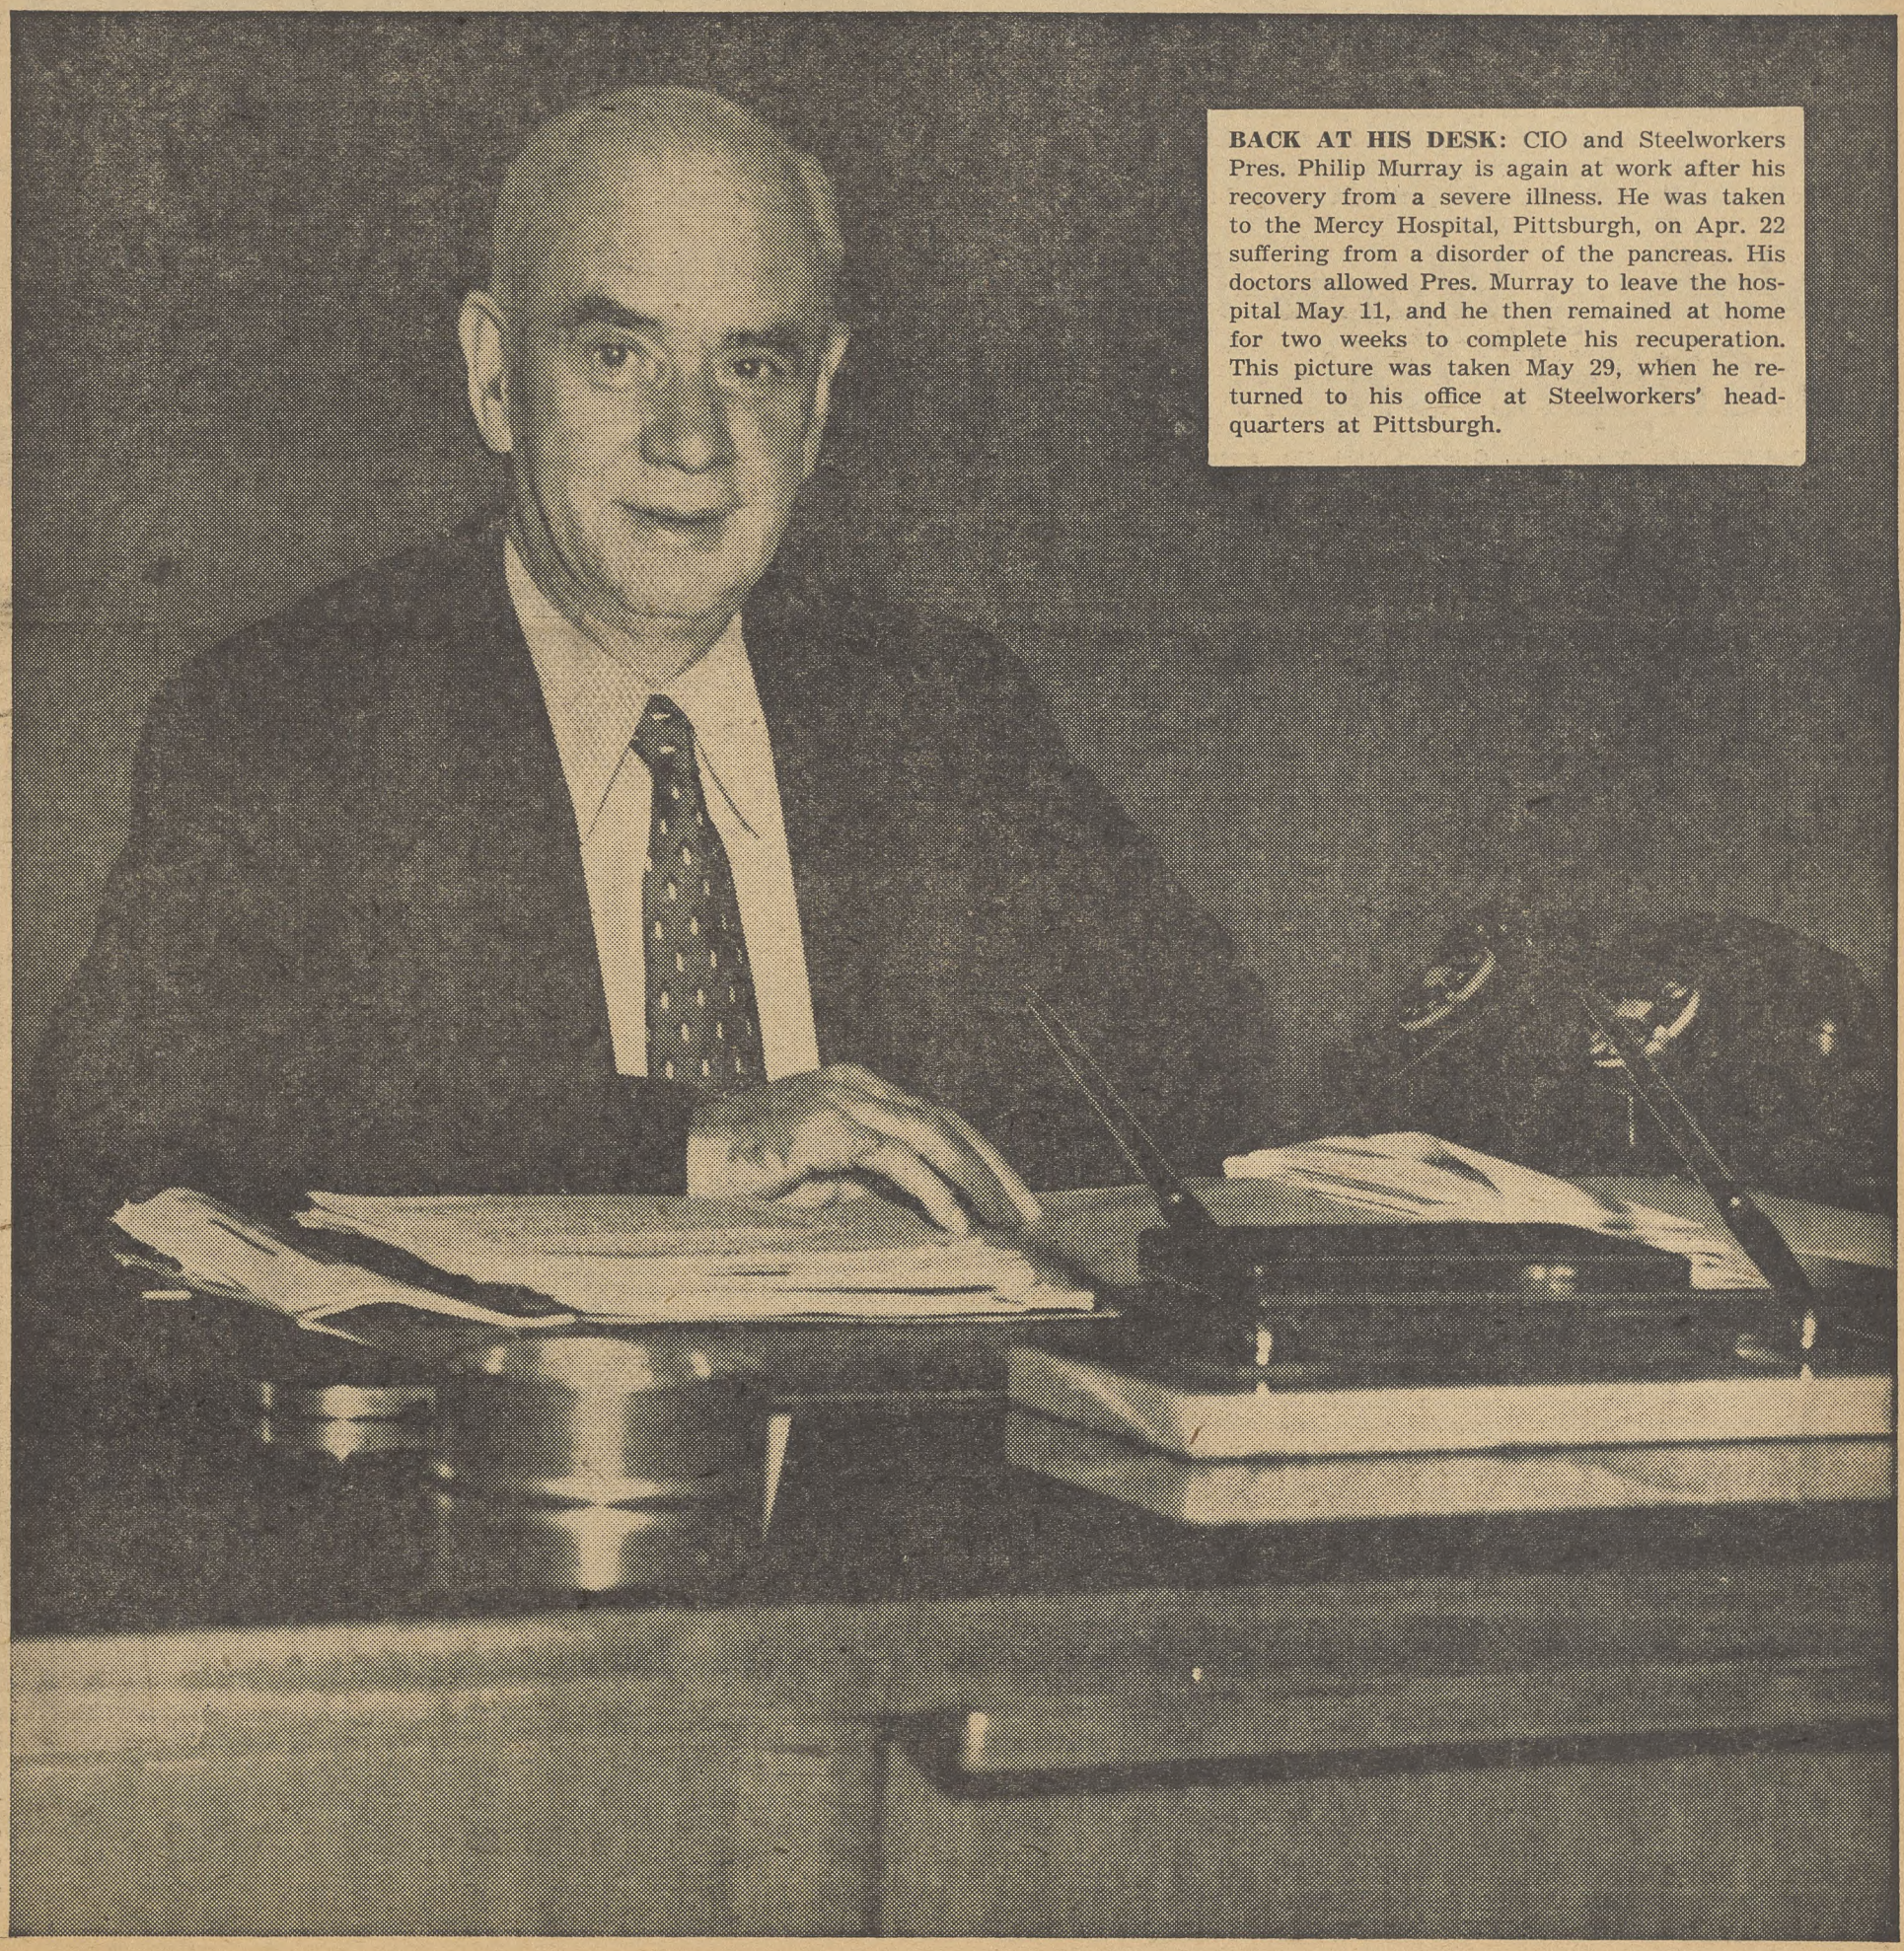
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 4, 1951 82 No. 23

Three-Front Battle Against U.S. Public On Price Controls, Rents, Disputes

(See Stories on Inside Pages)



BACK AT HIS DESK: CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray is again at work after his recovery from a severe illness. He was taken to the Mercy Hospital, Pittsburgh, on Apr. 22 suffering from a disorder of the pancreas. His doctors allowed Pres. Murray to leave the hospital May 11, and he then remained at home for two weeks to complete his recuperation. This picture was taken May 29, when he returned to his office at Steelworkers' headquarters at Pittsburgh.

Price War May Save Consumers $1 Billion

CUSTOMERS TAKE ADVANTAGE of New York City Price War. Macy's department store started the war by cutting prices as a result of a Supreme Court decision two weeks ago. The court held that state "fair trade" laws cannot force a retailer in inter-state commerce to abide by a no-price-cutting agreement which he did not sign. Note the clerks posting a new and reduced price.

AFTER MACY'S CUT PRICES, Gimbel's followed suit, Macy's cut again. The war was on in full bloom as several other large stores joined in. Here is a scene at Gimbel's where shoppers are gathered around the electrical appliance counter. American consumers may possibly save $1 billion annually if the price cuts spread to other cities.

Goldberg Warns NAM Aims To Cripple Union Action

THE NATIONAL Association of Manufacturers and some segments of industry are using the present national emergency to destroy collective bargaining, the CIO told Congress on May 31.

"The NAM knows that labor supports fully our defense effort, and that in the present situation it will employ its only weapon—the strike—only with the utmost reluctance," Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO General Counsel, testified before the Senate Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations.

He charged that the NAM hopes that use by labor of the strike weapon would result in government intervention, and that with labor thus restrained, management, in the absence of governmental disputes settlement machinery, would "be free to write its own ticket."

GOLDBERG'S testimony fully refuted an "intentionally misleading" pamphlet which the NAM has sent to members of Congress in an effort to destroy the powers of the Wage Stabilization Board to handle non-economic disputes.

Two days before, the NAM had rejected the committee's request that it testify concerning its statements. Its refusal caused Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), chairman of the subcommittee investigating the wage stabilization program, to boil over.

To make matters worse, a statement which the NAM submitted in lieu of an appearance was the same one that it had presented earlier to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

"We are not collecting documents for other committees," Humphrey exclaimed. "I call on the NAM to come before this committee expeditiously."

In his appearance before the committee, the CIO general counsel lashed out sharply at criticism of WSB powers by the NAM. Chamber of Commerce and other business groups.

Goldberg told the committee that the powers given to the board by President Truman to recommend settlement of non-economic disputes provide necessary means for promoting industrial peace during the national emergency.

"THE NAM'S concern," Goldberg said, "thus is not, as it would have you believe, to maintain free collective bargaining but rather to use the current emergency to secure for employers unfettered unilateral control over the terms and conditions of employment."

Turning to the NAM pamphlet, Goldberg said that it "gave the impression . . . by innuendo and direct statement that the President was serving the interests of labor only" in order the Wage Board to handle non-wage disputes.

That, he said, is a "misstatement of fact."

The CIO attorney pointed out that the formula for handling of non-economic disputes by the Wage Board was adopted by the President after a 12-4 vote of recommendation by the National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy.

Relating the history of the origin of this proposal, Goldberg revealed that it represented a compromise agreement which had been worked out on Apr. 12 by the eight industry and labor members.

"THE FOUR industry members on the board all indicated that the compromise proposal was acceptable to them, and stated that they would endeavor to secure the acquiescence of the organizations they represented," Goldberg disclosed.

As it developed, however, the industry members "were unable to secure the consent of the National Association of Manufacturers or of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, and therefore voted against the proposal when it came up for final action."

Sen Humphrey told Goldberg that he agreed that the WSB was necessary for settling disputes in the present emergency.

It is the "job of the government," he said, "to provide some kind of means to provide settlement of the disputes where the Taft-Hartley Act is inoperative," which is the case in connection with most defense production.

Following Goldberg's testimony, Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston took the stand before a House subcommittee holding similar hearings. He told the committee that he also favored giving WSB the power of a fact-finding board in labor disputes.

Unfair For Mayor To Speak Against Union, NLRB Says

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board has been pretty lenient with plant owners who make anti-union speeches to their employes in an effort to keep a union out of a mill.

But when the Southland Manufacturing Co. of Benson, N. C., recently brought in the town's mayor and the cashier of the local bank in an attempt to discourage the workers from joining the CIO Clothing Workers, the board put its collective foot down on the practice.

The NLRB ruled that a meeting of Southland employes addressed by Mayor L. L. Levinson and bank cashier W. R. Strickland in August, 1949, was called by the company.

It further held that threats made at the meeting that the plant would be closed down and the machinery moved out constituted an unfair labor practice, since they were made with the company's knowledge.

The company was also found guilty of spying on the union and the workers and was ordered to stop interfering in the organizational activity of its employes.

Swing To Aid 'Voice'

Raymond Gram Swing, noted reporter and radio news analyst, has become a special political commentator for the Voice of America. He will advise the Voice on its entire news and commentary broadcast, and also will write and deliver interpretative broadcasts, accordings to the State Dept.

NAM CHALLENGED: The CIO answered efforts of the National Association of Manufacturers to discredit the disputes powers of the Wage Stabilization Board at hearings before a Senate Labor Subcommittee last week. Left to right, front row: Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Subcommittee Chairman; Helen Berthelot, Michigan, of the Communications Workers; Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO General Counsel, who testified; and John Panko, Ohio, Steelworkers; rear row, Fred Sheridan, Pennsylvania, CWA; Tom Cooke, Connecticut, Auto Workers; Harold Edwards, Kansas City, Steelworkers; William Allen, Illinois, UAW.

FIRST REPRESENTATIVE of labor to return to the Economic Stabilization Agency since the withdrawal was Secy.Treas. David J. McDonald (left) of the CIO Steelworkers. He is shown with ECA Administrator Eric Johnston, who is swearing him in as his special assistant.

McDonald Is Sworn In As Aide To Johnston

SECY.-TREAS David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers was sworn in last week as special assistant to Eric Johnston, head of the Economic Stabilization Administration.

McDonald's appointment was made by Johnston after nomination by CIO Pres. Philip Murray through the United Labor Policy Committee.

His swearing in marked the first return of labor representatives to ESA since the labor group withdrew from defense agencies Feb. 28 in protest against the failure at that time of heads of the mobilization effort to listen to labor's advice.

Late in April the ULPC, after weeks of negotiation, agreed to send union spokesmen back into the agencies.

Pres. George Harrison of the AFL Railway Clerks will soon become special assistant to Charles E. Wilson, former General Electric president who heads the Office of Defense Mobilization.

Last week the ULPC nominated two other union officials for national posts in the defense program.

Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers will become special assistant to Manly Fleishmann, who heads the important National Production Authority. This agency has a major role in allocating scarce materials for production purposes.

At the same time the ULPC nominated Joseph Keenan to a deputy post in the Defense Production Administration. Keenan, former head of AFL political organizations, is now secretary of the AFL Metal Trades Dept.

McDonald was sworn into office by Johnston at ceremonies in the agency office.

LATER, HE told newspaper men that he "hopes to be of some help to Johnston in the handling of the serious problems that face us."

"I'm going to do the best I can to see that some effective price control is made possible for the people of America," McDonald said. "I am going to do my best to represent labor's point of view on prices, rent controls and other economic matters."

McDonald said he would "give the job all I've got—if necessary 40 hours a week here in Washington and 40 hours a week at Steel Headquarters in Pittsburgh."

He announced that James Harvey, of the Steelworkers' staff in Pittsburgh, had been brought to Washington to act as his assistant at ESA.

IN DEFENSE POST

To be sworn in soon as deputy administrator of the National Production Authority was O. A. Knight, president of the CIO Oil Workers.

County Gets Rent Curb For The First Time

Rent controls went into effect for the first time on June 1 in Hancock County, Ind.

Housing Expediter Tighe Woods said it was the first time since the invasion of South Korea that controls had been installed in an area where they had not before existed. The move was made at the behest of military authorities, local businessmen and the Hancock County Rent Advisory Board to meet the threat of rent increases and a housing shortage.

CIO Charges 'Shameful' Plot By Business Against Controls

By MILTON PLUMB

BIG BUSINESS has tried—unsuccessfully—to persuade organized labor to join it in a "shameful conspiracy against the public interest," the CIO informed Congress last week.

"We charge these gentlemen of big business with a complete irresponsibility and a narrow greed that could completely wreck our defense program if their ideas were adopted," Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey told the Senate Banking and Currency Committee on May 30.

Urging continuation and strengthening of the mobilization controls in the Defense Production Act, Carey said that big business is attempting to "bribe" organized labor by offering higher wages if the unions will join in "scuttling price controls."

"We of the CIO reject emphatically this offer of a conspiracy against the public interest. We will have no part in this shameful deal," Carey shouted.

Asked by Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) for an example of such a proposal, Carey cited the recent offer of Westinghouse to grant a 9c wage increase provided the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical Workers would go to the Office of Price Stabilization and get approval for charging the increase off in higher prices.

Pointing out that Westinghouse profits, after taxes, are running 506% of 1939, Carey charged the company with offering a wage increase only if the government defense agencies and consumers paid the bill.

"We see in this big business program simply a bribe offered to labor—a bribe that if we join with them in scuttling price controls, business would be willing to share the loot with us," Carey said.

"Both of us together could then gouge the consumer, be it individuals or government, and labor could then get its 'cut' in much higher wages."

The CIO spokesman called upon Congress to "emphatically reject that counsel of narrow, irresponsible greed." He said:

"We ask you to frame a rounded program dealing with materials, production, prices, wages, credits, which will be realistic in terms of our goals and in which each segment of the population can know what its responsibilities are for the next two years and can feel a sense of justice that other groups are bearing their full share.

"We ask for a program that recognizes that basic to national defense is the health, welfare and economic security of the American family and that anything that undermines it is contrary to national defense."

Sen. Schoeppel (R. Kans.) said that he was impressed by Carey's statements concerning industry's hoarding of scarce materials, and called for the names of the firms involved.

Committee Chairman Maybank (D. S.C.) then disclosed that he has asked the FBI to check on reports of hoarding he has received. Sens. Benton (D. Conn.) and Moody demanded a full investigation.

CAREY said that he was sure that the committee could get the information it wanted from government agencies. He added that if the government couldn't supply the facts and figures on hoarding, the CIO could.

"I think that you will find that the people involved are all members of the National Association of Manufacturers," Carey stated.

The CIO statement also attacked the "scandalous" situation surrounding the issuance of tax amortization certificates by the National Production Authority. Carey pointed out that nearly $5 billions of such certificates have been issued in the last six months, and that half of them were granted to only 20 companies.

"These corporations will save and the American taxpayer will pay about $600 million a year for the next five years for this privilege," he said. "On what's already been done, we, the taxpayers, will pay 60% of the cost of the plants in five years and they will belong to the corporations, free and clear."

Benton interrupted to say that Carey had cited only an average figure and that some of the big corporations will save as much as 77% of the cost.

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) reminded the chairman that the NPA had been asked to provide information to the committee on its policies in issuing such certificates. Pounding his desk for emphasis, he demanded immediate action and said that "the NPA has obviously been guilty of either unnecessary delay in this matter or of wilful disregard of this committee because of a desire to postpone action."

MAYBANK immediately directed the committee staff to obtain the information NPA has been withholding.

Senators of both parties congratulated Carey upon his "fine statement" when he had concluded.

Perhaps heartened by the inroads against congressional apathy which organized labor's strong fight has already made, the Office of Price Stabilization announced that it was pushing its price control program another step forward.

It issued additional price posting orders so that within a month, posted prices will be displayed for commodities and services making up the major portion of consumer expenditures.

By midnight of May 31, most retail stores were required to file charts with OPS listing their ceiling prices for household goods and other items. Since May 14 retail meat dealers have been required to display individual prices for cuts of beef by grade.

THE CIO is due to testify again before the Senate committee on June 4. Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto union and Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil workers will appear at that time.

Meanwhile, delegations from CIO international unions have been coming to Washington to urge Congress to enact stronger controls. Last week, for example, representatives of the CIO Auto, Textile, Steel and Communications unions were on hand to hear the CIO testify.

Local unions also were beginning to send delegations and petitions. On June 5, for example, Local 1-S of the CIO Department Store Workers, representing 8300 Macy's Store workers in New York, will visit New York City's representatives.

DEMAND END to metal hoarding: Left to right, Sens. Douglas (D. Ill.) and Moody (D. Mich.) discuss some of the issues raised by CIO testimony last week at Senate hearings on the Defense Production Act with a delegation from the CIO Steelworkers that includes John Proto, Harold Edwards, John Davis, John Panko and Mike Petrak. The group heard CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey charge the metal producers with holding back output of essential defense materials to protect their monopolies and keep prices high.

Gang-Up On The Public

This is the circus season—up and down the land the medicine men, the sideshow artists and the barkers are plying their trade.

Nowhere—but nowhere—are they doing it as successfully as on Capitol Hill in Washington. A stream of big business spokesmen is testifying—and their agents are lobbying—for a program of appeasement of corporations and special interest groups.

The fast-talking artists employed by the corporation interests have spilled hundreds of thousands of words into the record, which serve to hide the true nature of some very weird proposals.

What are the corporations asking?

• They want price controls removed. Yet even a child could figure out that a time when the government is pouring billions into the defense program, prices will go up still more unless Uncle Sam holds down the lid. Without price controls, family living costs will head for the stratosphere.

• They want rent controls ended. Yet in dozens of areas around the nation, dwelling costs have already spiralled. Families of GI's and defense workers are faced with the prospect of paying far more than they can afford for shelter. And much of that extortionate rent load is being placed on sub-standard homes and apartments.

• They want to smash unions. The National Association of Manufacturers wants to strip the government of present powers to help settle labor-management disputes. Why? So that there will be no alternative to using the harshest, most disreputable sections of the Taft-Hartley Act against unions honestly striving to protect the welfare of workers during this emergency program.

These are the issues involved in the fight to extend and improve the Defense Production Act—the country's basic anti-inflation law, which expires on June 30.

It is a bold and cynical effort on the part of big business interests. If it does succeed, it will play havoc with Uncle Sam's ability to prepare his defense against totalitarian strength and aggression. It will also play havoc with the family budget of every low and middle-income consumer in the nation.

It's time the people took up the challenge of the special-interest medicine men—and let Congress hear their views. If the people don't talk up, Congress may get the false idea that the topsy-turvy economic views of the Chamber of Commerce and the NAM are the voice of America.

Well-Merited Award

There are plenty of good reasons to applaud the granting of the Sidney Hillman Foundation Award for "Meritorious Public Service" to Senator Herbert Lehman (D. N.Y.)

In the citation the Foundation noted that Sen. Lehman's "high moral integrity, his fight for civil rights without regard for his own political fortunes, his humane and liberal philosophy, and his deep love of country have won for him widespread recognition as one of the great Americans of our time."

The praise is more than justified. Those who have watched Mr. Lehman fight the good fight in the United States Senate know that the words of the citation are no flowery exaggeration. In an era when the McCarthys, Wherrys and Tafts too often get the headlines, Senator Lehman symbolizes the best in our democratic society.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV June 4, 1951 No. 23

About Face!

The Battle In Korea

There's been much heat and little light about the situation in the Far East. To help Americans get the facts needed for sound judgment, CIO Political Action Committee has issued a new edition of its pamphlet "Battle in Korea." A few questions and answers from the booklet are printed here. You can get the pamphlet by writing to CIO-PAC, 1346 Connecticut Ave., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

What are we doing in Korea?

President Truman declared on April 11, 1951:

"In the simplest terms, what we are doing in Korea is this: we are trying to prevent a third world war. . . . So far, by fighting a limited war in Korea we have prevented agression from succeeding and bringing on a general war."

How can we prevent a third world war by fighting in Korea?

Korea is the third test by the Russians of the determination of the United States and our democratic allies to resist aggression. The first test was in Greece where we proved we were not afraid to meet force with force. The second test was in Berlin where we proved we could not be provoked into war but that we would not retreat from the threat of war. We are proving in Korea that we are still not afraid to meet force with force and that aggression will not win.

By stamping out the small fires we prevent the blaze of war from engulfing the world.

Are we succeeding in this aim?

By fighting in Korea we have upset the Communist time-table with respect to Indo-China, Malaya and other countries in Asia. We have given the free world warning and time to build up their defenses. We have placed a strain on the Communist dictatorships which must have victories to stay in power.

We have unmasked the phony Soviet peace appeal.

We have strengthened beyond measure the collective will of free nations for collective security.

Could we not end the war in Korea quicker by bombing China and Manchuria?

There is no indication we would gain any military advantage in Korea by this course. If we did this we would bring about the situation we are trying to avoid—a general war—and we would be playing Russia's game. We would tie ourselves down in Asia and leave Western Europe to the mercy of the aggressor.

What interest does labor have in foreign policy?

Foreign policy and domestic policy are two sides of the same coin. Foreign policy is a logical and necessary extension of our program at home and its effects are felt at home as well as abroad.

The reactionaries who fight every inch of the American program in the United States are by and large the very same people who criticize and obstruct the foreign policy of our country.

The people who fight every move to raise the living standards of Americans are indifferent to the starvation of the people of other countries.

The people who obstructed President Roosevelt when he tried to meet the threat to peace in the thirties, now object and find fault with President Truman as he tries to save the peace of the world in the fifties.

What can we do?

We at home can—and we must—support the policy of our country with understanding and vigor.

We can—and we must—see that our President and our envoys have what it takes to do their job. These goals require a full mobilization of American strength. We can see that this effort is not slowed down by narrow-minded politicians or by profit-minded big business executives. We can see that mobilization is carried forward by a full partnership of all the American people.

We can see to it that the precious American rights of fair comment and reasonable opposition are not perverted by reckless and greedy men into partisan sniping and political sabotage of the best interests of our country. We can, by our votes, send to Congress, men and women who believe in democracy and who will work to support, without partisanship, our government in the conduct of our foreign affairs.

Beef Trust Has No Real 'Beefs'

By NAT GOLDFINGER
CIO Research Department

THE FACTS about the government's beef price regulation have gotten lost in the rumpus created by the cattlemen and their allies against that price order.

Representatives of the rich and powerful beef lobby — many of them in boots and spurs — are spending much money and full time in Washington to convince government officials that it is wrong to control the price of beef.

Here's what's been happening: On May 22, the Office of Price Stabilization ordered a 10% rollback of prices paid to the cattlemen. At that time, cattle prices were at 150% of parity — 50% above what has long been considered a just measure of a fair return to the cattle growers. The rollback cut cattle prices to 135% of parity—35% more than "fair."

Benefits of the May 22 rollback went to the middlemen — meatpackers, wholesalers and retailers. Middlemen's profit margins were increased in order to relieve the squeeze which government officials said they have felt since the January price freeze.

ACCORDING to the OPS time-schedule, there will be a 4½% rollback on Aug. 1, and another similar rollback on Oct. 1. These two scheduled orders will roll back prices at the retail butcher shop. If OPS goes ahead with its attempt to control beef, retail prices should be cut back by an average of about 9c a pound by October. At that time, beef prices to feeders will be at about 125% of parity — 25% more than "fair."

Meanwhile, the gentlemen from the cattle-growing industry are posing as "poor farmers" in a fight with a "big, bad government." The cattlemen, however, have as much relationship to family farmers as Wall St. brokers have to a page boy on the New York Stock Exchange.

Cattle growing is big business. The beef on your table probably comes from a steer raised on a huge ranch of several hundred thousand acres. Very likely, it was fed up to selling weight on a large commercial feed lot, which quarters hundreds of steers at a time. The ranchers and feeders are a comparatively small group, but they account for a large chunk — about one dollar in five — of agricultural income. It is a business — dominated not by small farmers but by rich ranch-owners and commercial feed-lot operators.

FIGURES of the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture show that in the past 11 years, feeders in the corn belt have made an average $20.83 profit for every head of cattle they sell. Their profits in the past 12 months have been the highest in history — $68.54 per head. This is $25 more profit per head of cattle than in the plush 1946-47 season, after OPA price controls were killed.

The 10% rollback of May 22 has cut back profits per head of cattle to $47.69, according to the government's agriculture experts. Yet the story the cattlemen tell the public is that they are losing money. What they mean is that instead of making all-time record profits, they are earning 129% more than the 11-year average profit per head.

Estimated profits per head to commercial feeders in the mid-west "corn belt," after the August 1 rollback, will be $31.94. That's 53% greater than the $20.82 average profits since the 1939-40 season.

Some few feeders, it is true, will be squeezed by the August 1 and October 1 rollbacks. If they bought cattle at high prices between January and April, 1951, they will take losses on each head they sell after the August 1 rollback.

But the vast majority of feeders bought cattle at the lower prices in effect before last January. And they are shrewd enough businessmen to sell their high-price cattle at a profit before the August 1 rollback. Any losses to large commercial feeders on cattle bought after January will be offset by good-sized profits on cattle bought last year.

Even after the third scheduled rollback on October 1, beef prices to the feeders will be 23% higher than in January, 1950. The estimated farm price of cattle in October will be $24.50 per hundred-weight, compared with $19.50 in January, 1950, and $23.80 in June when Korea was invaded.

The cattlemen have no case in their attempt to exempt beef prices from control. That is the reason for their threats to withhold cattle from the market and to club the government into submission.

* * *

The beef regulation is the first significant OPS order to establish firm dollars-and-cents ceiling prices at the retail store. Within the next few weeks, each store will be required to post the OPS controlled ceiling price for each cut of beef. And if the government moves ahead with its further rollbacks, the consumer will pay less for beef.

THE government regulation is eminently fair. It provides more than fair prices to the cattlemen, packers, wholesalers and retailers. Benefits to the consumer are yet to come and they will be small.

But the cattlemen and their allies have made beef price control a central point in the fight for a stabilization program. For if the government fails to control beef prices, the cost of living will continue to rise.

In fact, there can be no economic stability without control over the price of beef.

Demos Warned To Live Up To Pledges To Keep Labor's Aid

DEMOCRATIC party officials were told to put the heat on party representatives in Congress for enactment of the Democratic Party platform if they hope to retain the full enthusiasm of working men and women.

This was the advice given by four CIO union officials to Democratic state chairmen and national committeemen attending the recent western and midwestern states conference in Denver.

CIO Vice President O. A. Knight, speaking on the foreign affairs panel, cautioned that the Democratic party representatives at times have slipped from the principles upon which the Marshall Plan was founded.

In some instances, he said, aid has been "used to give fat profits to a privileged few at the expense of the majority of the people."

HE ALSO accused members of the State Dept. of "winning friends among the government and industrial representatives of foreign countries" while neglecting the small business men, the farmer and the workers of those same countries.

Secy.-Treas. C. W. Werkau of the Communications Workers and Secy.-Treas. T. M. McCormick of the Oil Workers sounded the same note in discussing the defense mobilization program in this country.

McCormick cited appointment of industry representatives to high posts in the mobilization program and warned that appeasement of the business groups would win the Democratic Party no votes.

Werkau said the Democratic Party "may have alienated the affections of 16 million workers by its failure to enact a strong mobilization program."

"The Democratic party has, on the surface, at least, not been too well represented by its legislators in Congress," Werkau said.

If workers do not receive equitable treatment in the mobilization program, he added, there will be "no production worthy of the name."

Roy L. Reuther, co-director of the CIO Auto Workers' Political Action Dept., discussing defense mobilization and the national economy, declared:

"Labor is doing its utmost to arouse the American people to the danger of a major home front disaster that continuance of inflation and rising prices and rents would bring about . . .

"But what is the Democratic Party in the various states doing to back up the President and Chairman Boyle, to avert this disaster, to get economic stabilization, to get real price and rent control even at this late date, 11 months after Korea?

"From where we are, it seems to us that many Democratic Party leaders and representatives in Congress are doing very little."

As far as UAW is concerned, Reuther told the assembled Democrats, "our convention voted that what we do politically in 1952 will be determined next spring on the basis of performance and conditions then existing."

"WE SUGGEST," the UAW official concluded, "that the Democratic Party reaffirm its fine 1948 program, which is almost as good as new since it has been so slightly used, and that, beginning now with the Defense Production Bill pending before congressional committees, it begin to act like a responsible political party."

International Friendship, Not Matrimony, Object Of New Kind Of Correspondence Club

The workers in Europe want the lowdown on the workers of the United States—how they and their families work and live.

So the Economic Cooperation Administration is establishing an international correspondence club and cordially invites all U. S. workers to join.

Dues: none.

Object: to write letters to European workers in the same industry, offering international friendship and a chance to carry democracy's message to the front line trenches of the war of ideas.

The object definitely is not matrimony, ECA asserts.

"In fact," it says rather plaintively, "it would be much better if all the members of this new correspondence club are happily married and raising a family of healthy kids under American ideals and standards, and are anxious to tell the world all about it."

In return for their letters, American workers will receive personal accounts of living and working conditions in Western Europe. The will learn the ideals and goals of the workers, and will make new friends across the sea.

"The foes of democracy are seeking to sell a bill of bad goods to the workers of Free Europe," said ECA.

"They have given a grossly distorted picture of American life; they have painted American laboring people as 'slaves to a machine'; they have accused American labor unions of serving as tools to management; they have said American living standards are not good.

"Mr. and Mrs. American Labor can answer every one of those charges."

European workers want to know how we live—about our housing and its facilities. They want to know how much we are paid for how many hours of work, and how much overtime we earn, how much time we have for recreation, if we have autos, how often we go to the movies and where we spend our vacations.

In this correspondence club, a steelworker should write to a steelworker, a textile worker to a textile workers, etc., so that the letters will be exchanged by counterparts.

ECA advises not to worry about the language: if you can write in a European language, so much the better, but if you can't, your letter will be translated. It asks that you send along a photo of the family if there's one handy—and be sure to include name and address so as to get an answer.

Address the letters to: A European Worker (identifying the industry), c/o ECA-Labor Information, 800 Connecticut Ave., Room 409, Washington 25, D. C.

GM Tries To Educate Workers—In GM Way of Life

Slick Booklets Distributed As Come-On

By BERNARD J. SCHUCK

GENERAL MOTORS would do well to call one of its top high-salaried executives "Vice President in Charge of Comic Books and Other Employe Propaganda."

For GM distributes comic books—along with other literature—by the carload to its workers. The books may be comic, but there is nothing comic about the intent of this gigantic propaganda barrage.

Bernard J. Schuck is editor of The Lampmaker, published by Local 663 of the CIO Auto Workers, whose members work in General Motors' Guide Lamp Division at Anderson, Ind.

The company has an elaborate system of in-plant propaganda set up throughout its widely distributed operations. Gaudy "information" racks are spotted here and there in each plant. They are filled with new pamphlets on an average of every 10 days.

Signs reading "Have you read this? . . . Take one—it's free . . ." invite the GM employe to sip at the spring of the company's selected well of knowledge.

'Educators' At Work

This program of "educating" the worker is carried on in a leisurely manner which contrasts sharply with GM's production methods. The "campaign" is now well into its second year. GM uses the sandwich method: a slice of bologna between two innocent pamphlets.

Three types of literature are poured into the hands of workers through these information racks.

First, there's the innocent, pleasant and Pollyannaish booklet that is helpful or amusing—pamphlets like Making the Most of Your Yard, Singing Sam of Guide Post, Vegetables In Your Garden, Better Bowling, Popular Music USA, How to Have Fun on the Highway, How To Raise Flowers, etc.

Pamphlets As Bait

Pamphlets like these are used for the come-on. Slick paper, gay colors, profuse illustrations, cartoons, photographs—all the expensive details of the printing trade make them attractive.

But innocent as they are—and informative, educational or entertaining—they are the sugar coating for the ill-tasting pills which are the real gimmick of the GM propaganda mill. It is the purpose of these attractive pamphlets to get the worker into the habit of watching for the new ones as they appear in the racks.

The second group that finds its way into the racks is concerned with GM's own brand of "what a great place GM is to work," the old alma mater stuff, "I love my job"—and how GM and corporations like it are the backbone as well as head and shoulders of this great country. Recent pamphlets in this series include A Look At GM and Both Swords And Ploughshares.

Naturally, GM tries to belittle its own share of the profit pie, which last year was only $811,600,000.

The third group of booklets—and this is the vicious part—includes propaganda of the type used by the American Medical Association, Committee for Constitutional Government, Foundation for Economic Education and similar anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal tub-thumpers.

Fairless Turns Scribe

Included in the third group in recent weeks have been Quicksands, by Dr. Christopher Daniels; The Mistakes That Led to Korea, by Rep. Walter H. Judd (R., Minn.); and Target for Termites, by Benjamin F. Fairless, president of U. S. Steel.

GM has also undertaken to teach its employes the brand of economics that will best serve its interests, through a series by Dr. Alfred P. Hakke, of Rutgers Univ. In one of these the GM worker, named Joe for the purpose of giving the series a title, is told "You have heard it said that 'human rights are more important than property rights.' This sounds good, but is actually nonsense."

COME-ON pamphlets (above) are used by General Motors to get employes into the habit of taking literature from plant information racks in the hope that they'll grab—and read—big business propaganda in the booklets like those at right.

U. S. Finds 'Right' Wall Color Aids Productivity

THE SPITOON cleaner was unhappy. He was—according to his boss in the U. S. Government Printing Office—also one of the least satisfactory of employes.

He "loafed on the job," got into fights with his co-workers, and had one of the worst sick leave records in the Government.

—But he wasn't fired.

Rather, his "working environment" was improved.

Today, says Willard A. Anderson, GPO plant engineer, "He is one of the best employes of the Government. All we did was to paint up his work room, give him better lights. a nice desk and improved ventilation.

"Now that spitoon cleaner is prouder of his job than anyone else I know."

How this transformation was brought was told at the second "Program on the Relation of Environment to Work," held May 23 at the Library of Congress. Representatives of four federal government agencies gave "progress reports" on what they have done since the first conference on the subject last November.

New Approach

"Improved working environment" is a term now being used widely by more progressive government administrators and an increasing number of private employers. Essentially, it means applying the proper scientific know-how to four basic factors of every work area.

It involves using the "right" color on walls and furnishings, good seeing conditions, improved ventilation and elimination of noise.

Management experts, of course, have studied each of these elements separately for many years. The important thing about the new approach is its insistence that none of them should be treated separately, as has usually been the case.

The "improved work environment" movement places its first emphasis upon providing greater worker comfort through improved facilities in the office or plant. There is no "speed up" connected with it, although worker output increases whenever its methods are applied.

The employe benefits directly.

On the other hand, mangement supporters point out that the great increase in efficiency that results from better working environment more than offsets the comparatively modest cost.

Since many union contracts now provide "productivity wage increases" for workers as the result of greater output, both labor and management may benefit from a wider application of the program's few simple principles.

"The working environment must be considered as a unit," says A. H. Stricker, one of the country's top management consultants, who, more than anyone else, deserves credit for founding the movement.

Stricker discussed the matter of proper seeing conditions to illustrate his point.

"When lighting over a work area is poor, the usual solution is to substitute a brighter light bulb. That can be the worst possible thing to do," he contends.

"For example, if the working surface is highly reflective, like a glass top desk or a piece of polished machinery, the brighter light will only cause glare and contribute to blindness."

It Isn't Hard

Stricker points out that better seeing conditions can often be obtained by merely changing the color of the walls and ceiling, by placing lights in a better position, etc. Since this is the case, he maintains, "the important thing as far as workers' comfort is concerned is the correct combination of all the factors making up the surroundings."

Stricker points out that a program of this kind could only be tested by the government.

"Imagine what would happen," he said, "if an efficiency expert for a lighting company began to say that to get the best results from good illumination, an employer also must consider color, ventilation and noise factors. That happens to be the case, but no industry association would ever let an expert employed to promote its pet interest say so."

The new movement got started only because Luther H. Evans, Librarian of Congress, approved testing Stricker's ideas in practice.

One day Stricker called on John C. L. Andreassen, Director of Administration at the Library of Congress. He pointed to a glass top on a desk and said, "There's only one remedy for that."

"I wondered about the man's sanity," Andreassen recalls, "when, after I had asked him what the 'remedy' was, he handed me a hammer and told me how to use it.

"Then he told me about the harmful effects of the reflected glare of the glass, however, and I sat down and listened to him for over two hours."

Wrote 'Prescriptions'

Andreassen was wrestling, in cooperation with the Architect of the Capitol, with the problem of "modernizing" the 50-year-old library building. He hired Stricker as the library's management consultant.

"Doc" Stricker immediately made a number of prescriptions. The results to date have been told by Merton J. Foley, the Library's Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds.

For a period of several months, there was more painting, more carpentry work, and more electrical installations than at any other time in the Library's history. "Sixty old desks which could be described as little better than junk" were rebuilt according to Stricker's designs to serve special functions.

Library employes in those areas selected for test treament responded enthusiastically. Over 100 of them made recommendations to the Library administration in connection with the experiment.

In one unit of the Library—the Tabulating Section — Stricker's planning resulted in a 40% reduction in noise and a 35% saving in floor space.

"There was also a considerable increase in worker output," according to Andreassen. "Efficiency definitely increased and errors have fallen off considerably."

Andreassen said that he could not cite figures on the increase in worker output because "I refused to have production records kept so that our real purpose—providing greater employe comfort—could not be misunderstood. We know for a certainty that happy employes are better workers."

Surprising Results

Figures kept by another government agency, however, do indicate surprising results.

At the Bureau of Internal Revenue, the card punching section which processes income tax returns had asked Congress for $13,000 more annually in salaries for clerks to meet an increased workload.

Congress asked Stricker's advice, and his "improved work environment" technique was applied at the bureau. A total of $6000 was spent in repainting, improving lighting and redesigning equipment.

"Worker morale increased tremendously," the bureau reported. It estimates that efficiency of the staff increased 55%, an amount more than sufficient to enable the original number of employes to handle the increased work without a speed up.

"The whole basis of the program," Stricker explains, "is that if you give a worker the opportunity to do good work, he will almost always do so. Most management 'experts' today are unconsciously hampering their output through poor—or no—environment planning."

Made 'em Whisper

At the Economic Cooperation Administration the effect was "deadening."

One of the clerical units was in a large room with hard floors, and there was an undue amount of noise. Following Stricker's advice, the ceilings of the room were treated with sound-absorbing material and rubber mats placed on the floor.

The work was done over the weekend. On Monday morning, the results was so effective that the people working in the room actually whispered "so that they would not break the quiet."

GOOD ENVIRONMENT: Mrs. Lee Tocci, Library of Congress secretary, inspects one of the new functional desks, which experts say will reduce fatigue, improve morale and greatly increase efficiency. Desk is light gray in color and the working surface is 29 inches from floor—about one and a half inches lower than the standard desk.

Dr. Schwarz In Mexico

Dr. Ernest Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee, is in Mexico City as a representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Union to testify before the United Nations' Economic Commission for Latin America.

The commission is considering the economical development of Latin America. Schwarz is presenting the viewpoint of free labor.

Danish Visitor Finds No 'Utopia' In U. S., Room For Improvement

THE UNITED STATES may be a Shangri-la or Utopia to many European workers, but Mrs. Karen Sorensen still takes Denmark.

Mrs. Sorensen, a 47-year-old seamstress, came to the United States a few months ago on a technical assistance tour sponsored by the Economic Cooperation Administration. Her observations after returning home are interesting—and perhaps a shock to some Americans who think this country needs no improvement.

Denmark, she found, can learn a lot about production methods from the United States, "but we can teach America considerate treatment of workers." American factories, she said she found, struck her by their "surprising lack of comfort."

"I got an impression by looking at the toilet facilities in each single workplace," she said. "On the whole they were simply shocking. Lunchrooms are rare. Workers eat their food at their machines or in their washing rooms.

"I have seen them sit on the floor of the toilet with their food. But it is said the workers themselves want it that way. The primary thing is to earn money and get away from the work places."

Of men and women she said:

"American men are very polite and kind towards women. There isn't a thing they would not make for feminine ornament or to make domestic work easier.

"But when it comes to wages, the men want to keep the best-paid jobs for themselves. They only want to make so much money in order to make life comfortable for their women. American women have a wonderful life, but they do not have much independence in their working places.

"Well, I told them, I do not call that emancipation."

Mrs. Sorensen was shocked at American industry's "lack of consideration" for women with children.

"Why," she reported, "there are practically no factory-kindergartens and no private kindergartens, either. If a single woman with children wants to work, she must find friends or relatives to look after the children or pay privately for it. To the question what she is to do about it, the reply is that is her own business."

The final blow:

"MY FINAL impression of America can be summed up in three words: Coca Cola, drugstores and cars.

"And then, an immense freedom from cares. Those people don't know what war is! There was a difference between the happy faces in America and the faces we saw in London. There they wore only taut masks. The Britons know what bombs are and they still suffer from the effects of them . . .

"It was a wonderful tour, and they have a comfortable life over there. But I do not want to change—neither as a woman nor as a worker—in spite of all the difficulties we may have in this country in both capacities."

AVC Convention Opens In N. Y. C.

Leaders of labor and liberal groups were scheduled to address the fifth national convention of the American Veterans Committee, which opened late last week at New York City.

Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.) was listed as a speaker at the banquet session. Dr. Ralph Bunche, chairman of the United Nations Trustee Council, was to bring greetings in behalf of AVC honorary members, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, AFL Pres. William Green, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Bishop Bernard Sheil.

Pres. Michael Quill of the CIO Transport Workers, Executive Vice Pres. Sam Eubanks of the CIO Newspaper Guild, and Robert R. Nathan, economist and CIO radio commentator, were to advise the national affairs panel.

PICTURESQUE BRIDGE and dam at Reutlingen, Germany, near Stuttgart, form an attractive background for some of the delegates of 11 U. S. women's organizations working and consulting with German women leaders and officials. Mrs. Marie C. Mangerson, of St. Louis, representing the CIO, is at the far right. Others are, left to right, Mrs. Perl S. Willen, National Council of Jewish Women; Mrs. Walter Rose of AFL, and a Stuttgart clubwoman.

CIO VICE PRES. ALLAN S. HAYWOOD (left) and Pres. Edward A. Gaskin of Local 900 of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee in the Panama Canal Zone naturally keep posted by reading the CIO News. Gaskin is here on a U. S. leadership grant to study labor conditions.

NAM's At It Again:

ILO Fight Looms on 'Hamstring'

THE ANNUAL Intl. Labor Conference of the Intl. Labor Organization will open June 6 in Geneva, Switzerland, with the CIO taking part for the first time since 1946.

The ILO, which had its first meeting in 1919, is now a part of the United Nations. Its aim is to promote social justice throughout the world. To accomplish this it collects facts on labor and social conditions, draws up minimum international standards, and supervises their application.

The minimum international standards are adopted by two-thirds majorities in the form of special international treaties called conventions, and in recommendations. The decisions are not binding on the respective governments, but member nations must submit conference standards to their national legislative bodies.

If a convention is accepted by a national legislature, the government is bound to apply it and to make an annual report to the ILO showing how it is working.

Employer delegates from the U. S. are expected to try to weaken the ILO's traditional method of operation. The industrial relations committees of the National Manufacturers Association and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce have issued a joint statement recently calling for abandonment of the convention system and its replacement by a weak system of reports, resolutions and recommendations.

In the U. S., an ILO convention need be acted on only by the Senate to give it the status of an international treaty and make it binding on the country. The NAM-CofC stand is that the House also should have a chance to act—a course which would give business two chances to scuttle a convention favorable to labor.

THEIR opposition was touched off by a convention adopted in 1948 guaranteeing freedom of association and protecting the right of workers to organize.

Charles P. McCormick, Baltimore spice manufacturer and an employer delegate, claimed its ratification by the Senate would restore part of the Wagner Act which had been cut out by the Taft-Hartley Act.

Participating in the sessions from the CIO will be Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee and president of the Clothing Workers; Martin B. Kyne, executive vice president of the Retail & Wholesale Union; Boyd Wilson, of the Steelworkers, and Michael Ross, director of the CIO Dept of IntL Affairs.

Potofsky Urges Expansion Of ECA And Point 4

EXPANSION of economic aid and Point Four programs as part of the struggle to strengthen the democratic world was urged by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee, as he left for Europe last week.

Potofsky, who is also president of the CIO Clothing Workers, will participate in the conference of the Intl. Labor Organization, opening in Geneva, Switzerland, on June 6.

He will also head the CIO delegation at the second world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions beginning July 4 in Milan, Italy.

The CIO takes the position, Potofsky said as he left for Europe, that the welfare of the American worker depends in great part "on the ability of workers in other lands to improve their living standards, protect their democratic institutions and strengthen their trade unions." People living at starvation levels must be rendered immune from Soviet-inspired imperialism, he said.

The CIO is participating in the ICFTU congress, he continued, because it recognizes "the tremendous role that free, democratic labor can play in developing world peace and prosperity." He continued:

"It has already demonstrated its effectiveness in combatting fascism in Latin America, and organized totalitarian forces of whatever stripe in Europe and elsewhere. The ICFTU today represents 50 million workers in 50 nations throughout the world, and understands full well their aims and aspirations.

"IN A world torn by conflict and insecurity, it is imperative that free labor organizations work even more energetically in the common good . . .

"The CIO delegates will try in every way possible to help the ICFTU on its constructive activity and to promote the ICFTU objective of peace, bread and freedom."

Chilly In Vienna For WFTU Office

Austrian workers are enjoying a hearty laugh at the claim of the Communist-controlled World Federation of Trade Unions that it is setting up headquarters in Vienna at what it calls the invitation of "Austrian works councils."

The Austrian Federation of Trade Unions certainly didn't issue the invitation, Pres. Johann Bohm flatly declared. It had enough of the WFTU when its members were living on a starvation diet right after the war, and the WFTU wasn't even interested in their plight. The AFTU bolted in October, 1949, and joined the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in December.

Leader Of CIO Local On Scene:

Canal Zone Should Be Made 'Showcase' For Democracy

THE UNITED STATES had better start practicing some of the democracy it preaches about if it expects the support of Latin America when the chips are down, according to Pres. Edward A. Gaskin of Local 900 of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, in the Panama Canal Zone.

Gaskin is a long-time leader in the uphill fight for decent wages and working conditions for the Canal Zone's local rate workers—the Caribbean area natives whose dark skins make them worth, in the eyes of Zone authorities, only a fraction of the money their white colleagues are paid.

He is in the United States on a government fellowship. As an exchange student, he is studying labor conditions under the auspices of the State Dept., which hopes he and others like him will return to their homes with a strengthened belief in democracy and an even greater distaste for communism.

Gaskin feels the United States is making a major mistake in not using the Canal Zone as a showcase of democracy for the benefit of Latin America.

"The State and Defense Depts.," he said on a visit to CIO headquarters in Washington, "seem centered on Europe and Asia in trying to keep the war out of the western hemisphere.

"They are laboring under an illusion because Latin American leaders tell them the people of their countries are strong in their support of democracy, that they're solidly behind the democratic way of life.

"It seems to a lot of us in the Canal Zone that the Zone, like Puerto Rico, where there are lots of Americans, mirrors to the other republics what the United States really practices and not the ideals it purports to be seeking to spread.

"A lot of workers go to the Zone from other Latin American countries. They are discriminated against, segregated, and undergo other humiliations. They return to their homes embittered and disillusioned about democracy.

"If it comes to a crisis and democracy has to be defended in the western hemisphere, the burden will fall on the masses, not on individual leaders. The Communists fight and connive and cheat and lie for their way of life.

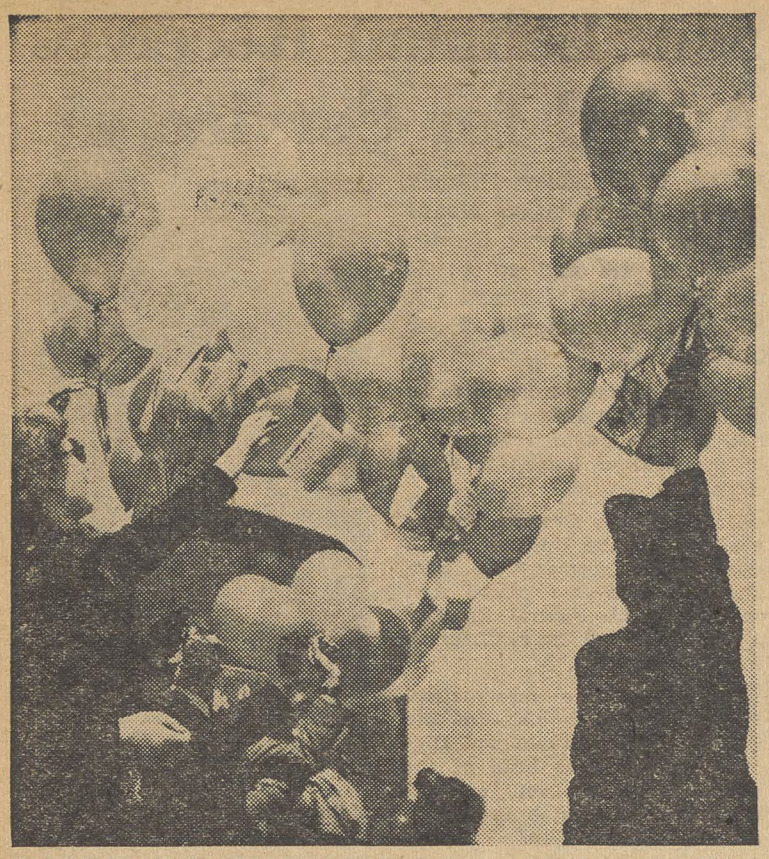
"WE HAVE to meet their fanaticism not with more fanaticism, but by making a conscious effort to develop in the people of Latin America an abiding faith in democracy in their hearts and minds, so that they will be willing to sacrifice even their lives for it, if necessary."

Native rate workers on the the Panama Canal and Panama Railroad are paid as low as 32c an hour. Workers from the United States received the prevailing rates at home plus a bonus for foreign service.

The native workers are promised equal treatment under a 1936 treaty with Panama, but according to Gaskin, there has been no conscious attempt to live up to it on this country's part.

Gaskin is principal of a school at La Boca, at the Pacific end of the Canal, near Panama City. He first helped organize a teachers' union about 10 years ago, turned it over to the United Office & Professional Workers in 1946, then bolted that body with his group in 1948 over the Communist issue.

When the CIO expelled the UOPWA because of its Communist domination he became active again, and was the first president of the new Local 900.



CARRYING A MESSAGE of freedom, these balloons are being released by members of German free trade unions in West Berlin in the hope that they will reach the Soviet East Zone of the city. The inscription on the balloons is "Free Workers, no SED (Socialist Unity Party of Germany) slaves."

Is It UnAmerican?

GOP Loses, Again

EVEN WHEN they're using baseball bats, the Republicans can't beat the Democrats.

The latter knocked off a GOP team 7-3 for their fourth straight win in the congressional baseball series in Washington.

The affair was strictly no contest as far as the Republicans were concerned and they were never in the ball game after a brief flurry in the first inning.

The contest was played before the largest crowd in the history of the series. Funds raised by the game, sponsored annually by a Washington newspaper, will be used to send children to summer camps.

Democrats began spraying hits over the diamond in the second inning, the same frame that the Republicans began coming apart at the seams.

Rep. McCarthy (D., Minn.), who is no relation to Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), opened the inning with a single and went to second on a passed ball. Rep. Clemente of New York also singled but was forced out at second on a fielder's choice as McCarthy scored.

The GOP stalwarts got their first run in the third on a single by Rep. Curtis (Mo.) who stole second and then scored when Sen. Case (S. D.) grounded out after Rep. Ford (Mich.) fanned.

Hero of the game from the Democrats point of view was Rep. Don "Fireball" Wheeler (Ga.) whose fast ball had the Republicans hitting thin air most of the afternoon.

Textile Strikers Are Jailed For Strike Activity

TWENTY-NINE members of the CIO Textile Workers who were arrested during the Southern textile strike got a bitter taste of Georgia justice recently when they were given jail sentences and fines ranging from $50 to $150 each. Twenty-five men were given 20-day terms. Four women were given 10-day sentences.

All were charged with contempt of court following alleged violations of two injunctions, both issued without notice or hearings by Polk County Superior Court Judge W. W. Munday.

Some of the workers were on strike at the A. D. Julliard mill at Aragon and others at the Bachman-Uzbridge plant in Cedartown.

Judge Munday, who issued the original injunctions and handed down the fines and jail terms, was formerly an attorney for one of the companies involved. His son, who prosecuted the strikers in court, is now counsel for the same company. In addition, the judge's nephew is superintendent of one of the mills.

TWUA state director H. D. Lisk termed the injunctions against the strikers "the most sweeping handed down by any court in the South in years." He said all picketing was practically ruled out and the orders even forbade singing within 300 feet of both mill gates.

First Negroes Bowl In ABC National Meet

For the first time in the 48-year history of the American Bowling Congress a Negro team has taken part in an American Bowling Congress national tourney, which was held in St. Paul, Minn. The six-member team from Allen & Son's Supermarket in Detroit rolled 2910, second highest of the day. The ABC jimcrow membership rule was junked last year after a long fight against it by the CIO, its international unions and Negro organizations.

Read, Learn How Other Half Lives

AMERICAN workers would do well to take a look at Pages 72, 74 and 76 of the May 19th issue of the magazine Business Week.

There they will find figures on "spectacular" pay increases during 1950 to the top executives of the top-paying companies in 28 industries.

The tabulation shows that earnings of the top executives went right on up with the biggest industry profits in history. By far the largest increases were among the 17 companies with total sales of $1 billion or more.

Charles E. Wilson, president of General Motors, drew the highest pay of any man in the United States. He took an increase of more than $41,000 over his 1949 income for a total "take" of $652,156. All six other top GM executives earned more than $400,000 each.

Second to Wilson was Crawford Greenewalt, president of E. I. du-Pont de Nemours & Co., who added $101,000 to his income for an even $539,550.

In third place was Eugene Grace, chairman of the board of Bethlehem Steel Corp., who won a boost of more than $130,000 for a total of $464,321.

Readers might do well to compare those figures with the average increase in workers' spending power last year—something which Business Week didn't take the trouble to point out.

Here's what the CIO told Congress on May 30:

"Although workers in manufacturing were working almost two hours a week longer than a year before, and their wages had increased by 10%, the net result was increased spending power equal to 3c a week.

"In other words, the result of 1950 prosperity gave the workers of the nation the ability to buy an extra 3c newspaper once a week."

U. S. To Seek Jobs For Older Workers

Greater use of older workers, particularly in defense industries, is the aim of a new program which the Bureau of Employment Security will put into effect soon.

Secy. of Labor Tobin said that Bureau Director Goodwin would send the program guide to all state employment security agencies. The program will outline policies for use by local employment offices in providing counseling and placement for older workers.

Goodwin said that the guide would be based on the findings of a five-state survey of the problems of 342,000 older workers. The survey was conducted by the U. S. Employment Service and the state employment services in New York, Texas, California, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Union Aids In Survey

Some 500 employes of the Macy Store in New York have just completed the first phase of a preventive medicine foot-and-leg survey sponsored jointly by Local 1-S of the CIO United Department Store Workers and the Associated Physicians Medical Group, in conjunction with National Foot Health Week.

Impartial Survey Shows:

Voluntary Health Plans Fall Short Of Needs

VOLUNTARY health insurance plans once were bitterly fought by the American Medical Association. Now AMA favors the plans if the doctors run them.

But 10 months of impartial research show that the plans leave much to be desired.

The research was done by a special staff supervised by Dr. Dean A. Clark, director of Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, Mass. Before taking his hospital job Dr. Clark set up and directed what is widely accepted as one of the better plans, the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York.

HIGHLIGHTS of the report follow:

Of the $9 to $10 billion spent for medical care in the U. S. in 1949, about 8% or $755 million was paid for through insurance.

* * *

While voluntary health insurance plans "provide a degree of protection against some of the costs of illness for somewhat more than 70 million people in the U. S., there are many medical needs whose cost they do not cover, and there are presently somewhat more than 70 million people who have no form of medical care insurance protection."

* * *

Less than 3% of the population —between 3 and 4 million persons—"have some comprehensive medical care insurance, including hospital, surgical and relatively complete medical insurance.

Eleven per cent—17 million—have hospital, surgical and limited medical insurance.

Twenty-one per cent—31 million people—"have some degree of protection against the costs of both hospital and surgical care."

Fifteen per cent—23 million—carry hospital insurance alone.

Fifty per cent—70 million people —have no form of medical care insurance.

* * *

"The proportion of persons having insurance is twice as high in urban as in rural states" and "twice as high in high income as in low income states."

* * *

There is considerable variation among the different types of plans in the amount of premium which comes back to the subscriber in benefits or dividends.

". . . from 55 to 93c of the subscriber's dollar comes back in benefits and dividends, depending on the particular plan to which he belongs and whether he is insured as an individual or a member of a group."

* * *

The report was presented last week to the Senate by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.), who said that the report doesn't represent the findings of the Senate subcommittee, but it should prove valuable to Congress because of its factual nature.

Scripps Had Kind Words For 'The Union System'

THE LATE E. W. Scripps—in his own words a "damned old crank"—not only founded the big Scripps-Howard Newspaper chain, but had some nice things to say about organized labor.

(Under the management of Roy Howard the Scripps-Howard chain has lost most of its old liberalism—"Old Man Scripps" believed in papers to represent the working man's point of view.)

Here are some comments by "the damned old crank" dating more than 25 years ago:

"I will concede that the usual criticism of the press is a just one, that the press is plutocratic, and that it is unfair in its dealings with the public, that it shows partiality in its dealings with the wealthy, and a far too great indifference to the rights and welfare of the masses."

"The union system, so far as economics is concerned, delivers the working man from the bondage of the employer and puts his case—the right to employment and wages—to a very large extent in a court composed of his peers—that is, his fellow workingmen."

* * *

"History and present observation prove that the open shop is an impossible condition, if the end sought for is the liberation of the workingmen from entire dependence upon an individual for employment. Even if the open shop principles were adopted by good men who had no ulterior motive or intention of making a closed shop against the unions, it still would be an impassable bar across the road to justice which workingmen are seeking to pursue, across the road that leads to where the workingmen's case should be submitted to a court composed of his peers (equals)."

Subscribe Today!

Only through the CIO News can you get full, complete, reliable reporting on the news of the CIO—throughout the country, in Washington and overseas.

Subscription price is only $1 a year (bundle orders on request).

The CIO News
718 Jackson Place N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Enclosed find $1—and send me the CIO News for one year.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Legal Battle Opens In Carolina Against Segregation In Schools

THE FIGHT against discrimination and segregation was being waged on several different fronts throughout the country last week.

In Charleston, S. C., intense interest was focused on the outcome of a case in federal court to test the legality of segregation in the state's public schools.

Challenged here for the first time is the constitutionality of segregated schools—a southern institution for the past 150 years.

Spokesmen for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People led the assault on a provision of the state's constitution of 1895 which requires separation of white and Negro students in public schools.

Parents File Suit

The suit was filed by parents of 67 Negro students against school authorities in Clarendon County, but the NAACP contends the segregated school system itself is on trial. A ruling by the Supreme Court against the provision could sweep away segregation in 17 southern and border states and the District of Columbia.

NAACP attorneys charge that after 80 years of opportunity to put Negro schools on a par with those for whites, the state's own figures show that the Negro facilities are lagging by $40 million.

They further charge that Clarendon County officials waited until May 18 before making an effort to comply with the 14th Amendment of the U. S. Constitution which guarantees equal protection of the law, when they applied for school building funds under the state's new $75 million education program.

The attack on segregation itself in the secondary schools represents a policy switch by NAACP. In the past the organization has backed suits for "equalization" of school facilities.

The U. S. Supreme Court refused to consider appeals and thus upheld lower court decisions against Negro and white segregation.

In a zoning ordinance case, the Supreme Court refused to accept an appeal filed by the city of Birmingham, Ala., against a decision by the U. S. Circuit Court.

The appeals court had held that the city's zoning ordinance violates the constitutional guarantee against depriving citizens of property without due process of law. The ordinance made it unlawful for a Negro to use or occupy a building in a white district or for a white person to do the same in a Negro area.

The high court also upheld a lower court decision that the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad might not segregate Negro passengers.

The Court of Appeals, Richmond, Va., had decided in favor of William C. Chance, Negro, of Parmele, N. C., who was thrown off a train when he refused to move to a coach reserved for Negroes.

Segregation A Burden

The lower court had ruled that such segregation was a burden on interstate commerce and that the railroad regulation infringed on the powers of Congress to regulate such commerce.

Elsewhere on the civil rights front:

In Nashville, Tenn., a second Negro was named to the 21-member city council. He is Robert Lillard, attorney and retired fireman, who defeated the incumbent in a run-off election.

The U. S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans upheld the conviction of a Georgia sheriff and his deputy for turning over a group of Negroes to a Ku Klux Klan group, which beat them.

Testimony showed that one Negro appealed to Sheriff John Lynch for help, but the peace officer walked away.

Segregation Is Called Cause Of Inferiority

A Harvard social psychology professor told the panel of three federal judges in Charleston, S. C., who heard the testimony aimed at ending segregation in the South's public schools, that legal separation "is both an effect and a cause of racial prejudice."

The reason: It gives support to the belief that "Negroes are in some way inferior to white people."

The witness, David Krech, asserted that white people have just cause to believe Negroes are inferior—"because whites have made them inferior."

He was followed to the stand by a Vassar lecturer, Helen Trager, who declared that mixed schools are the best places "for re-educating children, the places where we can diminish the amount of hostility that children have."

Pomade No Help For Graying: FTC

If your hair has turned to silver worrying about the high cost of living or the atom bomb, the Federal Trade Commission says that using a preparation called Herbold Pomade won't restore its former shade or color.

FTC has ordered the pomade manufacturer, Herbold Laboratory, Inc., of Hollywood, Cal., to stop advertising the product will color the roots of the hair and prevent it from turning gray. The company also was told to stop saying the pomade will bring back the former natural color or shade and that it will remove loose dandruff.

The company's claim that the product is safe or harmless is banned because "it contains lead, a substance which may cause ill effects when it comes in contact with the skin."

Sen. Lehman Receives Award for Service

THE 1951 Sidney Hillman $1000 Foundation Award for Meritorious Public Service has been awarded to U. S. Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D. N. Y.) at a testimonial dinner in New York.

Lehman is the third man to be honored by the Hillman Foundation for outstanding achievement in the field of human relationships.

Dr. Frank P. Graham, former president of the Univ. of North Carolina and former U. S. Senator, received the award last year. In 1949, Federal Security Administrator Oscar Chapman was the recipient.

In making the presentation, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers and Hillman's successor as head of the union, called Lehman "an outstanding American in the political life of our nation."

He said he was "an exemplar of all that Sidney Hillman worked for in the fields of enlightened labor-management relations, race relations, civil liberties and world peace."

"Herbert Lehman has served the people of his state and nation with faithful devotion," Potofsky said. "Throughout the world his name has long been identified with constructive public and private service in the cause of social progress.

Potofsky said that as a U. S. Senator, Lehman is adding lustre to an already distinguished career. "In time of national crisis, he steadfastly has demonstrated unwavering devotion to our democratic tradition and ideals," Potofsky said.

"His high moral integrity, his fight for civil rights without regard for his own political fortunes, his humane and liberal philosophy, and his deep love of country have won for him widespread recognition as one of the great Americans of our time."

SEN. HERBERT LEHMAN

IN ACCEPTING the award, Lehman said he was "happy to receive a citation bearing the name of the great man whom the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union gave to our country."

"Together we worked, though in separate ways, for the same goals—the advancement of the welfare of the American people, and the welfare of all people everywhere, in ways of peace, of justice and well-being," he said.

The Hillman Foundation, meanwhile, has announced proposed grants of $25,000 each to the Hillman medical centers in New York and Philadelphia, established by ACW and management to serve clothing workers.

The proposed grants would be used for medical research designed to benefit the entire communities.

ICFTU Asiatic Conference May Brand China Aggressor

THE FIRST Asiatic Regional Conference of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions opened last week in Karachi, Pakistan.

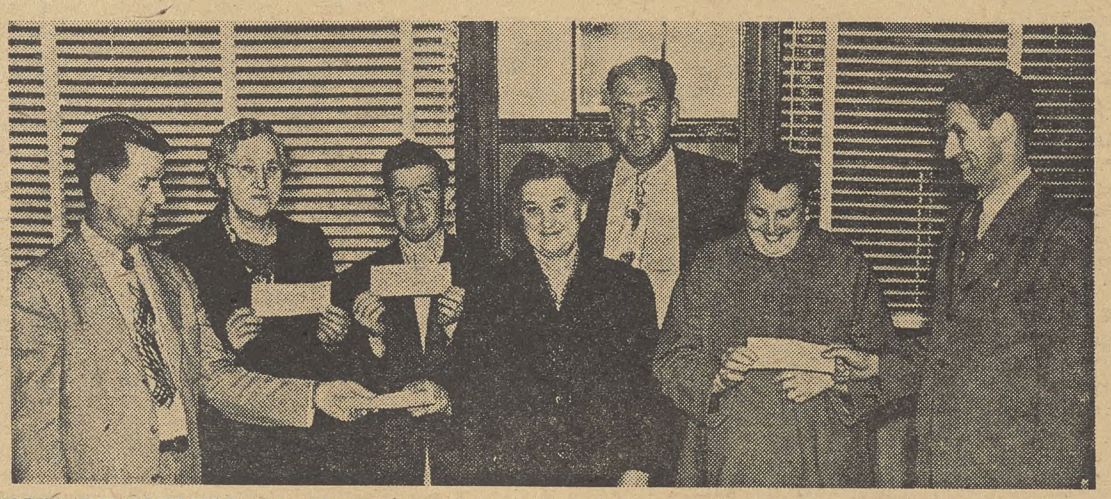
More than 50 delegates were present, representing some 12 million members of the free unions of Pakistan, India, Thailand, Ceylon, Hong Kong, Iran, Japan, South Korea and Malaya. In addition, observers from labor groups not affiliated with the ICFTU attended.

The first resolution offered called upon the conference to brand Communist China an aggressor and to ask members of affiliated bodies not to do any work which would benefit the Chinese Communists. It was introduced by the South Korean delegation, which asked for "positive assistance to the free Republic of Korea to help it win the war and unify its land."

Also on the agenda was the important step of establishing a permanent regional secretariat, such as has been established in the last few months in the Western Hemisphere and Europe and tentatively for West and Central Africa.

The 72-year-old N. M. Joshi, father of the Indian labor movement and one of Asia's most widely known and highly respected labor leaders, was unanimously elected chairman of the conference.

He was nominated by Faid Ahmed, of Pakistan, a move interpreted as a demonstration of solidarity between the workers of the two countries, which have been on the verge of armed conflict over control of Kashmir.



YOU'D BE SMILING, too, if you were one of these four members of CIO Auto Workers Local 842, Hagerstown, Md. The checks they hold represent $10,011.42 in back pay from the Fairchild Cafeteria, owned by Lee Stein. The four were discharged for union activity in 1948, when the UAW was conducting an organizing drive at the cafeteria. Two years later a National Labor Relations Board examiner ordered them reinstated and paid for the time they lost. The UAW won an NLRB election at the cafeteria last month.

Union Has Right To Exclude Commies As Officers: ACLU

THE AMERICAN Civil Liberties Union has announced adoption of a policy of not objecting to the barring of Communists and believers in other totalitarian philosophies from holding office in labor unions.

The policy was recommended by the board of directors. In a statement, the ACLU said:

"Unions have the right to set up reasonable qualifications for office. The ACLU will not oppose a determination by a union that disqualifies members of the Communist Party, the Ku Klux Klan, or any Nazi, Fascist or other totalitarian group as a candidate for office, since such persons owe a disciplined obedience to an organization other than the union itself.

"It was felt that a union might reasonably determine that it was not worth risking the existence and effectiveness of the union, which might be impaired by the election of such persons as officers."

The ACLU again affirmed its belief that membership in a union should not be denied because of political beliefs.

"The right to work is not dependent upon being an officer of a union," it said, "while the security of the union and its internal health may be gravely jeopardized by having officers under the control of the Communist Party, the KKK, or a Nazi, Fascist or other totalitarian group."

The ACLU said it would not oppose expulsion of a member from a union for "overt or conspiratorial acts to destroy the union," but warned that simple opposition to an incumbent administration does not, in itself, come within this classification.

Labor Role In Civil Defense Advocated

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO vice-president and director of organization and councils, told the second regional CIO civilian defense conference meeting at Chicago May 25-27 that "American labor would be the first to challenge our government if it ever embarked on an imperialistic program."

The CIO "is seeking the freedom of peace-loving people everywhere in the world," he said, and added that "we didn't trust Hitler or Mussolini, and we don't trust Stalin, either."

He called Millard Caldwell, director of civilian defense, "a former labor-baiting Governor of Florida," and declared that labor has had no representation in the national defense setup under his leadership.

Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, called for the adoption of a national defense program which "will protect our freedoms, our institutions and our security."

He accused the 81st Congress of "fiddling around with the important defenses of our country," and said America faces a "long range threat to its security."

Leo Perlis, director of the CIO Community Services Committee, which co-sponsored the conference, declared that voluntary organizations have a clear concept of the civilian defense problems which face the nation.

He pointed to the fact that 10,000 CIO members are serving on boards and committees throughout the country in a voluntary capacity.

TWU Non-Ops Out Half-Day

CIO Transport Workers Local 100 held a half-day work stoppage of non-operating members in New York City on June 1, to protest a wage cut proposal of the city's Board of Transportation.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill had earlier rejected a board proposal that the union recommend economies in transit operation as a means of financing a 40-hour work week for 36,000 municipal subway, elevated and bus line employes.

"Any economies would mean a speedup for the workers and additional hardships for the riding public," Quill declared. "The subways are undermanned as it is and service is far short of what is needed."

It was indicated that some compromise might be sought, under which a basic 40-hour schedule would be established with two hours of guaranteed overtime for each worker.

Cafe Discrimination Held Invalid In D.C.

Segregation forces lost a major skirmish recently in the fight to restore civil rights to Washington, D. C. The Municipal Court of Appeals reversed a lower court ruling and upheld the validity of a "lost" ordinance, passed in 1873, which prohibits restaurants from discriminating against "any well behaved or respectable person."

SOME RELIEF from high cost of living is given Brooklyn housewives during a milk price war. Grocer Lee Beck (right) cut the price to 7c a quart. The war started when one dealer reduced the price to 19c, 1c below the normal price. One threatened to cut to 3c a quart.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

GOOD NEWS comes from Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler, who reports that our CIO shed workers in Salinas. and the Imperial Valley, Calif., have won the best contracts and the highest wage hike they have ever had. The record-making agreements were won by the United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Workers LIU 78, CIO, which just a couple of months ago racked up the third in a series of NLRB election victories that crushed the Communist-dominated DPOWA-FTA.

Allan Haywood

The contracts, already signed in Salinas and soon to be approved in the Imperial Valley, yielded a 10c an hour raise for CIO shed workers plus a union shop, greatly improved grievance machinery, strong seniority protection, and time and one-half after eight hours in any day. There were also other adjustments which will benefit the workers monetarily.

The agreements cover about 3500 shed workers in each area. They are even more significant, because they are the first to be won following the workers' tough, year-long battle to whip the Commies and build their own, powerful CIO union.

Now that negotiations are over in those two areas, they will be opened soon in the third, the Salt River Valley near Phoenix (Ariz.), where another strong contract is anticipated.

Congratulations are in order for Reg. Dir. DeShetler, CIO Field Reps. James Spangler and Ken Gillie, and the excellent rank-and-file committees that did fine jobs and had the splendid backing of the membership.

We are going to keep rolling the union on among our shed workers. Organizing is going on all the time, and the next area for concentrated action will be in the small fruits, where thousands of workers are demanding CIO.

The writer, in this past week, attended an important Civil Defense Conference in Chicago. The conference was presided over by Reg. Dir. Michael Mann. Delegates came from all over the central United States. Robert Kinney, of the CIO Community Services Committee, is to be commended for a well planned successful conference.

The writer attended a banquet in Minneapolis, given by the Minnesota State CIO Council, to honor Fullerton Fulton for the splendid job he has done for the workers in Minnesota and for the faithful service he rendered to the CIO. It gave me a great deal of pleasure to attend this affair honoring "Fully." To show their appreciation those in attendance presented "Fully" with some fine gifts.

One of the newest CIO affiliates, NABET-CIO (National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians) had a breakfast in Chicago in honor of the writer, which I enjoyed very much. The officers and members of this fine organization are planning their NLRB drive in the radio and television industry. The CIO looks for big things from this organization.

The writer also attended the executive board meeting of the Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, in Chicago, on June 2. This is the first meeting since the splendid IAWOC-CIO victory in the John Hancock election. The writer planned to go from Chicago to Boston, Mass., to meet with officials of the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. and lay the groundwork for negotiations for a new contract.

Reg. Dir. George De Nucci reports that the Brauemister Distributing Co., Springfield, O., agreed to recognize the Brewery Workers, CIO, through direct negotiations. Intl. Rep. Joe Emmons handled the situation. In a representation election at the Oak Hill Firebrick Co., Oak Hill, O., the workers voted in favor of the Stone and Allied Workers, CIO, by a vote of 50 to 18 against. Intl. Rep. Lewis Lowry was in charge of the campaign. At the Hess-Snyder Co., Massillon, O., a representation vote showed 47 USA-CIO, 8 AFL Molders; Intl. Rep. Claude Cooley was in charge. At the American Abrasive Co., Galion, O., the count was 15 USA-CIO, 9 against, in another representation election. Intl. Rep. Harry Boyer directed the campaign.

REG. DIR. Nicholas Dragon reports that in a representation election among Packing Shed, Workers of the Stanley and McDaniels Packing Shed, in the Phoeniz, Ariz., area, the workers favored CIO LIU 78 by a vote of 26 to 2 against.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShelter reports that the Furniture Workers, CIO, won a union shop election at the Arrow Mill Co., Los Angeles, Calif., by a 148 to 14 vote.

Adolph Germer, director of organization of the CIO Woodworkers, reports that in a representation election at the Keystone Lumber Co., Spokane, Wash., the vote was in favor of the IWA-CIO by 20 to 4 AFL.

Acting Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports the following representation election victories: Electro-Voice, Inc., Buchanan, Mich., IUE-CIO 181, no union 23; Eddy Paper Corp., Three Rivers, Mich., Paperworkers-CIO 263, independent 162, no union 9, with UPA-CIO Rep. Darrell King in charge of the campaign; Division of Castleton, National Carbon Coated Paper Co., Sturgis, Mich., Paperworkers-CIO 138, against 125, UPA-CIO Reps. Joseph Hyrczyk and Elzie Bush in charge.

Al Hartnett, secretary-treasurer, IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE representation election victories: Westinghouse Co., Bowling Green, Ky., IUE 142, IBEW 2, no union 3, challenged 1; Emerson Radio Co., Jersey City, N. J., IUE 1211, UE 739, no union 30, challenged 162, void 13; Steinberg & Sons, Newark, N. J., IUE 15, UE 12, challenged by company 1; General Electric Co., Waterford, N. Y., IUE 77, no union 27; Premier Vacuum, Toronto, Ont., Canada, IUE 62, UE 16.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election at the Chromium Corp. of America, Waterbury, Conn., the workers favored the UAW-CIO by a vote of 88 to 21 no union. Intl. Rep. Robert Walkinshaw handled the campaign.

Rep. Dir. James Leary reports that in a representation election at the Pryor Brass Co., Kansas City, Mo., the USA-CIO was victorious by a vote of USA-CIO 25, AFL Moulders 20, challenged 2. The organizational work in this campaign was conducted by Intl. Rep. Horace Brock.

NMU Appeals NLRB Refusal In Coast Vote

THE CIO National Maritime Union has appealed a National Labor Relations Board dismissal of its petition for an election among the West Coast marine cooks and stewards.

Vice Pres. Hulbert Warner said the union filed the appeal in order to bring the case to the attention of NLRB members in Washington.

The board's California regional office dismissed the petition on the grounds that the NMU failed to show pledge cards signed by 30% of the working members of the unaffiliated Marine Cooks and Stewards. Warner, however, said the 1264 cards filed were "well above" the required number.

NMU officials charged that pressure had been exerted in Washington to force the dismissal of the petition.

They attributed the union's failure to qualify for the election to a "lobbying expedition" promoted by the Pacific Maritime Association, an employer group.

"These activities have been directed toward influencing the (NLRB) general counsel and the members of the board to deny the NMU petition on the grounds that an election on West Coast ships would disrupt the relationship that now exists between PMA and . . . Harry Bridges and Hugh Bryson," the NMU declared.

(Bridges is president of the Intl. Longshoremen's Union and Bryson heads the Marine Cooks and Stewards. Both organizations were expelled from the CIO last year on the grounds of Communist domination.)

At the same time, Warner charged that MCS officers have started a "purge" of all members identified with a rank and file movement to break away from the left wing leadership and form a separate West Coast union.

Tim Flynn, northern California CIO regional director, said that several hundred members of Bridges' home Local 10, have signed CIO pledge cards. He declared the move is "gaining momentum."

THE MOVE to return to the CIO was brought to a head by the threat of a West Coast shipping strike in June which would tie up military as well as commercial cargoes.

"If West Coast longshoremen want to return to the CIO," Flynn said, "they could do it either by cleansing their union and reaffiliating, or by forming their own union.

"If they want to form their own union, they can get a CIO charter, have their own autonomy, negotiate their own contracts, run their own affairs and have representation on the CIO executive board."

Commie Terrorists Take To Bicycles

Authorities at Ipoh, in the heart of Malaya's tin mining section, have clamped down on Communist terrorists.

They have forbidden bicycle riding from 7 p.m. to midnight. Seems the Reds have been scorching about town on their bikes hurling hand grenades.

Italians Vote Commies Out Of City Jobs

THE COMMUNISTS and their allies took a smashing defeat in last week's municipal elections in 28 northern Italian provinces.

They lost their control of 755 cities and towns, which they had administered for five years, to a right-wing coalition headed by Premier Alcide De Gasperi's Christian Democratic Party.

The democratic coalition, which included right-wing Socialists and favors continued cooperation with the democratic west, won control of 2340 of the 2735 municipalities in which votes were cast. The left-wing coalition, which included left-wing Socialists as well as the Communists, retained control of but 395 municipalities.

The right wing won control of every major northern Italian industrial city except Bologna, where the Red coalition retained its grip by a scant 2000 votes. The government ordered a recount, as more than 2000 ballots had been challenged.

Thirteen provincial capitals were wrested from control of the Communist bloc, which retained its grip on but four.

THE RIGHT-WING parties polled fewer votes than in the 1948 national elections and the left wingers more, but the distribution worked out to the advantage of the pro-western group. The surprise of the campaign was the unexpected strength shown by the Social Movement party (MSI), a neo-Fascist group, which was aligned with neither right nor left wings. It was particularly strong in Bologna, a Red bastion.

Italian political experts sought to explain the vote this way:

The Christian Democrats lost strength because Italians "always dislike their government;" the Communists and left-wing Socialists gained because many people, despite Marshall Plain aid and the stand of the Catholic Church, see the best chance of improving their low living standard through extreme leftist programs; and the MSI gained because younger Italians, born under Fascism, are still prompted by a strong nationalist spirit which seeks outlet in the extreme right.

Michigan Assembly Boosts Gasoline Tax

The Michigan Legislature has voted to override Gov. G. Mennen Williams' veto of the 1½c per gallon increase in the gasoline tax—thereby giving the State about $15 million more than the Michigan Good Roads Federation says is necessary to maintain the highways.

Four Detroit Democratic representatives bolted to the cement and county road lobby along with 66 Republicans to override the veto.

WSB Panel To Report This Week On Shipyard Pay Hike Pact

A SPECIAL panel of the Wage Stabilization Board is expected to report this week on the 15% wage increase negotiated last February for some 50,000 shipbuilding workers.

The panel held a hearing last week, with the government as well as labor and management urging that the increase be approved despite the fact it would crack the 10% "ceiling" tentatively adopted some months ago.

The case of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers was presented by Pres. John J. Grogan and M. H. Goldstein, the union's general counsel. The gist of their argument—and that of the others urging approval—was that the increase is necessary if the privately operated shipyards are to retain the 50,000 employes affected by the recent agreements.

Goldstein told the panel that shipyard workers ranked third in pay among industrial employes during the depression, compared to 12th in 1950. They never recovered from a ruling by the late President Roosevelt in 1942 that they were entitled to 6c an hour when they felt they should have had 15c, he said.

The panel also was told that shipyard pay had stayed depressed until the Korean outbreak, and that top pay for Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co. workers is $1.57 an hour. Navy yards pay a minimum of $1.81 and as high as $1.95.

Unless the private yards can compete in the wage field, witnesses said, skilled employes—now in short supply—will desert to other employment.

The contracts provide wage increases of 18c to 31c an hour. The key pact was negotiated with Bethlehem, which employs about half of the 50,000 men affected. The others work under agreements based on that settlement. Dr. John Dunlop, a public member of the WSB, was chairman of the panel.

THIS WEEK another panel will hold hearings which will help determine whether or not employes of industries exempted from price controls should be exempted from wage controls.

Railroads, newspapers, ship lines, public utilities, the movies and several other industries are not covered by price control legislation.

The CIO position is that wage controls should not apply in industries where prices are not controlled. Most other labor groups are expected to take the same position.

The stand of industry has not been made public, although the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce want to abolish all controls.

Theodore W. Kheel, impartial chairman under contract between New York City's private bus lines and the unions representing their employes, heads the panel. Vice chairman is Dr. Richard A. Lester, of Princeton.

IUE Conference Board Authorizes Strike Against Westinghouse

The Westinghouse Conference Board of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, meeting in Pittsburgh, has authorized national officers to call a strike against the Westinghouse Electric Corp. on or after June 11 unless a contract dispute is settled.

The company had agreed to give a 9c an hour wage increase if it gets price relief. The union executive board turned down the proposal and demanded that the company either pay at once and also give the union shop, or join it in submitting the dispute to the Wage Stabilization Board. Negotiations were continuing late last week.

About 50,000 Westinghouse employes would answer a strike call.

In notifying the company of the rejection of its offer, IUE Pres. James B. Carey who also is CIO secretary-treasurer, warned the firm that "you and you alone will be responsible if the Westinghouse workers are forced to take strike action."

Retiring Guild Aide Gets Pension, Gift Of $1000

John J. Biddison, one of the organizers of the CIO Newspaper Guild in the Twin Cities and for 12 years its executive secretary, has resigned because of his health. The local voted him $1000 and a pension of $100 a month, believed the first voted by an ANG local.

Biddison, 67, learned to set type at the age of 10 in his father's print shop in Kansas. He was working on the Minneapolis Journal when it was merged with the Star in 1939, and became executive secretary of the Guild at that time. Highly respected and widely known in Guild and Minnesota labor circles, he has been a member of the executive board of the State CIO Council for several years and was active in the fight that wrested it from Communist control in 1947.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate & House Banking Coms. now holding hearings. CIO to testify in Senate again June 4.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House Ways and Means Com. concluded hearings Mar. 19. Now studying proposals.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
Importation of Mexican Farm Labor S. 984 H.R. 3283	Provides for importation of cheap foreign labor; encourages extension of substandard conditions for both domestic and imported farm workers.	Senate passed Ellender bill (S. 984). House Rules Com. has before it Poage Bill (H. R. 3283). House action expected soon.	Urge House members to substitute Ellender Bill for Poage Bill and add strengthening amendments.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Now before Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

N.Y. CIO Calls Legislature 'Irresponsible'

THE 1951 session of the New York State Legislature "established a record of political irresponsibility which exceeds anything within the recent history of the state," the New York State CIO Council says in its annual legislative report.

The report was published last week. It was written by Harold J. Garno, secretary-treasurer and legislative director of the council.

"If the damage which will result from this Legislature's neglect and abuse of its responsibilities is to be repaired in future sessions," it says, "and if the time lost is to be made up, it is important that all citizens of the state know and understand the record and the part their individual senators and assemblymen had in it . . .

"None of the objectives outlined by the New York State CIO in its legislative program was achieved. Except for minor and isolated items, no progress toward achieving them was made.

"On the contrary, the movement was backward. Big business was firmly in the saddle and the Legislature was kept with its back turned to its responsibilities.

"Working almost exclusively for the special benefit of the special interests which held the reins, it ignored what was needed and destroyed much that had been previously achieved."

The report lists as the "major items in the reactionary rampage" the undermining of unemployment insurance, civil defense legislation which "sweeps aside constitutional safeguards and provides little or nothing to advance the planning, organization or effective functioning of the state's civil defenses."

Other backward steps listed are weakening of rent controls, authorizing a 1% increase in the New York City sales tax to 3%, and failure to act in the fields of education, housing and health services.

Workers Tired Of CP Line

THOSE stubborn eastern European workers don't know what's good for them, the Communists are finding out.

Or maybe they do . . .

In Czechoslovakia the workers are so indifferent to the privilege of being a stooge for Stalin that the party is worried.

The newspaper Prace recently had an editorial denouncing those who do only enough work to get by, listen to the Voice of America, and don't tell what they really think.

In Poland, many workers find the press so dull they don't bother to read it. So, according to the Trybuna Robotnicza, special functionaries read it to them while they eat their lunches in their canteens.

And in Bulgaria, workers are docked a proportionate amount of their pay when they fail to meet their production quotas.

But if they go beyond their quotas, a Soviet version of the old Bedeaux plan is applied: When the excess is, for example, 25% above the norm, the pay check is only 15% above.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 11, 1951 82 No. 24

Have You Written Your Letter

For

PRICE CONTROLS

Ask Your Congressman . . .

Ask Your Senator . . .

For Price Controls And A Strong Defense Production Act

WRITE THAT LETTER TODAY!

WSB Okays Boost Above 10% Limit

IN ITS FIRST unanimous decision on a major policy, the Wage Stabilization Board last week approved a 4c hourly "productivity" pay increase for one million CIO Auto Workers.

The next day, the board unanimously voted approval of a 15% raise for 29,000 Atlantic Coast shipyard workers.

The shipyard decision—which hiked wages of those covered by agreements to 5% above the standard freeze formula—freed these essential defense workers from unfair pay discrimination. it removed the threat of a strike, called and postponed several times, by CIO Shipbuilding Workers.

The board acted under "Wage Regulation 6" which authorizes it to make exceptions to the 10% limit for industries suffering "base pay period abnormalities." Shipbuilding has been a depressed industry from the end of World War II until the recent rearming.

The 18-man board approved the UAW increases although they will pierce the 10% ceiling on wages generally in effect. It made its approval conditional, however, by requiring that employers give such raises without accompanying price boosts.

General Motors had announced in advance that it would pay the 4c increase, called for annually in its five-year contract with the UAW, without raising prices on the cars, tanks or other products it manufactures.

During hearings, Ford and Packard had insisted that price advances would be necessary to offset the wage hike. Nevertheless, they immediately followed GM in granting "productivity" increases on the board's terms.

Since the average wage in the automobile industry is about $1.80 an hour, the 4c increase is slightly more than 2%. The board's decision thus makes the allowable general increase in wages since January, 1950, total slightly more than 12% in those industries which meet the conditions specified.

Dr. George W. Taylor, WSB chairman, said that the UAW-GM contract typifies "the best kind of stabilization," since it calls for union cooperation in improving methods to decrease costs.

MEANWHILE, CIO Railroad Workers told the board's Panel on Exempt Industries that it would be "most inequitable" to impose wage stabilization upon the railroad industry, so long as rail corporations are not subject to price regulation.

"If the railroad industry were suject to rigid price controls which would prevent any large increase in profits in that industry, we would, in the interests of general stabilization, not oppose the imposition of wage stabilization in that industry," John Green, chairman of the Railroad Workers, told the panel on June 7.

Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union, Secy. - Treas. Ralph Novak of the CIO Newspaper Guild and others also opposed wage restriction in industries exempt from price controls.

Meat Union Asks Probe Of Scarcity

PRES. RALPH HELSTEIN of the CIO Packinghouse Workers called on June 7, for a "thorough and complete investigation" of meat scarcities by the Office of Price Stabilization.

Helstein acted as thousands of union members were being laid off by the large packers and thousands more stood to lose their jobs when other meat processing departments closed.

In a telegram to OPS Director Michael DiSalle, he called for three areas of inquiry to determine whether an "artificial scarcity" is being created by the industry, and urged a "realistic setting of retail price ceilings to protect the living standards of consumers."

Industry spokesmen meanwhile charged that scarce cattle were being diverted into black markets.

Meantime thousands of CIO Auto Workers also faced layoffs caused by defense needs biting deeper into civilian production.

100,000 CWA Members Get Pay Boosts In Two New Pacts

THE CIO Communications Workers signed two agreements last week with Bell System companies covering approximately 100,000 CWA members in 15 southern and southwestern states.

Union negotiators came to terms with the Southern Bell Telephone Co. after a 29-minute strike June 5 which threatened to shut down exchanges in six states. Basis of agreement was a 10% wage increase for the company's 51,000 workers.

The boost represents the maximum allowed under the Wage Stabilization Board's order.

CWA spokesmen at St. Louis said the increases would range up to $8 weekly, depending on length of service and job classification. The union also won upward pay scale adjustments for 28 particular jobs in the system.

Previous to the contract signing, Southwestern workers had voted by a 10 to 1 margin to strike unless the company moved from its original offer of $3 to $6 weekly increases.

CWA negotiators had been in almost constant sessions with the company since mid-April, but agreement had been stymied by Southwestern's insistence on including an 11-point program termed "objectionable" by the union.

CWA officials estimated that a new contract with the Southern Bell Co., signed the day before the Southwestern pact was announced, would mean pay raises of from $3 to $7.50 weekly for 45,000 workers.

NEW NPA OFFICIALS. Secy. of Commerce Charles Sawyer (right) welcomes O. A. (Jack) Knight, president of the CIO Oil Workers Union, to his new post as Assistant Administrator of the National Production Authority. Manly Fleischmann, NPA Administrator, is pictured at left, and Ted Silvey, CIO official who will serve as Knight's deputy, is between Knight and Sawyer. Knight and Silvey were sworn in June 5.

Knight, Silvey Become NPA Aides

THE NATIONAL Production Authority now has a new assistant administrator, an official of the CIO.

O. A. (Jack) Knight, president of the Oil Workers Union, was sworn in June 5 as assistant administrator of this key defense production agency.

He will head the NPA Office of Labor Requirements, working directly with Administrator Manly Fleischmann and Deputy Administrator Thomas S. Nichols.

In his new post, Knight will be responsible for devising ways and means of meeting the labor needs of the defense production program and of assuring an equitable consideration of labor's problems. He was nominated for the job by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Knight will have as his aide another CIO representative, Ted F. Silvey, who was sworn in with him as deputy assistant administrator. Their oaths were administered by Secy. of Commerce Charles Sawyer.

In assuming office, Knight said that he was "happy to have this opportunity to be of service to the best government in the world." He also expressed his appreciation of the opportunity to work with Fleischmann, "who has an excellent reputation as an administrator."

Knight added:

"I hope to develop a two-way program that, first, will bring to both the unions and unorganized labor some idea of the situation in the NPA and, secondly, will tap the ideas of organized labor for the welfare of America."

KNIGHT, a CIO vice-president, was a pioneer organizer in the oil refinery field, having helped to establish one of the first unions in the industry while working as a stillman at Hammond, Ind.

After the Oil Workers Union was organized, he participated in the formation of the CIO and was elected to its first Executive Council.

In 1937, Knight became CIO staff representative in California. He organized oil workers there and in the mid-continent oil fields until his election as president of the OWIU in 1940. He was elected CIO vice-president in 1947.

Now 48 years old and a resident of Denver, Colo., Knight has attended several trade union conferences in Central and South America as a member of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee.

Silvey, served during World War II on the national headquarters staff of the president of the CIO, as a liaison officer with war and reconversion agencies. In 1946-47, he made a study of safety conditions in German war plants as representative in Germany of the Office of Technical Services.

Silvey was secretary-treasurer of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee in 1947-48, and then served 22 months as executive officer of the Labor Division of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

He served NPA as labor consultant last January and February, before labor withdrew its representatives from the defense agencies in protest against big business domination.

CIO AIDE HITS PROFITEERS: Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), left, one of the leading Congressional supporters of a better Defense Production Act, congratulates CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg upon his statement before the Senate Banking Committee June 4. Ruttenberg outlined the CIO's program for curbing inflation.

ORGANIZED LABOR'S INTEREST in a better law to curb inflation was expressed to Congress by this delegation of CIO Auto Workers. They accompanied UAW Pres. Walter Reuther (holding envelope) to Washington when he testified June 4 before the Senate Banking Committee.

REFLECTING THE ANXIETY of Americans over the threat of run-away inflation unless Congress extends the Defense Production Act, these CIO Steelworkers from Baltimore discuss need for stronger price controls with Sen. Moody (D. Mich.), third from right, at last week's Senate hearings.

Foes Of Controls Playing Into Kremlin Hands?

By MILTON PLUMB

THE irresponsible greed of big business and other special interest groups which seek even greater profits from the defense program has made them the unwitting allies of the Kremlin, the CIO warned Congress last week.

"The Kremlin is counting on complacency, indifference, organized greed, and the pressure group approach to national problems to defeat America," CIO Vice-Pres. Walter Reuther told the Senate Banking Committee on June 4.

"Those people who would have us rush back to 'business as usual,' and throw controls to the winds, are really playing the game that leads down the road to the Kremlin's end."

Reuther, who also is president of the Auto Workers, urged Congress to renounce the "scandalous" attitude of big business by continuing and strengthening the controls provisions of the Defense Production Act.

Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of Research outlined CIO proposals for a better anti-inflation law to replace the present act, which is due to expire June 30.

Pointing out that representatives of business interests were being heard before the committee in far larger numbers than were spokesmen for the people, Reuther said that industry witnesses "are flooding the press with dangerous delusions."

"They would have us believe that the crisis is behind us when in fact the real test still lies ahead," he stated.

The UAW president told the committee that it would "flirt with disaster and jeopardize our national survival" if Congress enacted industry's demands into law.

"The tragic situation is that witness after witness has come before this committee, and the theme has been 'control the other fellow, inconvenience the other fellow, but don't touch me because I have a special kind of problem'," Reuther said.

He termed that approach "not only unrealistic, but scandalous in the face of the threat to America."

"The fellows who make the most noise in trying to block the minimum controls necessary to save the free world," he said, "are those who have the most to lose in a material way."

He drew laughter from the committee when he added, "It seems to me that if they won't save themselves, we have a sort of over-all moral responsibility to try to help them."

The CIO spokesman said that he was both proud and happy that he could come before the committee "with clean hands." Organized labor is "prepared to accept the necessary controls that affect us," he emphasized.

Reuther said that the choice before the American people is not to find the easy way, but the way that will work. The price of freedom "has become high in the world," he said, and everybody must sacrifice and share in the cost of defending it.

"To those business groups that demand free rein to extract the last ounce of profit from consumers' pocketbooks, labor says that wage earners could earn higher wages out of those profits, but we do not propose that organized workers shall fatten off their fellow Americans," he stated.

"We do not propose to sap the strength and endanger the security of our country by taking a free ride on the whirlwind of inflation."

Reuther read the committee an advertisement published by the National Association of Manufacturers in the New York Times of Jan. 3, 1946, shortly before the end of wartime price controls. In the ad, the NAM said that if the OPA were abolished prices would come down.

"They got their way in America," Reuther reminded the committee. "We scrapped controls. What happened? The cost of living went up 20% in one year and by the end of the second year after they had their way it was up 30%."

He quoted the following figures: Since June 1946 (the last month of price controls)—

- The cost of living has gone up 39%.
- Food prices have gone up 70%.
- Meat prices have gone up 103%.
- Beef prices have gone up 155%.

Following Reuther to the stand, Ruttenberg called for seven specific amendments to the Defense Production Act, which the CIO believes are essential. These are:

Provision for subsidies when needed to control retail food prices and at the same time insure a fair return for the farmer.

Elimination of the prohibition in the present act against grade labelling and quality control.

Provision for enforcement of price regulations by giving the Office of Price Stabilization the power to license sellers of articles under price control.

Elimination of the present prohibition against limiting high price lines.

Establishment of a policy of dollars-and-cents ceiling prices instead of the present percentage mark-up orders.

Establishment of controls over commodity markets.

Elimination from the act of the present wage-price tie-in provision, so that prices of commodities may be controlled without automatically freezing wages of the workers producing the products brought under control.

Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston, a former four-term president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, appealed to the American people by radio and television in support of "tougher" regulation of prices.

As the June 30 deadline for new legislation on the act drew closer, the best guess seemed to be that the most people could hope for would be a 30-day extension of the present law.

Logic In Steel? Come, Senator!

"Why," asked Sen. Schoeppel (R. Kans.), "have men who have been in the industry all their lives held down the production of steel? I just can't figure it out."

His query was put to UAW Pres. Walter Reuther, who testified last week for the CIO before the Senate Banking Committee on the need for a better Defense Production Act. Reuther replied:

"You're trying to be logical, Senator. That's why you can't figure it out. The answer is so illogical that if you approach it on a logical basis, you just can't find an answer."

Question: What Good Old Days?

Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers tells the story of the elderly couple chatting about their long years together.

"Remember," said the husband, "back in 1932, when we were broke and eating hamburger."

"Yes," said the wife, "and remember 1951, when we were going broke eating hamburger."

HCL Is Making Kids Miss Meals

"A shocklingly large number" of American children are actually going hungry because of runaway prices, John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, told Chairman Spence (D. Ky.) of the House Banking Committee June 4.

Edelman sent Spence a clipping from the Charlotte (N.C.) News of May 31 which reported that 761 children in that city are unable to buy noon-time meals.

NOT FOOLED by current price wars, Local 1-S of the CIO Department Store Workers, representing 8,300 Macy's Store workers in New York, sent a delegation to Washington June 5, to ask Congress for stronger price controls. Rep. Klein (D. N.Y.), seated, looks over the petitions with some of the delegates. Left to right ar Elizabeth Hammond, Alfred Petitsjean, Diane Levy, Mary Askew and Ella Johnson.

Why Write To Congress?

The front page of this paper is devoted to an appeal for letters to Senators and Congressmen—letters asking stronger price controls and a better Defense Production Act.

Why all this excitement about letters to Congress? Why is it important that you and every other union member write a letter today?

Here's why:

- Because in less than three weeks, the Defense Production Act—which contains our basic anti-inflation laws—will go off the books, unless it is extended before that date.

- Because if the Defense Production Act, and price controls along with it, go off the books by default—the cost of living is going to go up still higher, as surely as summer follows spring. (It happened that way in 1946, after OPA went out—and the situation is even more serious today.)

- Because big business interests, and their propaganda spokesmen, have been running an unparalleled campaign to end controls—so they can make still higher profits. These business interests claim "price controls" just touch the "symptoms," not the causes of inflation. But the fact is that they have opposed just about every known method of limiting inflation and keeping the cost of living down to reasonable bounds.

- Because both government and labor economists know that when the defense program starts hitting its stride on the production line in the next few months, prices will spurt still further—unless Uncle Sam is ready with a strong program of controls.

- Because liberal Senators and Congressmen, who support price controls and other anti-inflation measures, are worried by the absence of mail in support of strong price controls—and reactionaries in Congress are delighted. Meanwhile, special profits interests are getting lots of letters into Capitol Hill against controls.

This fight to curb inflation is no special-interest problem. It affects each and every family, and the ability of the country to man its defenses at some reasonable cost.

So, on your next shopping trip, don't gripe at the shelves of the super-market, don't keep the gripes to yourself, or let them out on the girl at the check-out counter.

Write those gripes to Congress—where they'll do some good.

Speaking For Membership?

It's a free country, thank goodness, and there's a guarantee of free speech for everyone—including labor leaders.

So John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers and Bill Hutcheson of the Carpenters Union, AFL, have a perfect right to call for the death of all price controls.

But we doubt that many coal miners and carpenters will go very far down the road with their union leaders on this all-important issue. Members of those two unions would have watched with interest the glee with which reactionary Senators and Representatives—who oppose labor and the Fair Deal—have used the statements of their leaders to support the NAM war against price controls.

The mine union president, who has talked a big game of "labor unity" for a long time, might give some thought to the fact that the United Labor Policy Commitee—representing millions of workers in the CIO, AFL and railway brotherhoods—is really practising labor unity in its consistent fight against inflation.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24. 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV June 11, 1951 No. 24

Down And Out!

'The Captive Audience'

Workers in many plants throughout the country have been compelled to listen—as a "captive audience" on paid company time—to anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal lectures. In the District of Columbia, a U. S. court has ruled that another form of "captive audiences"—the broadcasting of radio commercials and announcements to street cars and buses, is unconstitutional. The decision, which is being appealed to the Supreme Court by the transit company, may have important effects on "forced listening" throughout the country. Here are some excerpts from the opinion.

NO OCCASION had arisen until now to give effect to freedom from forced listening as a constitutional right.

Short of imprisonment, the only way to compel a man's attention for many minutes is to bombard him with sound that he cannot ignore in a place where he must be.

The law of nuisance protects him at home. At home or at work, the constitutional question has not arisen because the Government has taken no part in forcing people to listen. Until radio was developed and some one realized that the passengers of a transportation monopoly are a captive audience, there was no profitable way of forcing people to listen while they travel between home and work or on necessary errands.

Exploitation of this audience through assault on the unavertible sense of hearing is a new phenomenon.

It raises "issues that were not implied in the means of communication known or contemplated by Franklin and Jefferson and Madison." But the Bill of Rights, as appellants say in their brief, can keep up with anything an advertising man or an electronics engineers can think of.

If Transit obliged its passengers to read what it liked or get off the car, invasion of their freedom would be obvious. Transit obliges them to hear what it likes or get off the car.

Freedom of attention, which forced listening destroys, is a part of liberty essential to individuals and to society. The Supreme Court has said that the constitutional guarantee of liberty "embraces not only the right of a person to be free from physical restraint, but the right to be free in the enjoyment of all his faculties . . ."

One who is subjected to forced listening is not free in the enjoyment of all his faculties.

Of course, freedom from forced listening, like other freedoms, is not absolute. No doubt the Government may compel attention, as it may forbid speech, in exceptional circumstances. But a deprivation of liberty to which the Government is a party is unconstitutional when it is "arbitrary or without reasonable relation to some purpose within the competency of the state to effect." Forcing Transit passengers to hear these broadcasts has no reasonable relation to any such purpose . . .

THIS LOSS of freedom of attention is the more serious because many people have little time to read, consider, or discuss what they like, or to relax. The record makes it plain that the loss is a serious injury to many passengers. They suffer not only the discomfort of hearing what they dislike but a sense of outrage at being compelled to hear whatever Transit and Radio choose . . .

It has been argued that when freedom of attention is abridged, freedom of speech and press are abridged, and that when Transit sells the forced attention of its passengers to Radio for advertising purposes it deprives them of property as well as liberty. Also, it may well be doubted whether Transit can perform its statutory duty of providing comfortable service for all by giving more than comfortable service to some and less than comfortable service to others. But we need not consider these issues.

In our opinion Transit's broadcasts deprive objecting passengers of liberty without due process of law. Service that violates constitutional rights is not reasonable service. It follows that the (Public Utilities) Commission erred as a matter of law in finding that Transit's broadcasts are not inconsistent with public convenience, in failing to find that they are unreasonable, and in failing to stop them.

This decision applies to "commercials" and to "announcements." We are not now called upon to decide whether occasional broadcasts of music alone would infringe constitutional rights.

Senate Inquiry Turns Light On China Lobby

THE CHINA lobby is going to be forced out into the open, it became apparent during the Senate Foreign Relations Committee's grilling of Secy. of State Acheson.

Sen. Morse (R. Ore.), while questioning Acheson, "served notice" that he will later ask for State Dept. information on "what I understand is powerfully at work in America—the China Lobby."

Some of the other Republican Senators immediately registered alarm. Some of the Democrats smiled and licked their chops. Acheson merely smiled and said:

"We always cooperate with Senators."

The China Lobby and its vigorous support of the bumbling Chiang Kai-shek are something of a mystery. The figures in it are known to many people. They include some choice specimens: industrialists, politicians, ex-convicts, the remnants of Father Coughlin's Christian Fronters, isolationists, etc.

What has been more of a puzzle is why it has not been investigated before. Some people blame it for the entire attack on the Truman administration's China policy, for the defamation of Acheson, and for the hatchet job done on some Democrats, notably former Sen. Tydings (D.) of Maryland, in the last elections.

Its aim, some allege, is for a tight little group of Americans to take over China by using Chiang and whatever government he might be able to set up—if any—as a front.

The principal figures were named some weeks ago by the St. Louis Post Dispatch. On the basis of that article, their names have been widely distributed by the CIO Political Action Committee.

The Post Dispatch listed as top man in the setup Gen. Douglas MacArthur. He has given support for Chiang "its most vigorous propulsion," it was claimed,

Another important figure was identified as Alfred Kohlberg, of New York.

Kohlberg is an importer whose $1.5 million a year business has depended on control of China by Chiang and his clique.

He was the organizer of the American China Policy Association and keeps it supplied with the funds necessary to send pro-Chiang propaganda to congressmen and some 2000 editors and publishers. He founded the magazine Plain Talk, now combined with the magazine Freeman, and pays many of the bills for keeping the pro-Chiang, anti-Truman propaganda it prints

OTHER political figures the Post Dispatch named include such Republican stalwarts as Sen. Taft (O.), chairman of the GOP Senate Policy Committee, and Rep. Martin (Mass.), House minority leader.

Martin was largely responsible for blowing up the MacArthur ouster into an issue far beyond its importance. Taft has been of major importance in keeping the ball in the air—although he has moved somewhat cautiously in view of MacArthur's possibly being his rival for the Republican nomination for President.

The Post Dispatch also listed Sen. McCarthy (Wis.), the free-swinging wielder of the Red paint brush who never gets around to proving his charges and who is Acheson's most persistent maligner; Sens. Knowland (Cal.), Wherry (Neb.) and McCarran (Nev.), severe critics of the administration and, in McCarran's case, a great admirer of Dictator Franco of Spain; Sen. Bridges, who wants to give Chiang the key to the U. S. Treasury, who got a $2000 campaign donation from Kohlberg and who pumps Kohlberg's propaganda into the Senate; and Rep. Judd (Minn.), a former missionary to China.

All are Republicans except McCarran.

One of the choicest items in the collection is Joseph P. Kamp, the operating head of the Constitutional Educational League, enemy of democracy and organized labor, who was cited by the Dept. of Justice in World War II as a channel for seditious propaganda.

He refused to answer the questions of a 1948 House committee investigating lobbies, and finally, last year, went to jail for four months on a charge of contempt of Congress.

He was scheduled to go on trial last week on a similar charge growing out of the Buchanan Lobby Investigating Committee's questioning of him last year, but obtained another postponement—the fourth.

From the list of Christian Fronters, the Post Dispatch lifted the names of William J. Goodwin and Robert Harris.

Goodwin, also formerly associated with Gerald L. K. Smith, was hired by Chiang's government to lobby in Congress for money. His salary for two years was $65,000. His expenses ran as high as $640 a day, the entertaining of members of Congress costing what it does.

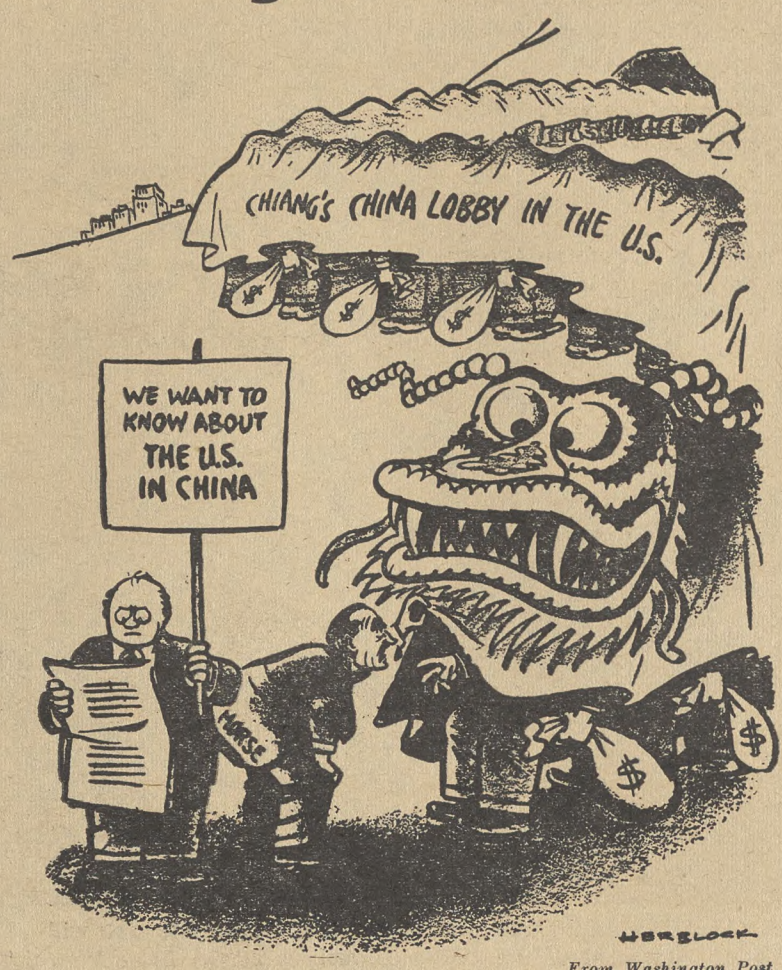
GOODWIN has boasted that he laid the groundwork for McCarthy's Senate attacks on Acheson, Ambassador Philip Jessup and Owen Lattimore.

Harris, a cotton broker, handled Father Coughlin's speculations in silver.

The Post Dispatch list concludes with the name of Henry Luce, publisher of Time, Life and Fortune; his wife, Clare Booth Luce, former Republican congressman from Connecticut and once president of Kohlberg's American China Policy Association; and William Loeb, Manchester, N. H., publisher and also a former president of Kohlberg's group.

"These are the principals," says the Post Dispatch. "Their strength is all the greater because some are not lobbyists in the technical sense of outsiders seeking to influence Congress but are members of Congress itself, spreading the lobby's propaganda with the special advantage of working from within.

"A congressional inquiry into all their activities could throw light on this all-important subject as nothing else could."



From Washington Post

"—And Vice Versa"

Supreme Court Upholds Convictions Of 11 Red Leaders

THE SUPREME Court last week upheld the conviction of 11 of America's top Communists for conspiring to teach and advocate the violent overthrow of the Government.

The decision, on which the court split 6-2, validated the controversial Smith Act of 1940.

New federal prosecutions of the nation's Reds were expected to be undertaken as an immediate result. Last year, a congressional committee was told by a top official that the Dept. of Justice criminal division was considering the possibility of prosecuting some 12,000 individual Communists.

Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath issued a statement following the court's action in which he hailed the decision as "a bad day for conspirators."

"Now that it is known that the Smith Act is valid," McGrath said, "the department is able to proceed to give additional protection against those who seek to overthrow the government by violence."

Communist Party attorneys indicated they will ask the court for a rehearing.

The Smith Act, under which the 11 were convicted, makes it unlawful for any person "to knowingly . . . teach the duty, necessity, desirability or propriety of overthrowing any government in the United States by force and violence."

The case on which the court ruled began in 1947 when evidence was presented to a special grand jury in New York. An indictment was returned on July 20, 1948, and the trial of the 11 Communist leaders began before Federal Judge Harold Medina on Jan. 17, 1949.

The trial lasted seven months and has been described as "one of the longest, stormiest criminal trials in American judicial history." When it was over, ten of the defendants were each given five years and fined $10,000. The 11th was given three years, plus a similar fine.

IN THE majority decision, delivered by Chief Justice Vinson, the Supreme Court held that the Communist leaders "intended to overthrow the Government of the United States as speedily as circumstances would permit."

Vinson said that their conspiracy created a "clear and present danger" and that they had been "properly and constitutionally convicted" in the lower court—for violation of the Smith Act.

Those voting to uphold the conviction besides Vinson were Justices Reed, Frankfurter, Jackson, Burton and Minton. Justices Jackson and Frankfurter wrote separate concurring opinions.

Against conviction were Justices Black and Douglas. Each wrote a separate dissent. Justice Clark, who was Attorney General when the Communists were indicted, disqualified himself from participating in the case.

Vinson's majority opinion said:

"We reject any principle of governmental helplessness in the face of preparation for revolution, which principle, carried to its logical conclusion, must lead to anarchy. No one could conceive that it is not within the power of Congress to prohibit acts intended to overthrow the government by force and violence.

"The question with which we are concerned here is not whether Congress has such power, but whether the means which it has employed conflict with the First and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution."

It was largely this central question of whether the Smith Act is constitutional in making mere advocacy and teaching of ideas a crime that Douglas and Black considered in their dissents.

Black said that the majority decision "waters down the First Amendment so that it amounts to little more than an admonition to Congress."

"The Amendment as construed," he added, "is not likely to protect any but those 'safe' or orthodox views which rarely need its protection. Public opinion being what it now is, few will protest the conviction of these Communist petitioners.

"There is hope, however, that in calmer times, when present pressures, passions and fears subside, they or some later court will restore the First Amendment liberties to the high preferred place where they belong in a free society."

Douglas hit at the majority decision on the grounds that the Communists were not accused of any actual overt acts against the government.

"Never until today," he added, "has anyone seriously thought that the ancient law of conspiracy could constitutionally be used to turn speech into seditious conduct . . . I repeat that we deal here with speech alone, not with speech plus acts of sabotage or unlawful conduct."

Douglas said that the Smith Act, as construed, requires that those who teach the creed believe in it. He continued:

"THE CRIME then depends not on what is taught but on who the teacher is. That is, to make freedom of speech turn not on what is said, but on the intent with which it is said.

"Once we start down that road we enter territory dangerous to the liberties of every citizen. We then start probing men's mind for motive and purpose; they become entangled in the law not for what they did, but for what they thought."

The 11 convicted are Robert G. Thompson, Eugene Dennis, John B. Williamson, Jacob Stachel, Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., Henry Winston, John Gates, Irving Potash, Gilbert Green, Carl Winter and Gus Hall.

City Loyalty Oaths Upheld

In a 5-to-4 decision, the Supreme Court on June 4 upheld the right of cities to compel municipal employes to take loyalty oaths.

But the majority opinion, written by Justice Clark, declared that any dismissals growing out of the requirement should not be based solely on an individual's past affiliation with the Communist party.

The decision came on an appeal by 17 former Los Angeles city workers fired for refusing to sign oaths disclosing whether they were Communist Party members.

Justices Douglas, Black, Frankfurter and Burton filed dissenting opinions. The latter hit the oath requirement in that it "leaves no room for a change of heart."

Sugar Workers In Puerto Rico Vote For CIO

THE GENERAL Confederation of Labor (CGT), CIO affiliate in Puerto Rico, has been declared the winner in an Insular Labor Relations Board representation election conducted among employes of the island's Sugar Producers Association.

The election was held Mar. 28, but the final result was held up pending the counting of several hundred challenged ballots.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization and councils, hailed the victory—which brings more than 20,000 sugar refining industry employes into the CIO—as "a tribute to the fighting qualities of the Puerto Rican workers, who have won a tremendous victory against overwhelming odds."

HE CITED obstacles placed in the path of the workers both by management and other unions in their attempt to join the CIO, and predicted that the victory in the sugar industry would be "the first of many more to come for the underprivileged people of Puerto Rico."

"Much remains to be done for these people," Haywood said, "and we intend to see that every possible assistance is given to other workers who wish to follow their example. We have dedicated ourselves to this cause."

A majority of the 120,000 members of the Puerto Rican General Confederation of Labor work in the sugar industry.

Eresto Ramos Antonini, CGT secretary of foreign relations and counsel, is also speaker of the island House of Representatives and a member of the CIO Committee on Latin American Affairs.

BANANA LOCAL? That's probably what Erie, Pa., unionists will call the new local of the CIO Steelworkers at the Lake View Forge Co. All but a dozen or so of the 85 workers bolted the Mine Workers' Dist. 50 to affiliate with the CIO. To induce the die-hards to join, the union dug up a sign held by Vice Pres. Mel Dias (right), illustrated by a bunch of bananas and reading, "Stick to your union bunch or you'll get skinned! Learn how to stick together." For emphasis, Pres. John Jakubec (right) holds up a bunch of real bananas. The USA members refused to work until the holdouts joined up.

CIO Picks Five For LPA Board

FIVE CIO officials were elected to the board of Labor Press Associated at the LPA annual meeting in Washington last week.

The cooperative labor news service, which sends five-day-a-week news and feature reports to some 250 labor papers throughout the nation, has made marked financial improvement during the last year, editors were told.

The membership meeting approved the change in name to Labor Press Associated—in place of the former "Association"—in order to avoid possible confusion with an AFL editors' group.

Elected to the LPA board to represent CIO unions were Henry C. Fleisher, CIO News; Vin Sweeney, Steel Labor; Paul Sifton, United Auto Worker; Art Riordan, IUE-CIO News; and Al Herrington, publicity director for the Communications Workers. One CIO membership on the Board will be filled by a nomination from the Newspaper Guild after that union's convention later this month. The AFL elected six members and the unaffiliated brotherhoods named two.

Ruben Levin of Labor, the railroad brotherhood paper, was re-elected president of LPA. Fleisher was re-elected vice-president, and Charles Herrold of the AFL Weekly News Service was named secretary-treasurer.

Asia ICFTU Alarmed By China War

"GRAVE CONCERN" over Communist China's intervention in Korea was formally registered by delegates from 10 nations at the first Asian regional conference of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, held recently in Karachi, Pakistan.

The labor movements of the nations represented were asked to take "urgent steps" toward implementation of the United Nations' embargo of Red China, according to a dispatch to the New York Times. The vote was 9 to 1. Delegates from India opposed the resolution on the ground that it had "grave implications."

A somewhat similar resolution, offered by the Chinese Nationalist delegation, was referred to the ICFTU Congress. It called for a worldwide refusal by free trade unions to load cargoes destined for Soviet Russia, Communist China and countries behind the Iron Curtain.

Complete moral support of the UN decision to oppose Communist aggression in Korea was voted. Chun Chun Han, Republic of Korea delegate, described the Red invasion of his homeland as the first war between democracy based on freedom and communism based on dictatorship.

The Chinese Nationalists advised the conference that many thousands of Chinese workers have been sent by the Communists to the Soviet Union as slave labor, that conditions in China since the liberation have become "appalling" for workers because of unemployment, and that China is starving her own people by shipping food to other countries in exchange for war materiel.

Labor Policy Groups Set Up On Coast

By BILL MILLIS

FIRST to organize in Northern California, CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhoods have established a United Labor Policy Committee in Contra Costa County.

The group is planning a vigorous community campaign in support of labor's national fight for an improved Defense Production Act.

Some 50,000 union members in heavily-industrialized Contra Costa County—which has several big oil, steel and auto plants—are represented in the new county ULPC.

A county-wide rally of officers and delegates from all local unions is planned in Martinez, Calif., on June 18. It will seek to organize effective action in support of the ULPC's legislative program in Washington for a much stronger Defense Production Act, dollars-and-cents price ceilings, protection for consumers, real rent controls and fair tax legislation.

The county ULPC also is publicizing labor's joint program among ministers and other county leaders.

A major impetus for formation of the Contra Costa ULPC came from CIO local unions and the recently-reorganized county CIO Council. The formal organization was built upon CIO and AFL cooperation in past election campaigns.

President of the county ULPC is Felix Dumond of the AFL Machinists. Vice presidents are Pres. Jack Bruhl of the county CIO Council and also of Oil Workers Local 587; J. Ryan, AFL Building Trades, and H. L. West, railroad brotherhoods. George Kelty, PAC chairman of OWIU-CIO Locals 5 and 445 in Martinez, was elected secretary.

In another part of the country, representatives of CIO and AFL unions and the railroad brotherhoods have formed a United Labor Committee of Greater St. Louis.

Officers are Oscar A. Ehrhardt, executive secretary of the St. Louis CIO Council, chairman; Robert H. Wadlow, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, vice chairman, and John I. Rollings, executive secretary of the St. Louis Central Trades & Labor Council, secretary.

Maryland Labor Sets Up ULPC

Major labor organizations in Maryland set up a State United Labor Policy Committee at a meeting in Baltimore on June 5.

Participating were representatives of the CIO, AFL, Machinists and railroad brotherhoods. Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Workers, a member of the National ULPC, addressed the initial meeting. He said the agreement for a united front "should mark the beginning of a greater labor unity than has ever existed before in Maryland."

The State committee will be composed of four delegates from each group, according to Secy.-Treas. Charles A. Della of the Maryland CIO Council.

Highest Court Clears Cloudy T-H Section

IN AN unanimous decision on June 5, the Supreme Court ruled that the secondary boycott provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act are not violated when a union, while picketing an employer, tries to persuade employes of another company not to cross its picket line.

The court reversed the decision of a lower court, thus upholding the original National Labor Relations Board ruling.

The case involved the AFL Teamsters, which had picketed the International Rice Milling Co., Kaplan, La., and had tried to persuade two truck drivers from another firm not to enter the mill for a load. This, the NLRB ruled, and the court agreed, is a permitted activity.

By a 6-to-3 vote, with Justices Jackson, Douglas and Reed dissenting, the court also ruled in three related cases that building unions had engaged in illegal secondary boycotts when they picketed and struck on jobs because non-union men were working for sub-contractors.

IN A CASE involving the Denver Building and Construction Trades Council, AFL, the court held that picketing a general contractor to make him stop dealing with a sub-contractor using non-union labor is a secondary boycott, forbidden by the Taft-Hartley Act. The court held that this was an unfair labor practice because the object was to force an employer to do business with another employer.

Similar decisions were rendered in related cases involving the AFL Electrical Workers in Greenwich, Conn., and a Carpenters' local in Chattanooga, Tenn.

VIKING DISCOVERERS: Four Swedes, brought to the U. S. by the Economic Cooperation Administration, discovered America at Gadsden, Ala. Ture Flyboo (left), of the Confederation of Swedish Trade Unions, and Per Eric Bergstrom, of the Swedish Central Organization for Salaried Employes in Industry, are shown discovering it at a carnival.

4 Swedes, In Spring Of 1951, Discover America Anew

AMERICA was discovered by four Swedes late in May of 1951, at Gadsden, Ala. Cradled in the southernmost hills of the Alleghanies, the Swedes found an expanding industrial center living in harmony with the residents of a long established agricultural region.

They found factory worker and farmer mingling in streets and meeting places, each absorbing the lore of the other and all striving for the advancement of the community.

The four Swedes formed a technical assistance team brought to the United States by the Technical Assistance Division of the Economic Cooperation Administration to study labor-management relations. The project is designed to spur industrial productivity of nations of the Free World, and to build strong bulwarks against Soviet aggression while aiding economic recovery.

The Gadsden visit was largely planned by Robert Driver, of the CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign, and Pres. H. L. Knowles, of the Gadsden Industrial Union Council, CIO.

Team members were Per Eric Bergstrom and Gunnar Petersson, of the Swedish Central Organization for Salaried Employees in Industry; Ture Flyboo, of the Confederation of Swedish Trade Unions, and Kjell Bengtsson, of the Swedish Employers Association.

Due to the efforts of Driver and Knowles, all of Gadsden was ready to receive the visitors when they were driven into town by Carey Haigler, CIO Alabama director. A complete cross section of America's labor scene awaited the team.

They saw a textile mill on strike; labor and management calmly settling a dispute in a tire plant; a ceramics establishment where the incumbent union was facing loss of bargaining rights through an election with a rival, and many plants where labor relations were excellent.

The Swedes were impressed by the calmness with which the labor disputes were being settled. They visited the homes of strikers and found electric refrigerators, all well filled with food sent by the CIO Textile Workers; they found all modern conveniences and labor saving devices in the homes of union men and women, the CIO's Rubber Workers, Auto Workers, and Textile Workers.

Through informal discussions on street corners, in barber shops and in the stores, Gadsden's residents sounded a mighty denial of the constant Soviet libel spread in Europe against America's workers and their unions.

THE TEAM got a full view of American social life. They dined at the country club; went to a street carnival where they rode the ferris wheel, bet on which hole a frightened mouse would choose to hide in, and even visited the girl show.

They saw too how the TVA reclaimed once barren land, and converted it into a lush farm section. They also saw how the shores of the lakes created by TVA were made into a vacation paradise, available to all at low cost.

Four Swedes discovered America in late May, 1951. They discovered the American people as well. They found that Americans serve many faiths, many unions, and multi-political parties.

But they also found that Americans are a single people with a united belief in democracy and the basic rights of all men.

Boss Of Nazi Camp Among Red Goons

THE SOVIET Union was "on trial" by the Intl. Commission Against Concentration Camp Regimes in Brussels on a charge of operating slave labor camps.

The trial was proceeding normally. That is, the Communists were trying to break it up.

Goon squads made up of the scum of a dozen countries were heckling the tribunal, of which M. Balachowsky was the presiding judge. They interefered with witnesses, and finally started fights.

Then the ushers went to work on what to them was a pleasant job. They began to throw out the rioters, and as most of them had been concentration camp inmates at some time in the past, they liked their work.

The melee was at its height when a Brussels newspaperman stood up at the press table and stared.

"THAT'S JOSEPH," he cried involuntarily, pointing to one of the goons. He was a barracks chief at Buchenwald!"

The journalist, who asked that his name not be disclosed, joined the ushers and managed to pay back "Joseph" for some of the beatings he had taken.

The unofficial tribunal heard testimony on Soviet slave labor camps from many witnesses and examined many documents before it found the Soviet Union "guilty." Its conclusions were:

"The characteristics of the Sovviet camps are really those of the concentration camp regimes such as that engraved in the flesh and blood of the tens of thousands of ex-inmates of Nazi camps and such as the express definitions of the concentration camps given by the Great Soviet Encyclopedia.

"Consequently, the court unanimously condemns before universal public opinion the Soviet concentration camps, a monstrous survival of a regime of slavery already condemned by a history which is beyond influence."

Reuther Asks 'World Law'

THE FIVE words "all men are created equal," were put on record more than a century and a half ago.

Ever since, that expression has "been slowly leading the way toward conditions of equal rights and equal opportunities," Walter P. Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers, declared recently.

He made the statement in reply to a question submitted by an interviewer for the Federalist, publication of the United World Federalists. Reuther is a UWF board member.

Reuther said those words had established in men's minds everywhere the greatness of America's purpose.

"Now is the time for us to proclaim another principle in five other words," he said. "World peace under world law."

Asked if he believed the proclamation would have an instant effect, even though world government was not at once achieved, Reuther replied that it "unquestionably" would.

CANADIAN labor endorsed aims of Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions as delegates conferred in Ottawa before leaving for ICFTU congress in Milan. Left to right, Secy.-Treas. Gordon Cushing of the Trades & Labor Congress; Secy.-Treas. Pat Conroy of the Canadian Congress of Labour; Percy C. Bengough, TLC president, and J. E. McGuire, railway brotherhoods.

Canadian Labor Vows Fight On Dictators

THE CANADIAN Congress of Labor and the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress have issued a joint statement outlining the aims and objectives of Canadian labor in international affairs.

The united declaration made clear that the triumph of freedom over dictatorship "can be achieved through the uncompromising resistance of the free trade union movement against those totalitarian movements which seek its destruction." CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with the CCL.

The statement strongly endorsed the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to which both organizations are affiliated. It pointed out that the 53 million workers in North and South America, Europe, Asia and Africa through ICFTU "have welded a common front to strengthen democracy, protect peace without appeasement and promote social justice."

THE CANADIAN labor movement was termed "an active supporter" in the fight for freedom waged by ICFTU. The statement declared that if the threat to world peace is to be overcome without a catastrophic global war, "the free trade unions will necessarily have to play an increasingly meaningful role in enlisting the forces of freedom."

The declaration called for "a crusade which will mean social betterment for underprivileged peoples in lands where hunger and exploitation still thrive."

"To these ends, the Canadian labor movement, as represented by CCL and TLC, has unitedly, in cooperation with other democratic trade union movements, pledged itself," it continued.

"We believe the ICFTU is one of the most formidable threats to the extention of Communist dictatorship because where free trade unions are strong, neither Stalinism, Falangism nor Peronism can thrive."

The statement carried a pledge to strengthen the ICFTU in every manner possible "so as to ensure the final triumph of democracy over dictatorship, social justice over exploitation and freedom over slavery."

Canada Imports U. S. Theory Of Profits

Company profits in Canada jumped an average of 23.8% from 1949 to 1950, and went up as high as 67.4%, according to the Ottawa Financial Post.

The Post surveyed 362 major industries in 15 major fields. It found that profits in the lumber group jumped 67.4%; transportation, 58.4%; oils, 42.9%; finance, 37.6%; pulp and paper, 37.4%; metals, 23.6%; public utilities, 23.5%.

Vote In Sicily Is Indecisive

Elections last week for the new 90-seat regional parliament of Sicily, the island at the toe of the Italian boot, left politicians pretty much up in the air.

Premier Alcide de Gasperi's Christian Democratic Party and the Communist Left Wing Socialist coalition, which ran under the name of the People's Front, each ended up with 30 seats, although the Christian Democrats had a 1% edge in the popular vote.

The Fascist Italian Social Movement (MSI), known popularly as Missini, emerged as the third strongest party with a bloc of 12 seats. The rest are divided among a half-dozen minor parites, indicating difficulty in working out a coalition to control the new body.

In another election, in Luxembourg, Communist strength waned to the point where the party won't even be able to introduce a bill in Parliament. With half the country voting, the Reds lost the only one of their five seats being contested and five seats are required before a bill can be introduced.

Jonkel Pleads Guilty In Md. Vote Scandal

IF YOU'VE got what it takes —just a little more than $5000 — you can completely mislead the people of an entire State by deliberate distortions of fact, and even break their laws, but still go scot free.

Jon M. Jonkel, publicity mastermind behind the Maryland Senatorial election campaign of Republican John M. Butler last fall, found that out last week.

The Chicago press agent, whom the unknown Butler imported to run his campaign for the Senate, broke the law in getting Maryland voters to elect his candidate. Jonkel himself admitted it when he pleaded guilty on June 4, after being indicted in Baltimore on six counts of violating the Maryland Corrupt Practices Act.

The court fined him $5000 and court costs amounting to $184. Jonkel walked right out after the hearing, when the $5184 was paid.

Butler had no comment.

JONKEL is the publicity man who based Butler's campaign on the gimmick of implanting a doubt in the minds of Maryland voters. He was aided by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), and Bertie McCormick's sensational Washington newspaper, The Times-Herald.

Their victim was Sen. Tydings (D.), whom they represented to Maryland voters as a friend of Communist Leader Earl Browder. The fact that they knew a picture showing Browder with Tydings was a fake didn't prevent them from using it. In fact, Butler's campaign headquarters dreamed it up.

A Senatorial investigation of Butler's election revealed these and other details of Jonkel's smear techniques. But the Senate, which must pass on the qualifications of its own members to hold office, still has not ruled on Butler's fitness.

Penna. CIO Supporting Aid To Older Workers

The Pennsylvania State CIO Council is supporting a bill recently introduced in the General Assembly which would prohibit an employer from discriminating against any person seeking employment on account of his or her age.

DEMONSTRATION by CIO Transport Workers Local 100 for the 40-hour week, staged by non-operating members during a work stoppage, jammed the area around New York's City Hall, which appears in the left background. Members of Local 100, key men in the city's vast public transportation system, are determined to win the 40-hour week this year. A group of engineers has recommended drastic curtailment of transportation service.

European Ports No Longer Red

The free labor movement has already won the battle against Communist efforts to control the ports of Western Eupore.

Only "the last vestiges" of Communist influence still remain.

What happened when the Kremlin attempted to wreck the Atlantic Pact through sabotage by French and Italian dockers' and seamens' unions is told in the magazine Free Labour World. The Communist strategy was simple. Red dockers and seamen were to prevent the delivery of American arms to Europe.

This is the story as told by the monthly journal of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions:

THE COMMUNISTS concentrated their main effort in France and Italy. They were confident of success, and with some reason, for at first sight it looked as if they were strong enough to carry out their threats.

At the end of the Second World War the Communists had been able to gain control of the national trade union federations in France and Italy. By 1948 that hold had been seriously weakened, and free trade unionists in both countries had begun to build up democratic labour organizations which had made considerable inroads on the Communist-dominated unions.

BUT IN the ports the Stalinists were still apparently strong, and were maintaining their control by a combination of legal subterfuges and intimidation.

In both France and Italy the dock committees which control hiring of workers in the ports are elected by the dockers. This legal provision was exploited by the Communists, who used their dominant position to make sure that only their supporters could get work.

The threat of unemployment was a very powerful weapon to keep would-be rebels quiet.

And if that was not enough there were other methods. Gangs of thugs would beat up recalcitrants or break up their homes.

Another and more subtle form of intimidation was to use the concierge system.

If a worker showed too much independence his wife would be submitted to a series of petty annoyances by the concierge. The lights would fail unaccountably, garbage would remain uncollected, and so on.

With France and Italy the main targets, the free labour movement went into action there first of all. The Communists might appear strong, but there was already considerable discontent against them among the workers. What was needed was courageous leadership, and this was forthcoming.

Groups of anti-Communist unionists were formed and gradually extended their influence as the workers became more and more confident that Communist terror tactics would be countered. When the first test came, this strategy of fighting fire with fire had already brought results.

The turning-point came in April 1950, when the first shipment of American arms to Europe were due.

In Cherbourg and Naples the dockers had been won over from their Communist leaders, and had voted to unload the arms. The Communists tried all they knew to get this decision reversed.

Prominent party members and unionists went posthaste to plead with the men, but in vain.

On Apr. 11 in Naples and on the 12th in Cherbourg the first shipments of American arms to Italy and France under the Atlantic Pact were unloaded without incident.

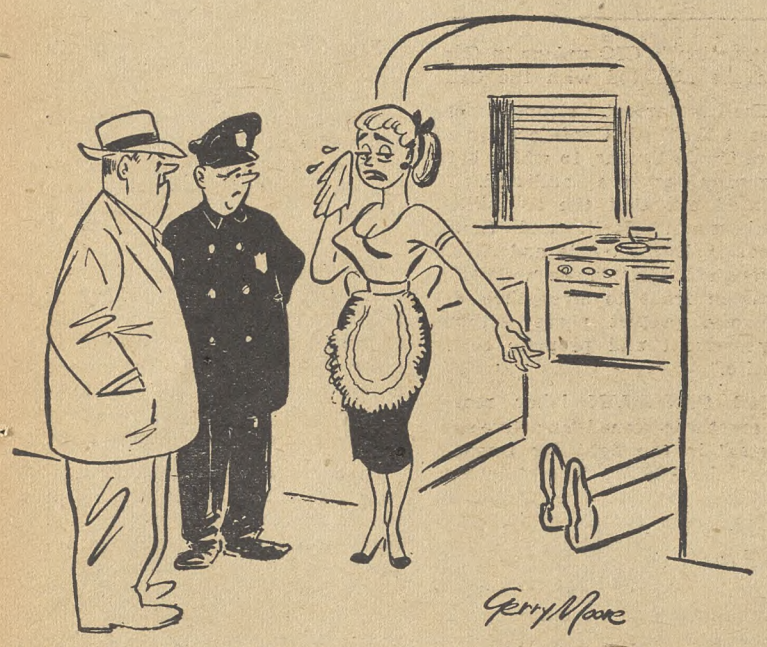
Since that time other ports have been cleared of Communist domination. Arms are unloaded regularly at most major French and Italian ports and the Communists' few remaining strongholds are safe no longer.

The dockers have been freed from intimidation, and their interests are being looked after by their freely chosen representatives in the democratic trade unions. How great a change there has been can be judged by the example of Marseilles.

MARSEILLES, where the docks were formerly completely under Communist control, is now free. Up to the end of last year the Stalinists had 54 of the 55 seats on the dock-workers' committee; at the free election held then they lost all but 10 of these.

Marseilles is now the headquarters of the drive to destroy the last pockets of Communist influence in Mediterranean ports.

Under the chairmanship of Pierre Ferri-Pisani, of the CGT-Force Ouvriere, the Mediterranean Committee of the Intl. Transport Workers' Federation is directing operations.



"I told him if he didn't like my cooking he should drop dead . . . and he did!"

CIO Aids TWU In Fight For 40-Hour Week

SEVEN unions, representing employes of city-owned transportation lines, have joined the CIO Transport Union in rejecting a proposed "counterfeit" 40-hour week.

The CIO pledged its full backing for the 36,000 TWU members in New York City.

The CIO union earlier had turned down the "slave-labor recommendations" by city engineers for a shorter work week. Pres. Michael J. Quill announced the union was ready for a fight.

The engineers, after a nine-month study and expenditure of $369,000, recommended a cut in the work week from 45 and 48 hours to 40, but chopping pay anywhere from $4.95 to $5.28 a week for hourly workers and $300 a year for salaried employes.

Average hourly earnings would rise from $1.51 to $1.62, but the net earnings would shrink from $3647 to $3391.

The engineers also recommended drastic curtailment of service. The union objected to a return to "horse-car days" of transportation. Under the agreement with the city, any economies proposed in the switch to a 40-hour week must first be approved by the union.

EVEN CITY officials agreed that in the light of the increased cost of living, the employes could not be asked to give up the 11c an hour the union was willing to yield a year ago for the 40-hour week.

Asked how the cost of the shorter work week, estimated by the engineers at $23,805,000 for the first year, could be financed, Quill suggested it be met through taxes. He objected to an increase in the 10c fare, as suggested in some quarters.

He declared July 1 as the "absolute deadline" for conversion to a 40-hour week. City officials claim it cannot be put in effect prior to October or November. Quill and Pres. Matthew Guinan, of the TWU local, also challenged Frank X. Sullivan, chairman of the city's three-member Board of Transportation, to a television debate on the merits of the engineers' report. LPA

'Putt Putt' Maker Charged By FTC

The Federal Trade Commission has charged in a complaint that the Outboard Marine and Mfg. Co., Milwaukee, Wis., has engaged in monopolistic use of exclusive dealing contracts in the sale of outboard motors.

According to the complaint, the company sells more outboard motors than any other manufacturer. With 1949 gross sales totaling $16 million, it assertedly occupies a "dominant place" in their manufacture and sale.

The complaint charges that the company has sold its motors, or has fixed prices, discounts or rebates, on the condition that the purchasers not deal in competing products. While the exclusive dealing provision is no longer contained in the company's contracts with its dealers, the complaint says it has continued to sell motors on such terms.

Do California Employers Want Race Riots Before FEPC Laws?

FAIR Employment Practices Commission legislation for the State of California and the city of San Francisco has been killed again—by the employers.

The fight, of course, will continue.

The gist of the argument the San Francisco Employers Council used in opposing statewide and local measures can be summed up this way:

"This isn't a serious problem. After all, we haven't had any race riots in California, so why do we need legislation?"

Defeated in committee in the State Legislature were two measures—one a CIO-endorsed bill with enforcement teeth, the other a measure sponsored by Gov. Earl Warren (R.) for a study commission on racial discrimination.

The strong FEPC bill was rejected 15 to 3 by the State Assembly Committee. The vote against the mild "study" bill was 9 to 8—closest civil rights vote in Sacramento in some years.

Carrying the ball for the employers at Sacramento was Almon P. Roth, Employers Council president. His claims that there is "no discrimination" against workers from minority groups were contradicted by a spokesman for the Los Angeles Merchants & Manufacturers Association, an open-shop group, who admitted the prevalence of discrimination.

ROTH'S BALD statement that California doesn't need FEP legislation since it hasn't had race riots was condemned as "extremely shocking" by Tim Flynn, Northern California CIO regional director, at a hearing before San Francisco's Board of Supervisors on a proposed municipal FEP ordinance.

Flynn condemned the organized employers for arguing "that you should not be seriously concerned with this problem until first we have race riots, we have violence, we have physical injury and possibly we have deaths. I don't think we should wait for those things to happen."

Municipal legislation for fair employment practices has been a local issue in San Francisco for nearly two years.

Early in 1950, the supervisors attempted to head it off by adopting a "voluntary plan" resolution, which then was supported but subsequently was disowned by business groups.

Failure of the "voluntary" program to bring only "a few isolated, hit-or-miss gains" and no "fundamental improvements" in hiring practices was detailed by the San Francisco CIO Industrial Union Council when the supervisors reopened the issue this spring.

CIO JOINED with the AFL Labor Council, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Jewish civic protective groups, church organizations, and spokesmen for Chinese, Japanese, Filipino and Latin-American communities in a well-organized campaign for municipal FEP.

Detailed evidence of existing discrimination in major fields of employment and the positive case for legislation were presented at hearings. Delegations from CIO unions and other organizations called repeatedly on individual supervisors.

In the end, FEP was defeated in San Francisco by a 6-to-5 vote, compared with 7-to-4 a year ago.

But the campaign is not ended. San Francisco has a city election in November. Most of the Supervisors who opposed FEP will be on the ballot.

Ohio Women Lead Dog's Life, And Vice Versa

THE BIRDS and the bees and the pheasants and dogs of Ohio got better treatment from the Legislature than the state's women and children.

It took the House two hours to debate the merits of a bill dealing with pheasant hunting and setting up private hunting preserves. It took just 45 minutes to approve Senate Bill No. 232, a measure to increase working hours for women and children, and lessening their protection.

Chief spokesman for the Senate bill was Robert Johnson, from agricultural Medina County. He heads the House Industry and Labor Committee, which deals with legislation affecting Ohio's industries and workers.

The bill was needed, he said, because of the national emergency. It would permit women to work 48 to 50 hours a week; permit girls of 18 to 21 to work on any shift; require women to work no more than six days in a calendar week (which means a woman could be forced to work 12 straight days without a day of rest); permit the daily hours of work to fall within 12 consecutive hours (which means a girl could be told to report at 8 a.m., work until noon, come back at 4 p.m. and work to 8 p.m., thus putting in eight working hours and drawing pay only for eight).

JOHNSON said these changes were needed because of the defense effort. He did not say that the changes in the law would apply to stores, laundry and drycleaning places, banks, hotels and restaurants.

Johnson said there was a shortage of manpower for national defense. He didn't mention that Ohio employers won't take men over 45 or women over 35, or youths of 20 to 22 because they are "draft bait," or qualified workers in minority groups, such as Negroes, Catholics, Jews, Italians.

He didn't say that of the 11,000 seeking jobs in Columbus, 4400 are women; of 24,000 in Cleveland, 10,000 are women; that in Akron, 8500 women and 7500 men are seeking work; in Bowling Green, 150 women and 250 men; in Troy, 300 women and 200 men. In Medina, largest city in Johnson's home county, of 400 seeking work, 300 are women.

Johnson spoke for 15 minutes. Some House members, not convinced of the need for destroying protective legislation under the guise of national emergency, tried to amend the bill to make it more workable. They lost, after other legislators announced in effect that the employers wanted the bill without any amendment.

That took 20 minutes more, and then, despite objections, debate was ended, and the House voted for the bill—without giving the plight of working women and children the same attention that was given the birds, the bees, the pheasants and the dogs. LPA

LIVING MEMORIAL to CIO Pres. Philip Murray is being raised by Indiana State CIO—a $400,000 fund for research into children's ailments at James Whitcomb Riley Hospital, Indianapolis. Here Oil Workers Local 210, Hammond, presents $5000 check to complete its pledge. Shown are (left to right) Secy.-Treas. Claude Becktell of State CIO Council; Mrs. Marie Cooper, CIO fund-raiser who in one year has secured $300,000 in cash and pledges to the fund; Dr. John J. Mahoney, head of hospital's new research wing; Jack West, Local 210 Athletic Club chairman, and Pres. Neal Edwards of State CIO Council.

Woods Raps Foes Of Stabilization

IF THE National Association of Real Estate Boards, National Association of Manufacturers and U. S. Chamber of Commerce succeed in killing the stabilization program, "they will have become Joe Stalin's most effective secret weapon," according to Federal Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods.

Woods spoke before the fifth American Veterans Committee convention in New York last week.

Inflation is destroying America's defense effort in every field, "including the effort to provide adequate housing and rent legislation," Woods said. He called on all Americans to fight for an effective anti-inflationary program, including a strong rent stabilization law.

"The anger of the American consuming public is a wrathful, fire-breathing monster when it is once aroused," he warned. "But it is snoozing complacently today.

"While it is drowsing away under the old apple tree, Washington is jam-packed with lobbyists of every pressure group imaginable, gnawing away like a horde of pack rats to convince Congress to let the whole stabilization program die on June 30."

Michael Straight, of Washington, who was reelected by acclamation to his second term as AVC national chairman, declared the veterans group "had licked the enemy of Communist infiltration" and called upon AVC members to increase their efforts on behalf of peace.

"We face a police state in Russia," he said, "doctrinaire in manner, universal in ambition, but opportunist in essence and nationalist at heart. It attacks at all points and advances down the lines of least resistance.

"If world war seems a winning prospect, Russia undertakes war. If war becomes a losing prospect, it turns to other means of conquest. Progress is Russia's mortal enemy."

Sen. McMahon (D., Conn.) called upon American war veterans to join in a "campaign of the big truth" to pierce the Iron Curtain of Soviet Russia.

"TOO MANY of us wrongly suppose the Iron Curtain cannot be penetrated with a great campaign of truth. It is already being penetrated. There is mounting evidence that even our present modest Voice of America program is reaching and shaking the convictions of millions of Russians."

The Atlanta, Ga., chapter received the first George W. Norris civil rights award "for outstanding work during the year of advancing and maintaining the civil rights of the people of the U. S." The award was presented by Dr. Ralph Bunche, Nobel prize winner and director of the UN trusteeship Council.

The delegates passed a number of reslutions. One called for Korea "to receive the unstinting aid necessary to put the stricken country back on its feet."

CIO Rail Union Speeds Drive For Members

THE FIRST national conference of the CIO Railroad Workers in Chicago June 2-3 laid plans to launch an intensified organizing drive among non-operating employes in the railroad industry.

The campaign will be focused primarily on workers employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad, but will be flexible enough to include all lines and crafts not yet under the banner of the CIO.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president, told the conference—which included the entire organizing staff of URW—that they "have a real opportunity to build a real organization" among the non-operating railroad workers in the country.

HE SAID that the craft unions tried to do the job but "failed miserably."

"What the CIO has done for the workers in other industries such as steel, auto and rubber, it can do for the railroad workers," Haywood declared.

The conference elected 10 members to the executive board to replace the former steering committee.

The newly elected members are: Stanley Wiley, Local 2005; C. A. Quigley, Local 2013; Thomas Toomey, Local 2001; Thomas A. Bloom, Local 2017; Lawrence A. Daniels, Local 2005; Joseph Schewinski, Local 1434; B. M. Naylor, Local 3002; C. A. McApee, Local 3001; George Green, Local 2015 and Henry Hengartner, Local 1463.

National officers are: John Green, Chairman; Eugene Alfred, vice chairman and Paul E. Monahan, secretary-treasurer.

LEGISLATIVE Assembly Room of State Capitol at Charleston was the scene of a two-day school on workmen's compensation conducted by West Virginia State CIO Council. Most of the 176 union members who attended, and some of the experts who gave them instruction, are shown above in the Assembly Room. Gov. Okey L. Patterson attended part of one day's session, congratulating the students on their foresight. Instructors and speakers included Commissioner of Workmen's Compensation Curtis Trent, Jr.; E. H. Gibbs, Dist. 17 compensation director for the Mine Workers; Pres. Eugene Carter of the State AFL; Secy.-Treas. Jacob S. Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council; John Rooney, legislative agent for the Ohio CIO; Homer Bussa, Steelworkers' field representative, and many authorities from the State Workmen's Compensation Department.

Flimsy Evidence Crumbling In Trenton Six Trial

A CONVINCING array of testimony showing that the Trenton Six were convicted of murder three years ago on the most contradictory and flimsy evidence—now being repeated with variations at the present trial—is on the record.

Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council last week proposed "new efforts to secure some economic redress" for the Trenton Six defendants if they are acquitted of murder.

Holderman's comments were expressed in a letter to Dr. U. S. Wiggins, president of the New Jersey National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Wiggins had written Holderman to thank the New Jersey CIO Council for running a campaign to raise funds for the defense of the Trenton Six.

"We are proud to have played some small part," Holderman replied, "in obtaining the best of legal counsel to defend these six men who were unjustly convicted once and whom the evidence clearly indicates were brutally treated by the police for no crime other than the accident of birth."

The defense concluded its presentation last week at the retrial of the six Trenton, N. J., Negro defendants, all of whom took the stand in their own defense.

Rebuttal witnesses for the prosecution then tried to break down the definitely favorable impression made by the defendants with their straightforward and moving evidence.

The men are being tried for the murder of a second-hand shop dealer in Trenton on Jan. 27, 1948. All were convicted and sentenced to be executed at their first trial, but the verdict was overthrown by the State Supreme Court and a re-trial ordered.

CIO unions in New Jersey and elsewhere have contributed funds to help pay the legal expenses of the new trial.

The defendants denied emphatically that there was any truth in statements implicating them in the murder that five of them had signed shortly after their arrests. (Two of these statements have already been ruled out as having been unlawfully obtained.)

There was a ring of truth to the stories they told on the stand of how they had been so scared by the police that they said what they were told to say.

THE defense charges that the "confessions" were tailor-made by the prosecution out of bits and pieces seized upon haphazardly and hastily. Authentic alibis and other evidence that didn't fit the jigsaw pattern were ignored or thrown out, the defense maintains.

Horace Wilson, oldest of the defendants and the only one who did not sign a statement, was the first to testify in his own defense.

He told of being at work on a Robbinsville farm, eight miles from Trenton, the morning of the murder. The time book kept by a foreman, who testified at the first trial, but has since died, was again produced. The prosecution refused to honor the alibi at the first trial.

This time Holmes Perrine, manager of the farm, testified for the defense. He said that Wilson was listed as a potato loader the morning of the murder, and identified records showing him at work. He testified that Wilson was a good worker with a good reputation.

COLLIS ENGLISH, a 26-year-old Navy veteran, looked the prosecutor in the eye and said reproachfully:

"I kept trying to tell you that I knew nothing about it."

A high school principal, a Mercer County American Legion commander and a teacher said they had known English as an upright, law-abiding citizen.

Ralph Cooper, son of a Georgia sharecropper, who had been in Trenton only seven months before his arrest, said he signed the statement because he was so nervous and scared that he was ready so say anything the police ordered him to say.

He told of being routed out of bed at daybreak, handcuffed and taken to the police station where he was fingerprinted and photographed—all without being told why.

McKinley Forrest, a former Georgia cotton picker, showed great poise and dignity on the stand.

He was dragged into the case, he said, when he went to the police station to take some car keys to English, and was held two days without explanation.

After drinking a cup of water with white powder in it, which he thought was aspirin, Forrest said he remembered nothing until seven days later when he found himself in the county jail.

A handwriting expert testified that a receipt for a deposit on a mattress at the shop where the murder was committed could not have been signed by Forrest, as the state contended.

THE FIFTH defendant to testify, James Thorpe, said he was working all day Jan. 27, the date of the murder, helping an uncle repair a car. Several witnesses backed up his testimony. Apparently the only evidence the prosecution has against Thorpe is the so-called confession, which he says he was scared into signing.

Sixth and last defendant to take the stand was John McKenzie, nephew of McKinley Forrest. He denied that he was "the lookout man" at the murder scene, as the state charged.

A war veteran, McKenzie was working at his job at a slaughter house two miles away, at the time of the crime, he said.

He testified that he lived in the same house as Forrest and English, and continued living there and working at the same job after he read about the murder. Two weeks later he was arrested.

Several witnesses have corroborated the testimony of the defendants, including some who who were originally witnesses for the prosecution. The testimony of a Negro physician, a prosecution witness, for instance, backed up the charges of the defendants that they had been doped.

Does Dictator Approve?

Government officials not only have to explain their policies to Senators who happen to disagree with them, but they also have to justify themselves before agents of foreign powers, the CIO Political Action Committee said last week.

"That, at least, seems to be the theory of Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.), ardent supporter of Spanish Dictator Francisco Franco, who last week summoned government officials to his office and quizzed them in the presence of the Spanish ambassador, Don Jose Felix de Lequerica," PAC explained in its news bulletin.

"McCarran wields a big stick over government departments both in his capacity as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee and chairman of the State Dept. Appropriations subcommittee. His displeasure can mean much to a government official without political power.

"Hailed to McCarran's office to explain to him and the Spanish envoy why Spain was not getting more of the $62 million loan McCarran succeeded in wrangling through Congress were Deputy Undersecretary of State Carlisle H. Humelsine; William B. Dunham, in charge of the Spanish desk at the State Dept.; Export-Import Bank Chairman Herbert E. Gasion, and ECA official Paul R. Porter.

"Meetings between foreign agents and government officials are usually held in government offices—not in the offices of congressmen."

Dixiegops, Crackpots In Control Grab Plot

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

THERE are hush-hush meetings going on in Washington right now between Dixiecrat leaders and some of the Republican high command. Object: A coalition ticket in 1952 to grab Congress and the presidency.

The superintendent of schools in Washington is under attack right now.

The two are closely related. For the same forces that want to turn the clock back in this country are behind both moves. It's all part of the program of Reaction, Unlimited.

Recently some 200% Americans managed to inflame Pasadena, Cal., to the point where a craven school board fired an outstanding superintendent, to the shame of the town and the weakening of a good school system. Under hot fire right now are the school systems of Denver, Montgomery County, Md., Minneapolis and San Diego. The country over, the public education system is under attack.

Would End Democracy

What the attackers want is simple: They want the nation's children taught their way. And their way means the end of democracy as we know it. For the forces leading the attack are the same that fight labor, fight all social welfare measures, attack minorities, spread bigotry and hate.

Early in 1950 a document was privately circulated by a "Citizens Political Committee" with the notation, "please do not discuss outside sympathetic circles." It also pointed out that "its title does not disclose its purpose."

The purpose was to form a Committee For Political Realignment between southern Democrats and northern Republicans to take over Congress and ultimately to elect a conservative president. Heading the committee was an official of Remington-Rand, the bitterly anti-labor firm that has offered Gen. MacArthur a $100,000 job. One of the members was Lucille Cardin Crain.

Last December "The National Coalition Committee" was formed at Jackson, Miss. Moving spirit was Fred A. Virkus, who draws $12,000 a year as head of CASBO (the Conference of American Small Business Organizations), which has been exposed as a front for big business. Virkus is an open foe of labor, on record as an anti-Semite, has worked with Merwin K. Hart, who loves Franco and says the present Supreme Court should be thrown out as "socialistic."

Thought Control?

CASBO, according to the report of the House Lobbying Committee, is a pressure group busy "in an infinitely ambitious struggle to control public opinion," and part of a "heavy and relentless attack on the nation's mind." Its long-run aim, said the report, is "nothing less than the establishment of CASBO's philosophy as the standard of educational orthodoxy in the schools of the nation."

CASBO, in 1948, founded the Educational Reviewer, a quarterly, to counter what CASBO called "left wing educators." CASBO said our school system was being perverted." In the last 18 months, the Reviewer has looked over 18 textbooks. It cleared four, criticised the others for "undermining the principles of private enterprise." Editor of the Reviewer is Lucille Cardin Crain.

MANPOWER is often discussed when a couple of women get together. No exceptions are Dame Mary Smieton (left), Under Secretary of the British Ministry of Labor, and Frieda Miller, of the Women's Bureau of the U. S. Dept. of Labor. The manpower they talked about at a meeting in Washington had to do with industry.

Mrs. Crain insists that CASBO only supports the Reviewer, does not set its policies. It does not need to, for she and CASBO think alike. She was on the "Citizens Political Committee"; Virkus was the moving spirit of the "National Coalition Committee."

And the National Coalition Committee calls "right thinking American citizens" those who oppose "the present socialistic regime"; who are against "intimidation, coercion and regimentation by the federal government"; who believe that "our wealth and resources" are "being wasted in crackpot socialistic schemes and experiments," or are "being drained off into foreign lands in support of unfriendly people and hostile governments"; who believed that "secret agreements" commit this nation "to war and death in filthy and foreign lands."

Fulton Lewis, Jr., the tory radio oracle, is cheering for the National Coalition Committee.

Reactionary Clique

Lewis joined in the attack on the textbooks in the Washington schools. He quoted Mrs. Crain's Educational Reviewer. The realty man on the Washington school board quoted the same source. Lewis is the lad who figured in the anti-Tydings smear campaign in Maryland. The unspeakable Sen. McCarthy had a hand in the Tydings deal. Lewis also had a hand in the attack on Anna Rosenberg, when her nomination for a post with Secy. of Defense Marshall was up for confirmation.

In the background were Gerald L. K. Smith and McCarthy. Smith, the rabble-rouser, praised a pamphlet by Edgar W. Waybright, Jacksonville, Fla., attorney, who advised the KKK in the smear campaign that defeated Sen. Pepper in Florida. Waybright is on the National Coalition Committee.

The late Rep. Frank Buchanan, who headed the House Lobby Committee, and who was himself once a teacher, told the American Political Science Association last December that the schools have become the special target of special interests whose aim is "nothing less than the establishment of their views as the ultimate standards of orthodoxy, both in education and more generally."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

CIO REP. David Sternback reports that the CIO won a smashing victory among employes of members of the Sugar Producers Association, in Puerto Rico. This is a great victory for the CIO in Puerto Rico, won against all of the trickery and underhanded tactics of various groups including the Nationalists and the Cominform boys. The election covered some 20,337 workers and the victory in favor of the CIO was determined after a count of challenged ballots. Congratulations to Brother Sternback and the officers of the CIO Council in Puerto Rico for a splended victory.

Allan Haywood

Ernesto Ramos Antonini, Pedro Vega Berrios, Carlos Rabasa and Alberto Sanchez are a few of those who worked so hard.

This gives the CIO a powerful labor force in one of our most important territories, and we will do all we can to assist in building strong, democratic trade unionism. The CIO will render every assistance possible on the mainland to help our Puerto Rican brothers achieve their economic aims.

The writer was in Chicago this past week where I met with members of the CIO Communication Workers. I also met with the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee executive board, where the ground-work for negotiations with the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. was discussed. A meeting with company representatives will be held June 12.

Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports that in a representation election at the Rivard Products Co., South Bend, Ind., the workers voted in favor of the CIO Paperworkers by a 63 to 31 for no union. Intl. Rep. George McGrew handled the campaign.

Employes in the non-technical departments at Radio Station WMCA voted to have the Newspaper Guild of New York, Local 3, as their bargaining agent. The vote in the representation election was 15 to 2 against.

Al Hartnett, secretary-treasurer, IUE-CIO, reports the following representation election victories: Detroit Steel, Buffalo, N. Y., IUE 164, AFL 8, no union 3; Meyer Display Products, Milwaukee, Wis., IUE 30, AFL 16, no union 2, challenged 2.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in a representation election at the Tennessee Oak Products Co., Memphis, Tenn., the CIO Woodworkers came out on top by a 14 to 3 for no union vote. Intl. Rep. F. M. Dickenson was in charge of this drive.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, CIO Woodworkers, reports that in a union authorization election at the Red Blanket Lumber Co., Prospect, Ore., the Woodworkers won by a vote of 43 to 27 against.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a representation election at the Westrick Battery Co., Denver, Colo., the workers voted in favor of the CIO Steelworkers by a vote of 14 to 2 for no union out of 20 eligible. Intl. Rep. Frank Richmond conducted this campaign with asistance from the CIO regional office.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that CIO LIU 78 won a representation election at the Stanley McDanial Co., Phoenix, Ariz., by a vote of 26 to 2 against.

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that the CIO Auto Workers won two representation elections. At the Minneapolis Moline Co., Kansas City, Mo., the count was UAW 10, no union 2, eligible 12. The organizational work on this campaign was handled by Intl. Rep. J. F. McFarland and Pres. Leland Cox, of Local 10 UAW-CIO. The second victory was at the Kansas City Poster Co., Kansas City, where the tally was UAW 14, AFL 1. This situation was handled by Intl. Rep. John Rinkenbaugh.

The UAW-CIO also will be collective bargaining representative of workers at the General Motors tank plant in Cleveland, O., following a representation election. For security reasons, the Army requested the NLRB to withhold the exact figures of the vote. The NLRB released the percentages on the voting, which were: 87% of the eligible production and maintenance workers voted; 82% voted for the UAW-CIO, 13% for the AFL.

The UAW-CIO also won a separate vote among wood, pattern and model makers over the AFL.

The organization drive at the plant was conducted by Reps. Charles Mobley and Joe Tuma of the union's GM Dept.

Westinghouse Halts Strike By 9c Raise

A STRIKE June 11 by 51,000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers in 22 Westinghouse plants throughout the country has been delayed by a tentative agreement.

The union won a 9c raise and a modified union shop. The raise is retroactive to April 16, on a contract that runs to Oct. 1, 1952, with a wage reopening between Feb. 1 and April 30, 1952. The modified union shop was effective June 1.

The agreement is subject to approval by government agencies. If the increase is not forthcoming by July 2 negotiations will be reopened, with a strike set for July 16 if no agreement is reached by that date.

The 9c increase will bring the average hourly wage to $1.84, and including incentive pay, to $1.92. The agreement also provides for an increase of $3.60 a week for salaried workers represented by the IUE-CIO. The company at first sought to make the pay boost dependent upon authorization for price increases, but the union flatly rejected the proposal.

James B. Carey, IUE president and secretary-treasurer of the CIO, predicted approval of the wage boost, since a recent 9c increase in GE plants was approved.

War Of Prices Spreading To New Fronts

PRICE slashing, brought on by the recent Supreme Court decision throwing out the price-fixing clause in the state "fair-trade" laws, spread to several other large cities last week.

Consumers went on buying sprees in Cleveland, Baltimore, Newark, Memphis, Omaha and San Francisco, but nowhere did the price war take on the "bargain" aspects that it did in New York.

Mobs poured into Manhattan stores in such numbers that, despite the sizable reductions that had been made in "fair traded" goods, the merchants as well as consumers reported a victory.

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York announced that the dollar volume of sales for the week ended June 2 was 25% higher than a year ago. Before the price war, according to the Wall Street Journal, stores were lucky to do 2% better than last year's rate.

MOST stores, despite losses on some of the come-on items, did enough general business more than to offset their reductions.

In Washington, Rep. O'Toole (D. N.Y.) charged that the price war in New York proves that prices have been too high.

Several manufacturers have already begun to put the "squeeze" on the big stores which have been selling nationally advertised products below the "fair trade" rate.

The fact that the "battle" continued lent support to charges that large inventories of consumer goods have been hoarded as a means of keeping prices high.

NMU Charges Stalling On New Pact

PRES. JOSEPH CURRAN of the CIO Maritime Union warned a special panel of the Wage Stabilization Board last week that there will be a "crisis on the waterfront" if maritime workers are kept under the 10% wage ceiling.

He said there would be no danger of "runaway wages" if the industry is exempt, because maritime companies "are too tough."

The union earlier had turned down a "package" offer made by representatives of East and Gulf Coast steamship operators on the grounds that it gave no consideration to union proposals for improving the contracts.

The Committee for the Companies and Agents, the employer group, offered the union a wage increase of 3.6c an hour. The NMU negotiating committee termed it "insufficient." Curran charged the companies with using "stalling tactics" and contended they were not making a "wholehearted, honest effort" at collective bargaining.

Beef Prices Test Control, Truman Told

CIO SECY.-TREAS. James B. Carey told President Truman last week that if the "greedy forces" are successful in removing beef price control, "the whole program of controls will collapse."

Carey, who is also president of the Intl. Union of Electrical Workers, warned Truman in a telegram that the fight against beef price controls is "part and parcel" of a campaign of collusion by big business, led by the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, to "wreck even the inadequate protection now established for the American consumer."

He assured the President that the administration has the support of the vast majority of wage earners and salaried workers of the nation in his effort to maintain controls.

Carey noted that the "same campaign" was used in 1946 to wreck OPA, and stated: "The conspiracy succeeded then and as a result, in a five-month period of June to Nov., prices went up 64%.

"If no firm and decisive action is taken by the government, and if the greedy forces are allowed to be successful, the whole program of controls will collapse."

Give A Buck To PAC

Bipartisan Prodding May Speed St. Lawrence Seaway Project

WHILE their colleagues in Washington sweltered through one of the capital's typical hot spells, members of the House Public Works Committee last week were off on a junket to the much more comfortable St. Lawrence-Great Lakes region.

Officially, their trip was described as a tour of inspection of the area affected by the proposed construction of the $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Seaway Project. Supporters of the measure, which has been pending in Congress for years, are hopeful that they will return refreshed and ready—at long last—to approve the Seaway.

The committee concluded hearings on the proposal on Apr. 30. No legislation has yet been drafted.

Meanwhile, two Michigan congressmen have jointly sent a pamphlet to each member of the House outlining the reasons for speedy completion of the undertaking to meet urgent defense needs. They are Rep. Rabaut (D), who sought the support of his Democratic colleagues, and Rep. Dondero (R.), who appealed to fellow members in the minority party.

In a radio address, Rabaut also pointed out that "the St. Lawrence Seaway affects every American citizen in every corner of the nation."

"Now more than ever before," he said, "the principal value of the seaway lies in its importance to the national defense, because industrial production is by far the most important single aspect of the strength we must have to preserve the peace of the world or to defend ourselves in case of attack."

Rabaut pointed out that the seaway would not only mean a saving of 26% of the cost on every ton of ore brought into the country, but that it would reduce the danger to ore carriers in time of war.

TOP defense officials, including the Joint Chiefs of Staff, have previously emphasized the importance of the proposed development to the nation's defense strategy. Every President since Coolidge has endorsed the project.

The St. Lawrence Power and Seaway Project calls for the construction of a series of locks along the St. Lawrence River which will permit direct water shipping from the Atlantic Ocean to the Great Lakes region. The St. Lawrence is one of the few remaining great natural resources of America still virtually undeveloped.

The time of construction has been estimated at five years, but some power from the project could be available in 30 to 36 months. Canada and the United States will share the initial cost, but the project is expected to be self-liquidating by its income from tolls and the sale of power.

Letters May Say 'Yes,' Senators May Read 'No'

Comes now—from the CIO Political Action Committee—at least a partial explanation of the allegedly heavy tide of mail to congressmen in favor of Gen. MacArthur.

The explanation: Congressmen didn't read their mail.

Take the case, for instance of Robert Dorfman, of Berkeley, Cal. He wrote Sen. Nixon (R.) and Sen. Knowland (R.), Chiang Kai-shek's No. 1 boy, who supposedly represent him in the Senate.

Dorfman wrote that he believed MacArthur had been a dangerous influence in the Orient, that he was insubordinate, that his dismissal had been long overdue.

Imagine his surprise when Knowland wrote him saying, "Many thanks for your communication. I appreciate your expression of confidence in Gen. MacArthur."

Dorfman checked with other people who had written. A friend who had written Nixon expressing opposition to MacArthur was thanked for the "letter you sent me expressing your disapproval of President Truman's action . . ."

A constituent who wrote Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.), also declaring his support of President Truman's action, received appreciation of his "recommendation." The letter went on:

"So many recommendations for impeachment of the President or the Secretary of State or the Secretary of Defense have been received in my office that I find it necessary to state that proceedings of this nature must originate in the House of Representatives."

As Miss Mae E. Mull of Falls Church, Va., who also wrote Nixon, put it:

"What especially annoyed me was that my letter was probably tallied in the wrong column since I was sent the 'wrong' reply.

"What validity have those statistics?"

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate & House Banking Coms. now holding hearings.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House Ways and Means Com. concluded hearings Mar. 19. Now studying proposals.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
Importation of Mexican Farm Labor S. 984 H.R. 3283	Provides for importation of cheap foreign labor; encourages extension of substandard conditions for both domestic and imported farm workers.	Senate passed Ellender bill (S. 984). House Rules Com. has before it Poage Bill (H. R. 3283). House action expected soon.	Urge House members to substitute Ellender Bill for Poage Bill and add strengthening amendments.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Now before Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Congress Gets Bill On Study Of Aging

A BILL CALLING for the creation of a select committee to study the problem of aging was introduced in Congress last week by Rep. Yates (D. Ill.).

In a speech before the House, Yates said the committee should study methods of converting our aging population into a national asset rather than let it become a liability, and to remove many thousands from the status of social and economic dependency.

There are 11½ million men and women over 65 in the United States, making up 8% of the population, Yates said. He estimated that by 1957 the proportion would rise to 11%.

Employer bias against hiring older persons, Yates declared, not only penalizes many steady, reliable workers, but also penalizes the taxpayers who must maintain unemployed older citizens on relief. At least half these people, he estimated are capable of being happy, useful and productive members of the community.

"Congress is a good example to show how the services of our older citizens can be utilized," Yates said. "In the 82nd Congress, we have 64 members who are over 65 years of age, including five over 80 years of age. Many of these legislators are among the most active and capable men in Congress."

House Group Blocks GOP On Tax Bill

THE HOUSE Ways and Means Committe put its final approval last week on a tax bill that shows much more consideration for low and middle income groups than Republican members wanted.

The committee on June 7 beat down GOP efforts to soften the stiffer excess profits plan previously approved. It set the excess profits base at 75% of the average for the three best years from 1946 to 1949.

Republican members tried again to keep the base at 85%, where it is now, but their motion was defeated. Tax experts estimate that the new base will yield an additional $732 million a year.

By a straight party vote, the committee also held firm to its earlier decision of increasing individual income taxes by a straight 12½%.

Under present proposals, the increase on corporation taxes would be five percentage points in all rates. The rate for corporations earning less than $25 thousand a year would be increased from the present 25% to 30%. The rate on those earning more than $25 thousand would jump from 47% to 52%.

The committee plans also to raise excess taxes on such items as liquor, cigarettes, automobiles and gasoline by about $1 billion a year.

The bill being drafted by the committee still must be approved by the full House and then must be considered by the Senate before it can become law. The committee proposals would boost Government tax revenues by a total of about $7.1 billion a year.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 18, 1951 82 No. 25

Pres. Murray Calls CIO Rally To Press Fight On High Prices

(See Story Page 3)

INSTALLMENT PLAN purchase of "select steak or roast" is offered by a Syracuse, N. Y., butcher whose sense of humor got the best of him. But Mrs. Charles Simmons, a restaurant owner, doesn't think it's so funny. Workers, too, see nothing funny in the price of beef—or in the meat industry's strike against the country. Story on Page 2.

Goldberg Refutes NAM Lie On WSB

THE NATIONAL Association of Manufacturers keeps on presenting "wholly inaccurate" information to Congress in an unscrupulous effort to destroy the dispute-settling powers of the Wage Stabilization Board, the CIO charged before a House Labor sub-committee.

Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO General Counsel, appeared before the group June 15 to refute the statement made by Ira Mosher, NAM spokesman, that Walter Reuther had prepared the resolution which President Truman adopted when he gave the board power to handle non-economic disputes.

Reuther is head of the CIO Auto Workers. In falsely crediting him with authorship of the disputes formula, Mosher's testimony implied that labor alone had determined that policy.

Actually, the formula was accepted by the President after a 12 to 4 vote of recommendation by the National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy. Farm and public members joined labor in supporting it.

Goldberg had previously testified before a Senate Labor subcommittee that the proposal had actually been worked out by the labor and industry representatives, and that the four industry members at first had indicated that it was acceptable to them as individuals.

They later voted against it when they failed to secure the consent of the NAM and the Chamber of Commerce.

"Mr. Mosher's statement that the original draft of the wage disputes resolution was prepared by Walter Reuther is wholly inaccurate," Goldberg said.

Mosher is chairman of the NAM's Industrial Mobilization Committee. He made a tardy appearance before the committee on June 8. The NAM had previously angered the chairman, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), when it failed to show up in response to an earlier invitation.

When Mosher finally appeared, Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) asked him what he meant in calling the President's action in authorizing the board to look into non-wage disputes "extra-legal."

THE NAM "authority" replied that he would have to ask his counsel to give "the technical answer."

Douglas then referred to the fact that the President has many times in the past acted to help settle labor disputes, and patiently gave Mosher a lesson in what the American Constitution means. He told him that "the President has certain general powers granted to him by the Constitution," and that his action in the wage board case was entirely within them.

He also questioned Mosher about his denial that the four industry members of the advisory board at first had approved the draft recommendation.

"The management men thought well enough of the proceedings to say to the labor men that they would go back and talk to their people, that they couldn't decide," Mosher replied.

Mosher then made his charge that Reuther had prepared the draft, and Douglas promptly asked him how he knew it was in Reuther's handwriting.

CIO Mariners Face Walkout

STRIKE action by three CIO maritime unions appeared imminent as this edition of the CIO NEWS went to press.

Federal mediators moved into the picture when negotiations between the Maritime Union, American Radio Association, and Marine Engineers, and East and Gulf Coast ship operators broke down.

The NMU executive board met June 13 to prepare for "such action as is necessary" if a walkout occurred when the contract expired. Pres. Joseph Curran said his union had no intention of extending the agreement beyond the deadline, but indicated that if a strike was called all defense cargoes would be handled.

The employers and the three unions have met for the past six weeks in almost constant sessions. Company officials have refused to move on the unions' proposal for a 25% wage boost and a 40-hour work week at sea.

GRADUATING from Brown Univ. this year with magna cum laude bachelor of arts degree was Lawrence N. Spitz, sub-area director of the CIO Steelworkers in Providence, R. I. At '39 the oldest man in his class, he is shown with Mrs. Spitz and daughter Marjorie, 4. Elected to Phi Beta Kappa, scholastic honor society, he went through the four-year course in three by getting five hours' sleep a night—and performing his full-time union duties as well. Without moral support of the union and USA Pres. Philip Murray he never would have been able to do it, he said.

Consumers, Beef Boys Strike Each Other

"FED UP" AT last with the attempt of the beef interests to dictate to their government, the American people last week took the beef situation into their own hands—and won at least a temporary victory.

The cattle industry has been conducting a "holdback" strike against the Office of Price Stabilization order rolling back the price of beef.

By withholding cattle from the market, the meat producers have tried to create a phony "shortage" in the hope that consumers would be misled into protesting the OPS order.

As beef prices rose to ceiling levels, housewives staged a boycott. By refusing to buy high-price beef, they averted the shortage which the industry had threatened.

The people's protest also brought some action in Congress. On June 13, a joint House and Senate "watchdog" committee began special hearings to determine if—as everyone already knows—the meat industry is striking against the government.

Meanwhile, Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) suggested a nationwide strike by consumers unless the cattlemen "stop their pressure tactics."

"If the cattlemen can strike, so can the consumer," Celler commented.

All Hands Join In Probe Of China Lobby

PRESIDENT Truman last week ordered an investigation of the China Lobby and everybody is trying to get into the act.

The probe was touched off by Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) the previous week during the Senate Foreign Relations and Military Affairs Committees' grilling of Secy. of State Acheson. He said then he would ask for State Dept. information on "what I understand is powerfully at work in America—the China Lobby."

Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.) supported him. Some GOP Senators appeared disturbed, as well they might.

At the time, Acheson testified his department had considerable material on the lobby but that it is "scattered and fragmentary." He said that "if there has been any improper use of funds to influence the foreign policy of the U. S., the people are entitled to know about it."

THE Criminal Division of the Justice Dept. was one of the agencies which began an investigation following the President's go-ahead signal.

The probe threatened to bring into the open the whole fantastic story of the tie-ins of the pro-Chiang Kai-shek group in America with an alleged conspiracy.

Agencies at work on the probe include:

The Treasury Dept., which knows a lot about what happened to American loans made to China, particularly a credit of $200 million in 1942 to stabilize Chinese currency.

The Federal Reserve Board, which has a pretty clear picture of Chinese financial manipulations of American aid and in addition, possesses some leads as to the existence and contents of bank accounts held by a number of Chiang's close relatives.

The Justice Dept., which is responsible for enforcing the Foreign Agents Registration Act. Some members of the China Lobby assertedly have failed to register under this act, and others have engaged in activities outlawed by it.

The Army, which has information on how the Chinese government made use, for private gain, of American surplus turned over to Nationalist forces after the war.

Truman Rides Herd On NAM Drive To Wreck Controls

President Truman took to the airways June 14 to tell the people the inside story of big business efforts to wreck the administration's anti-inflation program.

Calling the debate on price controls "one of the most crucial debates the Congress has held in a long time," he warned that the battle against inflation is "a fight for the very life of this Nation."

Excerpts from his address follow:

THE OTHER day, I called in a group of Senators and Congressmen—leaders of both parties in the committees that are working on the defense production bill. I told them how important it was for the country that we get a good bill passed. I think they all agreed.

But some of them told me they were under a lot of pressure from the special interests to do away with controls, and that the consumers were not making themselves heard.

* * *

Everybody should understand that the price rises we have had so far are only curtain raisers to what will come along if the Congress fails to pass a strong price control law.

* * *

Some people are telling the Congress now that we can get along without price, or wage, or rent controls.

That's the way the National Association of Manufacturers is talking these days... These lobbyists say that we can curb inflation without price control simply by tighter credit controls and higher taxes.

But, strange to say, when it comes to taxes, these same people are going around urging another committee of Congress to go easy in raising taxes on corporate profits.

These people who say we should throw out price controls and rent controls are wrong. They are just as wrong now as they were back in 1946 . . . The NAM put full-page advertisements in papers all over the country, saying if we would just take off price controls, there would be plenty of things to buy at reasonable prices. The NAM had its way in 1946. The Congress failed to pass a good price control law. And then we had the biggest wave of price increases in modern history.

Do you think the NAM learned anything from that? Not a thing. Here they are again giving us the same old song and dance: take off price controls and everything will be just dandy.

These people were wrong before and they are wrong now.

* * *

Fortunately, most businessmen—especially small businessmen—do not agree with the NAM. Most of them know that their future prosperity and the prosperity of the country depend upon good, strong price controls at this time.

* * *

Certain lobbyists claiming to represent cattle growers have put on a terrific hullabaloo down here in Washington.

These lobbyists are saying that the cattle growers and cattle feeders of this country won't be satisfied with a fair profit. And these lobbyists say if they can't get what they want the cattle growers and feeders will go on strike against the Government and the people of this country.

These lobbyists are actually threatening us—all of us—that if they don't get big profits at the consumer's expense we won't get any meat. They say the cattle will be held off the market and the American people will be starved out until the government gives in.

* * *

The people of this country, acting together, are stronger than any special interest. If we work together as a team, if everyone does his part, we can beat inflation, we can secure the defenses of this nation and keep down the cost of living for the average family.

Text Of Murray Summons To Inflation Meeting

Text of the statement CIO Pres. Philip Murray issued after a meeting of CIO officers on June 12, calling CIO union representatives to Washington on June 20 to consider inflation and congressional failure to act upon it, follows:

"After a meeting with the executive officers and vice-presidents of the CIO, I am calling union officials from all parts of the country to meet in the city of Washington next week to discuss and act upon the grave problems produced by rising inflation and Congressional lethargy.

"The members of the CIO are deeply concerned by the continued and unprincipled attack against anti-inflation measures which has been waged during the past few months by big business organizations, notably the National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and their various front organizations.

"This carping propaganda campaign has as its objective not the welfare of the American people but the profiteering interests of a tiny minority of the population. Nevertheless, that propaganda has had the effect of paralyzing effective action by the Congress to strengthen the Defense Production Act, which expires in just 18 days.

"The country cannot afford the luxury of further procrastination by a majority of its Senators and Representatives.

"The present economic situation is critical. The American people are confronted with semi-price controls, which have not held prices down; with semi-rent controls, which have allowed dwelling costs to rise in wide areas of the country; and with semi-tax measures which do not provide for a fair sharing of the tax burdens.

"It is a matter of record that the only area of the economy in which there has been a serious and continued effort to compel regulation is in the field of wages for the employes of American industry.

"The CIO has consistently pointed out that workers are prepared to share and support a well-balanced program to stabilize the economy.

"They are not now, and they never have been, willing to serve only as the butt for a one-sided program, which puts controls over wages while other factors in the economy are left free of effective regulation.

"This is the situation that has developed under the present Defense Production Act, which the CIO criticized at the time of its passage as a bill to appease special profit groups rather than to protect the economic welfare of workers, small farmers, professional people and people on fixed incomes.

"If the Defense Production Act is weakened, or merely extended in its present form, a majority of the Congress will have demonstrated that it approves of this outright denial of the principle of equality of sacrifice.

"Under those circumstances, the unions of this country will be forced to re-examine in detail their wage and welfare programs, in the interest of providing the economic protection denied to workers by their government.

"If profiteering interests are to determine national economic policy, the common people of America are equally determined that equality of sacrifice must be our guiding principle, regardless of the actions of the Congress."

Defense Program Is By, For Big Business

ASSISTANT U. S. Atty. Gen. H. G. Morrison confirmed last week what the CIO has been hollering about for a long time: That big business is running the defense program for its own benefit.

Testifying before the House Monopoly sub-committee, he declared that business advisory committees have been using their positions to obtain favors for private industry. Small business, meantime, has been left out in the cold.

"Many of the committees," he said, "rather than being advisory, have in fact made decisions and exercised functions which properly should reside exclusively in government officials."

The committee, which is headed by Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.), is attempting to determine the effect of the defense program on the monopoly laws. Morrison's charge was general and he levelled it at no specific representative of business. Celler indicated he would, at the proper time.

He expressed disbelief that the "directives governing the committees in the main have been adherred to." But the Justice Dept. has neither the funds nor the personnel to police the so-called advisors, he said.

He added these charges:

- Committees have met without the required government chairman.
- Government representatives have lacked proper qualifications.
- Agendas have been prepared and meetings called by industry rather than by the government body concerned.
- Subcommittees, panels and other sub-groups have failed to comply with the requirements imposed upon full committees.
- Requirements of committee representation listed in the Defense Production Act have not been met.

The Defense Production Act, Morrison pointed out, requires that advisory committees be composed of representatives of small and medium size businesses as well as large business, but that too often the big boys have taken over the whole show. There also have been cases where full-time officers of trade associations served; some were dropped after complaints.

CIO Parley To Air Inflation And Congress' Failure To Act

By MILTON PLUMB

MORE THAN 250 CIO union officials from all parts of the country will gather in Washington June 20 to work out a program for action by organized labor in the face of Congressional lethargy about continued inflation.

Called together by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, after a meeting of CIO executive officers and vice presidents on June 12, the assembly reflects organized labor's determination that it will not be the butt of congressional indifference over big business greed in the defense program.

The session will be held in the Washington Hotel.

Murray told the press that he had called the meeting because the CIO is "deeply concerned" over the "unprincipled attack against anti-inflation measures" waged by big business organizations. He said that business propaganda is now "paralyzing effective action by the Congress to strengthen the Defense Production Act."

Pointing out that prices and rents have continued to rise and that "the only area of the economy in which there has been a serious and continued effort to compel regulation is in the field of wages," he said that labor is not, and never has been, "willing to serve only as the butt for a one-sided program."

"Under those circumstances," Murray said, "the unions of this country will be forced to re-examine in detail their wage and welfare programs, in the interest of providing the economic protection denied to workers by their government."

Murray's warning was sounded at his first press conference since his recent illness. It came at a time when both the House and Senate Banking and Currency Committees were meeting behind closed doors to draft legislation to replace the Defense Production Act, which expires June 30.

The two committees wound up four weeks of hearings on June 8. Using "lack of time" as an alibi, the legislators actually refused to hear consumer groups which had asked to testify as much as two weeks before the hearings were scheduled.

Instead, they gave spokesmen for the National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and their front organizations a field day. The result was a preponderance of big business testimony calling for an end to even the inadequate controls now in effect.

Best guesses as to what Congress intends to do about the act now are that the lawmakers won't vote to let it expire. However, it is certain that many attempts will be made to amend it.

Foes of the act have even considered the strategy of enacting so many changes that the President would be forced to veto the new law as "unworkable."

Republicans, still playing politics at the country's expense, like this approach. They remember with glee how their similar maneuvering embarrassed the administration when OPA was killed prematurely in 1946.

Nevertheless, the Senate Banking Committee under the chairmanship of Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), was trying hard to report a bill. Sen. McFarland (D. Ariz.), majority leader, promised to send it to the floor for debate as soon as it was reported.

Both Maybank and Rep. Spence (D. Ky.), chairman of the House committee, are trying to secure enactment of new legislation before the June 30 deadline. They hope to avoid legislation merely extending the present act.

However, even if both houses pass bills before the end of the month, stop-gap legislation may prove necessary. If, as is likely, there are differences, the bills would have to go to conference for compromise.

In that event, a 30-day extension of present control authority probably would be voted.

President Truman reminded Congress of this danger on June 7, and warned that "the control of inflation is not a partisan issue."

Bernard M. Baruch, economic adviser to Presidents, also lent his support to the drive for a better anti-inflation program. He defined the issue as simply "a question of which is to be put first—the national interest or the selfish interest."

The elder statesman differed sharply with the NAM and Chamber of Commerce. He urged Congress to continue controls on a much stronger basis "by eliminating all favoritism and exemptions to any and all individuals and groups."

However, special interest groups were still trying to write jokers into the new law. Among such tricky proposals was one that would wreck rent control while pretending to extend it by letting "controlled" rents keep up with rising prices.

The CIO approach has been directly opposite. It alone has supported, for example, a program of consumer subsidies, which would permit OPS to control the retail prices of those foods whose farm prices are below parity levels.

Under such a program, the farmer would benefit directly, since the government would pay him the difference between his actual selling price and parity on foods controlled.

During the last war, similar subsidies are estimated to have saved the government and consumers $4 in stable prices for each $1 of subsidy payments.

The Idea: Talk 'Em To Death

Labor's charge that those favoring price controls were getting the brushoff while opponents were allowed to run wild at hearings on the Defense Production Act is upheld by the record.

The hearings ended June 8. Labor Press Associated has prepared the following tally:

The Senate committee heard 40 witnesses against controls, who got 12 days. The pros were given six days; eight witnesses were heard.

Before the House committee, 36 witnesses, who took 10 days, testified against controls. Six witnesses, taking seven days, appeared for the people's side.

Bank Refutes Control Foes

Take it from the bankers themselves, "inflation already has been costly . . . it would have been worse if anti-inflationary measures had not been taken."

This refutation of NAM and U. S. Chamber of Commerce claims that price controls are not necessary appears in the June letter of the National City Bank of New York. The bank warned that inflationary forces "are still dangerous, and that it would be foolhardy to take the risk that they may get out of hand again."

ULPC Units Join Controls Fight

THE STATE of Louisiana and the city of Memphis, Tenn., offer two more examples of how organized labor has successfully overcome internal differences to from active United Labor Policy Committees.

The Louisiana ULPC recently held a state-wide labor rally in Alexandria, La., attended by 500 representatives of the 350,000 organized workers in the state. Delegates were present from the CIO, AFL and the railroad brotherhoods.

The committee passed a resolution calling for the extension and revision of the Defense Production Act and declaring that the nation's resources "must be mobilized on an equal basis" and that "every group in the country must bear its full share of the burden of sacrifice."

In Memphis, following a labor-sponsored mobilization mass meeting, a permanent city-wide ULPC was set up. Although the meeting was sponsored by the Memphis ULPC, its scope was broadened to include a score of progressive civic organizations.

Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers blamed the forces of reaction for the country's present inflationary condition.

"Those reactionaries are looking toward 1952 when senators, congressmen and a president are going to be elected," McDonald told the Memphis meeting.

"They don't care what happens in 1951 and they're not concerned whether or not we have inflation. What they want is control of our government again."

Mayor Watkins Overton of Memphis praised the ULPC for permitting other groups to be part of what he called "America's immediate problem."

In Minnesota, the AFL State Federation of Labor executive council rejected a CIO proposal to form a ULPC.

On The Right Track

President Truman, who proved he knows something about life in the "whistle-stops", was on the right track again during last week's radio-and-video speech against inflation.

Talking about the anti-inflation law, he pointed out that "this is something the whole country should support. It's up to all of us."

Indeed it is. We have a job to do in convincing Congress of the truth that the people want prices down and adequate laws to hold them down.

But the Democratic Party leadership has a job to do, too. On the very day that President Truman pointed out that time is running short before the present price-control law expires, a lot of good congressmen gave the impression they had all the time in the world to fight inflation. They don't.

The President's fighting words and the rallying of the people against inflation must be backed up solidly by decent congressmen, too, if the country is to avoid inflation.

Liberal Democrats get elected when they put up a fight on behalf of the people. In 1951, their record in Congress has been defensive and defeatist. They should remember that liberals don't get elected, or re-elected, by appeasing reactionaries—on issues like inflation, or social welfare, or civil rights.

Aping Adolph?

The late, unlamented Adolph Hitler used the technique of the big lie and the big confusion to divide the German people and make them easy fodder for his barbaric Nazi party.

Adolph delighted in pinning the "Communist" label on good democrats who could no more stomach communism than they could accept Hitler's equally totalitarian Nazi philosophy.

The Hitler smear technique seems to have some admirers in the Senate of the United States.

Take the case, for instance, of the irresponsible Mr. Joseph McCarthy of the State of Wisconsin. He would have you believe that Gen. George C. Marshall—long-time army officer, former chief of staff, former secretary of state, present secretary of defense—is a traitor to his country.

McCarthy would have you believe that President Truman is "controlled" by "masters" like Gen. Marshall and Secy. of State Acheson; and that these "masters . . . belong to a larger conspiracy, the world-wide web which has been spun from Moscow." Further McCarthy would have you believe that Gen. Marshall is engaged in a conspiracy to weaken our nation so that it will "fall victim to Soviet intrigue."

This latest McCarthyism is more than just nonsense or run-of-the-mill exaggerated oratory. It can be understood only as a dangerous move to sow distrust among the American people and to discredit our democratic institutions.

The GOP if it is interested in truly protecting America, would do well to study the McCarthy diatribe—and then read the "gentleman" from Wisconsin out of the Republican Party.

Simplified Spelling

Col. Bertie McCormick of the Chicago Tribune, having taken over control of the Washington Times-Herald, is rapidly making it over in the image of his notorious Chicago property.

The Times-Herald, for instance, has now taken over Tribune spelling styles, through which "photograph" gets spelled "fotograf." However, "reactionary" will still be the same in both.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV June 18, 1951 No. 25

Sh-h-h, Can't You See He's Busy?

GI Humor--It's Still Good

By COMDR. W. J. LEDERER, USN

This report on Korea—from which excerpts appear below—was written for the Guild Reporter, organ of the CIO American Newspaper Guild, by a Navy officer who once served as secretary to Haywood Broun, the great columnist and ANG founding president.

I RECENTLY spent some time knocking around the Korean area. The one thing which hit me was the wealth of humor which seethed and bubbled from the troops.

Out from the grousing, the griping and playing of poker there is tumbling a torrent of rich, human American wit.

There was the story of the company of Marines who dressed their South Korean cook as a Filipino army major general and sent him to the U. S. Army quartermaster depot whenever they needed a new jeep or round of steaks.

When I departed, I heard that the Army brass had been quite charmed by the man. One officer had remarked, "When Gen. Collins comes over, we must invite that Filipino general over for lunch."

During August 1950, the navy sent a record-breaking number of air sorties from the carriers against the North Koreans. The navy fly-fly boys swooped eight or 10 feet off the ground and destroyed many important targets.

The admiral was so proud that he signalled the story of the record-breaking flights to the entire fleet.

One of the minesweepers signalled back, "We are only a small ship, but we, too, have set a record. One of the chief petty officers has a dog named Matilda. Matilda has just had thirteen pups."

The admiral interrupted the message with "Congratulations."

But the minesweeper came back with another message. "There's more to Matilda's record. She hasn't been ashore for eleven months."

I told that to a correspondent. He said, "My publisher would go crazy if I sent in something like that. He's already giving the managing editor a bad time. He'd probably say I was enjoying myself instead of getting the hot news. He'd say that the Times had a story about the army gaining a hundred yards at Kwangjo and that I missed it."

During this same period a Navy pilot scudded a rocket into a railroad tunnel. The ammunition train hiding there exploded, and the violence of the concussion almost wrecked the plane. When the pilot returned to the carrier he related his experience to the admiral.

The admiral said, "Boy, we nearly lost you on that run. How did you feel when the explosion pan-caked your plane?"

"Gee, admiral," said the pilot, "the explosion wasn't so bad, but it tossed my head back and I swallowed my bubble gum. I had been chewing that gum for two weeks, and it was the last damn piece in the fleet."

I TOLD THAT anecdote to a newspaperman; he said it was a good filler, but that he didn't have time to do it.

How is it that people of that nature don't write up the humor which rolls along with an army?

In my opinion it's the fault of the publishers and their auditors. I believe that in their ignorance they try to have one reporter do the work of three.

War reporting is hard work, and dangerous. A reporter can't get a story by taxiing across town and interviewing someone. He must be with the troops slogging through the snow or mud, at the same time he must be at the Eighth Army Headquarters, at the same time at MacArthur's headquarters; at the same time. . . .

That's a lot for one man to accomplish.

The reporter who has to be in six places at once can hardly report the wealth of humor and human interest that travels with American troops. Do not blame him alone. Put a little of the heat on the man back home who has just decided to spend more money on readership polls or promotion campaigns.

The Gravy Train Really Rolled Last Year

While most of the country was scrimping around trying to make ends meet last year, the executives of corporations which have to report top salaries to the Securities & Exchange Commission were doing all right, thank you. Here are the men who did best at the paymaster's window. In most cases their total take represents a combination of salary, bonus and stock. For instance, Charles E. Wilson, General Motors president who heads the list, received in 1950 according to SEC records $201,300 in salary, $363,795 in bonus and $61,205 in stock. A little down the list is J. C. Dellinger, Pacific Coast manager for the Houston, Tex., cotton brokerage of Anderson, Clayton & Co.; his salary was only $10,000, but he got a bonus of $458,271.

	TOTAL
Charles E. Wilson (General Motors)	$626,300
Albert Bradley (General Motors)	$541,425
Crawford H. Greenewalt (du Pont)	$539,550
Marvin E. Coyle (General Motors)	$526,100
Harlow H. Curtice (General Motors)	$526,100
J. C. Dellinger (Anderson, Clayton)	$468,271
Eugene G. Grace (Bethlehem Steel)	$464,321
Ronald K. Evans (General Motors)	$446,825
Louis C. Goad (General Motors)	$441,100
Frederick G. Donner (General Motors)	$441,070
Angus G. Echols (du Pont)	$384,100
Arthur B. Homer (Bethlehem Steel)	$381,932
Dr. Allan B. DuMont (T-V manufacturer)	$364,239
Edward R. Godfrey (General Motors)	$346,300
J. F. Drake (Gulf Oil)	$343,000
Henry B. du Pont (du Pont)	$323,590
Walter J. Beadle (du Pont)	$323,200
Walter S. Carpenter (du Pont)	$323,200
J. Warren Kinsman (du Pont)	$323,200
William H. Ward (du Pont)	$323,150
Roger Williams (du Pont)	$323,150
Walter Dannenbaum (du Pont)	$323,150
Seton Proter (National Distillers)	$302,206
John E. Bierwirth (National Distillers)	$302,206
G. W. Mason (Nash-Kelvinator)	$300,832
Steward J. Cort (Bethlehem Steel)	$299,547
Frederick A. Shick (Bethlehem Steel)	$284,547
T. M. Girdler (Republic Steel)	$279,166
S. A. Swensrud (Gulf Oil)	$275,000
John J. Schumann (General Motors)	$271,200
Norborne Berkeley (Bethlehem Steel)	$269,547
C. M. White (Republic Steel)	$258,333
Spyros P. Skouras (20th Century Fox)	$252,430
Albert K. Chapman (Eastman Kodak)	$249,850
Paul M. Hahn (American Tobacco)	$227,209
Thomas J. Hargrave (Eastman Kodak)	$225,181
Charles R. Hook (Armco Steel)	$223,381
W. W. Sebald (Armco Steel)	$221,710
Stanley C. Allyn (National Cash Register)	$212,500
James A. Gray (R. J. Reynolds Tobacco)	$210,000
Harry C. Crawford (Bethlehem Steel)	$202,161
David Sarnoff (RCA)	$200,000
Roy Fruehauf (Fruehauf Trailer)	$194,375
Walter P. Paepcke (Container Corp.)	$190,000
S. S. Nueman (Publicker Industries)	$175,000
Richard J. Boylan, James R. Coon, John A. Crowe, Preston L. Fowler (American Tobacco)	(each) $156,292
Frank Folsom (RCA)	$154,583
Ralph L. Gray (Armco Steel)	$151,625
Frank Stanton (CBS)	$151,597
W. Alton Jones (Cities Service)	$151,290
Sosthenes Behn (IT&T)	$150,795
Royal Little (Textron)	$150,645
Hiland G. Batcheller (Allegheny Ludlum)	$150,000
John H. Hinman (International Paper)	$150,000
Vincent Riggio (American Tobacco)	$148,671
Edward R. Murrow (CBS)	$135,086
William H. Hobbs (Coca-Cola)	$134,933
William S. Paley (CBS)	$100,000

Humphrey Bill Seeks Monopoly Law Shakeup

THE SENATE last week was called upon to undertake "in the near future" a "comprehensive revision of our complete anti-trust program," including both the anti-monopoly laws and their enforcement.

The proposal was made by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) June 12 when he introduced a bill to strengthen the anti-trust laws as they affect interlocking directories.

Humphrey's bill would prohibit multiple directorships in large corporations, making it unlawful for any person to be an officer, director, or employe of more than one corporation having total assets in excess of $60 million. It is estimated that the statute would affect one or more directors in from 175 to 200 manufacturing and mining corporations and in from 20 to 25 retail corporations.

Explaining that his bill was designed to plug loopholes in the Sherman and Clayton Anti-Trust Acts, Humphrey told the Senate that "time and experience have shown us that these laws are not adequate to the purpose for which they were enacted." Through these laws Congress sought to regulate concentrations of economic power and to prevent any company or group of companies from monopolizing any area of economic activity.

Humphrey pointed out that the Clayton Act tried to prevent the use of interlocking directorates to eliminate competition, and that the law actually prohibits any individual from serving as a director of more than one corporation whose capital, surplus and undivided profits aggregated more than $1 million.

N. Y. Shirtmakers Dedicate Union Cultural Center

The New York City Shirtmakers of the CIO Clothing Workers Joint Board has just dedicated its union cultural center with a concert by distinguished artists, commemorating the sesqui-centennial of the death of the Italian composer, Giuseppi Verdi.

Vincent Alvano and Alex Cohen, co-managers of the joint board, said in a pre-dedication statement that the center was established for the purpose of bringing "art, poetry and science" to the 15,000 members of ACW shirtmaker locals in the metropolitan area.

Probers Rap NPA 'Friends' Of GM Corp.

THE favoritism of the National Production Administration in allocating steel to the General Motors Corp. while failing to help its competitors was sharply criticized by the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Monopoly in a report last week.

The committee, headed by Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.), branded the attempted explanation of Assistant Administrator Horace B. McCoy "grossly misleading," and objected to "liberties taken with the facts."

The incident has come to be known in Washington as "the mystery of the lost locomotives." Four companies besides General Motors filed emergency requests for NPA allocations of steel in March. On March 14, "top priority assistance" was given GM for 2663 tons of steel.

Certification papers for the four competing companies were "lost." A second set was prepared. These, according to the committee, eventually found their way to McCoy's office, where they were given low priority and later pigeon-holed.

Filing of the report has not closed the investigation. William G. Knight, chief of the NPA's Motive Power Division, who testified before the committee about the mishandling of the applications "resigned under pressure."

CIO Unions Get Chance To Aid UNESCO Work

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

THE CIO Dept. of Education and Research has offered its services to CIO local unions whose members want to take a hand in the work of the United Nations.

A novel "pennies for progress" scheme has been initiated by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). Under it CIO locals, by selling UNESCO Gift Stamps and Coupons to send abroad, may become partners in an assistance program for some war-wrecked or underprivileged country.

The UNESCO Gift Coupon is a special kind of international currency, somewhat like a postal money order.

Coupons may be exchanged for books, films, laboratory equipment or virtually any other article needed by schools, universities, libraries, trade schools or other educational and cultural institutions approved by UNESCO.

The coupons, printed in demominations of $10 each, may be sent anywhere in the world. Recipients can use them in place of currency in any of a dozen countries to pay for orders placed with authorized suppliers.

Gift stamps also are available. They are printed in denominations of 25c and issued in booklets of 40, representing the price of a single Gift Coupon. The plan works this way:

A CIO local selects a project. UNESCO has a catalogue of hundreds of every kind in the educational, cultural and scientific fields. The local may take one of these projects that interests its membership at a price it can afford.

When the project is adopted, stamps and promotional material are supplied to the local. The officer or a committee—then sell the stamps to the members.

For each 40 sold stamps submitted to the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, a coupon worth $10 will be mailed from UESCO offices in New York to the local. The local in turn airmails it to the instiution or organization overseas, with an explanatory letter.

WHEN THE recipient gets enough coupons to buy part or all of its project items and equipment, it places the orders in its own country and pays for the items with gift coupons.

The Education and Research Dept. is currently selling UNESCO stamps to CIO members who attend its schools. The aim is to buy books and equipment for two labor schools in Germany. Later, as more stamps are sold, it is planned to purchase films for the schools.

Inquiries regarding stamps and coupons and requests for promotional literature should be addressed to:

CIO Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Pl., Washington 6, D. C.

CIO Asks Congress For More Workers' Housing

IMMEDIATE STEPS to increase the construction of housing to meet critical needs of workers during the defense period were urged on Congress June 11 by Walter P. Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers and chairman of the CIO Housing Committee.

At the same time a new edition of the Economic Outlook appeared —devoted to the "housing fiasco." The Outlook, published by the CIO Dept. of Research and Education, pointed out that "even after the greatest boom in our history, the housing shortage remains a national emergency."

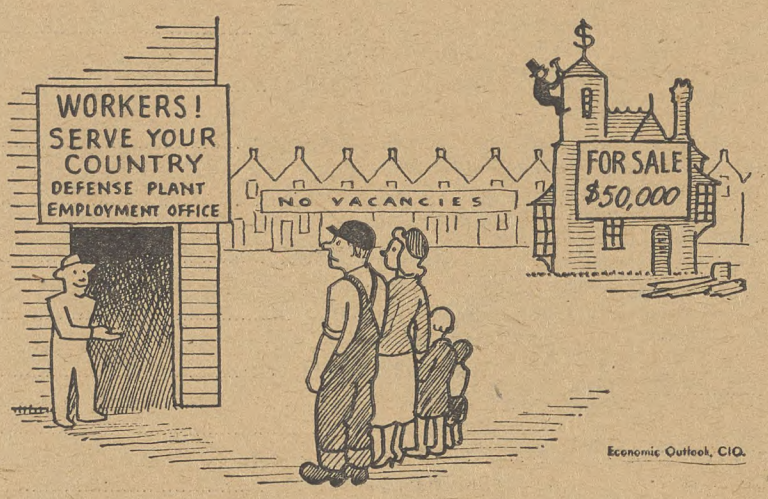
"Present government housing policies and administration have led to a complete fiasco for the home-hungry worker in critical defense production areas," Reuther asserted. "This statement is confirmed by facts revealed on the Economic Outlook."

He also pointed out that a critical shortage of housing in and near military establishments is another situation requiring immediate congressional action. He added:

"It is folly to expect the private building industry to meet the need in such places as Alaska and the newly established atomic energy plants at Aiken, S. C.; Paducah, Ky., in Utah, etc. The government must take steps to see that adequate housing is available at these military and vital production centers."

The Economic Outlook said that facts piling up at hearings reveal "a tragic shortage of adequate, fair-priced housing for civilian defense workers and for military personnel in industrial centers and military establishments around the nation." It added:

"The defense emergency has heaped a new housing crisis on top of an already existing one. Almost all of the old unsolved problems of slums, high rents, and the over-all shortage of decent, low cost family housing—the backlog of the last war and the depression—are still with us.



"INSTEAD OF adequate national planning to cope with the crisis, new housing is being rationed under Regulation X to families with the fattest pocketbooks; the public housing program is being destroyed; and the families of servicemen and defense workers are being gouged unmercifully by rising rents.

"Much of the blame must fall on the nationwide real estate lobby and the construction industry. But Congress itself has been callous to the people's needs, and even the federal housing agencies, charged with protecting the public interest, have failed to withstand the inroads of private greed."

With 1,000,000 new houses begun in 1949 and 1.4 million started in 1950, some progress was made, the Outlook indicated, toward cutting down the accumulated housing shortage of the 1926-49 period.

"But the boom has been halted," it went on. "Official plans call for only 850,000 new housing units in 1951, and, as the defense mobilization effort steps up, the number may be even less in 1952 and 1953."

The CIO "views 20 million new homes in 10 years as our minimum national requirements, if we are to provide adequately for population growth, slum clearance, urban redevelopment, elimination of sub-standard housing both in the cities and on the farm, and replacement of fire, flood and demolition losses."

CONGRESS and the Federal Housing Administration developed plans for "special incentives for apartment construction," the Outlook said, in order to meet this problem but, "actually, it turned out to be a scandalous subsidy to encourage high-cost and high-rent apartments."

The publication added:

"So the housing boom has been a mirage for most Americans. Millions of families are still forced to pay exorbitant rents, often for substandard dwellings. Millions more have become reluctant home owners, overcharged and often still ill-housed . . .

"While Congress destroys public housing—the hope of millions of ill-housed lower income families —we take care of those with fat pocketbooks. Here is propaganda indeed for the worldwide voice of Communism!"

Brehm Gets Suspended Term, Fine In Kickback

REP. Walter E. Brehm of Ohio, a Republican, last week was fined $5000 and given a suspended five to 15 months prison sentence for taking political contributions from one of his office clerks.

He was recently found guilty in U. S. District Court in Washington on five counts of violating the Corrupt Practices Act by lifting $200 a month from Mrs. Emma S. Craven for five months in 1948.

The indictment under which he went to trial accused him of using the money he got from Mrs. Craven to help finance his political campaigns. The Corrupt Practices Act forbids soliciting campaign funds from federal employes.

Brehm was placed on probation during the period of the suspended term by Judge Burnita S. Matthews. She also ordered the fine paid within 30 days.

The 58-year-old legislator and former dentist announced he would appeal his conviction and would retain his seat in Congress until all appeals are exhausted.

Leo A. Rover, who defended the Congressman, pleaded that Brehm was a "kind and considerate" man who had never knowingly done wrong. He painted him as a "man of moderate means" who is suffering from a heart condition and from arthritis.

Judge Matthews said the case differed from that of former Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R. N.J.) who was fined $10,000 and given six to 18 months in prison for payroll padding.

Thomas, the Judge stated, defrauded the government by placing people on the payroll for ficticious services and taking their pay. Mrs. Craven, the Judge ruled, actually performed services.

Meanwhile a Republican colleague, Rep. Burdick (N.D.), urged the House expenditures committee to clamp down on congressmen who pad their payrolls and take kick backs from their federally paid employes.

He asked for legislation to require a public record of all the money congressmen spend for their staffs and to require them to swear they have accepted no kick backs.

"There is a well formed opinion out in the grass roots section of this country that congressmen generally are not honest," Burdick declared.

"The information which this bill asks for can be very easily be obtained and when made public will convince the people that their Congress is an honorable body. We cannot afford to have the people think or believe otherwise."

Brewery Workers Help Cripples

The CIO Brewery Workers has made its fourth annual contribution to the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults.

Joseph E. Brady, coordinator of state councils for the union, presented a check for $3433 to Lawrence J. Linck, executive director of the society, at Chicago. Three-year-old Jeffrey Kulwin of that city accepted it on behalf of the crippled children of the country.

Linck pointed out that the Brewery Workers is the first union in the nation to lend its support to the society this year on a national basis. He said the grant will be used to finance a traveling demonstration exhibit of miniature equipment designed to help crippled children "walk, talk and live like other children."

Pollution Of Potomac Studied By CIO Regional Committee

THE CIO Potomac River Inter-Council Committee, appointed last February by Chairman Allan S. Haywood of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, last week got an on-the-spot picture of the problems involved in improving the Potomac River basin.

Members of the committee, with representatives of several government agencies and other interested organizations, held a three day conference beginning June 12, during which all phases of the proposed CIO regional plan were discussed in detail.

A trip was made up the Maryland side of the Potomac to Great Falls, Md. It included a close inspection of several sections of the abandoned Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, which the CIO has suggested be reopened for recreational activities.

The group spent some time at Four Mile Run, described as being one of the worst examples of stream pollution in the entire country.

From Great Falls, the committee and its guests proceeded to Front Royal, Va., where they studied the non-pollution plants of the city and the American Viscose Corp.

Skyland, in Shenandoah National Park, was visited and a representative of the Forest Service conducted a tour of the reserve.

The group returned to Washington Thursday.

When the Inter-Council Committee was set up, Haywood had voiced criticism of the proposed hydroelectric development of the river. He maintained that recreational opportunities for the people of Washington would be destroyed if the program of the Federal Water Resources Policy Commission was adopted.

Haywood pointed out then that the CIO has always been a leader in supporting sound plans in hydroelectric power development.

"However," he declared, "we have also asserted that such development must be carried on within the framework of a proper respect for the other resources and human values which may be involved.

"In this case, the proposal to construct a series of dams beginning at the Chain Bridge and on up the river past Great Falls, which would necessarily destroy the scenery and recreational values of the gorge and falls, is in our judgement inexcuseable."

(Chain Bridge and Great Falls are just up-river from Washington.)

He also cited several other objections, one of the most important being that the farmers of the region disapproved of the plan to bury their fertile fields by reservoirs "built for purposes of flood control or hydroelectric power."

Haywood called for a large investment of federal and state funds in the acquisition of park lands along the Potomac and its tributaries, and urged that suitable access roads and trails be provided rather than a parkway.

The Inter-Council Committee is composed of CIO representatives in Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia. Anthony W. Smith is executive secretary.

Hearings Called On Cloture Rule

Open hearings are scheduled to be held by the Senate Rules Committee on proposals to change the present "cloture" rule in order to make it easier to break filibusters.

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told congressional figures of both parties that civil rights leaders consider a change in the rules as "the first step in clearing the way for enactment of civil rights bills."

He cited the "impossibility" of surmounting the present requirements of a constitutional two-third vote to shut off endless debate on measures before the Senate.

Subscribe Today!

Only through the CIO News can you get full, complete, reliable reporting on the news of the CIO—throughout the country, in Washington and overseas.

Subscription price is only $1 a year (bundle orders on request).

The CIO News
718 Jackson Place N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Enclosed find $1—and send me the CIO News for one year.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

In Argentina:

Prices Up 600% Since Peron Seized Power

THE COST OF living in Argentina has increased five to six times since Dictator Peron first swept into power, according to Spotlight, monthly compilation of news from dictatorship countries published by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The article was Spotlight's first on Argentina. It marked a change in policy caused by Peron's suppression of the newspaper La Prensa, which, according to the ICFTU, makes the Argentine dictatorship "scarcely distinguishable from those of Spain or the Iron Curtain countries." The article was prepared by an Argentine economist.

"Since the rise of Gen. Peron," it says, "the purchasing power of the Argentine currency has declined sharply.

"In pre-Peron days the American dollar was quoted at 3.50 pesos; it is now worth 20. In other words, the value of the peso has fallen almost six times, and that is also about the ratio by which prices have risen.

"Average workers' wages, on the other hand, have risen only three times: from 200 to about 600 pesos a month."

A kilo (2.2 lbs.) of potatoes which cost .10 pesos in pre-Peron days now costs .50 pesos. A dozen bananas, formerly .20 pesos, are now 1.20 pesos. Coffee that used to sell at 2 pesos a kilo is now 12 pesos, while meat has increased from .50 to 2 pesos per kilo.

Before the dictatorship a man could buy a suit for 100 pesos. Now the same suit costs 500 pesos.

A movie ticket that used to cost .40 pesos is now 3 pesos, and a .40 peso haircut costs 3 pesos nowadays.

Beer has been jumped from .20 to .80 pesos a glass, and wine from .10 to .60 pesos.

THE RENT of a three-room flat has increased from 70 pesos a month to 600 pesos.

"Peron climbed to power on a program of demagogic promises with which he was able to give the support of the labor movement," Spotlight comments.

"He then proceeded systematically to destroy the trade unions as independent working class organizations, buying over a few corrupt officials, and expelling, imprisoning or even assassinating those who refused to submit.

"Today the trade unions of Argentina are government organizations, adminstered from the Ministry of Labor.

"In spite of some sporadic opposition, the free trade union movement has ceased to exist, and the tragic results from the workers' point of view are vividly portrayed in the rise in prices."

Britisher Says English Bosses Don't Try To Kill Unions

A BRITISH trade unionist visited CIO headquarters last week. He is Harold Gasciogn, district secretary of Great Britain's National Union of Hosiery Workers for the Derbyshire and North Knox areas.

Gascoign is the only labor man on a 15-man Economic Cooperation Administration team now making a six-week's tour of American universities and colleges in the East and Midwest. He was nominated to make the tour by the British Trades Union Congress.

Gascoign, who has his notebook and head crammed full of facts, figures, names and impressions of his trip, says he learned a lot about the U. S. and its people but would have enjoyed the tour even more if he'd had a union pal along.

The other members of the group are educators, businessmen and personnel managers, and while they are fine fellows, said Gascoign, they don't share his special interest in organized labor.

Gascoign said that employers in his country have accepted the necessity of working with unions much more than they have in the U. S.

There are no groups of employers in Britain still hoping to weaken and destroy labor unions, such as can be found in this country.

Like many foreign visitors Gascoign was impressed by the fine kitchens and bathrooms of our moderate-priced homes and apartments. He hopes the day will come soon when British workers can have more of them than at present.

Nevertheless, he said, today for the mass of the English people living conditions are better as a whole than ever before.

2d British Guiana Group In ICFTU

The largest trade union in British Guiana, the Man Power Citizens Association, has become the second labor group in the colony to affiliate with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The British Guiana Labor Union, headed by Herbert Critchlow, has been a member since 1949.

MPCA's membership includes workers in the sugar industry, public utilities, rice production and bauxite mines. The sugar workers, with 4000 dues paying members, comprise the largest group.

All the bauxite miners belong to MPCA and work in mines owned by the Aluminum Co. of America and the American Cyanimide Co.

MPCA has been influential in getting favorable labor legislation passed in the colony.

In Havana, application for membership has been received by ICFTU's Inter-American Regional Organization (ORIT) from the Falkland Islands Labor Federation, one of the charter members of ICFTU. The FILF is composed of more than 90% of the island's population eligible to join.

INTERNATIONAL affairs have their lighter moments, too. Here Elsuo Kato (left), of the General Federation of Japanese Trade Unions, and Michael Ross, director of the CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, enjoy one of them at the recent general executive board meeting of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Brussels.

How-Silly-Can-You-Get Dept. Works Overtime In Hungary

THE How-Silly-Can-You-Get Dept. is working overtime in Hungary, according to information reaching the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The tempo has become so terrific that even the Communist Party press, which ordinarily can take anything, finally balked.

What touched off the party daily, Vilagossag, was another competition for workers. Behind the Iron Curtain, a "competition for workers" always takes the form of a speedup.

This particular speedup was instituted in honor of May Day at a factory near Budapest.

Among other things, the workers were supposed to pledge themselves "to increase my loyalty and love for the liberating Soviet Union and my hate for the imperialists."

The Hungarian Commie newspaper pointed out that since last August, workers had been subjected to four major competitions —in honor, respectively, of the October Revolution, Stalin's birthday, the Party Congress and the "liberation" of Hungary by the Soviet Army. Each lasted from a month to six weeks. In addition, there were many shorter production drives.

Vilagossag, perhaps without realizing it, exposed the ridiculousness of such campaigns and the ill-disguised contempt in which the workers hold them. It illustrated:

"Mihaly Simonfi was already producing 180% above his norm when he signed the pledge to raise his output from 120 to 125% above.

"Jozef Veraszto pledged himself to teach new workers in his department, although he himself is a new worker.

"Karoly Praxl undertook to attend Party training classes, although he is not a member of the Party, and to participate in mass organizational-educational work, although he is not active in anything apart from a choral society."

Whiskey On Breath No Cause To Fire

It costs the Mengel Furniture Co., Laurel, Miss., $828.74 to discover that it takes more than the smell of liquor on a worker's breath to warrant his discharge.

An arbitration panel ruled that the company must pay that amount to Frank K. Dyess, a member of the CIO Woodworkers, for time lost when a foreman thought he smelled liquor on his breath and discharged him. Dyess was ordered reinstated.

Labor Share In Advances Held Basic

INDUSTRIAL productivity cannot be increased in the free nations without the active support of the workers, U. S. Assistant Secy. of Labor Philip M. Kaiser recently told the American Club of Paris.

Such programs cannot succeed, he warned, unless the benefits of increased operating efficiency are "plowed back" into the economy by way of the workers' pay envelopes.

The United States is trying to help other free countries reach "that state of economic, political and social stability which will prevent their submersion in the mire of Communism," he recalled. But labor must get a full share of the benefits it contributes, he added, if the nations being helped are to achieve a balanced development to serve as the basis for future enduring progress.

Kaiser is in charge of the Labor Dept's. international labor affairs.

In the United States, he told the club, labor "has done a magnificent job in rendering a helping hand to the free labor movements of other countries . . . voluntarily and on its own initiative."

This action by American workers, he explained, reflects the U. S. government's "new concept of diplomacy."

"Our foreign policy," Kaiser concluded, "is one of mutual aid based on mutual interest; it is the only way to mutual survival, and to the establishment of a durable and democratic peace."

Italy's Social Reform Due, Voting Shows

THE ITALIAN government was acutely conscious last week of the need for an immediate step-up in its program of social reforms.

The realization grew out of the results of the third election in the last few weeks. For the third time, the Communists and the minor parties aligned with them, as well as the Fascist-type Social Movement party, showed increases in their popular vote since the 1948 national election.

Premier Alcide de Gasperi's Christian Democrats and the moderate parties tied in with it in the government, on the other hand, showed a sharp loss in popular support.

However, the government forces captured 16 of the 30 provincial capitals where control was at stake, taking eight of them away from the Reds. The Communists ended up with control of 13, one of which—the port of Brindisi, where a lot of American arms for Italy have been unloaded—was wrested from the Social Democrats.

THE LAST one, Lecce, went to the small Monarchist party, which wants to return former King Umberto to the throne.

The cities the Christian Democrat bloc took from the Communists are Turin, where much of the automobile industry is centered; historic Florence, Pisa, Asti, Massa, Carrara, Piacenza and Teramo. Among those still under Communist control were the important ports of Taranto and Leghorn.

Unofficial returns showed 6,563,000 ballots cast. The Christian Democrat bloc. which includes the right wing Socialists, polled 3,295,000 votes, or 50.3% compared with 59.5% in the 1948 national election.

The leftist group got 2,530,000 votes, or 38.5% compared to 36% in 1948. The extreme right wing Social Movement party (MST), had 125,749, or 4.3% compared to 1.4% three years ago.

The issue in 1948 was different. Then it was a question of giving the Communists control of the country and probably turning it over to Russia, or retaining independence.

THE ELECTIONS were held in Italy's central and southern provinces. The first election, held in northern provinces a few weeks ago, showed somewhat similar results—an increase in the far left and far right vote and a decline in government strength, but with the Christian Democrats taking several important cities away from the Reds.

The second, in Sicily, was the first held there on a provincial basis. It, too, showed unexpected far left and far right strength.

Some government political figures interpreted the returns to indicate that the Social Democrats have to move a lot faster in improving the condition of hundreds of thousands of people who—despite Marshall Plan aid—are still jobless or living close to the starvation level. They also see the need for further curbs on Communist propaganda.

Unless the government takes both steps, they indicated, they believe that far left and far right strength will continue to grow at the expense of the moderates.

Auto Workers Will Enforce Wage Clause

REGIONAL directors and major councils of the CIO Auto Workers were instructed last week to obtain immediate effectiveness of 4c annual wage improvement factors in all contracts containing the clause.

The instructions were issued as a result of the Wage Stabilization Board's approval of the increase in the General Motors case. The approval was based on GM's statement that the wage increase would not be used as the basis for a request for a price increase.

"UAW-CIO contracts clearly recognize," said Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a telegram to the regional directors and councils, "the basic principle that workers have a right to participate in the benefits of technological progress, and that such wage increases, based upon technological progress, are non-inflationary . . .

OUR annual wage improvement clauses were entered into with GM and other corporations in our industry with the specific understanding that an annual wage improvement was possible out of the increased productivity resulting from the use of improved technology and therefore would not necessitate any price increases.

"It is the policy of the international union, and accordingly you are instructed to advise all managements under contract, where such contracts contain the annual wage improvement clause, to immediately notify the Wage Stabilization Board that they desire to put into effect the annual wage improvement clause, retroactive to the effective date in the contract, and that they further request specific clearance by the Wage Stabilization Board.

"Such requests should contain specific advice to the Wage Stabilization Board that the annual wage improvement factor will not be used as a basis for requesting a price increase."

HOME RULE for District of Columbia and wage increases for federal employes were discussed at special meeting in Washington called by District CIO Council and Public Assistance Div. Chapter of Local 1, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee. Shown (left to right) are Pres. Glenn Watts of the CIO Council, D. C. District Commissioner F. Joseph Donohue, the main speaker, Mrs. Jane Berry, chairman of the PAD chapter, and Pres. Sam Vernoff of Local 1. Home rule would give District residents the right to vote.

GCEOC Hits Ceiling On U.S. Pay Raise

SECY.-TREAS. Milton Murray of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Commitee has termed the proposed 8.8% limitation on wage increases for federal workers "another step toward miring these employes permanently in a Class B citizenship."

Murray made the charge last week in a letter to Sen. Johnson (D. S.C.), chairman of the Post Office & Civil Service Committee, which recently recommended the 8.8% limitation.

He cited in detail the inequities of working conditions suffered by federal employes as against workers in private industry.

"The myth that government workers are a privileged and pampered group should be demolished," Murray declared.

GCEOC Legislative Representative Richard Shoemaker had told the Post Office and Civil Service Committee May 23 that any raise of less than 10% would be inadequate because the cost of living has increased by that figure since federal workers received their last raise in October, 1949.

Declaring that the spendable income of federal employes has declined 20% since 1939, Shoemaker said that even a 10% increase "will leave a shameful discrepancy" between government pay rates and those of private industry. He called the discrepancy "a serious handicap to the defense effort" in that the lower pay scales make it increasingly difficult to recruit personnel for essential federal defense jobs.

"The proposed 8.8% increase will neither solve the defense personnel problem nor will it materially reduce anticipated government turnover rates," Shoemaker declared.

"Frequently it takes two, three or even more new employes to do the work of one good experienced secretary. Government jobs cannot be learned in weeks, months, or sometimes in years. Let us not be penny wise and pound foolish."

N. Jersey CIO Sets Up 11th County PAC

THE NEW Jersey CIO Political Action Committee has established a PAC committee in Warren County which will shortly begin an intensified registration drive among the county's voters.

The newest addition brings to 11 the number of New Jersey counties having PAC representation. Plans call for the initial meeting of the Warren County group June 21 when future political activity will be mapped.

In addition to Warren, PAC now has standing committees in Hudson, Essex, Union, Passaic, Bergen, Morris, Mercer, Camden, Burlington and Middlesex Counties.

In another action, Pres. Carl Holderman of the State CIO Council assailed as "selfish subversive doctrines," the proposals of the New Jersey Chamber of Commerce to end direct controls on prices and wages.

Holderman charged that the chamber's efforts to substitute "indirect" controls for the Defense Production Act "would legalize the defense racketeering of business profiteers, without stopping inflation."

ON THE housing front, the State CIO Council urged U. S. Sen. Hendrickson (R.) to sponsor a Senate amendment providing for 75,000 low rent public housing units during the next fiscal year.

In a letter to Hendrickson, Legislative Director Harry Kranz pointed out that since the House has approved only 5000 units and the Senate 50,000 units, the final compromise will result in authorization of far less than 50,000 units.

"In view of the acute need for low rent public housing in New Jersey and elsewhere," Kranz wrote, "we think it will be a great tragedy if less than 50,000 units are voted by both houses."

The Million Dollar Comma . . . And The Double Cross

By AL ZACK

THIS IS THE story of a comma . . . a comma worth at least $1 million a year to Ohio workers.

It's also the story of a shady legislative trick, which political observers are tagging as the "rankest ever pulled on the floor of the Ohio Legislature."

The story begins way back in the opening days of the 99th Ohio General Assembly, which has just shut up shop five months and nearly 1000 bills after it had convened.

It began early in January, when lobbyists for the Ohio Chamber of Commerce, the Ohio Association of Manufacturers and the Ohio Retail Merchants Association sent a page out on the Senate floor to get Sen. Robert A. Pollock of Canton, a Republican.

When Pollock walked off the floor to greet these lobbyists, he was handed six copies of a bill they had drafted. The bill dealt with unemployment compensation.

In the thick sheaf of papers handed Pollock were a score of amendments,

Pollock chatted for a moment with these lobbyists, idly leafed through the bill, and walked back on the Senate floor and sought the unanimous consent of his fellow senators to suspend the rules and allow him to introduce the bill.

Senatorial courtesy prevailed and the bill was tossed into the hopper. The clerk tagged it as "Senate Bill 149."

In keeping with the usual procedure, the bill was sent to the Senate Financial Institutions, Commerce and Labor Committee, made up of eight Republicans and one Democrat. Even this committee, top-heavy with pro-businessminded legislators, gagged at some of its provisions.

ONE of the principal provisions . . . and one of the few the committee refused to swallow . . . dealt with the case of a worker who voluntarily quit.

Under the law then in effect, a worker who voluntarily quit "without just cause" was penalized, but not disqualified. He was forced to wait five weeks (rather than one week) before becoming eligible for benefit checks and he could only receive compensation for 23 weeks rather than 26 weeks, if his unemployment lasted that long.

But S. B. 149 would have changed that system. A worker who voluntarily quit would be completely disqualified. He'd get no benefits at all, until he got another job and then was subsequently laid off.

Ohio CIO spokesmen cited case histories to show how innocent workers would be penalized by this provision.

Act Summarized

Here's a quick summary of the main features of Ohio's S. B.-149.

On the good side:

Dependency allowances were retained (this was labor's major victory).

Weekly maximums were increased from $25 to $28.

On the bad side:

The bill is filled with clauses which still disqualify workers and make it harder for them to receive compensation.

The committee agreed. It amended the bill to read that a worker who quit for good, compelling reasons was not to be disqualified.

THEN the bill went out on the Senate floor. There an amendment was offered. The Senate was told it was a "correctional amendment" and it was adopted.

There was no discussion, for "correctional amendments" always deal with typographical or grammatical errors and do not change the intent of a bill.

"That "correctional amendment" only inserted a comma. But that one comma completely nullified the action of the Senate Labor Committee.

When the bill reached the floor, it read that a worker would be disqualified if he "quit his work without just cause or has been discharged for just cause in connection with his work."

After the million-dollar comma was inserted, the bill read that he would be disqualified if he "quit his work without just cause or has been discharged for just cause, in connection with his work."

It meant that a worker would be disqualified if he quit for good, compelling personal reasons. And the Senate voted for it, not having the slightest idea of what it meant.

When the bill went over to the House it was accompanied by hotly indignant spokesmen for the CIO and other labor organizations.

They pointed out, in plain and unmistakable language, that the Senate had been the victim of one of the vilest tricks ever perpetrated on the floor.

THE HOUSE members were skeptical at first. They didn't believe anyone would pull that kind of a trick.

Even legislators who normally are completely unfriendly to labor called the "comma trick" one of the rankest they had ever heard. They angrily slapped down the business lobbyists and returned that section of the bill to the form intended by the Senate committee. Thus workers with honest, legitimate reasons are enabled to quit their jobs and not be disqualified.

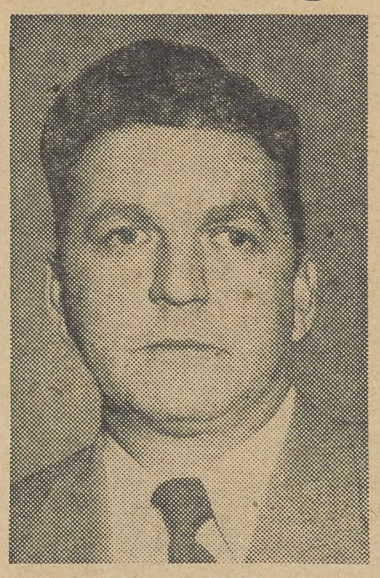
Shipbuilders Wage Increase Largest In History

By A. G. DELMAN

APPROVAL by the Wage Stabilization Board of 15% across-the-board wage increases for approximately 35,000 shipyard workers provided the largest single pay hike obtained in nearly two decades of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers' history.

The WSB ruling narrowly averted a thrice-postponed nationwide strike.

Chief architects and prime movers for the precedent-shattering increase, which pierced the WSB 10% ceiling formula, were Pres. John J. Grogan, Vice Pres. Andrew A. Pettis and Secy.-Treas. Ross D. Blood of IUMSWA.



JOHN J. GROGAN

The wage increases granted under the WSB endorsement, the officers said, would net members involved approximately $15,000,000 a year. The decision made the boosts retroactive to Jan. 1, 1951, and will put approximately $4 million into workers' pay envelopes immediately. The 15% is equivalent to increases ranging from 18½ to 31c per hour.

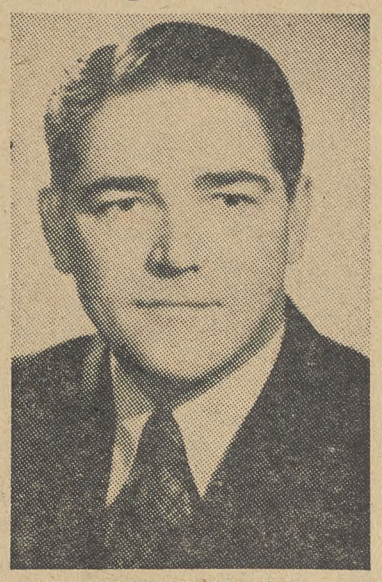
CIO shipyards affected by the new rates are: eight Atlantic Coast Bethlehem Steel Co. yards and Pacific Coast operations; Todd Shipyards plants in Hoboken, N. J., Brooklyn, N. Y., and Combustion Equipment Division; Dravo Corp., Ira S. Bushey & Sons, Inc., John H. Mathis Co., Gibbons Engineering & Machine Co., Morris Basin Dry Dock, Roderman Industries, Inc., John Swenson Dry Dock Co., Defoe Shipbuilding Co., Craig Shipbuilding Co., Long Beach Marine Repair Co., Quality Machine & Boiler and Wilmington Welding & Boiler.

Action on collateral issues in some of the cases was deferred pending further study by the board.

The first-class mechanics' rate in most yards is now $1.80 an hour on the Atlantic Coast and $1.93 on the West Coast. The old rate was generally pegged at $1.57-$1.64.

The cases were approved under the base pay abnormality section of the board's wage policy, General Wage Regulation No. 6, and on the basis of the tandem relationship regulation of the board.

The plight of the shipyard worker is perhaps best shown by the factor of peak employment of 1.7 million during the war, and 2.3 million men supplying material to go into ships, contrasted to a low of 28,000 shipyard employes at the beginning of 1950.



ROSS D. BLOOD

During the war the shipbuilders sacrificed their parity with workers in other major industries when they yielded to an appeal by President Roosevelt to refrain from following wage patterns set for other workers. Most important restraint in the pressure against a rising wage level is the depressed state of the industry during the post war period.

"THE CIO Shipbuilders are not content to rest on the laurels of the WSB approval of the new rates," the union officers asserted.

"We believe that an enlightened policy of a decent, living wage for the shipbuilders, who play a crucial role in peace and in war, must prevail. It is therefore our union's avowed and determined objective to establish a minimum of $2 per hour for skilled mechanics.

"It is also our profound hope that dramatic and significant testimony revealing the necessity for a sane and planned program of troopships, tankers, and cargo vessels will force Congress and the people to take heed and act wisely on the bitter and costly lessons learned during and after the two world wars."

UAW Officers, Board Bolt Local 600 Fete

THE UNITED Auto Workers executive board last week instructed UAW officers and board members to decline invitations to participate in a 10th anniversary celebration of the first Ford contract with UAW.

The fete, to be staged by Ford Local 600 of the UAW, was described by the UAW as being used to continue a series of "devious political maneuverings."

The UAW board charged that Pres. John L. Lewis of the Mine Workers (unaffiliated) had permitted himself to be used as an "instrument" in the maneuverings by accepting an invitation from Pres. Carl Stellato of Local 600 to speak at the anniversary function.

Text of the UAW statement follows:

"We regret very deeply that elements in the leadership of Ford Local 600 have used the occasion of the anniversary of the signing of the first UAW contract with the Ford Motor Co. for a continuation of devious political manipulations which have been in progress in the local for some months.

"We further regret that the president of the United Mineworkers of America has agreed to permit himself to be used as an instrument for those political manipulations.

"The UAW-CIO international executive board believes it is most unfortunate that the political maneuvering, which has forced the resignation of the chairman of the Ford Local 600 Anniversary Committee, has marred the occasion when all Ford workers and everyone else who participated with them in the historic struggle to win their first contract should be united in a common celebration.

"The board does not believe that its officers or members should lend their names or presence to an effort to use an historic occasion for political and factional purposes."

CIO Aids Fight On Spruce Beetle

The CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation has asked all CIO councils, regional directors and members to write their Senators and Congressmen urging that adequate funds be made available at once to fight the Englemann spruce beetle in Colorado.

In a letter to the councils and directors, Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the committee, pointed out that hundreds of square miles of the great forests of Colorado may be laid waste by the pests unless prompt action is taken by Congress on an appropriation in a bill before an Agricultural Dept. sub-committee.

UAW In New Headquarters

THE CIO Auto Workers formally dedicated their new $1,250,000 headquarters building in Detroit on June 9.

Appropriately christened "Solidarity House," the four-story brick and sandstone structure will house all UAW divisions except the Ford Dept. and the West Side regional offices, which will remain on the other side of town. Site of the new building is the former estate of the late Edsel Ford.

"Solidarity House" is H-shaped, 180 by 180 feet overall. It will be the center for the union's far-flung operations and provide office working space for more than 600 persons.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther pointed out that plans for the building were drawn with an eye to the future. The foundation was constructed so that four more stories may be added if needed.

$4000 Award For Negro Won By N.Y. Bias Unit

THE largest financial settlement arranged in the six-year history of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination was announced June 14—a $4000 back pay award to John B. Clark, of New York City.

Clark, a Negro ship's officer, had complained that he had been unlawfully discharged because of his race by the States Marine Corp., of New York, from its vessel, the Hoosier State.

His claim was substantiated at hearings before Elmer A. Carter, a member of the commission, who subsequently handled the extended negotiations that led to the financial settlement. The agreement with the company also provided for other important commitments.

Before the commission, Clark testified that he had worked at sea since he was 13 years old. He started as an ordinary seaman and was upgraded to ablebodied seaman. Then he took examinations and successively received U. S. Coast Guard licenses as third mate, second mate and chief mate.

During World War II, he said, he served as an officer on several sea-going ships. Official records showed he received the chief mate's license on June 24, 1947.

HE SAID he was unable to get a berth until he shipped out on the Hoosier State on a voyage that started from Baltimore on Aug. 22, took him to England and Holland, and landed him back in Hampton Roads, Va., on Oct. 4.

It was upon his return, he contended, that he was discharged because he is a Negro.

Among the additional terms negotiated by Carter and the company was an agreement under which the firm is to issue written instructions to all persons, including ships' masters, who hire, upgrade or discharge personnel.

The instructions will explain the requirements of the New York State Anti-Discrimination Law, and advise each recipient of his individual responsibility for compliance with it and of his obligation to make compliance meaningful and effective.

THE COMPANY also agreed to send a letter to all employment agencies and unions from which it recruits employes advising them that referrals of job applicants are to be made solely on the basis of ability, and without reference to race, creed, color or national origin.

In addition, it promised prominently to display the commission's poster, a summary of the law's provisions, at each of its offices, piers and other places of business, where it can be read by employes and applicants for jobs.

Finally, it agreed to distribute to each employe, within the next two weeks, a copy of the commission's pamphlet, "An Equal Chance."

CERTIFICATES were awarded 22 local CIO and AFL union officers in the Chicago area who completed the Univ. of Chicago's nine-month Union Officers Program of study. Some of the students are shown here with A. A. Liveright (seated, with pipe), director of the project, and at his right, Gwen G. Rapoport, director of union programs for the university.

Wage Controls Not Enough, ILO Is Told

WAGE CONTROLS alone won't turn back inflation, George P. Delaney, representing American organized labor, told the 34th conference of the Intl. Labor Organization last week in Geneva, Switzerland.

Neither will denying workers "wage adjustments to compensate for price increases," he said.

What are needed are over-all inflation controls based on equality of sacrifice. These include effective restraints on prices and flexibility, which he described as "a basic requisite to genuine—as contrasted with superficial—stability."

Approaching the problem only through wage restrictions, Delaney asserted, "would work the gravest injustice upon those who work for wages and salaries, and would impose an undue share of the burden upon those who are least in a position to bear it."

ANY POLICY of governing wages and their movements in a period of inflation must never supplant genuine collective bargaining, Delaney maintained.

Delaney is an AFL international representative representing the CIO and the AFL. Advising him are four representatives of each group.

Those acting for the CIO are Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee and president of the Clothing Workers; Michael Ross, committee secretary; Secy.-Treas. William Pollock of the Textile Workers, and Boyd Williams, Steelworkers' field representative.

The ILO represents every major country in the world except Soviet Russia. To the 60 member-countries at the start of the conference the delegates added the Federal Republic of Germany—the West Zone—despite objections from Poland, Israel and Czechoslovakia.

Israel objected to the admission on the contention that the German people have shown few signs of repentance for crimes committed during the Hitler regime.

CIO ECONOMIST advises NPA Administrator Hyman H. Bookbinder (left), former economist for the CIO Clothing Workers, talks over a defense production problem with Horace B. McCoy, assistant administrator of the National Production Authority in charge of the Textile, Leather and Specialty Equipment Bureau. Bookbinder has just been sworn in as McCoy's assistant. He was formerly with the National Security Resources Board.

WSB Approves 14c TWUA Package

THE CIO Textile Workers last week signed a strike-averting agreement with the New Bedford-Fall River Cotton Manufacturers' Association and Berkshire Fine Spinning Associates, Inc., giving 25,000 members in 25 cotton-rayon mills a package of 14c hourly.

The contract, approved by the Wage Stabilization Board, calls for a 7½% general wage increase, a 1c an hour raise for each 1.4 points rise in the BLS cost of living index, improved company paid insurance and one week's pay for every year of service upon voluntary retirement at age 65.

TWUA officials said they expected the WSB decision in the case to set a pattern for more than 100,000 northern cotton-rayon workers whose employers reached agreement with the union on similar terms.

In presenting the case to the WSB, union officers cited the Textron formula, established in 23 mills last September. The formula included wage and cost of living adjustments which gave 10,000 Textron workers 10c an hour more than TWUA members in other mills were receiving.

THE union had argued it was inequitable to treat two groups of workers in the industry differently when a national pattern had been set.

Union wage proposals for members in southern mills are now pending before a special WSB panel set up at the request of the Defense Dept.

In another WSB action, the CIO Electrical Workers urged the board to approve for General Electric Co. employes not covered by IUE contract the 9c an hour increase won by GE workers who belong to IUE.

In a telegram to WSB Chairman George W. Taylor, IUE Pres. James B. Carey urged immediate approval of the increase for GE employes who had not already won it. GE is asking it.

"The application of GE should be approved without further delay on the basis of the board's tandem principle," Carey said.

"Furthermore, we urge the board to delegate to its staff the authority to approve similar increases in the electrical industry subsequent to the time when GE puts in effect the 9c increase to IUE-CIO."

IUE represents more than 70,000 GE employes. Last fall it won a contract settlement after a strike.

Included in the agreement was a cost of living escalator clause which provided for a 1c an hour increase for every 1.4 points the cost of living index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Labor Dept. rose between Sept. 15, 1950, and Mar. 15, 1951. It was a one-way escalator.

4 Acquitted In Trial Of 'Trenton Six'

FOUR OF THE defendants in the Trenton Six murder case were acquitted and two were declared guilty of first degree murder by a jury of six men and six women which turned in a verdict June 14, after nearly 20 hours deliberation.

The men were charged with slaying an elderly shopkeeper, William Horner, Jan. 27, 1948.

The jury recommended mercy for the two declared guilty—Collis English and Ralph Cooper, both 26. The verdict makes a sentence of life imprisonment mandatory.

The four freed are Horace Wilson, 40; James Thorpe, 26; John McKenzie, 28, and McKinley Forest, 38.

All six of the men were convicted and sentenced to death at the first trial three years ago. The verdict was thrown out by the New Jersey State Supreme Court and a new trial ordered.

The men have been in jail since February 1948, following their arrest in widespread raids on Negro homes in the Trenton, N. J., area. The defense charged that the police methods used in picking out the six defendants were haphazard, and that the statements five of the men were induced to sign, through fear and use of drugs, were "tailor-made" by the police.

THE NEW Jersey CIO Council, which helped raise money to pay the expenses of the new trial, has proposed that efforts now be made to secure economic redress for the aquitted defendants.

The final jury of 12, selected from 14 who listened to the testimony for more than three months, was chosen on the 103d day of the trial. Edward B. Kerr, Jr., a postal clerk, was foreman. The jury deliberated continuously, as required by New Jersey law, until the verdict was reached.

CIO In New York Establishes Unit To Guard Human Rights

FED UP WITH attempts of the Communist Party to monopolize civil rights cases and use them for propaganda purposes, the New York City CIO Council has established a CIO Committee on Human Rights to handle all such cases arising in the metropolitan area.

City Councilman Earl Brown, a CIO member, was elected chairman, and James S. Glaser of the Newspaper Guild was named secretary.

Activities of the committee will embrace discrimination in employment, housing, education and public service as well as cases in which the civil rights of individuals or groups are threatened.

The first action taken was a resolution to give moral and financial support to the Trenton Six in their fight against a murder charge at Trenton, N. J. (See story elsewhere on this page.)

The group also hailed the action of a number of Princeton Univ. professors in taking the issue away from the Communists, who were using it for their own purposes.

Members voted to take the initiative in calling a meeting later in the year of all groups interested in civil rights. Plans will be made to fight future civil rights cases on the basic issues of American democracy.

Other CIO members on the committee are Pres. Michael J. Quill, Transport Workers; Secy.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz, New York City Council; Warren Bunn, Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers; Pres. William R. Steinberg, American Radio Association; Stanley Broderick, Maritime Union; Elizabeth Hammond, United Department Store Workers; William J. Swanwick, Paper Workers; Harry Gray, Government and Civic Employees; Daniel Morgan, Transport Workers, and I. Kaufman, Newspaper Guild.

It is expected the committee will be enlarged to include one member from each major CIO union in the city.

Falsies Off To (War) Front

The theme song of a lot of American men may soon go something like this: "Those Army maps are breaking up that old gal of mine."

The word has gone out from Toyad Corp., Latrobe, Pa., that the girls no longer will be able to buy the firm's principal product—foam rubber falsies.

The Army is now getting the entire output of the plant in the form of contour maps, which are used for studying tactical problems.

Mental Illness Can Be Aided: New Pamplet Tells How

MENTAL illness is America's No. 1 health problem. And the one most misunderstood. There was a time not so long ago when insane people were treated like criminals and locked up in chains.

Public opinion today would regard this as shocking, and yet the notion still persists that a family in which insanity strikes suffers a disgrace.

Yet one in every five families in the United States will at some time have one of its members hospitalized for some form of mental disorder. What should a family do when this happens? What is mental illness and how can it be avoided?

These are some of the questions answered in a new 20c pamphlet, "When Mental Illness Strikes Your Family" published by the Public Affairs Committee, a non-profit educational organization at 22 East 38 St., New York 16, N. Y. The 32-page booklet is written by Kathleen Doyle, with an introduction by Dr. Karl M. Bowman, medical superintendent of the Langley Porter Clinic in California.

Mrs. Doyle refutes some popular misconceptions by pointing out that mental illness is common; is not a single disease; is not necessarily inherited; does not strike without warning; can be treated successfully, and is not a disgrace.

"Mental illness affects more people than polio, heart disease and cancer combined," she states. "One out of every 20 persons in the United States will at some time in life develop a mental disorder sufficiently serious to require hospitalization.

"No one holds a delirious pneumonia patient responsible for his actions. Why should a manic depressive be blamed for what he does because illness had lodged in his mind instead of his lungs?"

The pamphlet suggests a number of things the family can do to aid the patient while he is at the hospital and after he returns home. It also tells how to prevent mental illness, pointing out that mental health "develops best in families where relations between children and parents are happy and relaxed."

Michigan CIO Parley Approves Broadened Political Action

By TED OGAR

DELEGATES TO the 13th annual Michigan CIO Council convention approved an expanded political action program and voted a 1c increase in per capita tax to help finance it.

The convention, held in Detroit's Masonic Temple June 4-6, was attended by 929 delegates.

Calling for greater grass roots political activity, the delegates mapped a 19-point State legislative program and pledged support of national CIO legislative objectives.

Immediate goals in Michigan are repeal of the 1½c increase in gasoline taxes, an initiative petition drive to force enactment of a corporation profits tax, and a campaign for reapportionment of state legislative districts.

The Michigan CIO considers reapportionment one of the most vital State issues. Because the Legislature has ignored constitutional provisions for adjustment of Senate and House districts, half the State's population elects 65% of the Legislature, while the other half elects only 35%.

Council Pres. August Scholle of Glass Workers Local 74 handily won re-election for his ninth term, and Secy.-Treas. Barney Hopkins of Auto Workers Dodge Local 3 won his eighth term. The 17 vice-presidents were won by an administration slate.

Washington fumbling on the defense program and big business domination of mobilization agencies featured talks of key convention speakers. Blasting the corporations' legislative drive, national CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey labeled the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce "virtual allies of communism."

"We of the labor movement—with absolutely no help from employers and big business—have reduced American communism almost to impotency," he said.

"BUT THE followers of the NAM and Chamber of Commerce line are doing an even more effective job than the Communist Party could today in sabotaging national salidarity and an all-out defense effort."

UAW Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey assailed the "feeble attempt by President Truman to give leadership and to try to give effect to the '48 Democratic platform."

Mazey also hit at Pres. John L. Lewis of the Mine Workers for refusing to join the United Labor Policy Committee. However, he added, the ULPC would still welcome the UMW chieftain to its ranks.

U. S. Assistant Secy. of Labor Robert T. Creasey severely criticized opponents of American policy in the Far East. He said that "the record reveals clearly that our foreign policy is sound and orderly and is not confused in the slightest degree."

John W. Gibson, chairman of the Displaced Persons Commission and a former Michigan CIO president, supported Creasy's contention. He added that the DP program "has ripped a hole—a big hole in the Iron Curtain—one through which the world can look."

Less optimistic was Willard S. Townsend, president of the United Transport Service Employes, who told delegates that "our failures in the field of human relations" are a catastrophe which endangers world survival as much as the possible use of atom bombs. Townsend called quick enactment of civil rights legislation necessary to combat effective Communist propaganda among nonwhites.

BLAIR MOODY, Michigan's new Senator, pledged support of labor's legislative program and added that the "time is long overdue for consumers and workingmen to have representation in Congress."

Other speakers were Gov. G. Mennen Williams, who detailed legislative gains directly attributable to Michigan labor's political action; George L. P. Weaver, special assistant to the chairman of the National Security Resources Board; Darrell Smith, national CIO-PAC representative; Leo Perlis, director of the national CIO Community Services Committee, and Pres. Simeon P. Martin of the Michigan Farmers Union.

UAW Seeks TV For Detroit

The CIO Auto Workers will soon be operating a television station in the Detroit area if recommendations of the executive board become a reality.

The UAW has applied to the Federal Communications Commission for a channel and later plans to extend its TV coverage to other areas, according to Pres. Walter P. Reuther. While the application is pending, the union will present a weekly TV commentary over station WWJ-TV each Tuesday at 7:30 p.m., starting June 19. Producer will be Guy Nunn, UAW news commentator.

Gov. Fuller Vetoes College Bias Act

Gov. Fuller Warren of Florida last week vetoed a provision of the State appropriation bill that would have cut off funds for all Florida colleges if racial segregation is ended at any one of them.

Warren said the proposed provision, if applied, would damage the esteem in which Florida is held by the rest of the nation. He also said he doubted if it would be upheld by the Supreme Court.

He declared that if State funds were shut off, colleges would violate teaching agreements, confusion would result and incalculable damage would be caused to the careers of 20,000 students.

Atom Workers In Fourth Vote Stick To CIO

THE CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers, Local 288, for the fourth time in four years has beaten back an AFL attempt to wrest from it the bargaining rights for 2300 employes of the big K-25 atomic energy plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

The tally was 1333 for the CIO affiliate, 751 for the AFL Atomic Trades and Labor Council, and 51 for no union.

The workers are employed by the Carbide & Carbon Chemicals Corp., which operates the plant for the Atomic Energy Commission.

The Local 288 contract was still in effect for another year and the union was under no obligation to submit to an election. However, it decided to accept the challenge when AFL spokesmen declared they were going to "drive the CIO out of Oak Ridge."

The UGCCW has represented workers at the K-25 plant since 1947. In that time the union has chalked up an impressive record of wage increases and improved working conditions for members—which have automatically gone to employes of smaller Oak Ridge AEC plants—and has also gone to bat for the whole community on such bread-and-butter matters as rents, housing and community services.

Joseph R. Joy, international vice president of the CIO union, described the election victory as "a well-deserved tribute to the union and Local 288 for its four-year record of service as a closely-knit, efficient, democratic industrial union."

CWA Girl Wins Ruskin Award

A member of the CIO Communications Workers, Eileen Kerr of Linden, N. J., has been named one of three winners of the 1951-52 Ruskin College labor scholarships.

Announcement of the awards was made by Dr. Harold Taylor, president of Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, N. Y., who is chairman of the U. S. Selection Committee for the scholarships.

The awards cover tuition, board and room for a year's study at Ruskin, a college of Oxford Univ. in England, and are presented annually to workers actively involved in the trade union movement who show possibilities of leadership and talent for higher education.

CIO-CSC Praises Steel Local 2318

The National CIO Community Services Committee has formally thanked Steelworkers' Local 2318, at Masury, O., for its outstanding support of the Overseas Food Fund.

"Our reports show," wrote Dir. Leo Perlis, "that from July 1948 through June 1, 1951, your local has made a total contribution of $360 in monthly installments of $10. I should like to report to you that yours is the only local in the entire country which has maintained such a continuous record over a period of three years."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE WRITER this past week participated in negotiations in New York between the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, and the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Allan Haywood

CIO Rep. David Sternback was welcomed back to Washington for a visit. He is assigned to Puerto Rico, where he is doing a wonderful job of assisting the workers achieve the organization and unity they need to secure their economic needs. Brother Sternback just handled a tremendous victory for CIO in Puerto Rico among the sugar workers, where some 20,000 are now members of CIO. The CIO will render every assistance and cooperation to our Puerto Rican brothers.

By the time you receive your next issue of the CIO NEWS, the writer will be at sea on his way to attend the second World Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Milan, Italy. The sessions will run from July 4 to July 12. In my absence, my assistant, R. J. Thomas, will be in charge of my office. I know that all of you will keep the union rolling during my absence.

The Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, CIO, beat down an abortive attempt by a hydra-headed AFL Atomic Trade and Labor Council made up of a score of AFL craft unions at the big K-25 atomic energy plant of the Atomic Energy Commission, Oak Ridge, Tenn. The vote was 1333 for the CIO union and 751 for the AFL, with 51 voting for no union. There were 2323 workers eligible. Martin Wagner, president of the union, was quoted as saying the K-25 victory came as no surprise and that he had been confident workers at the plant would demonstrate their loyalty to the UGC&CWA by defeating the AFL.

The Government & Civic Workers won an important representation election among Post Office clerks at Boston, Mass., by a vote of 954 to 201 against. This is one of the first great victories in the postal field and Milt Murray, of GCWOC-CIO and John D. Bercury, of the Postal Clerks, and all those participating are to be congratulated.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election at the Modern Plastic Co., Canal Fulton, O., the workers voted in favor of the Rubber Workers, CIO, by a 4 to 3 vote. URW-CIO Rep. Harley Brown handled the situation. In a union shop election at the Ideal Electric Mfg. Co., Mansfield, O., the vote favored the IUE-CIO by a 127 to 87 against. In another union shop election at the Donaldson Baking Co., Columbus, O., the vote went to the Retail, Wholesale Workers, CIO, by 68 for to 11 against.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following representation elections in Illinois: Dearborn Chemical Co., Chicago, eligible 100, CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers 79, no union 6; Vogt Roller Co., Inc., and National Rubber Roller Co., Chicago, eligible 18, CIO Rubber Workers 13, against 2, challenged 1. The following union shop elections were also held: General American Transportation Corp., Chicago, eligible 227, USA-CIO 186, against 18; Athey Products Co., Chicago, eligible 149, USA-CIO 112, void 1, against 8, challenged 2.

MARTIN GRAYSON, secretary-treasurer, Amalgamated Lithographers, CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Kentucky Lithograph Co., Louisville, Ky., the workers voted overwhelmingly in favor of the ALA-CIO. In a representation election at the Stark Printing and Lithographing Co., Cincinnati, O., the workers by unanimous vote favored the ALA-CIO, while in a union shop election at the Continental Can Co., St. Louis, Mo., the 35 men working in the lithographic department voted for a union shop.

Pres. Michael Quill, CIO Transport Workers, reports that 4000 employes of Pan American World Airways, in the first union shop election in air lines voted overwhelmingly in favor of the union shop. Of eligible port stewards and maintenance employes, 90% voted in New York, San Francisco, Miami, Seattle, Brownsville, Tex., Honolulu, San Juan P. I. The union shop also covers PAA Personnel at foreign bases.

Reg. Dir. F. J. Michel reports that in a representation election Beloit College, Beloit, Wis., the Government and Civic Employees, CIO, won by a vote of 50 to 16 no union. In a union shop referendum the vote was 43 yes and 20 no. GCEOC-CIO Rep. Glen Clarke directed the campaigns.

Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson reports that in a union shop election at the Paragon Fish Co., Bellingham, Wash., the workers favored the CIO by a vote of 110 to 2, with 15 not voting.

Sales Tax Dead In Wisconsin

THE JOINT Committee on Finance of the Wisconsin Legislature killed a sales tax bill after CIO spokesmen from all parts of the State registered their opposition to it.

The death blow, however, was struck by a member of the Farm Bureau Federation, which had had the bill introduced.

He was Albert Haywood, of Briggsville, Wisc. He told the committee members that he had talked to scores of other Farm Bureau members — and hadn't found one who favored the levy.

Then he confirmed a belief CIO officials have had for a long time: He said the Farm Bureau leadership did not represent its membership.

More than 100 CIO representatives appeared to testify against the bill. Actually heard were Secy.-Treas. Fred Erchul of the Milwaukee County CIO Council; Sam Rizzo, of Racine; Jack Beni of Kenosha, and John Wilson of Ripon.

Fernbach Goes To UNESCO Meet

Frank Fernbach, of the CIO Research and Education Department, left last week for Paris where he will serve as an advisor to the American delegation to the sixth international conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Another Gravy Train

Tip To Graduates: Lobbying Pays Off

NINE LOBBYISTS for big business get $50,000 a year and over, but that's peanuts compared to the law firms that lobby on a contingent basis.

That means they collect if they influence Congress as their clients want it influenced.

According to Congressional Quarterly, one firm stands to get $500,000 if the excise tax on automobile used parts is repealed. Others stand to collect almost as handsomely if their lobbying succeeds.

Analyzing the 1950 reports required by the lobbying law, CQ found that 16 lobbyists draw $25,000 to $50,000 and 115 got $10,000 to $15,000. Another 115 got $5000 to $10,000.

Individual kingpin is Purcell L. Smith, who drew $65,000 last year as president of the National Association of Electric Companies. In addition, the association paid $65,299 in 1950 to the public relations firm of Stephen Fitzgerald. Most of it went to Raymond C. Baker, a Fitzgerald employe, who reported he got $50,000 salary and up to $10,000 allowance for expenses.

The law firm of Sullivan, Bernard and Shea got $39,332 from three groups of clients, mostly 12 airlines and a group of finance companies. John L. Sullivan is a former secretary of the navy.

Frank M. Porter, president of the American Petroleum Institute, reported income of $60,000. Northcutt Ely, former official in the Interior Dept., got $54,444 from four California water groups.

Clem Whitaker and Leone Baxter (Mrs. Whitaker) received $50,000 each, plus expenses, from the American Medical Association.

The AMA has spent $4 million in three years, under the guiding hand of Whitaker and Baxter, fighting compulsory health insurance, rent control, public housing and federal aid to medical education.

J. Carter Fort, a former chief assistant counsel of the Interstate Commerce Commission, drew $50,000 as vice-president of the U.S. law department of the Association of American Railroads. His pay for 1951 has been upped to $55,000. Justin Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, got $50,000.

CARL BYOIR & Associates, a public relations firm, reported getting $36,000 and expenses from Schenley (liquor), and $36,000 and expenses from Sheaffer Pen. Byoir reported less than $50,000 was spent for lobbying. Byoir now has a third lobby client, Levitt & Sons, home builders, also at $36,000 a year and expenses.

John A. Danaher, former senator from Connecticut, got $51,800 from Revere Copper and Brass, B. F. Goodrich, Firestone Tire & Rubber, and Fuller Brush. Sheridan Downey, ex-senator from California, gets $3000 a month from the Harbor Commissioners of Long Beach, Calif. They are interested in tidelands oil legislation; that is, they are trying to get a deal that will bring the royalties to them rather than to the government.

Also doing well are: Ex-Rep. Wesley E. Disney of Oklahoma; Ex-Rep. C. Jasper Bell of Wyoming; Ex-Rep. Joseph E. Casey of Massachusetts. Disney got $32,041 from seven clients; Bell got $31,589; Casey $26,332.

Gerald D. Morgan and Leonard J. Calhoun, both formerly on the staffs of congressional committees, and ow a law firm, got $38,615 from six groups of clients. Morgan is one of the real authors of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Robert H. Shields, former head of the Commodity Credit Corp., got $40,000 as president and general counsel of the U. S. Beet Sugar Association. LPA

81-9

House To Blast McCarran Bar To Nimitz Unit

SPEARHEADED by Rep. Walter (D. Pa.), House leaders will try again this week to save the President's Commission on Internal Security and Individual Rights.

The commission, headed by Adm. Chester W. Nimitz, was set up by executive order last January to study the problem of providing for the internal security of the United States while at the same time protecting individual rights and freedoms.

Its important work was effectively brought to a standstill at the very outset, however, through the efforts of Franco-lover Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.).

Although he is author of the controversial McCarran Act and is supposedly interested in realizing its stated objective of controlling "subversives," McCarran has bitterly fought the commission. He was instrumental in getting the Senate Judiciary Committee to vote down a House proposal which would have exempted members of the commission from the "conflict of interest" laws.

The "conflict of interest" laws bar a person from holding a post with the federal government while doing business with it or representing clients before federal agencies during employment. Exemptions are not uncommon.

THE HOUSE approved legislation exempting the members of the Nimitz Commission on Mar. 19. It was then referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee, of which McCarran is chairman.

After McCarran's block, seven members of the group submitted resignations. President Truman has refused to accept them and asked Congress to act favorably.

McCarran's action is preventing a study not only of the impact of internal security laws on individual rights, but also an independent survey of the workability and effectiveness of the laws designed to protect the nation from sabotage and subversion.

Many liberals who opposed the McCarran Act are nevertheless urging the exemption which would permit the Nimitz Committee to function. They point out that this is the first opportunity for an objective appraisal of the procedures by a non-governmental group.

The importance of careful study at this time is indicated by the fact that the Supreme Court in recent weeks has divided 4 to 4 in decisions over the constitutionality of the Federal loyalty program.

WALTER'S FIRST attempt to maneuver through the McCarran roadblock was defeated in the House on June 5. He succeeded in getting the House Judiciary Committee to amend a Senate Joint Resolution extending an exemption similar to that sought for the Nimitz group to a counsel for the Senate Elections Sub-committee. His amendment adds the members of the commission to the Senate resolution.

However, when the House was called upon to approve the action of the Judiciary Committee, Rep. Ford (R. Mich.) objected. Since unanimous consent was required for approval on June 5, his single dissent was sufficient to prevent House action.

Dixiegops Kill 4000 U. S. Jobs

JUNE 12 was a so-called "economy" day in the Senate—and two of the main government agencies serving the people are likely to suffer severely as a result.

By a vote of 58 to 24, the Senate cut the payroll appropriations for the Labor Dept. and the Federal Security Administration by 10%. If agreed to by the House, the cut will require a reduction of 4000 persons in the staffs of these two agencies.

Thirty-six Republicans voted for the cut with only two opposed. The Democrats split 22-22, with 17 from the South voting with the GOP majority.

Top CIO and AFL leaders have opposed slashing Labor-FSA funds because doing so would mean a cut in services to workers. Social security, public health and other welfare services of the government make up the bulk of FSA activities.

The Senate also ordered its Appropriations Committee to make a 10% cut in the $6.5 billion Independent Offices bill which appropriates funds for about 25 government agencies. In reporting this bill, however, the committee restored to 50,000 the number of low cost housing units to be built by the government next year.

The House had cut this figure to 5000. President Truman has called for a total of 75,000.

IN MAKING the 10% personnel cut, the Senate defied the threat of a presidential veto. President Truman reportedly has told congressional leaders that he will veto any bill which directs him to make an over-all budget cut, thus leaving the actual reductions to be made by the executive branch.

Government personnel men have pointed out that "economies" of this kind actually are extremely costly, since they mean the forced dismissal of many trained workers who ultimately must be replaced.

CCL Convention Due Sept. 7 In Vancouver

The Canadian Congress of Labour will hold its 11th convention at the Vancouver Hotel, Vancouver, B. C., beginning Sept. 7. The last convention was held at Winnipeg in September 1950.

Locals of CIO affiliates in Canada, including Textile, Rubber, Clothing, Steel, Wood and Communications Workers, are affiliated with the CCL.

Indian Wheat Bill Okayed By Congress

TEN WEEKS after the first shipment of grain to India was due to leave this country under the original terms of the President's request to Congress, a bill to lend that nation $190 million to avert the threat of famine was finally passed on June 11.

Despite the drawn out Congressional shilly-shallying over conditions for the loan while millions of Indians are on a starvation diet, Prime Minister Nehru immediately expressed his country's gratitude.

"This generous gesture of the American people," he said, "will evoke friendly responses in India and bring the two peoples nearer one another."

President Truman had asked last February that the grain be given outright to India as a gift. When Congress finally acted, it authorized only a loan and wrote a number of conditions into the measure.

At least half of the foodstuffs must be shipped in U. S. vessels, and India was also directed to repay part of the loan in shipments of critical and strategic materials.

The loan will be used for shipment of 2 million tons of wheat and other foodstuffs, sorely needed by India as the result of destruction of crops by drought, earthquakes and insects.

Give A Buck To PAC

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate & House Banking Coms. completed hearings June 8. Now drafting legislation.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House Ways and Means Com. reported bill out June 14. House due to consider June 19.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
Importation of Mexican Farm Labor S. 984 H.R. 3283	Provides for importation of cheap foreign labor; encourages extension of substandard conditions for both domestic and imported farm workers.	Senate passed Ellender bill (S. 984). House Rules Com. voted June 13 to consider Poage Bill (H.R. 3283). House action expected soon.	Urge House members to substitute Ellender Bill for Poage Bill and add strengthening amendments.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Now before Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV | WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 25, 1951 | 82 | No. 26

CIO Rally Demands: 'Bring Prices Down'

(See Stories, Pages 3, 6, 7)

THE CONSUMERS' LEAGUE Against High Prices has collected more than 20,000 signatures of Los Angeles County, Cal., residents on petitions to Congress demanding effective control of prices. The county's United Labor Policy Committee backed the consumers' campaign. This was only one phase of the committee's six-point program. (See Page 2 for stories about consumers.)

Los Angeles CIO Wars For Controls

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

UNITED LABOR forces in Los Angeles County last week were driving forward on a comprehensive program aimed at guaranteeing equality of sacrifice in the Defense Production Act.

Upwards of 20,000 consumers' signatures on petitions demanding effective control of high prices already had been secured in one phase of the campaign.

Formed less than two months ago, the United Labor Policy Committee of Los Angeles County already has:

1. Held a conference attended by hundreds of delegates from union and community organizations;

2. Produced and sponsored a television show which dramatized inflation's raid on the consumer's pocketbook;

3. Published a speaker's manual filled with facts stressing inflation's effect on the nation's economy, and telling of labor's battle for a decent mobilization act;

4. Backed the organization of a Consumers' League Against High Prices, pushing a highly-successful drive for petitions to Congress demanding effective price controls;

5. Printed thousands of leaflets for distribution to union members, consumers, and community groups calling for wires and letters to Congress demanding equality of sacrifice in the mobilization program;

6. Planned the publication of an illustrated pamphlet telling in more extended form the story of inflation, domination of mobilization by big business, and the critical position of the working man, consumer and small business man.

MOST popularly effective of the ULPC's activities has been organization of the Consumers' League Against High Prices. The league was formed after a group of housewives asked the CIO and AFL for assistance in fighting high prices on the community level.

With housewives themselves taking the lead, chapters of the league have been formed throughout the Los Angeles area. Some six or eight petition-signature-gathering drives have been held in shopping districts.

Mrs. Georgia Nuckols, chairman of the league, said that response to the drive for signatures to the petition to Congress indicates clearly that consumers are eager to express their indignation at mounting prices and to demand adequate price control measures of Congress. There is little evidence of the so-called "apathy" toward inflation, Mrs. Nuckols said.

The ULPC conference climaxed several weeks of planning, and brought together some 500 delegates from unions and community organizations. It was held June 20 and 21.

Following short keynote speeches by top officers of the organization, panel discussions were held on six basic problems involved in the mobilization program. They included prices and inflation, wages, taxes and credit controls, monopoly and small business, manpower, and profits.

INQUIRIES reveal considerable popular interest in the TV show. The show was kinescoped during the live presentation, and films are being made available to interested groups. Already, requests for the film, which can be shown over a 16mm machine, have come from several local unions.

All leaflets and placards stress the critical danger faced by the nation's mobilization program, and emphasize that "inflation weakens America's fight against Communism."

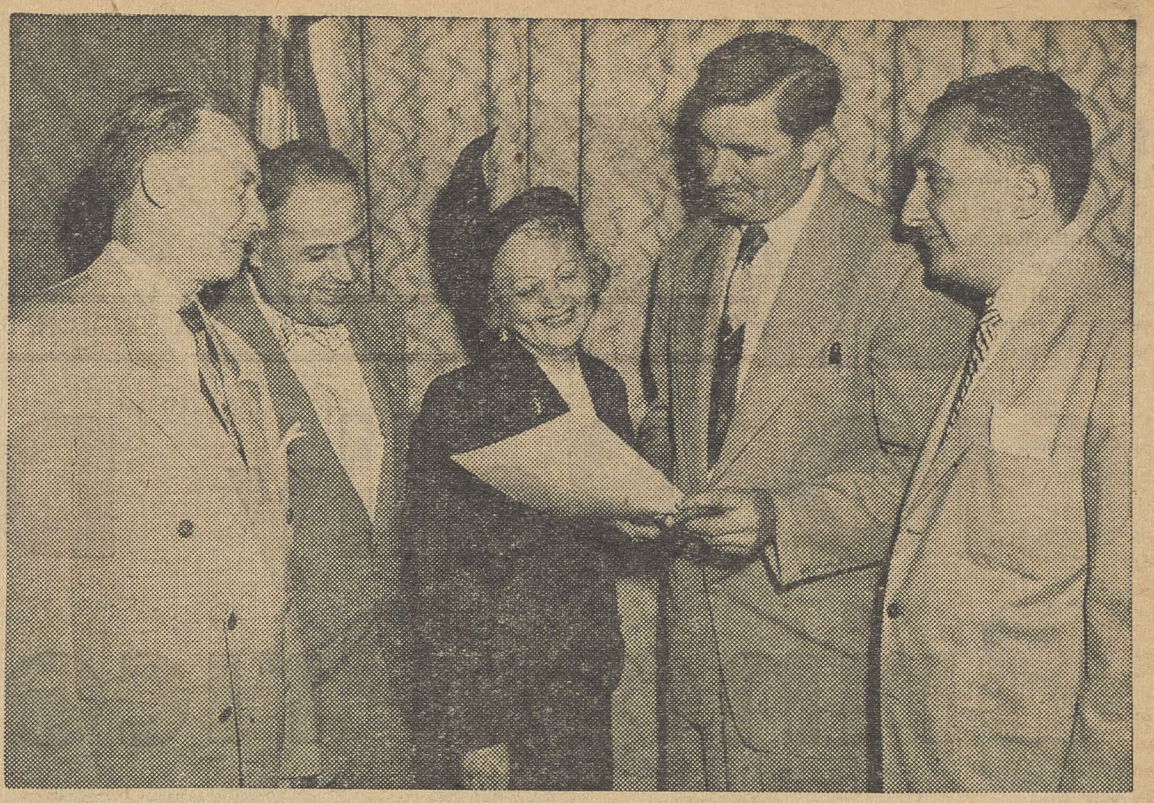
Union members, consumers, small businessmen and the entire community is being told repeatedly:

"Write and wire your Congressman demanding a Defense Production Act that will take profiteering out of defense; fix standard dollar-and-cent ceiling prices, and require equality of sacrifice from everyone."

Secy.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council is chairman of the ULPC, which took official form April 30.

S. E. Thistle of the railroad brotherhoods is vice-chairman, and Secy-Treas. W. J. Bassett of the AFL Los Angeles Central Labor Council is secretary.

A steering committee of three representatives from each parent body governs the organization. CIO members are Irwin L. De-Shetler, Southern California CIO regional director; Robert Clark, assistant district director of the Steelworkers and president of the CIO Council, and Ben Nathanson, administrative officer of the Los Angeles Newspaper Guild, CIO.



WAR ON INFLATION was carried to CIO members by Union County CIO Council at "Hold The Price Line" Conference in Elizabeth, N. J. Speakers included (left to right) Richard J. Tarrant, Office of Price Stabilization acting area director; Council Vice Pres. Anthony McConologue; Mrs. Molly Brady, president of CIO Women's League of New Jersey; Council Pres. John Frankiewich, and Harry Mopsick, president of the Tenants' League of New Jersey. The conference urged families to boycott high priced articles.

'Hold That Price Line' On Everyone's Lips At CIO-Backed Elizabeth, N. J., Parley

THE CRYING need for a grass-roots understanding of the necessity for the fight against inflation was carried to CIO members in Elizabeth, N. J., in a "Hold The Price Line" Conference sponsored by the Union County CIO Council.

Representatives of a dozen local unions, seven CIO international unions and the State CIO Women's League attended.

They emphasized demands for price and rent curbs, and the importance of workers and their families letting their legislators know they want something done about high prices.

Richard J. Tarrant, acting area director of the Office of Price Stabilization, told the conference that failure to control the price of beef would result in wrecking the whole control program so far as foods are concerned.

"Beef is not an unimportant and isolated commodity," he explained. "It occupies a crucial position both in the laboring man's cost of living and in the agricultural sector of our economy.

"Beef is the key to the fight against inflation. Lack of controls would have the effect of bidding away feed from other uses, and thus force up the prices of other meats and poultry, of eggs, milk and cereals."

Harry Mopsick, president of the Tenants' League of New Jersey, made a strong plea for rent controls. There just hasn't been enough construction to solve the housing shortage and end the need for controls, he maintained.

Mrs. Molly Brady, president of the CIO Women's League of New Jersey, urged workers and their families to boycott articles which are priced too high. She called upon the women to let their congressmen and senators know how price increases have wrecked their budgets.

PRES. JOHN F. Frankiewich and Vice Pres. Anthony McConologue of the council were co-chairman of the meeting.

Delegates to the Southern Indiana State CIO Education Conference, held in Indianapolis, passed a strongly worded resolution exposing the frailties of the Defense Production Act and the government's administration of it, and calling for prompt reform.

They demanded that Congress "put an end to this hoax on the American housewife, the American worker and the American farmer," and added:

"We demand that prices be rolled back to squeeze out all the hi-jacking profits which manufacturers and processors have loaded into the prices which we are forced to pay."

Minimum Pay Upped For Puerto Ricans

Puerto Rican workers in the semi-vitreous and vitreous china industry will have their minimum pay upped from 25c to 40c hourly, effective June 25, by a recent wage order issued by the Wage and Hour Div. of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

The order will apply to all employes covered by Wage-Hour law who work in the industry in Puerto Rico. The new rate was recommended by a special industry committee equally representative of employers, employes and the public.

Newark, N. J., Group Helps Get Better Housing Bill

NEARLY 150 New Jersey men and women interested enough in public housing to do something about it were back in their homes last week hoping—and keeping an eye on the House of Representatives.

Representing 35 communities—including the mayors of 14—and including spokesmen for labor, civic, religious, veterans, welfare and fraternal groups as well as municipal officials, they swooped down on their State's delegation in Washington and let the members know in no uncertain terms that they were extremely dissatisfied with the 5000 units voted by the House.

Pointing out that the limitation, if it becomes law, virtually wipes out the public low-cost housing program, they won a promise from Sens. Smith and Hendrickson, both Republicans, to support restoration of 50,000 new units to the bill when it comes up in the Senate. The Senate voted for 50,000 units last week, a few days later.

THEY ALSO got statements indicating that 12 of their 14 Representatives now favor at least 50,000 units, instead of the 10 who voted against 5000 when the House acted on May 4.

And they heard a declaration by Sen. Taft (R. O.) that he favors 100,000 units, rather than 50,000 or 5000.

"I don't see any justification for public housing to take a bigger cut than private housing when it comes to construction," he asserted.

The delegation was told what lay ahead by Rep. Hart (D.)

"You can be sure that the Senate version soon to be voted on will contain 50,000 units," he correctly predicted.

"You are now talking to Representatives all of whom favor low-rent housing. Your pressure should be on the House conferees to yield the entire way to the Senate, because otherwise you will get a compromise somewhere between 5000 and 50,000."

SOME 30 communities in New Jersey stand to lose about 9000 low-rent housing units if the House version becomes final. Mayor Ralph Villani, of Newark, said that if the cutback remains, his city will lose 3540 units—even though 125,000 persons, or 25% of its population, live in 28,000 substandard homes.

The CIO took an active role in setting up the meeting. The Newark City Council appropriated $2500 for expenses of the trip, and organized labor, spurred by the CIO, raised another $2500.

Leading spokesmen for the citizen groups were Harry Kranz, legislative representative for the New Jersey CIO Council; Arthur Chapin, also of the State Council, for the Joint Council of Civil Rights; Fraser L. Holzlohner, president of the AFL Essex Construction & Building Trades Council, and August Hanniball, Jr., State commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Other CIO leaders who made the trip included Pres. Joseph Di Modica of Auto Workers Local 589, Newark; Business Agent Albert Stango of Clothing Workers Local 24, Newark, and Joel Jacobson of the Essex-West Hudson CIO Council.

Senate, House Units Cave In On Price Bill

IGNORING warnings from the President and Administration experts that the nation will be in grave peril unless inflation is checked, two committees of Congress last week sold out the American people's hope for firm action against high prices.

The House and Senate Banking and Currency Committees completed drafts of new bills crippling the Defense Production Act, the law under which wages, prices and rents are regulated during the defense mobilization crisis.

Their action was not entirely unanticipated.

Big business organizations lobbying against the bill are estimated to have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in their drive to kill controls.

Those expenditures will really have paid off—at the expense of the consuming public—if either of the bills reported is passed by Congress.

Economists have estimated that the committee amendments, if allowed to stand, will cost consumers at least $2½ billion more next year in higher prices. That is a rather neat return to profiteers for their lobbying investment.

Beating down all efforts of members seeking to halt runaway prices, both committees wrote provisions into their respective bills that would write inflation into law, instead of checking it.

This was the method used:

- The Senate committee by a 7-6 vote wrote into its measure a provision forbidding price rollbacks below the average price between Jan. 24 and Feb. 24, 1951. Since this was a period of unusually high prices due to profiteering immediately after the outbreak of Korean fighting, prices would roll forward instead of backward.

- Both committees adopted a gimmick on rent control similar to that forecast in last week's CIO News. They voted to "extend" rent control, but actually killed it by also writing into the bills a provision permitting 20% increases over 1942 levels.

- The House wrote into its measure a prohibition against the 4½% rollbacks in the price of beef scheduled for Aug. 1 and Oct. 1. These were the first rollbacks that would have benefited the consumer, as the one previous rollback affected only the price the producer gets for his cattle.

- Both committees ignored completely President Truman's request for strengthening amendments giving him additional power needed to stop inflation.

Leading the fight in the Senate committee against the provision rolling prices upward were Republican Sen. Ives, of New York, and Democratic Sens. Douglas, Sparkman, Moody and Benton. The Democrats warned Chairman Maybank (D. S.C.) that they would renew their fight on the Senate floor.

DEBATE in the Senate is scheduled for this week. The House also is expected to consider its measure some time this week.

Both committees ignored a last-minute plea by Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle that they not prevent him from ordering price rollbacks. In a letter to each committee, he warned that their vetoes of his rollback authority would "disrupt and endanger the entire stabilization program."

DiSalle said that the committees' action would raise living costs and have a "serious effect" on the value of the dollar. The contemplated rollbacks, he argued, are "essential" to bring prices of the items affected in line with those of other commodities and wages.

Douglas warned the committee that its action would "legalize" a 6% increase in the cost of living. That increase would come on top of the unprecedented rise since Korea.

Reflecting the mood of organized labor, Moody pointed out that "anyone who believes that Congress can write into the law a 6% increase and hold the wage line is making a serious mistake."

If the committee proposals become law, a new round of wage demands from labor would be inevitable. Even while the congressmen were acting as sponsors of further price increase, 250 top officials of the CIO attending an anti-inflation rally in Washington (see story page 6) were approving a resolution to that effect.

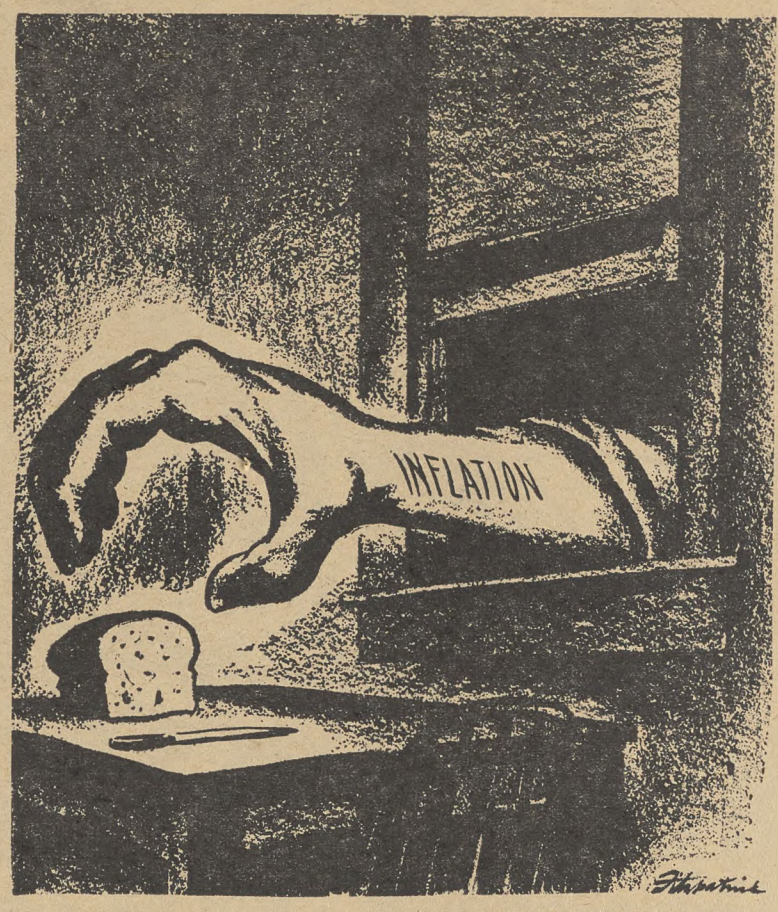
The CIO group announced its determination not to stand idle while profits more than double those of the last war period go unchecked. Some observers believe that if the controls law is weakened as the committees plan, organized labor may drive for much higher wage increases than just the amount needed to offset increased prices resulting from the amendments.

They point out that labor has held its demands to a minimum in the hope that Congress would write a law calling for "equality of sacrifice." Labor has been the only group to express concern over the plight of unorganized workers and those with fixed incomes, who have already suffered severely.

If inflation is permitted to get out of hand through passage of the pending legislation, however, labor may feel called upon to reverse its tactics in the hope of forcing Congress to act.

There is still hope, however, of preventing the committee's actions from becoming law.

Moody said he believes that there is a good chance of amending the bill "if the American public understands the issues and speaks out."



From St. Louis Post-Dispatch

If Our Lawmakers Fail Us

Tobin Encourages Small Business

Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin announced last week that small businesses will be encouraged to obtain Federal manufacture and supply contracts let under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act.

Effective June 19, requirements that contracts be awarded only to "manufacturers" or "regular dealers" will be lifted in order to permit direct awards to associations or pools formed by small manufacturers.

'Congress On TV' Urged By CIO

Members of Congress might be seen on television, perhaps as relief from certain alleged comics and long commercials, if recommendations made by the CIO last week were to be put into law.

A CIO spokesman urged that all sessions of each house plus selected committee hearings, be put on both radio and TV coast to coast on networks owned and operated by Congress.

Paul Sifton, national legislative representative of the CIO Auto Workers, outlined the proposal in testimony before the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Depts.

He also called for the installation of electrical voting devices in each house to save valuable time and to insure a record of each vote cast. Sifton said the need for broadcasting the proceedings of Congress has been expressed for at least eight years.

"The American people are entitled to the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth about what happens in their elected Congress," Sifton declared. "To rely solely on private corporations to broadcast the congressional sessions is neither economically feasible nor wise as a matter of public policy."

Subscribe Today!

Only through the CIO News can you get full, complete, reliable reporting on the news of the CIO—throughout the country, in Washington and overseas.

Subscription price is only $1 a year (bundle orders on request).

The CIO News
718 Jackson Place N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Enclosed find $1—and send me the CIO News for one year.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Senate Group Vote On Gyp

Here is how the Senate Banking Committee voted on the amendment to the Defense Production Act that would write inflation into law and cost consumer more than $2½ billion in higher prices next year:

FOR: Maybank (D. S. C.), Frear (D. Del.), Capehart (R. Ind.), Bricker (R. O.), Ives (R. N. Y.), Schoeppel (R. Kans.), and Dirksen (R. Ill.).

AGAINST: Fulbright (D. Ark.), Robertson (D. Va.), Sparkman (D. Ala.), Douglas (D. Ill.), Benton (D. Conn.) and Moody (D. Mich.).

That vote was on June 19. By June 21, Ives had had a change of heart and tried to reverse the action. However, his switch was promptly nullified by Robertson, who voted for the amandment on the effort to rescind the action.

Correction

The June 18 issue of the CIO News incorrectly reported that the Wage Stabilization Board had approved an agreement between the CIO Textile Workers and the New Bedford-Fall River Cotton Manufacturers Association giving 25,000 members in 25 mills a package increase of 14c hourly.

The WSB has not yet approved the raise. The story was, therefore, inaccurate.

The CIO News regrets this error.

How Senate, House Units Aid Inflation

THE HOUSE and Senate Banking Committees last week completed drafts of bills extending the Defense Production Act which, if enacted into law, will make further inflation inevitable.

Both bills provide for a rolling forward of prices. Economists estimate that the Congressional gift to big business profiteers will cost consumers at least $2½ billion more next year, and that another increase in the cost of living of at least 6% will result.

Here's how the House and Senate committees served the cause of the National Association of Manufacturers and U. S. Chamber of Commerce:

Senate

The committee-endowed bill will cripple the present Defense Production Act, instead of strengthening it as needed, in the following ways:

1. Establish—not cut—the inflated prices of profiteers from the Korean crisis by forbidding price rollbacks below the average—inflated—price between Jan. 25 and Feb. 24 of this year.

2. Deny most of the new powers asked by the President in order to control inflation effectively.

3. Permit rents now controlled to rise as much as 20% in some cases, over and above "hardship" rises also given to landlords.

4. Extend, with crippling limitations, price, rent and control programs for only eight months instead of through the two years of inflationary pressures ahead.

House

The bill, as harmful as the Senate counterpart, will:

1. Cancel the 4½% rollbacks on the price of beef which are scheduled for Aug. 1 and Oct. 1—the two rollbacks that would most benefit customers, since the first beef rollback, now in effect, cuts only the price the producer gets for his cattle.

2. Raise rents—not hold them—by permitting a 20% increase from the June 30, 1942, level and limit the defense areas where rent controls could be extended.

3. Extend price-rent-wage-control programs—with severe limitations—for one year instead of the two necessary.

4. Deny added powers, such as control over commodity market speculation, which the President has requested as necessary to control inflation.

Sad News For Consumers

The spokesmen of the special profit interests that want exemption from price and profit controls have pretty well carried the first battles of the Congressional campaign to strengthen the Defense Production Act.

The bills reported out by the House and Senate Banking Committees will not stop inflation, nor do much even to slow its course. Few strengthening amendments to the anti-inflation law were added to the bill, despite the urgency of the crisis.

The beef-price rollback—and similar rollbacks for machinery, textiles, clothing and other items—were thrown out the window by the two committees.

So, the battle for real price control now goes to the floor of the House and the Senate—a battle made more difficult by the care-nothing attitudes of a majority of the two committees which drafted the bills.

Last week's shameful spectacle of sell-outs to special profit groups was, as Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston phrased it, "sad news to every American housewife who is struggling with her family budget."

The Senators and Congressmen who bowed to the interests are due for a surprise if they believe the American public is going to accept a lop-sided program that aids the rich and causes even greater hardship for most people in the lower income brackets.

American workers will not tolerate a program in which wages are stabilized, while profits go up still higher, while the prices of many foods remain uncontrolled, and rent controls are weakened still more.

The record of Congressmen and Senators on these crucial issues during the next few weeks will make interesting reading for millions of American families plagued by the hardship of rising living costs.

Too Familiar Words

In a series of speeches down in Texas, General of the Army Douglas MacArthur uttered a few sentences that have been almost the stock in trade of the country's reactionary propagandists.

Two examples:

• "The drift away from our competitive system of free enterprise is threatening the initiative and incentive of our people, and throttling the energies essential to maintain the level of our material progress."

• "The drift upward in the cost of bureaucracy and the expenditure of public funds in complete disregard of the tax burden, has accelerated so alarmingly that the people are rapidly become the servants of the state."

The statements bear a striking parallel to the platforms that the Republican Party and/or the National Association of Manufacturers have been peddling ever since 1932.

Time after time the American public has rejected the doctrine implied by statements such as these—because they ignore the realities of life, and they lead directly back to the philosophy of Hooverism and the economic law of the jungle.

It is unfortunate that General MacArthur has borrowed phrases like these for his first speeches on American domestic problems.

The General's military reputation is star-studded; he should take care to preserve its splendid luster. But the expression of the hackneyed political slogans of the extreme right will provide only a disappointing anti-climax to a long and spectacular career as an outstanding military figure.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV June 25, 1951 No. 26

Look, Ma, No Hands!

The Big Lie, The Big Smear

On June 14, Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) delivered a 60,000-word smear-campaign speech attacking Secy. of Defense George Marshall and falsely accusing him of seeking to weaken the country he has served for a lifetime. A few days later, Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R. Me.) placed in the Congressional Record for a second time her now-famous statement of principles. Excerpts of that statement are printed below.

By Sen. Margaret Chase Smith

I SPEAK as a Republican. I speak as a woman. I speak as a United States Senator. I speak as an American.

The United States Senate has long enjoyed world-wide respect as the greatest deliberative body in the world. But recently that deliberative character has too often been debased to the level of a forum of hate and character assassination sheltered by the shield of congressional immunity.

It is ironical that we Senators can in debate in the Senate, directly or indirectly, by any form of words, impute to any American who is not a Senator any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming an American—and without that non-Senator American having any legal redress against us—yet if we say the same thing in the Senate about our colleagues we can be stopped on the grounds of being out of order.

It is strange that we can verbally attack anyone else without restraint and with full protection, and yet we hold ourselves above the same type of criticism here on the Senate floor. Surely the United States Senate is big enough to take self-criticism and self-appraisal. Surely we should be able to take the same kind of character attacks that we "dish out" to outsiders.

I THINK that it is high time for the United States Senate and its Members to do some real soul searching and to weigh our consciences as to the manner in which we are performing our duty to the people of America and the manner in which we are using or abusing our individual powers and privileges.

I think it is high time that we remembered that we have sworn to uphold and defend the Constitution. I think it is high time that we remembered that the Constitution, as amended, speaks not only of the freedom of speech but also of trial by jury instead of trial by accusation.

Whether it be a criminal prosecution in court or a character prosecution in the Senate, there is little practical distinction when the life of a person has been ruined.

Those of us who shout the loudest about Americanism in making character assassinations are all too frequently those who, by our own words and acts, ignore some of the basic principles of Americanism—

The right to criticize.

The right to hold unpopular beliefs.

The right to protest.

The right of independent thought.

THE EXERCISE of these rights should not cost one single American citizen his reputation or his right to a livelihood nor should he be in danger of losing his reputation or livelihood merely because he happens to know some one who holds unpopular beliefs. Who of us does not?

The American people are sick and tired of being afraid to speak their minds lest they be politically smeared as Communists or Fascists by their opponents. Freedom of speech is not what it used to be in America. It has been so abused by some that it is not exercised by others.

As a United States Senator, I am not proud of the way in which the Senate has been made a publicity platform for irresponsible sensationalism. I am not proud of the reckless abandon in which unproved charges have been hurled from this side of the aisle. I am not proud of the obviously staged, undignified countercharges which have been attempted in retaliation from the other side of the aisle.

As an American, I am shocked at the way Republicans and Democrats alike are playing directly into the Communist design of "confuse, divide, and conquer." As an American, I do not want a Democratic administration whitewash or cover-up any more than I want a Republican smear or witch hunt.

As an American, I condemn a Republican Fascist just as much as I condemn a Democratic Communist. I condemn a Democrat Fascist just as much as I condemn a Republican Communist. They are equally dangerous to you and me and to our country. As an American, I want to see our Nation recapture the strength and unity it once had when we fought the enemy instead of ourselves.

Ethics Runs A Poor Second:

Avarice & Greed, Rackets & Corruption

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A hard-bitten insurance agent, on leave to help the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee in its work, was talking to a group of CIO veterans outside national headquarters one day last week.

"I'm still on the company payroll," he explained. "I'm not on the CIO payroll, even though I spend more time working for the CIO than the company.

"So this chief supervisor gets a copy of my record and he sees how much time I've been taking off to work for the CIO. He called me in.

"'Look,' he said, 'what can the CIO do for you that the company won't do?'

"I told him, 'Mr. X, man doesn't live by bread alone.' "Y'know what? He didn't know what I meant.'"

Mr. X isn't the only one in the United States who doesn't know what the insurance man's Bibilical quotation means.

Some of the others work in high jobs for the federal government. When they go to work for Uncle Sam, they seem to think their avarice and greed take on the character of a vested interest governed only by their principles—or lack of principles.

So a Senate Labor Subcommittee began hearings on June 19 to determine the desirability of an "official moral code." Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) is chairman. The subcommittee's work was prompted by a proposal of Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) during the investigation into the Reconstruction Finance Corp., which he headed. He suggested a citizen's committee on government ethics, covering both Congress and the executive branch.

That same day the morning papers were carrying stories about another scandal in the RFC, one that was promptly brought to public attention by W. Stuart Symington, new RFC administrator.

Symington announced that he had asked the Dept. of Justice to seek prosecution of Allen E. Freeze, former assistant comptroller of RFC, on a charge of accepting a salary from a borrower while he was still on the RFC payroll.

The borrower was the Texmass Petroleum Co., which had received a much criticized $15 million loan about a year ago. Freeze resigned Sept. 28, 1950.

A study of records by RFC investigators, Symington said, showed that the company had submitted 20 documents to the lending agency, which Freeze had signed as company vice-president. Some were dated as much as five months before he resigned from the RFC. Also found were two Texmass checks made out to Freeze totaling nearly $3000—one more than three months before his resignation, Symington said.

The first witness before the Douglas committee was Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren.

There has been an "undoubted" weakening of moral standards all along the line, Warren maintained. Unless some kind of a federal employes' moral code is promulgated, he claimed, the country is doomed to another World War II "spree of waste" in defense work.

He stressed the "shocking disclosures" after the war, the verified stories of "outrageously expensive gifts" accepted by some government officials, of some Army and Navy officers who "used the uniform to feather their own nests."

A major weakness at present, he said, is the "breakdown" in the 1872 Conflict of Interests Act, as a result of which federal employes may resign and sell their knowledge to private employers, who in turn use it against the government.

June 19 was also the day on which Secy. of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan had to fire Guy W. Craven, administrative assistant in the Minneapolis, Minn., office of the Production and Marketing Administration. Brannan said he had accepted favors from a warehouse concern that leased to the government storage space for surplus dried milk—presumably in return for a tip that the government needed the space.

(Some 10 days before the hearings opened, Symington fired another Minneapolis man, E. M. Rowlands, head of the RFC branch there, in the same deal. He accused Rowlands of helping to engineer it in return for an interest in the corporation.)

The subcommittee held another session on June 20. Theodore M. Green, professor of philosophy at Yale, testified. It may be that he put his finger on one of the major keys.

Basically, it is the people who are at fault more than erring government employes, he said. He urged that attention be focused as well upon "those who elect our legislators to office, upon those who elect or appoint our executives, upon pressure groups, lobbies, newspapers and other organs of responsibility."

"Most of us do not sufficiently realize," he added, "that government by the people and for the people can be wise and efficient only in proportion as the people respect . . . justice and hate injustice . . . as they understand the necessity for enlightenment and a lively sense of social responsibility and mature self-discipline."

At the same session, Budget Director J. Howard Lawton told the committee that the standard of ethics in government should be above the average—not below it.

"It is something special," he maintained.

June 20 was the day a Senate Executive Expenditures Subcommittee reported on its investigation of alleged selling of federal jobs in Mississippi. Sen. Hoey (D. N.C.) was chairman. The allegations were true, it reported.

It found a "vicious job-selling racket" operated by a group of Mississippi Democratic leaders which used its recognition by the Democratic National Committee in job patronage "to invoke political reprisals." The reprisals, the committee added, were directed against Democrats who bolted President Truman in 1948. The national committee was cleared.

June 20 was also the day the country was working up to a slow boil over a House Armed Services Subcommittee disclosure Investigators had turned up a $3.3 million defense materials contract awarded by careless military procurement officials to the Elvair Corp., Jackson, Miss., which was organized by two ex-convicts who first became acquainted with each other in prison.

Chairman Hebert (D. La.) said the firm had $1209 in "capital" when it got the contract early this year, and now it stands to make at least $139,000 profit.

N. Y. Newsman Returns To Organizing Job Hitler Interrupted

The following story from Front Page, publication of the New York Newspaper Guild, tells the story of a New York newspaperman who was a labor leader in pre-Hitler Germany and who has returned to that country to consolidate white-collar workers' organizations.

By STANLEY ROSEDALE
Labor Press Unit

UNTIL HIS return to Germany early this month quiet, unassuming Zigfried Aufhauser was to his fellow-CIO Newspaper Guildsmen in New York just another elderly German-language newspaperman, for years a standby on the Staats-Herold rewrite desk.

Not many knew that in pre-Hitler Germany he was an outstanding labor leader at the head of a powerful union of white-collar workers and a leading member of the Reichstag (German parliament). In the forefront of the German labor movement before the war, he is back in Germany again helping in the fight for free trade unionism.

Aufhauser's labor and parliamentary careers came to an abrupt end in Germany with the advent of Hitler. Early in 1933 he suffered the fate of most prominent German personalities who couldn't stomach Hitler and who dared to raise their voice against him.

He was arrested on trumped-up charges and, as a member of the German parliament, was even accused of being involved in the infamous Reichstag fire. Years later it was established that the fire was set by Hitler's own gang for propaganda purposes.

After escaping from Germany, Aufhauser made his way to Paris and later to Czechoslovakia. In Prague he became a leader of the white-collar labor movement in Middle Europe and the Balkan states, helping to build the organization into a membership of hundreds of thousands.

There he functioned until 1938 when Hitler's minions again caught up with him during the unprovoked invasion of Czechoslovakia. With help from the underground he escaped again and made his way to London.

In 1939 he landed in New York. Aufhauser began life anew at the age of 53 in a strange land. Too old to serve in the armed forces during World War II, he helped his adopted country in many other ways. He was well known at Col. Donovan's OSS for his knowledge of the German background. The State Dept. knew him as an important consultant in building a new labor movement for Germany after the war.

Aufhauser will undoubtedly play an important part in the rehabilitation of democratic Germany and her free trade union movement. Of his 10 years of experience as a working member of the American press he said:

"One of my principal regrets in leaving the States is that I can't take the Guild with me . . . I have been a newspaperman both in Germany and here, and all my life I was in labor.

"EVEN in Germany before Hitler we never had anything approaching the Guild—it is one of my fondest hopes, to help unite newspapermen in Germany as well as they've been organized here under the Guild banner."

In Germany Aufhauser will use his labor "know how" of long standing to bring together the divided white-collar workers' movement and to unite it again into a single powerful force, such as it was in the pre-Hitler era.

Aufhauser said that Victor Reuther, CIO international representative to the ICFTU, who is now in Germany, will probably be one of the many labor leaders who will help in bringing about a united German white-collar workers organization. In a May Day statement Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee, also emphasized CIO solidarity with the world labor movement.

AMA: More Doctors Means 'Socialism'

THE DOCTOR'S lobby keeps its head in the sand. It is still fighting emergency federal aid to medical education in the face of the facts. Worse, it is even denying the facts.

The Journal of the American Medical Association, issue of May 26, uses a full page to describe "A Tribute To Doctors From The Press." A letter from the National Editorial Association is reproduced.

Addressed to Dr. Elmer L. Henderson, retiring AMA head, the letter contains an NEA resolution praising the AMA for "an outstanding contribution, during the past year, to the cause of individual freedom and the maintenance of our American way of life."

The "cause" referred to was the shameless campaign last year against compulsory health insurance, and the AMA was praised for its campaign "in behalf of freedom for both physicians and the cause of political freedom."

The NEA represents 5200 non-metropolitan newspapers. The give-away in their testimonial is that they also praised the huckster team of Whitaker & Baxter, which ran a campaign so repugnant that it brought protests from many doctors.

Dr. Henderson purrs with pleasure over the plug from the NEA. In his message on "The President's Page" he calls attention to another bouquet this time from Paul de Kruif, for an article in the June issue of the Readers' Digest.

DE KRUIF'S article is headed "What About This 'Doctor Shortage'?", and Dr. Henderson calls the article "an outstanding example of accurate reporting." He says the author and the editors of the Readers' Digest "are to be complimented."

Let's look at de Kruif's "accurate reporting." He calls the cry for more doctors "incessant propaganda for socialized medicine." This is a slight mis-statement; that is, 100% wrong.

He has to admit that the doctor supply has been stationary—one for every 729 people in 1920, and one for every 730 today. But he explains it all away. Doctors today are better, and "one modern doctor can do what 10 couldn't do at all 30 years ago."

Unhappily for the AMA, Dr. Henderson, and de Kruif, the same day his article appeared, out came the Saturday Evening Post, with a piece saying flatly, "WE NEED MORE DOCTORS."

The author? Not a layman like de Kruif, but a doctor—Franklin D. Murphy. But there's a slight difference between Dr. Murphy and the AMA head-in-the-sand stalwarts. Dr. Murphy, unlike the AMA boys, is not in private practice. He's dean of the school of medicine of the Univ. of Kansas.

"OUR MEDICAL needs are growing faster than our medical manpower," the article says flatly. Aside from the fact that some metropolitan areas may have more doctors than they need and many rural regions don't have enough. Dr. Murphy says that there is "an absolute and substantial numerical shortage of trained medical personnel." That's a long wa yof saying there is a doctor shortage.

CIO Parley Warns Weak Controls W

250 Pledge To Spur Drive 'Back Home'

By MILTON PLUMB

THE MEMBERS of the CIO last week threw down the gauntlet to their "representatives" in Congress and warned that the inadequate kind of price control legislation now being drafted is "not acceptable to the CIO, to the United Labor Policy Committee, and to the American people in general."

While the House and Senate Banking Committees hacked away at price control and other provisions of the Defense Production Act, 250 CIO officials gathered in Washington June 20 to work out a program of action in the face of Congressional indifference about inflation.

The delegates, meeting in response to a summons from CIO Pres. Philip Murray, came from all parts of the country and included the CIO vice presidents and members of the executive board, CIO directors and representatives of CIO state and city councils.

Militant Program Asked

Expressing determination not to tolerate a lopsided economic program in which wages are stabilized while profits and prices run amok, the delegates adopted a resolution calling upon Congress and the Administration for "a militant program" against inflation.

Murray Says He Is 'The Livest Corpse'

Referring to reports of his recent illness, CIO Pres. Murray said that he wanted the delegates to know that they were listening to "the livest corpse" they ever met.

The CIO president then proceeded to demonstrate his full recovery by delivering what reporters regarded as the most inspiring address of the conference.

At the same time, the resolution called upon national unions, local unions, state, county and industrial union councils to begin a four-fold campaign of action.

All members of the CIO were asked to take the following steps:

1. Immediately hold special meetings of councils and local unions to inform the members of the danger and spur Congressional action.
2. Send letters, postcards, telegrams and resolutions to their Congressmen and Senators demanding firm price controls and other anti-inflation measures.
3. Visit or telephone members of Congress to urge faster action.
4. Report to the CIO membership the expressions and votes of Congressmen and Senators on the campaign against inflation.

Murray said that the meeting had been convened to try to implement the work which the CIO and the United Labor Policy Committee had already done.

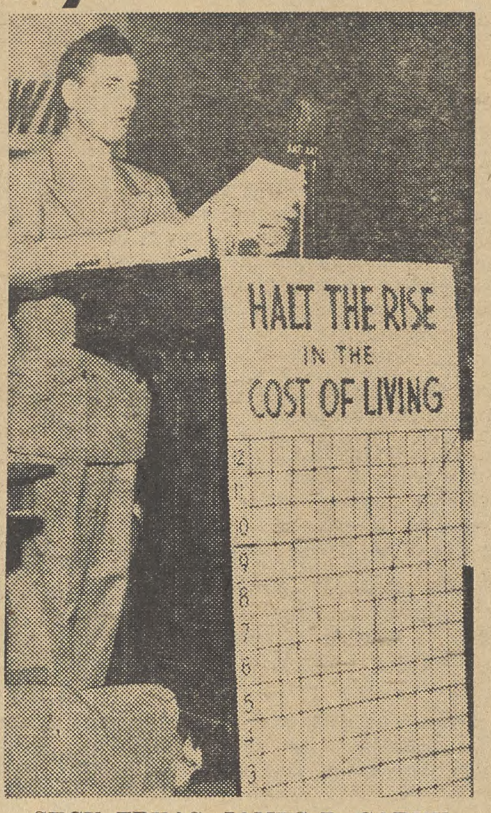
"I am not unmindful," he continued, "that there already is an aroused public opinion. The people are aware of the things going on. But unfortunately they have not yet been provided the kind of guidance essential to help them do the things they want to do—namely, amend the Defense Production Act."

People Need Guidance

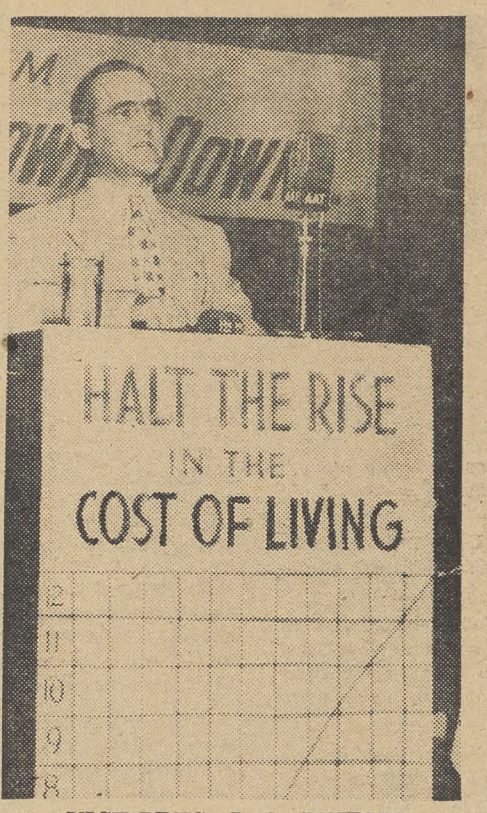
The people want help and guidance, Murray told the delegates, and it was up to the CIO to mobilize and rally their protests. He called upon the delegates to spend the afternoon calling upon their Congressmen and endeavor to enlist their support, then to return home and see that meetings of local unions and councils are held to acquaint all CIO members with the present economic dangers.

Referring to the current Congressional investigation of the dismissal of Gen. MacArthur, the attacks by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) upon Gens. Marshall and Bradley, and the Republican calls for impeachment of the President, Murray termed them "deliberate distractions."

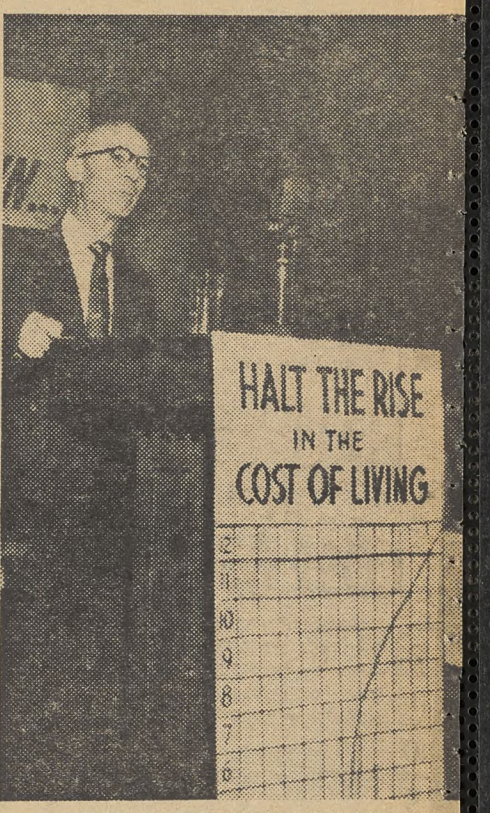
He asked, "Is it any wonder that you get bad legislation when the attention of the American public is diverted in this way?"



SECY.-TREAS. JAMES B. CAREY



VICE-PRES. J. A. BEIRNE



VICE-PRES. O. A. KNIGHT

The Theme: ..... Our ..... government .....

Carey Puts C. Of C., NAM, Commies In Same Boat

CIO SECY.-TREAS. James B. Carey told last week's CIO Anti-Inflation Conference: "The task before the CIO is to recognize that we have a war on here at home against the same forces doing the same job they did in 1946 when price controls were ended too soon.

"Those forces of big business are hellbent on gambling with the safety of our nation."

Carey said that the time has come for the people of this country to rally against the National Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers—the two big business groups determined to kill price controls.

He said that it was significant that the Communist newspaper, The Daily Worker, had joined these two organizations in their attack on controls.

Carey called upon CIO units everywhere to hold "a whole series of meetings" and to "bring other groups into the fight."

Other speakers were:

● Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers, who explained his work as assistant to Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston. McDonald reported that the USA-CIO plans to hold 1500 meetings of local officers, shop stewards, committeemen and the general membership in which 40,000 people would participate.

● CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, one of the labor representatives on the Wage Stabilization Board, who termed the WSB approach "unrealistic" in the face of present developments "in that it tries to put clamps on labor without regard for other facets of the economy."

● CIO Vice Pres. O. A. (Jack) Knight, Assistant Administrator of the National Production Authority, who said that he saw many opportunities for labor to serve in NPA. He added: "In the NPA, labor is today in a position to reap the benefits of the struggles it waged in the old War Production Board."

● CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, who reported on labor's as yet unsuccessful efforts to participate fully in civilian defense under Director Millard Caldwell.

He warned that there is a danger that in some states and cities that anti-labor groups will try to use the program to strangle unions and organizations, and concluded: "We are still fighting to bring this man Caldwell to realize that labor is the real force in any defense of this country."

A summary of the proceedings was presented by Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, who told the delegates that if they approved the resolution, "You say to Congress that we of the CIO repudiate the action they took on the bill yesterday. You say to them that the killing of effective price controls is not acceptable to the CIO, to the United Labor Policy Committee, and to the American people in general."

A. J. GOLDBERG

Goldberg said that the action of the House and Senate Banking Committees in voting to kill two scheduled price rollbacks on beef weakened the bill to a point where no economic stabilization could be achieved.

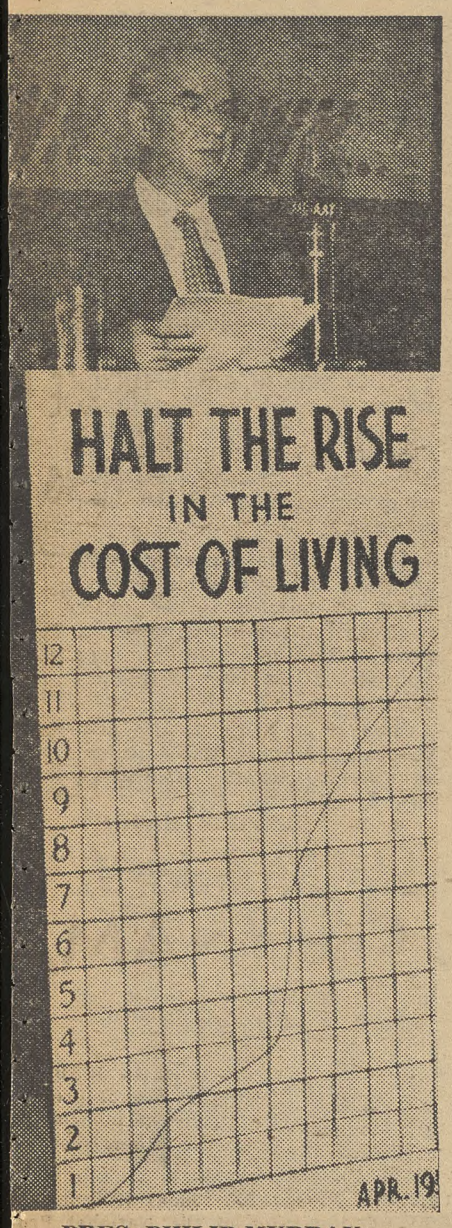
Attacking the "shameful so-called 'economies'" which Congress has voted in various appropriations bills, Goldberg pointed out:

"They are smokescreens designed to conceal the fact that the Congress is engaged in the practice of wrecking the Defense Production Act."

The CIO attorney said that the legislators should remember that "the American workman is neither a fool nor weak." He warned that labor's agreement to submit to wage stabilization was embodied in an "equality

CIO UNION OFFICIALS ARE TOLD TO TAKE THE PROGRAM TO THE PEOPLE

ll Pave Way For Still Higher Prices



PRES. PHILIP MURRAY
..... must halt .....

PAC DIRECTOR JACK KROLL
..... the rise .....

USA Secy.-Treas. DAVID McDONALD
..... in the cost .....

VICE-PRES. ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
..... of living.

Statement Issued By Anti-Inflation Conference

I

TODAY, WE are in the midst of a program for the mobilization of our human, industrial and agricultural resources to dfend the free world from Communist aggression.

This threat to the democratic world is an ever-present one.

Our progress in mobilizing our resources is being hampered by the ravages of inflation.

Inflation has robbed the American public of an estimated $17 billion in buying power. It has increased the cost of our defense effort by $7 billion.

Clearly, inflation is a Fifth Column menace against which America must quickly rally to defend itself.

The legislative foundation of our fight against high prices is the Defense Production Act, passed in the autumn of 1950. It is a weak foundation. The Act is full of special interest loopholes and inadequate provisions for combatting high prices.

While the Defense Production Act has been on the statute books, the prices of raw materials, of industrial products for civilian and defense needs and the price of food have soared continuously upwards. Commodity speculation has been rampant and scandalous.

Corporation profits have increased, even after taxes, to the highest level in the country's history—2½ times the peak World War II figure, 50% over the rate for the pre-Korean first quarter of 1950.

In addition, millions of American families face the prospect of higher dwelling costs because of inadequate and expiring rent controls. Every low- and middle-income family is confronted with the prospect of higher income taxes, while the Congress obstinately refuses to close loopholes in the revenue laws that would bring about more equitable sharing of the tax burden.

The American public, including the membership of CIO, will not tolerate a situation in which extortionate profiteering is permitted during this period of great emergency. American workers will not tolerate a lopsided economic program in which wages are stabilized, while profits run amok, while the prices of many foods go uncontrolled, and while rents are steadily rising.

II

This CIO anti-inflation rally, meeting in the city of Washington, on June 20, 1951, therefore calls upon Congress and the Administration to adopt a militant program against the domestic menace of inflation, a program which should embrace, as a minimum, the following points:

1. Extension and strengthening of the Defense Production Act before its present expiration date of June 30, to include the following:

A. Protection for consumers through effective control of food prices by the use of food subsidies along World War II lines, firm dollars-and-cents price ceilings and rollbacks where appropriate, grade labelling, and continued production of low priced goods.

B. Effective enforcement of price controls with no appeasement of special interest groups.

C. No retreat from the meat price rollbacks. Any attempt to do so will constitute abandonment of the price control program and will destroy the possibility of effective economic stabilization.

D. Extension and expansion of rent controls to give necessary and adequate protection in all areas of the country.

E. Regulations of margins on the commodity markets that will curb speculation in agricultural and industrial products that has been responsible, in great measure, for much of our present inflation.

A fair and equitable wage stabilization program, including power for the Wage Stabilization Board to help settle disputes, will work effectively only as part of a well-balanced economic stabilization program based on the principles listed above.

2. Passage of an improved tax law providing an equitable distribution of the tax burden, and a closing of the scores of loopholes through which wealthy individuals and corporations evade their tax responsibility.

III

This CIO anti-inflation rally, recognizing that the 82nd Congress has been proceeding at snail's pace to meet the onrushing problems of inflation, calls upon CIO affiliates in every section of the country to demand, in every effective way, immediate and speedy action by the Congress to meet this great problem of higher prices, speculation and inflation. We call upon national unions, local unions, state, county and city industrial union councils, to take the following steps:

A. Immediately hold special council and local union meetings to acquaint the membership fully with our present economic dangers and to spur action in the Congress.

B. Send postcards, letters, telegrams and resolutions to Congressmen and Senators demanding firm price controls and other anti-inflation measures.

C. Visit or telephone Congressmen and Senators to urgently request faster action by the Congress.

D. Report to our membership on the expressions and votes of the Congressmen and Senators on this campaign against inflation.

elegates At Rally upport UN Forces

The 250 delegates to the CIO anti-inflaon rally on June 20 pledged their conued support to "all of the members of e armed services of the United Nations" a cable to Gen. Matthew Ridgeway.

"Recognizing that steadily rising prices ve already cost our defense effort over billion," the cable read, "we are deterned to prevent inflation in interests of e national welfare and defense.

"We solemnly pledge our support to ure most effective continued developent of defense mobilization program in pport of United Nations efforts to engthen free world."

acrifice" program, of which wage conls were only a part.

Our resolution says in effect that we will continue to submit to wage stabilization ther segments of the economy are not trolled," Goldberg stated bluntly.

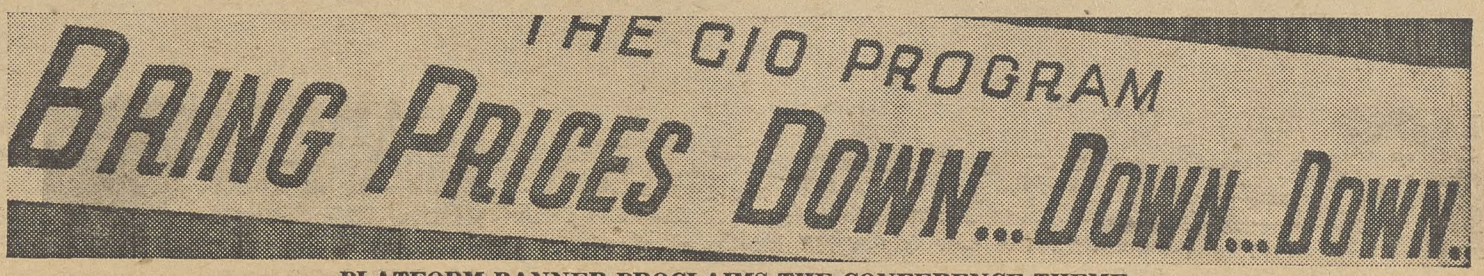
IO Political Action Director Jack Kroll nd up the meeting by calling upon the gates to strengthen and develop political on units back home.

flation Greatest Danger

roll said that the greatest danger now ng this country does not come from er the right or the left, but is "uncondled inflation." Congress, he said, must made to realize that fact.

e ended his remarks with a statement ecting the present mood of the American ple.

f those men on Capitol Hill vote right nst inflation, we'll support them for retion," he said. "If they vote wrong, we'll everything we can to see that they don't back to Congress."



PLATFORM BANNER PROCLAIMS THE CONFERENCE THEME

CIO Maritime Unions Reject Peace Offer

FEDERAL mediators were working on an around-the-clock schedule in an attempt to settle the strike of three CIO maritime unions against Atlantic and Gulf Coast shipping operators as the CIO News went to press.

The operator's latest offer included a 44 hour work week, a 4.1% wage increase, and an improved vacation schedule embodied in a three year contract. Union officials, however, continued to press for a 40-hour week at sea and rejected the three year contract.

While the National Maritime Union, the Marine Engineers and the American Radio Association are all involved in negotiations, the latter two unions are expected to accept any contract gains won by the NMU. Each union, however, has a number of proposals peculiar to its own members.

In addition to the 40-hour week, all three unions have asked for a 25% wage increase, company paid vacations, and settlement of inequities. Present basic wage scale of the NMU is $248 monthly for an able seaman. Third assistant MEBA engineers get $378, and the radio operator's scale starts at $352.

The vacation plan appeared to be the only issue upon which agreement was near. Company proposals for a three weeks vacation for every man who works continuously with the same company for one year, and two weeks for men who move from one company to another, was said to have union approval.

According to both union and company spokesmen, the seamen's pledge to move every ship with national defense or government aid cargoes was being kept.

ON JUNE 20, union officials estimated 20 ships were tied up in New York as a result of the strike. Among them was the new $25 million luxury liner Constitution, sister ship of the American Export Line's Independence. Another 100 vessels were immobilized in other Atlantic and Gulf ports.

Meantime, a strike of 350 ARA members that had beached 37 ships owned by Pacific Coast operators was ended early June 22 after a six-hour session.

Terms of the agreement were not immediately made public, but Federal Conciliator Omar Hoskins said they included wage increases and improvements in working conditions, and a contract to run for at least two years.

Negotiations will be continued, he said, on a West Coast pattern covering hours of work at sea, pensions and vacations.

Court Orders Cafe To Serve Negroes

Federal District Judge Ben Moore has ruled that discrimination against Negro customers must cease at the restaurant of the Kanawha Air Terminal, Charleston, W. Va.

Judge Moore's order was hailed as "a complete victory" by spokesmen for the West Virginia chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The order stated that the refusal of Sky Chefs, Inc., to serve Negroes violated the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment to the Constitution.

In Delaware, NAACP attorneys have filed a suit in U. S. District Court in Wilmington on behalf of parents and guardians of Negro students. The aim of the action is to have Negro pupils admitted to "white" secondary schools in Newark and New Castle, Del.

Two Fined $1000 Each For Molasses 'Cure'

Blackstrap molasses may be fine for spreading on pancakes but when two ingenious individuals began putting the stuff in bottles and selling it as a cure for cancer, tuberculosis, heart disease and a host of other ailments, they were fined $1000 each for violating the Federal Food and Drug Act.

The fine was levied on Clinton D. Keagy and John S. Riley, Jr., of New Castle, Pa., by Federal Judge Nelson T. McVicar in Pittsburgh. The men used a booklet, "Crude Black Molasses, the Natural Wonder Food," to promote the product.

It listed 27 diseases, none of which can be prevented or cured by dosage with molasses, FDA representatives said.

Rep. Gossett Quits To Go With Bell Co.

REP. ED GOSSETT, Texas Democrat, after 12 years of almost unremitting reactionary service in the House, has resigned to become the $25,000 a year general counsel of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

Some of his constituents were wondering if the job was a logrolling payoff for the resolution he introduced amending the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill by limiting the public housing program for the coming fiscal year to 5000 units. The real estate lobby helped secure its passage.

GOSSETT WAS a member of the Judiciary Committee. He sponsored legislation making it illegal for federal employes to strike, favored Taft-Hartley and Case labor legislation, lower immigration quotas and state control of tidelands oil.

He opposed FEPC, displaced persons legislation, entry into the U. S. of alien wives of GIs and the ousting of Robert N. Denham as general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board.

On the credit side, he favored much Rural Electrification Administration legislation and supported the National Science Research Foundation.

Gossett is no admirer of New York and its citizens. At a hearing in June, 1947, he said:

"Isn't this supposed to be an Anglo-Saxon country — that is, English-speaking? I am not referring to New York City—that isn't an English-speaking place."

Vargas President Of Labor Party

President Getulio Vargas of Brazil has been named president of the Brazilian Labor Party, succeeding Minister of Labor Danton Coelho, who became first vice president.

Vargas was elected to the presidency of the nation by the Labor Party. His position as head of the group is expected to give it national cohesion. The party's national convention approved a motion to reform the Constitution of Brazil to adapt it to the aims of the workers, who demand a "labor democracy."

Steel Makers Consent To Stop Price Fixing

THE AMERICAN Steel and Iron Institute and 90 steel producers agreed last week to abide by a Federal Trade Commission order banning price-fixing arrangements on thousands of steel products, ranging from ingots to nails.

FTC had charged that approximately 85% of the industry has followed pricing practices termed "oppressive to the public interest" and by doing so had tended to throttle competition.

Industry representatives indicated that although they did not agree with the commission's findings they would not challenge them in court. Consent was given to the order prohibiting a long list of pricing practices attacked by the commission.

The agreement settled a dispute begun nearly four years ago, when virtually the entire steel industry was accused of engaging in an unlawful pricing conspiracy.

In another action, an FTC trial examiner's inital decision would prohibit five Standard Oil companies and the Atlas Supply Co., which they control, from engaging in monopolistic practices in the purchase and resale of tires, batteries and other automobile accessories.

UNDER TERMS of the order, the five Standard companies would be ordered to stop accepting, through an intermediary such as Atlas, any brokerage commission on purchases made for their own accounts.

Atlas would be required to stop accepting any allowance or discount on purchases. The order is directed at preventing the firms from making purchases at more favorable prices than their competitors.

Cited with Atlas in the provisional order are Standard Oil of Ohio, Kentucky, California, Indiana and New Jersey.

Carey Hits Double Standard For Controlling Credit

THE FEDERAL Reserve Board is maintaining a double standard of credit controls—one for wage-earning consumers and another for commodity speculators—Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers charged last week.

In a letter to William M. Martin, Jr., chairman of the FRB's board of governors, Carey asked for reconsideration of the recent refusal to modify Regulation "W." This regulation requires higher down payments and shorter payment periods for automobiles, certain home furnishings and other consumer goods.

Carey, who is secretary-treasurer of the CIO, reminded Martin that the conditions under which Regulation "W" was applied last September no longer exist, particularly in the television industry.

"Yet in spite of 50,000 people unemployed in this industry," he wrote, "the danger of the loss of their skills to the electronics defense program, and the fact that 600,000 television sets are frozen in warehouses, you insist on clinging to an indefensible position."

Bankers are permitted to regulate themselves through "voluntary committees," he said, but at the same time the RFB has clamped rigid regulations on the public.

Protestants Are Urged To End Segregation

Dr. Benjamin Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, told the American Baptist convention at Buffalo that Protestant churches should end segregation and open their doors to Negro worshippers.

This would be a "daring step," he said, but there should be no bias in religion. The Negro educator asserted there is more segregation in northern churches "than in the public schools, the public library, the theater, and certainly than on the New York subway."

Brewery Union Strikes Publicker

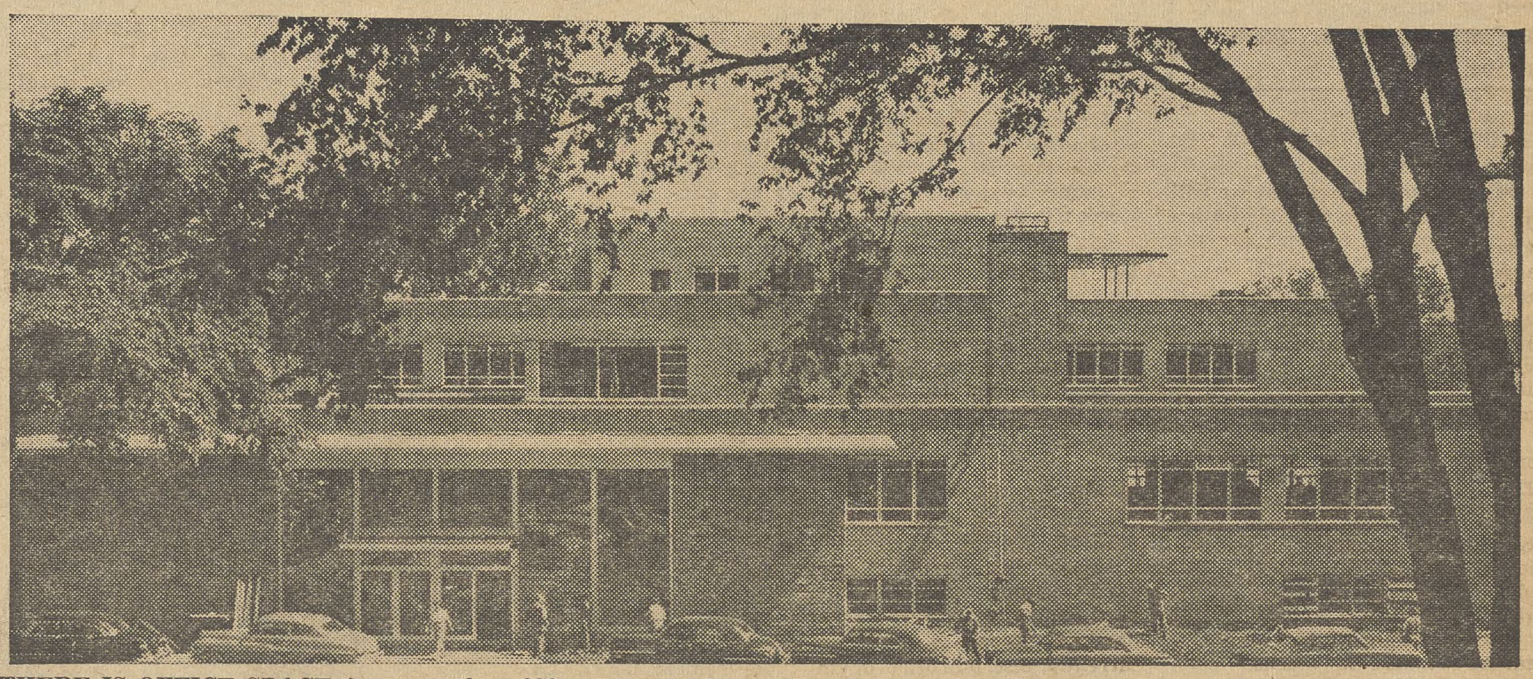
If steps aren't taken to resume liquor production, there may soon be plenty of room for artists to paint faces on barroom floors in the City of Brotherly Love.

Some 2300 members of the CIO Brewery Workers struck and shut down a half-dozen plants of the giant Publicker Industries, Inc. in Philadelphia and its suburbs.

The union proposed a wage adjustment of about 30c an hour against a company offer of 5c. Publicker's refusal to bargain on a pension program was listed as another reason for the strike by union spokesmen.

Set Larger Vacations

All Swedish workers will get a three-week paid vacation this summer, under a law passed by both houses of Parliament. Previously they were entitled to a 12-day paid holiday.



THERE IS OFFICE SPACE for more than 600 persons in this building, the new $1,250,000 headquarters of the CIO Auto Workers at Detroit. Christened "Solidarity House," the four-story brick and sandstone structure will house all the UWA divisions except the Ford Dept. and the West Side (Detroit) regional offices.

Pres. Murray Warns Americans:

Entire World Watching U. S. On Civil Rights

CIO PRES. Philip Murray warned last week that failure to adopt a civil rights program for America will earn the United States "the moral condemnation of other peoples" and may also "bring us economic troubles of the most serious nature."

Murray called on Congress to enact a Fair Employment Practices law in a speech at Pittsburgh four days before the tenth anniversary of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt's creation of a wartime national Fair Employment Practices Committee.

Murray spoke on June 21 at a testimonial banquet sponsored by the Allegheny County Citizens Committee and attended by Negro and white civic leaders from western Pennsylvania. He said in part:

IN EVERY state legislature and in the Congress in the city of Washington labor's voice is being heard. And labor's voice is crying out for the passage of laws that will strengthen our economic stability, that will hasten us along the path of social progress, and that will bulwark our American system of civil liberties and civil right.

We have much yet to do. Too often, our legislators and government officials seem ready to do nothing, rather than to do something, to meet the problem of our 20th Century America.

But through good years and bad years, through years of hope and years of despair, our CIO has remained steadfast to one basic principle. That principle is expressed in the preamble of the Constitution of the CIO, which says:

"Racial persecution, intolerance, selfishness and greed have no place in the human family. We will not be satisfied until ours is a world of free men and women and of happy children. It is to these ends that the Constitution of the CIO is dedicated. It is the charter of our lives; through it we seek to maintain and extend liberty and opportunity here and throughout the world."

Our CIO organization will remain steadfast to these principles. We in the CIO know that the blots of intolerance and discrimination must be wiped out if our American democracy is to survive and grow . . .

For long years, we watched with dismay —as I am sure you also watched with dismay—the way in which corporation managements played on the theme of "divide-and-rule." We saw Negroes and Mexicans and new immigrants to our country's shores being used by predatory groups to break unions, to depress living standards and to enrich profiteers.

When the CIO was formed some sixteen years ago, we did not for a moment question the fact that membership must be open to every worker, regardless of race or color or creed or national origin—for that is the only way a successful democatic union can be built.

Practice Principles

We learned something else, too. We learned that a union cannot, in good conscience, conduct its affairs in an effective way if barriers of discrimination are set up within the union against any man or woman because of his color, creed or race.

Many years ago, the CIO established its own Committee to Abolish Discrimination, headed by our Secretary-Treasurer, James B. Carey. That committee has performed excellent service to our own labor movement and to the cause of civil rights.

It has represented the CIO's direct interest in these problems—and it has also given guidance and education to our unions in the development of the CIO program.

We in the CIO see three major objectives toward which American labor and the American people must work.

- There must be equality of economic opportunity for every American citizen.
- There must be equality of political rights for every American citizen. So long as any American or group of Americans is prevented from using the sacred right to vote, we will not have achieved political equality.

I do not care what the subterfuge may be called—whether it is a polltax or a fake educational test or any other type of discrimination—it must be abolished!

- The third point toward which we must work is an equal sharing of the services and the facilities of each community by all its citizens. No minority group in this country should be forced to suffer inequality in the schools, in public eating places, in areas for recreation, or in the home.

Proud Of Progress

The housing facilities provided for large numbers of American workers are nothing more than a disgrace. The disgrace is compounded by the fact that so great a proportion of the Negro community is compelled to live in the worst of these slums . . .

But while we recognize that there are great problems to be undertaken, we can still be proud of our progress in the past.

Together with other fair-minded organizations, we have smashed the practices of discrimination that once were the shame of the American Bowling Congress.

The inactivity forged by the shameful coalition of reactionary Southern Democrats and reactionary Northern Republicans is a national disgrace — and the sooner the American people remedy that situation at the polls, the better off our country will be.

In the meantime, the CIO has joined with other organizations to urge President Truman to set up another FEPC for the duration of this great national emergency, through a special Executive Order. I hope that our President, who is so often responsive to the needs of the American people, will issue such an order at the earliest possible moment . . .

World Responsibility

No American can pretend that we live on an isolated continent. We are dependent on the strength and good will of other peoples for building a solid front against vicious Communist totalitarianism. As a spearhead for democracy, we are equally dependent upon the natural resources and the agricultural and manufacturing commodities of the rest of the world.

I doubt if the average American realizes our country's dependence upon other areas of the world for essential raw materials and manufactured goods. We are, by no means, a self-sufficient nation. A large proportion of the goods which we must import are produced by men and women of the colored races.

As a matter of strategic defense, it is time that America gave more thought to our relationship with these people and their governments.

A civil rights policy that breeds dissatisfaction and disgust in other areas of the world will not only earn us moral condemnation; it may also bring us economic troubles of the most serious nature.

We cannot, for a moment, ignore these facts. The American people must adjust their attitudes to these basic realities. Each betrayal of American democratic principles, whether it be in the field of civil rights or in any other phase of our daily life, plays directly into the hands of the Kremlin.

. . . To Win Friends

The massive propaganda machine of the Kremlin is ready to seize upon, distort and broadcast our failures in a hundred tongues. We cannot control the Kremlin propaganda machine—but we can, as a nation, regulate our conduct to win friends rather than to rebuff our natural allies.

Today, passage by the Congress of a Fair Employment Practices law would bring tremendous benefits to every American citizen here at home. It would also be worth two or three army divisions, or a year's appropriation for the Voice of America in our worldwide struggle against Communism.

For an FEPC would demonstrate, as no other single act could do, that our United States is ready to practise to the very fullest extent, the democracy which we preach.

Tenth Anniversary

FEPC, Which Helped Win World War II, Is Needed Now

JUNE 25 is the tenth anniversary of the establishment of the Federal Fair Employment Practices Commission, designed to assure maximum use of manpower on the home front, regardless of race, creed or national origin, during World War II.

In 1941, when the German blitzkrieg had conquered most of Europe and England stood alone against the hordes of tyranny, America was desperately tooling up to arm the entire free world.

The late President Franklin D. Roosevelt summed up the critical manpower situation when he declared: "No nation combatting the increased threat of totalitarianism can afford arbitrarily to exclude huge segments of its population from defense industries. Even more important is it for us to strengthen our unity and morale by refuting at home the very theories which we are fighting abroad."

He matched his words with action by the issuance of Executive Order 8802, on June 25, 1941, which said that "there shall be no discrimination in the employment of workers in defense industries or government because of race, creed, color or national origin."

A second executive order issued by Roosevelt in 1943 established FEPC as an independent agency under the President. John Brophy, then director of CIO Industrial Union Councils and at present representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in the United Nations, was one of the six original members appointed to the committee.

The important role played by FEPC in helping to win the war is shown by the fact that in 1944, there were 107,000 non-white workers in aircraft plants, 182,000 in shipbuilding yards and 142,000 in ordnance.

During its five year life, FEPC settled nearly 5000 cases by peaceful negotiations, including 40 strikes and threatened strikes over racial differences.

IN THEIR final report, FEPC members stated that in most cases where the government intervened, both employers and workers abandoned discrimination. They found that once the barriers were down, the workers of varying races and religions worked together efficiently and learned to accept each other without rancor.

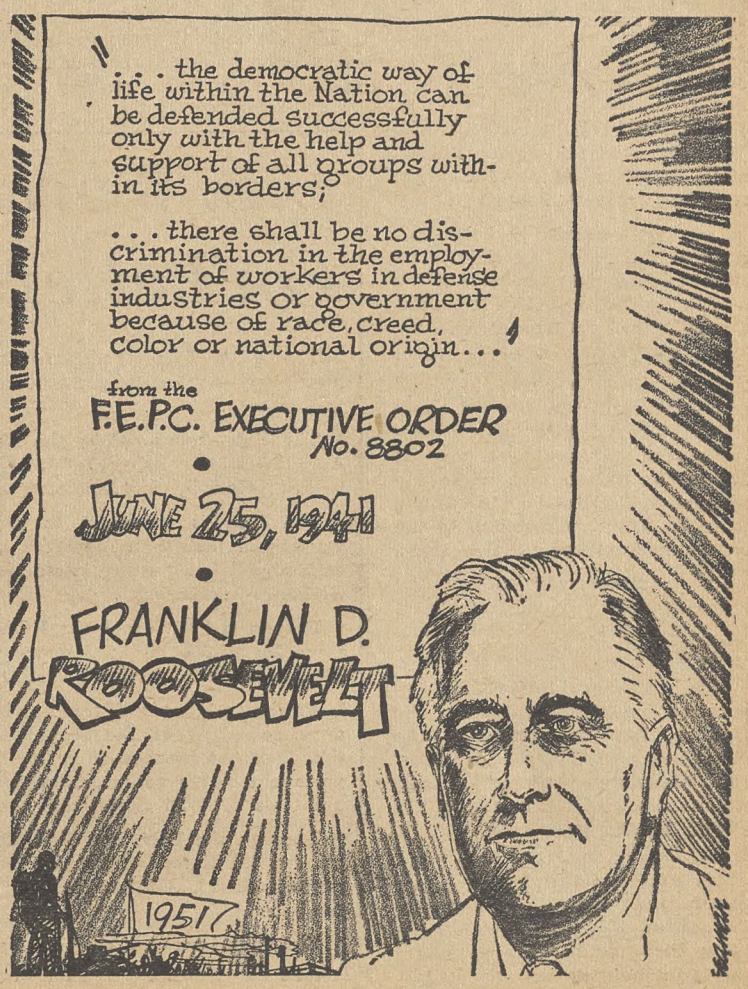
Currently, discrimination in employment again is barring willing and able workers from making their needed contribution.

In his report to the President on Apr. 1, 1951, Defense Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson declared that the country "must utilize our work force at their highest skills and capacities." He said that if we are wasteful of our resources, "manpower deficiencies could become the limiting factor in production and in military strength."

THE NATIONAL Council for a Permanent FEPC wired the President on July 16 last year urging that he issue "an executive order similar to Roosevelt's 8802 . . . as an integral factor in the mobilization of manpower . . . against North Korean aggression."

On Jan. 15, 1951, in his budget message, Truman requested Congress to enact FEPC legislation and in his memorandum on National Manpower Mobilization Policy, issued a daye later, the President declared that government controls would be used "to the extent needed" to enforce "full use of minority groups."

Executive order 10210, issued Feb. 2, called for inclusion of a non-discrimination clause in all government contracts but created no compliance machinery. Congress has failed to act on the President's recommendation.



Communism Not Only Subject

ICFTU Congress Will Act In Bread-Butter Issues

LABOR LEADERS from every corner of the globe will begin assembling in Milan, Italy, late in June for the second World Congress of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to plan free labor's strategy in the battle against totalitarianism and for improved working conditions.

From the United States, Canada and other American republics, from virtually every country in Europe, from Asia, from Africa and the Caribbean islands, delegates empowered to speak in the name of 53 million organized workers will begin their deliberations on the 175th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Included among the delegates will be labor officials from Iron Curtain countries who still maintain underground contacts.

Totalitarians' Foes

Heading the U. S. delegations are Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers and AFL Vice Pres. Matthew Woll. The United Mine Workers has a three-man delegation. The Canadian Congress of Labour and the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress have sent delegations.

With their colleagues from 60 countries, they will lay the groundwork for a united, even more powerful organization capable of fighting back totalitarianism, whether Stalinism, Falangism or Peronism.

The CIO delegation will include, in addition to Chairman Potofsky, Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Joseph Curran, president, the National Maritime Union; Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel; Regional Dir. Sol Stettin of the Textile Workers; Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union; Victor Reuther, CIO representative in Europe; Michael Ross, director of the CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs. Substitute delegates will be Vice Pres. Martin Kyne of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union; Boyd Wilson, international representative of the Steelworkers.

Important Session

This will be the most important session of the ICFTU in its short yet achievement-studded 18-month-old history. Established in December, 1949, the ICFTU has become a major power aggregate in the battle for free trade unionism against the Communist-controlled World Federation of Trade Unions.

Utterly dedicated to the struggle against totalitarianism, ICFTU's leaders nevertheless realize that empty bellies speak louder than slogans.

That is why the world congress will deal not only with labor's role in the world crisis engineered by Soviet imperialism but also with the economic problems, the cost-of-living problems, the bread-and-butter issues which concern workers in undeveloped countries in three continents—Asia, Africa and South America.

That is why it is going to deal with an economic union for Europe as a means of raising wages and improving living standards.

Common Purpose

What is of overriding importance, however, is that several hundred labor leaders, free of government domination and control, speaking more than 20 different languages, garbed in a wide variety of costumes, representing the oldest and youngest of human cultures, are prepared to meet as trade unionists and seek ways of implementing a simple concept—free labor means a free world.

The Communist press and radio have been getting more and more choleric with each passing day as July 4 nears. By July 14, Bastille Day, another momentous day in freedom's chronology when the ICFTU conclave will be history, Stalin should really have something to scream about, and free workers something to cheer about.

The free world's economic recovery has been severely upset by "the unprovoked communist attack" in Korea thus "jeopardizing workers' living standards," according to the annual report of J. H. Oldenbroek, general secretary of the ICFTU.

"However, we should not allow these considerations," he declared, "to deflect our thoughts from the culprits responsible for the present world situation—the aggressors in Korea and all those who support them."

Implying that the Korean aggression had as a "calculated effect" the hindering of economic measures to aid the economies of under-developed countries, Oldenbroek said that "if free trade unionism is to develop rapidly and to achieve its aims," it is necessary for "timely and concerted action on the part of the democratic nations" to curb inflation.

Appalled By Misery

The ICFTU spokesman stressed that the free labor movement was deeply concerned about "the appalling misery in which the bulk of the population of the economically less advanced countries lives." To this end, the ICFTU has called for full employment measures to be adopted by the free world.

Referring to the effects of Marshall Plan aid on European recovery, Oldenbroek said that although it had "contributed much, the problems have not yet been satisfactorily solved in Europe."

The key to European recovery is the formation of an economic union with economic integration, he said with planning and safeguards for the workers affected.

CLOSE HARMONY: Jacob S. Potofsky, a CIO adviser (left) to the U. S. workers' delegation to the Intl. Labour Organization conference at Geneva, talks things over with George Philip Delaney of the AFL, also attending the ILO parley. Potofsky is president of the CIO Clothing Workers.

Watch U. S. Unions' Militancy, European Workers Are Told

IF THE workers of Europe want better standards of living they would do well to look at the experience of their American brothers, Robert Oliver, labor adviser to the Economic Cooperation Administration, recently told an international conference at the Abbaye de Royaumont, near Paris.

"The standard of living of the American people was won on the picket line," he said bluntly. "It was fought for bitterly."

Oliver formerly was CIO director in Texas and is a veteran of organizing battles of the Textile Workers and Oil Workers.

He made it clear that he did not mean to imply Europeans in every case should follow the pattern in the United States. But they might well find worthwhile guidance, he claimed, in a study of the American record and an examination of the experience and mistakes of Americans.

Oliver was one of several Americans who spoke at the meeting, which was attended by about 175 plant owners, managers and supervisors, and trade union leaders from Western Europe. It was called by the French National Work Organization Committee.

James M. Silberman, U.S. Dept. of Labor productivity expert, told the conference that one of the most vital factors in raising American productivity is the cooperative attitude of the labor movement. American unions encourage higher productivity, he said, not for the sake of productivity alone, but "as a means toward making possible a higher standard of living for the workers."

The militancy of the U.S. labor movement also was stressed by R. R. Zimmerman, Marshall Plan technical assistance chief.

"We have arrived at the existing state of relatively good labor-management cooperation through strikes and strife," he emphasized.

American labor got little without militant negotiating backed by the threat of strikes and picketing, he added.

Finnish CP Loses Again

COMMUNISTS in Finland, who have been taking one licking after another since 1949, are smarting from still another.

They lost practically half their seats in the recent triennial elections among union members for new delegates to the Trade Unions Council, final returns show.

Out of a total of 222 seats in the council, the Reds took 65, compared to 170 in the old council of 299 seats. The Social Democrats won 152 seats as against 170 in the old council, while the non-political Seamen's Union, which was not represented in the old council, picked up five seats.

Put another way, Communist representation dropped from 43.1% to 29.3%, while the Social Democrats grew from 56.9% to 68.4%.

Mostly responsible for the Communists' poor showing was the loss of their majorities in the metal workers', glass workers' and porcelain workers' unions, where they had been particularly strong in the past.

The results are significant because tiny Finland is a next-door neighbor to Russia. The Soviet has a big naval base not far from the border, which is within gun range of Helsinki, Finnish capitol.

U.S. Workers Answer ECA's Plea For Letters To European Brothers

The ECA Correspondence Club — object NOT matrimony—is enrolling members from all parts of the country.

The club—sponsored by the Economic Cooperation Administration's Labor Information Division—is intended primarily for American workers.

The idea is for them to exchange letters with workers in their own industries in the free countries of Europe, thus putting international friendship on a worker-to-worker basis.

Responses have come, the ECA reported last week, from Hollywood, Cal.; Milwaukee, Wis.; St. Louis, Mo.; Martinsville, W. Va., and Pittsburgh, Pa.

American labor and trade unions have long been a prime target of Soviet propagandists. The Reds tell European workers that their American counterparts are slaves to machines and that their unions are tools of Wall Street and the bosses.

Through the ECA Pen Pals Club, American workers can let European workers know that the Soviet propagandists are talking strictly through their little red hats.

European workers are vitally interested in the United States and in Americans, the ECA has found out, and want to know more about them. They want to know more about U. S. unions and how they operate, how American workers live, work and play, about the freedoms they enjoy.

Letters should be friendly and chatty. They shouldn't be boastful, and they should tell about day-to-day activities at work and in spare time.

The letters will be answered. American workers will learn from European workers how it feels to be living with the Russians only a comparatively few miles away, what it is like in a war-torn country fighting its way back to economic health with the aid of the ECA.

The ECA would like rubber workers to write to rubber workers, steelworkers to steelworkers, clothing workers to clothing workers, etc. Address the first letter to: A European Worker (mentioning the industry), c/o ECA-Labor Information, 800 Connecticut Avenue, Washington 25, D. C.

Workers who want to take a wallop at the Kremlin by mail should be sure to include their names and addresses, so the European worker receiving the letter can answer. After the first round, the correspondence can be carried on directly.

U. S. Urged To Act On Banning Paper

The CIO has asked Secy. of State Dean Acheson to intervene with the administration of the International Zone of Tangiers, on the north coast of Africa across from Gibraltar, to permit the circulation of the monthly bulletin of the General Union of Spanish Workers.

Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee advised Secy. Acheson that the GUSW was organized in exile after Dictator Franco got into power in Spain, is strongly anti-totalitarian, and is an affiliate of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The circulation of its bulletin in Tangiers was banned by Administrator E. Girardiere after the Spanish Consul-General objected that it might cause "a disturbance of the peace in a foreign country." The ICFTU has already protested, Potofsky added.

"It is my understanding," Potofsky wrote, "that the government of the United States is a party to the temporary agreement concluded in October, 1945 . . . As a party to that agreement, our government, it seems to me, should use its influence to reverse this decision against a bona fide union publication which has as its purpose the bringing of information to the workers."

Tenn. Council Asks Stronger Control Act

THE TENNESSEE CIO Council's twelfth annual convention has called for a stronger Defense Production Act containing effective price and rent controls.

More than 300 delegates heard Assistant Secy. of Labor Robert Creasey stress the necessity of continuing and strengthening DPA. He warned that if controls expire, American workers will be hit hardest. Creasey was formerly an official of the CIO Communications Workers.

The convention was held June 15-17 at Nashville.

R. J. Thomas, assistant to Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization and councils, told the convention that since the CIO "cleaned house" last year of Communist dominated unions, a net gain of many thousands of new members has resulted.

"Today the CIO is stronger than it ever was and is going on to greater heights in the future," Thomas declared. He called for all out participation of CIO Councils in electing Congressman "who will honestly represent the working people of America."

He demanded "equality of sacrifice" in the defense effort and said that while labor is willing to do its share "we expect other groups to make sacrifices too."

John Riffe, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, reviewed the history of the southern drive since 1946 when it was started under the direction of the late Van A. Bittner.

HE SAID the organizing campaign will continue "until every Southern worker has had an opportunity to join the CIO."

CIO Tennessee Director Paul R. Christopher was presented with a plaque in recognition of his many years of service in the interest of the council and the workers in the state.

Resolutions called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law and the Tennessee anti-union shop law and for greater PAC activity. The convention also went on record as supporting the Truman Administration in the controversy over the removal of Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Leonard Evans, Marysville, Steelworker, was elected president succeeding Howard Strevol, Steelworkers staff representative, who was transferred to Alabama. B. R. Allan, Memphis, Rubber Worker, was re-elected vice president. Executive Secy.-Treas. Matt Lynch, Nashville, Textile Worker, remains in office until 1952.

Tribute was paid to Lynch for his work on the Tennessee Joint Labor Committee by A. M. Lampley, chairman of the Tennessee Legislative Board of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, one of the organizations belonging to the joint committee.

Colored Oleo Ban Ends

Illinois has become the 39th state to remove the ban on sale of precolored oleomargarine after a prohibition of 54 years. But restaurants can serve the butter substitute only in triangular pats —and tell the customer what he's getting.

NLRB: Undiscussed Issue Negotiable

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board last week established a new principle in collective bargaining and reaffirmed two other key policies in the same ruling.

The case involved the CIO Auto Workers Local 379 and the Jacobs Manufacturing Co., West Hartford, Conn.

In a 3-2 vote, the board ruled that the company must bargain with the union over a newly raised issue, even though the issue is not in the existing contract and was not discussed in negotiating it. The issue here was a pension program.

The board unanimously reasserted that the company must furnish the union, upon request, statistical information to prove the company's inability to grant a wage increase.

Jacobs' officials had told the UAW that a requested wage raise was impossible due to declining sales and a poor outlook for the future, but refused to let the union look at its books.

By another 3-2 vote, the board also reaffirmed an old policy. It denied the union's contention that the company, during the term of the contract, had refused to bargain over an insurance program.

The revision of the program had been raised and discussed during negotiations leading to the signing of the contract and was then rejected by the company. The present contract contains no reference to the insurance program.

"Uh . . . the boss's son besides being not too bright is also treasurer of the firm."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

PRES. MURRAY convened the CIO Anti-Inflation Conference in Washington on June 20. The conference was well attended by members of the CIO Executive Board, presidents or vice-presidents of national and international affiliates, all CIO state councils and many larger local councils. Also in attendance were the CIO regional directors. Pres. Murray pointed out that our country is facing grave economic dangers. Three facts stand out:

Allan Haywood

1. Inflation is creating serious damage to our national economy and to our defense mobilization program.

2. The Defense Production Act has failed to serve as an effective weapon against inflation. Its loopholes should be plugged without delay. Its inadequacies should be replaced by firm authority for firm anti-inflation controls.

3. Unless firm and effective controls are imposed without delay, new inflationary pressures are certain to lift prices far above present levels. This will be true not only of industrial prices, but of the whole range of prices for consumer goods—including foods.

Wire your congressman and senators today! Get them to vote controls. Action in the field is necessary and essential. Activize all local unions and councils, officers, shop stewards, etc. This is a fight on behalf of all the people of these United States.

The Communications Workers just won a smashing victory over the IBEW-AFL in the Shadeland and Speedway plants of the Western Electric Co. in Indianapolis, Ind. The workers voted as follows: 4378 eligible, CWA-CIO 1905, IBEW 1725, no union 144, challenged 58, void 20. The CIO organizational staff in Illinois worked closely with the CWA in this important campaign, and helped a great deal in bringing about victory.

Dir. John Riffe, of the CIO Organizing Committee, reports the following CIO representation election victories in the South:

Maryland Baking Co., Atlanta, Ga., Retail Wholesale Union 21, against 14; Industrial Machinery Co., Fort Worth, Tex., Steelworkers 62, no union 6; Lennox Furnace Co., Fort Worth, Steelworkers 60, no union 28; Welch Furniture Co., High Point, N. C., Furniture Workers 59, no union 27; Sumter Farm & Stock Co., Tuscaloosa, Ala., Retail Wholesale Union 16, no union, 9; Allen & Jamison Hardware Co., Tuscaloosa, Retail Wholesale Union 26, no union 13.

Also, Armour Packing Co., Columbia, S. C., Packinghouse Workers 13, no union 3; Volney Felt Co., Memphis, Tenn., Paperworkers 23, no union 13; W. T. Grant Co., Birmingham, Ala., RWDSU 68, no union 2; Employes of City of Gadsden, Ala., Government & Civic Employees 98, AFL 7, no union 19; Lone Star Boat Co., Dallas, Tex., UAW 68, no union 39; Pan Handle Steel Products Co., Wichita Falls, Tex., Oil Workers 42, no union 1.

At the Alabama Propeller Co., Doran, Ala., the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers won by a unanimous vote.

William F. Donovan, director of District 28, Steelworkers, reports that in a union shop election at the Thew Shovel Co., Lorain, O., the vote was eligible 913, Local 1242 616, against 148.

CIO Rep. David Sternback reports another CIO representation election victory in Bianchi, Puerto Rico, by the following vote: CIO 618, Mendez 424, FLT 98.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that CIO LIU 80, Food & Tobacco Workers Union, won two important representation elections in Camden, N. J.: Siegel Cigar Co., 148 CIO, 1 no union, 1 void; Consolidated Cigar, 338 CIO, 11 no union. The discredited, almost non-existent FTA-DPOWA withdrew from the ballot three days before the election. Congratulations to Anna Magee, the chairlady of Siegel, and Chairlady Pauline Mickle and Antonetta Volio of Consolidated for their participation in the election. Congratulations also to CIO Rep. Ben Stahl.

REG. DIR. DEL GARST reports that the CIO Shoe Workers won a representation election at the Schultz Shoe Co., St. Louis, Mo., by a vote of 215 for CIO, 3 against, and 53 challenged. Union Rep. Joe Sturmann was in charge of the drive.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a representation election at the Kremmling Timber Co., Kremmling, Cal., the CIO Woodworkers won by a vote of 12 to 3 for no union. The organizational work was carried on by Leslie Clark and William Blakely of the Woodworkers.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a union shop election held in the sheds of El Centro, Brawley, Holtville and Calexico, Cal., for melon workers, they voted in favor of the CIO by 393 yes to 57 no. CIO Field Rep. Ken Gillie and Local Organizers Clayton Coon and Russell Parker are to be congratulated for a fine job.

Adolph Germer, director of organization for the CIO Woodworkers, reports that in a representation election at the Foresthill Lumber Co., Foresthill, Cal., the workers favored the CIO by a vote of 29 to 19 no union.

In a run-off election at the Northern Redwood Lumber Co., Korbel, Cal., the vote favored the Woodworkers as follows: eligible 205, IWA-CIO 95, no union 81. Union Reps. William Baker and R. T. Thornton worked on this election. In a union shop election at the Douglas Timber Corp. (Woods Div.), Drain, Ore., the workers favored CIO by a vote of 15 to 1.

Pan American Mechanics Get Travel Costs

AN AGREEMENT providing traveling expenses for mechanics transferred to other jobs ended the four-day strike of the CIO Transport Workers against Pan American World Airways in the New York City area last week.

The walkout, which brought the company's far flung flight operations to a virtual standstill, grew out of Pan American's decision to discharge 89 mechanics because of transfer of heavy maintenance work from New York to Miami, Fla.

Efforts to maintain service with supervisory personnel and clerks proved fruitless when members of the Flight Engineers Intl. Association, AFL, refused to cross picket lines set up at the New York Intl. Airport at Idlewild and LaGuardia Airport. More than 250 flight stewards, stewardesses and pursers had previously joined the strike.

Under terms of the settlement the mechanics will have the option of new jobs with the company in Miami or Brownsville, Tex. All expenses involved in moving the workers and their families will be paid by Pan American.

Those who decline to move will receive severance pay averaging about $1000, or a company guarantee to make up any wage loss resulting from taking another job until July, 1951.

Maine CIO Lauds Truman Korean Role

PRESIDENT TRUMAN was termed a "consistent winner" at the ninth annual Maine CIO Industrial Union Council convention at Old Orchard Beach on June 16.

Undersecretary of Labor Michael J. Gavin told the 150 delegates, representing more than 20,000 CIO members, that the President "will win in Korea as he has won in every other fight." Gavin declared he was willing "to stake the fate of this country on him."

The convention took steps to form a lasting bond between farmers and labor by unanimously passing a resolution calling for increased cooperation between the groups.

Carrying out this theme, Lewis Guptill, master of the Maine Grange, expressed the willingness of farmers to cooperate with labor in working out common problems.

Joseph Salerno, regional director of the CIO Clothing Workers, called for a "crusade" of meetings, postcards and letter writing to congressmen urging control laws with "teeth."

Mariano S. Bishop, Textile Workers cotton-rayon director, declared that in spite of setbacks, TWUA will continue to organize in the South in an attempt to wipe out the North-South wage differential.

Newly elected officers are: George Jabar, president; Michael Schoonjans, vice president, and Denis Blais, secretary-treasurer.

VOICE OF ROOSEVELT: Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (D. N. Y.) urges New York State CIO leaders to mobilize the people back home against high prices. On Roosevelt's right is State CIO Council Pres. Louis Hollander; on Roosevelt's left, Rep. Emanuel Celler (D. N. Y.), also active in the fight against inflation. The meeting was held when the New York CIO leaders came to Washington to participate in the CIO Anti-Inflation Conference.

REP. WILLIAM MILLER (R. N.Y.), in center, goes into a huddle with Secy.-Treas. James Miller (right) of the Buffalo CIO Council and Hugh Thompson, CIO regional director in Buffalo. Rep. Miller said he'll support Truman's program for strong controls.

Some GOP Congressmen Want Price Controls

CIO representatives from New York State sat down last week with a group of New York Congressmen for a heart to heart talk about anti-inflation policies.

The luncheon found not only Democrats but some Republicans in the Empire State delegation willing and ready to support the President's anti-inflation program. Rep. Miller (R. N. Y.), who had been vigorously opposed by the CIO in the 1950 elections, was one of those present who called for strong price controls.

Miller said he was "ashamed of the fact" that other Republican Congressmen had not accepted the State CIO invitation to discuss the cost-of-living problem.

"No wonder the party doesn't get anywhere when it permits party policy to get in the way of the national interest," Miller told the applauding CIO group.

Rep. Arthur Klein (D. N. Y.), who represents the lower east side district of Manhattan said, "It's a mistake to think inflation is a political issue." Much of his mail calling for price controls came from Republican areas of his district, Klein noted.

Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (D. N. Y.) warned the CIO delegates: "We have one simple job to do: mobilizing the people who are with us."

The son of the former President charged that there is a "big difference" between the attitude of the farmers and the farm organizations. The big farm organizations are opposing price controls, but Roosevelt said the farmers he knows want strong Government action to bring prices down.

Other Congressmen at the luncheon were Reps. Celler, Donovan and Keogh. All of them voiced support of proposals for stronger price controls.

Catholics, Jews Plan Summer Workshop

A summer workshop on intergroup education, the result of cooperative planning by the Catholic Univ. of America, Washington, D. C., and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Jewish welfare group, will be held July 2 to Aug. 11 on the university campus.

The "laboratory" is designed for all who are concerned with better intergroup relations and democratic practices in American life. The program will include lectures, discussion, research projects and the study of actual community case histories.

Loyalty Unit Is Killed By House Action

THE EFFORT of Rep. Walter (D. Pa.) to save the President's Commission on Internal Security and Individual Rights from virtual extinction ended in failure last week.

Walter had sought exemption for the nine members of the commission from the so-called "conflict of interest" laws. These bar a person holding a government position from doing business with the government or representing clients before federal agencies.

Exemptions have been common in the past for members of temporary governmental agencies like the commission, which is headed by Adm. Chester W. Nimitz.

Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.), one of Congress' loudest shouters about subversives in and out of the government, blocked an exemption recommendation in the Senate Judiciary Committee, of which he is chairman. Defeat of Walters' move was the Nevadan's second successful effort to throw his weight around in the lower house on the issue.

Walter tied in his fight for the Nimitz exemption to a similar move in behalf of Robert T. Murphy, Washington attorney who is to conduct Senate probe of the election campaign that returned Sen. Taft (R. O.) to office last fall. Walter withdrew his rider when its doom became apparent.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate & House Banking Coms. reported crippling bills. Senate vote due Monday; House vote this week.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes H.R. 4473	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House Ways and Means Com. reported bill providing $7,206,000,000 increase.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
Importation of Mexican Farm Labor S. 984 H.R. 3283	Provides for importation of cheap foreign labor; encourages extension of substandard conditions for both domestic and imported farm workers.	Senate passed Ellender bill (S. 984). House Rules Com. voted June 13 to consider Poage Bill (H.R. 3283). House action expected soon.	Urge House members to substitute Ellender Bill for Poage Bill and add strengthening amendments.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Now before Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.
Labor Dept.-FSA Appropriations. H.R. 3709	Appropriates funds for operations of the Labor Dept. and Fed. Security Agency.	Passed House with cuts. Senate voted further 10% cut in personnel funds.	Ask Senators and Congressmen to restore funds.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Crooks Helped Into Ship Jobs By T-H—CIO

SUBVERSIVES, sex perverts, dope fiends and other criminals are being returned to jobs in the American merchant marine because of provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, the CIO Maritime Committee has charged before a Senate Labor subcommittee.

Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the Maritime Committee, and H. Howard Ostrin, committee counsel, made the charge when they appeared before the Senate group to urge enactment of a bill (S. 1044) introduced by Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) legalizing maritime hiring halls.

The time-honored preferential hiring practices in the maritime industry were banned by T-H. Both employers and unions are opposed to this provision.

Haddock cited cases pending before the National Labor Relations Board in which the CIO Maritime Union and different shipowners have been charged with unfair labor practices because of the act's provisions.

ONE SUCH instance, he said, are charges filed by Joseph L. Stack, "an avowed Communist," who was expelled from the NMU. He now alleges that the union discriminated against him in violation of T-H in terminating his membership, Haddock related.

"Other known Communists have threatened to pursue the same course of action," he added.

Similar charges are also pending before the NLRB as the result of the union's expelling a member found guilty and convicted of a serious sex crime, Haddock pointed out.

The NMU constitution provides for the automatic expulsion of any member found guilty of a felony. Such undesirable seamen now use the NLRB to get jobs which the union would have prevented them from getting before the Taft-Hartley Act, Haddock said.

Ostrin cited the case of Leroy J. Broussard, whom he said had been expelled from the union after being convicted on a narcotics charge, but who is now again at sea.

"The union in its responsibility under its agreement with the employers felt that a man of that character or that type should not ship out," Ostrin said.

"BROUSSARD went to the NLRB and filed charges against the union. The union had to give Broussard a permit card and permit him to ship out against our own will."

As an example of T-H loopholes, Haddock pointed out that in the case of a ship manned by 600 men, it was not uncommon for as many as 240 to quit on docking. That means that the ship owners must hire that number before the ship sails again, usually in about four days.

"It just isn't possible for the company to adequately screen all 240 men in that time, and under Taft-Hartley they no longer can rely on the union to perform this important service," he explained.

Give A Buck To PAC

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 2, 1951 82 No. 27

Price Control Program Gets Meat-Ax; Next Stop—New Rise In Living Costs

(See Stories On Inside Pages)

IMAGINE! Picket lines of CIO Communications Workers like these, protesting delay in negotiations, failed to move Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. in Los Angeles, so last week the union struck. In front: Dorothy Jackson (right) and Patricia Kilpatrick.

House Unit Moves To End WSB Setup

THE HOUSE Education and Labor Committee on June 25 approved a bill which would seriously damage the government's economic stabilization efforts.

By a vote of 15 to 7, it endorsed a bill by Rep. Lucas (D. Tex.) which would destroy the government's tripartite system of settling labor-management disputes. The bill was scheduled as an amendment to the Defense Production Act.

Drafted by a House Labor subcommittee of which Lucas is chairman, the measure reflects the group's strong anti-labor bias. It would abolish the present Wage Stabilization Board, strip the board of its power to handle non-wage disputes and its power to handle problems on a case-by-case basis, and severely cut labor representation.

Only three memers of the subcommittee. Rep. Kennedy (D. Mass.), Rep. Bailey (D. W.Va.) and Rep. Perkins (D. Ky.) voted against the measure. Labor, public and industry members of the WSB opposed it.

While the House was butchering effective labor-management relations, the Senate counterpart of the Lucas subcommittee issued a report on its findings in the same matter. It reached a completely different conclusion.

The Senate group, headed by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), held that the board was "well warranted by the requirements of defense production."

Sen. Taft (R. O.) was the only member to file a dissent. He repeated the discredited National Association of Manufacturers argument that the President lacks the legal authority to set up the board and advocated a program like the Lucas proposal.

Under the latter, all national emergency disputes would have to be handled under the Taft-Hartley Act, which provides for 80-day injunctions in cases affecting national health and welfare.

THE LUCAS proposal also would destroy the present equal representation of labor, management and the public in the board's membership by requiring that public members outnumber the total of labor and industry representatives. It also would require that one labor member represent an independent union.

This provision would mean that the board would have to be increased to at least 25 members. To have a majority over the 12 combined industry and labor representatives, there would have to be at least 13 public members.

In a press conference on June 27, George W. Taylor, WSB chairman, announced that the industry, labor and public members had unanimously adopted a resolution opposing this move to destroy equal representation.

Despite the united opposition of industry members to the Taft-Lucas proposal, during the time labor representatives were withdrawn from the WSB, business groups made exactly the same recommendations as those embodied in the Lucas bill.

Lucas Bill 'Spite' Measure—Murray

Calling upon Congress to defeat the Lucas bill wrecking the Wage Stabilization Board, CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week wired members of the House and Senate:

"This is a spite bill. It is devoid of realistic understanding of labor-management problems or of the need for establishing effective methods of voluntary cooperation in American industry during this national emergency.

"The Lucas bill represents a surrender to the extremist views of the National Association of Manufacturers, which seeks to derive special advantages for big business out of the nation's emergency."

HIGHEST AWARD for heroism, the Congressional Medal of Honor, was given posthumously to Capt. Reginald B. Desiderio, killed in Korea. His father, James Desiderio, was a charter member of Clairton, Pa., CIO Steelworkers local. Here Gen. Omar N. Bradley presents the medal to the hero's son, David, 7. Looking on are Capt. Desiderio's widow, Mrs. Patricia Jean Desiderio, and a younger son, Timothy, 3.

Rep. Rabaut Beefs About Bull

CONGRESS GOT the facts —instead of the "bull"— about the beef price situation from Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.) on June 25.

He pointed out that Office of Price Stabilization orders rolling back the price of beef were "most equitable," and that even after the Aug. 1 and Oct. 1 rollbacks, the price of cattle will still be 20 to 25% above parity. But "failure to control beef prices would result in wrecking controls on all food prices," Rabaut warned.

He told the House in a floor address that it had "had plenty of bull about beef prices," and that he was going to "share" the actual "facts" of the matter with his colleagues.

The meat lobby, he charged, "does not want economic justice.

"It wants wages stabilized but prices—especially meat prices—running wild," he said.

"Good, hard-working, patriotic American citizens are getting impatient with a system that first freezes and then rigidly stabilizes wages while prices and profits go up and up.

"They are impatient with a meat lobby that comes to Washington, and when it finds it cannot intimidate and panic Mike DiSalle or President Truman, comes up here and persuades committees to recommend cancellation of rollbacks in beef prices that would cut those prices back, not to the parity level that farm spokesmen have always said they wanted, but back to 125% of that parity level."

Rabaut warned that the nation could not mobilize that way.

Senate Vote On Rollback Ban

HERE IS the 61-to-26 vote by which the Senate decided to ban any further price rollbacks after June 30. The vote was on an amendment by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) to strike out of the new Defense Production Act the prohibition of price rollbacks which had been written into the bill by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. R means a vote for rollbacks, W means a vote against rollbacks, and A means absent or not voting. See the editorial "Study The Record" on Page 4.

ALA., Hill (D) R; Sparkman (D) R
ARIZ., Hayden (D) R; McFarland (D) W
ARK., McClellan (D) W; Fulbright (D) R
CAL., Knowland (R) W; Nixon (R) W
COLO., Johnson (D) W; Millikin (R) W
CONN., Benton (D) R; McMahon (D) R
DEL., Williams (R) W; Frear (D) W
FLA., Holland (D) W; Smathers (D) A
GA., George (D) W; Russell (D) W
IDAHO, Dworshak (R) W; Welker (R) W
ILL., Dirksen (R) W; Douglas (D) R
IND., Capehart (R) W; Jenner (R) W
IOWA., Hickenlooper (R) W; Gillettee (D) R
KANS., Carlson (R) W; Schoeppel (R) W
KY., Underwood (D) W; Clements (D) W
LA., Ellender (D) W; Long (D) W
ME., Brewster (R) W; Smith (R) R
MD., Butler (R) W; O'Conor (D) R
MASS., Saltonstall (R) R; Lodge (R) A
MICH., Moody (D) R; Ferguson (R) W
MINN., Thye (R) W; Humphrey (D) R
MISS., Eastland (D) W; Stennis (D) W
MO., Hennings (D) R; Kem (R) W
MONT., Murray (D) A; Ecton (R) A
NEB., Butler (R) W; Wherry (R) W
NEV., McCarran (D) W; Malone (R) W
N. H., Bridges (R) W; Tobey (R) A
N. J., Smith (R) W; Hendrickson (R) R
N. M., Anderson (D) R; Chavez (D) R
N. Y., Lehman (D) R; Ives (R) R
N. C., Hoey (D) W; Smith (D) W
N. D., Langer (R) W; Young (R) W
OHIO, Bricker (R) W; Taft (R) W
OKLA., Kerr (D) W; Monroney (D) W
ORE., Gordon (R) W; Morse (R) R
PA., Duff (R) W; Martin (R) A
R. I., Green (D) R; Pastore (D) R
S. C., Johnston (D) A; Maybank (D) W
S. D., Case (R) W; Mundt (R) W
TENN., Kefauver (D) R; McKellar (D) W
TEX., Johnson (D) W; Connally (D) W
UTAH, Bennett (R) W; Watkins (R) A
VT., Aiken (R) W; Flanders (R) W
VA., Byrd (D) W; Robertson (D) W
WASH., Cain (R) W; Magnuson (D) R
W. VA., Kilgore (D) R; Neely (D) R
WISC., Wiley (R) W; McCarthy (R) W
WYO., Hunt (D) A; O'Mahoney (D) W

Gallstones Fell 2 CIO Leaders

Gallstones sent two top CIO leaders to hospitals last week.

CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, stricken in New York as he prepared to leave for the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions' congress in Milan, Italy, entered Mercy Hospital in Pittsburgh for observation. He was resting easily at the end of the week.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers prepared to undergo an operation for the stones in a Detroit hospital. He was first stricken a week earlier while attending a White House conference in Washington.

Boost In D. C. Rents Heralds General Raise

A HARBINGER of what the people can expect from Congress on rent controls can be seen in the action already taken by the House and Senate on rents in the District of Columbia.

The House on June 25 approved by a vote of 171 to 120 a Senate bill "continuing" rent control in the Capital until March 31, 1952. The quotation marks are necessary, because the measure lifts the roof on rents in Washington by allowing a 20% increase in the ceiling above 1941 levels.

A similar provision affecting nationwide rent controls has been written into both the House and Senate bills extending the Defense Production Act. Approval by both houses of Congress in this separate bill for the District of Columbia makes it almost certain that the provision also will be upheld at the national level.

After giving in this far to the real estate lobby, however, the Senate on June 28 got so fed up with its pressure tactics that it finally rebelled.

It beat down, 68 to 19, a proposal by Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) that would have permitted rent increases up to 37% over 1943 levels. Dirksen, known in Washington as "the errand boy for the real estate interests," was joined by Sen. Bricker (R. O.) in espousing the landlords' move.

Rieve Says:

Inflation Check Barred By Pending Bills

UNLESS THE nation's anti-inflation law is substantially improved, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers said last week he would resign as a labor representative on the Wage Stabilization Board.

Speaking to reporters in Washington, Rieve said:

"I for one will refuse to be a party to a 'stabilization program' which insures nothing except the profits of business and industry.

"Neither would I be a party to such a program if it were 'improved' only to guarantee the purchasing power of industrial workers, without regard for the rest of the population."

Rieve, who is administrative head of the CIO's Committee on Economic Policy, issued the statement after a meeting of the CIO group with the President's Council of Economic Advisors.

"I think it is our duty, as citizens as well as spokesmen for labor, to make it clear to the nation that the proposed law means an end to any hope of checking inflation," Rieve told reporters in a reference to the bills recently approved by the Senate and House Banking Committees.

Rieve said that "we still need controls; we need better controls than those now in effect." He said that such a law as that now being considered would not only be weak but would not permit any kind of stabilization, except perhaps wage stabilization.

"I don't want to kid the American people into thinking that they have something they don't have," Rieve said. "Just to call a law 'controls' is not enough. Titles of bills alone don't mean anything."

The CIO official voiced belief that if the law is not improved, President Truman should veto it and demand a better bill.

The Soviet peace proposal had been deliberately timed to weaken the drive for strong controls legislation, Rieve charged. He warned that peace in Korea would not justify any relaxation of either the defense effort or the stabilization program.

Rieve said that labor would have to "take another look" at its participation in the government's mobilization program, if the anti-inflation law is not strengthened. He added that "labor will not be content with any crumb that Congress may throw us."

Rieve laid particular stress upon the possible effects of the Russian proposal for peace in Korea upon the drive for adequate price and rent controls, and called upon the American people not to be deceived.

The text of this portion of his statement follows:

"Every American—and, for that matter, every human being who is concerned with the fate of the world—is hopeful that the long overdue Russian proposal for peace in Korea is sincere. We all want peace.

"At the same time, we must be careful not to deceive ourselves. Even if the war in Korea can be ended, we must not be lulled into a false sense of security. As President Truman pointed out a settlement in Korea will not, in itself, solve the world-wide struggle between the forces of communism and the forces of freedom.

"In particular, I am concerned about the effect of the Russian proposal on Congress, in its consideration of the extension of the Defense Production Act.

"Even before Mr. Malik's speech, Congress seemed determined to destroy any effective controls over our economy. I am afraid that the latest developments, which have raised the hopes of our people and depressed the stock-market, will strengthen the Congressional enemies of a genuine program to bring down the high cost of living.

"We in the CIO believe that peace in Korea will not justify any relaxation of the defense effort on the stabilization program. The fact that the communists have lost a battle does not mean that democracy has won the war. We still need controls; and we need better controls than those which are now in effect."

Congress Giving Go Signal To Skyrocketing Prices

CONGRESS was playing cat and mouse with the entire administration program of price-wage-rent controls last week-end.

The present law authorizing controls, the Defense Production Act, was due to expire at midnight Saturday.

At press time, it seemed likely that Congressional indifference to run-away inflation would result in failure to pass a law extending the government's control authority beyond this deadline.

That would mean an end to all checks upon inflationary pressures, at least temporarliy.

This was how that prospect was shaping up:

● The Senate remained in continuous session June 28, ending at 4 a.m. on the 29th. After much wrangling, and with the addition of amendments further weakening the "pro-inflation" bill that had been reported out by its Banking Committee, the Senate finally passed a new law "continuing controls" for eight months.

● The House began debate June 29 on a simple resolution to extend the old law for 31 days. A coalition of Southern Democrats and Republicans, however, was determined to tack a "no rollback" provision onto even this stop-gap measure. There were open threats in the Senate to filibuster the House resolution to death.

The Senate approved its "controls" bill by a vote of 71 to 10 near the end of a 16-hour session, the longest this year. The measure would write into law still further inflation by permitting rent increases in areas now controlled by as much as 20% and by banning price rollbacks on beef and other commodities.

Such provisions, economists have pointed out, would cost consumers next year more than $2½ billion in inflated prices. The cost of living would go up at least 6%.

FIGURES released the day before the Senate's action by the Bureau of Labor Statistics had shown that living costs were already at an all-time high.

Saying that he was "very much worried" by the course of events in Congress, President Truman on June 28 read a prepared statement to his press conference in which he said that unless a good law is passed "our whole stake in the free world's security will be placed in serious jeopardy."

The President referred to the possibility that Congress might not get any bill at all passed as "terribly dangerous."

"I remember vividly," he said, "what happened to prices when we had a gap in our control powers back in the summer of 1946. Food prices alone rose 14% in one month."

The threat of a repetition of this experience came from a group of obstinate members of the Senate. A number of senators, including Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), chairman of the Banking Committee, which drafted the bill crippling the administration's anti-inflation program, seemed determined to force their unpalatable bill down the House's throat.

The House Banking Committee, on the other hand, had decided emphatically that it will not be possible to get a new law through the House before the deadline. House consideration of permanent controls legislation has been scheduled for late this week.

HOWEVER, a heated battle raged over this continuing resolution. The House Rules Committee, in clearing the way for a vote on the resolution, ordered that the House be permitted to consider two amendments, sponsored by the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition.

One would prohibit any price rollbacks at all; the other amendment would impose an absolute ban on new price ceilings on materials or services not now under ceilings.

The crucial test in the Senate came June 27 in a vote on an amendment sponsored by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), which would have knocked out of the bill the ban on rollbacks of the prices of beef and other commodities to levels below those prevailing last January-February.

BY A VOTE of 61 to 26, the Senate beat down the Douglas amendment and upheld the committee proposal rolling prices forward to the period when profiteering was at its peak.

A losing battle against them was waged hard and valiantly by a small number of Democratic Senators, led by Senators Moody (Mich.), Douglas (Ill.), Benton (Conn.), Sparkman (Ala.) and Lehman (N.Y.).

His voice almost choking with emotion, Sen. Lehman made an impassioned plea for a return to sanity and said that he was "stunned by what is going on."

The Senate continued, however, to ride rough-shod over the American people's pocketbooks.

Movies Join War On Inflation

The motion picture industry last week made a voluntary contribution to the drive against inflation with the release of 3200 prints of a two-minute trailer for showing in theatres.

Entitled "Inflation and You," the film was sponsored by the Motion Picture Association of America. It gives a pictorial story of the inflationary spiral beginning with the invasion of Korea and highlights the rising prices for food, clothing and defense weapons.

Robert Montgomery is narrator and the news reel dramatization closes with a statement by Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle.

Living Cost Rises For 17th Month

THE COST of living increased for the 17th consecutive month to the 30-day period ended May 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumers Price Index revealed when it was made public June 27.

The table below shows how it has moved in past years, and month-by-month since January, 1950, when the apparently unending upsurge began.

Period	Index	Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: Jan. 15	166.9
1943 monthly average	123.6	Feb. 15	167.9
1944 monthly average	125.5	Mar. 15	168.4
1945 monthly average	128.4	Apr. 15	168.5
1946 monthly average	139.3	May 15	169.3
1947 monthly average	159.2	June 15	170.2
1948 monthly average	171.2	July 15	172.0
1949 monthly average	169.1	Aug. 15	173.4
1950 monthly average	171.9	Sept. 15	174.6
1951 average to date	183.9	Oct. 15	175.6
		Nov. 15	176.4
		Dec. 15	178.8
		1951: Jan. 15	181.5
		Feb. 15	183.8
		Mar. 15	184.5
		Apr. 15	184.6
		May 15	185.4

'Reds . . . Fascists . . . Inflation . . .'

NEVER BEFORE have the people of the United States faced a combination of enemies as vicious and insidious as the three which now confront them, Pres. Martin Wagner of the CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers said last week in urging Congress to pass a stronger Defense Production Act.

Wagner said that the three enemies are "communism—both American and Russian types—American fascism, and the evil ogre of inflation."

He added that while any one alone might easily be defeated, "the three together will require the all-out effort of all the people of the nation, not just that part known as the working class."

Organized labor and the people as a whole have shown their ability to cope with the Communist threat both at home and abroad, he said, so that while establishing a beachhead for fascism and inflation, communism can be considered the least of the three enemies.

The union president pointed out that the second foe—fascism—is difficult to fight because it operates more covertly than communism and often wraps itself in the flag.

He identified fascism as the goal of selfish, greedy, unscrupulous special interests in this country which boast of their love of democracy but actually think that democracy "stinks."

The fascist group in this country is represented by the National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the McCarthys and the MacArthurs, Wagner said.

Emphasizing that organized labor wants no truck with fascism, the UGC&CWA president said the fascists hope to realize their goal as follows:

1. If the fascists get the full support of their No. 1 ally, inflation, that, coupled with the cost of fighting the Communist threat, would "break" the nation both financially and morally.

2. At that stage the fascists would take over and we would have a setup perfected upon the pattern of Mussolini, Franco and Peron.

THAT, Wagner said, indicates the nature of the war on three fronts — two of them of our own making because of the political indifference of the masses of the people in the past five years.

Wagner claimed the situation can be corrected nationwide in the election of 1952.

The immediate job, he said, is to get Congress to revise and strengthen the Defense Production Act in line with proposals of the National CIO.

Crime Against Consumers

The defiant refusal of the Dixiegop coalition in Congress to pass a strong anti-inflation law by June 30 is nothing less than a crime against American consumers.

The majority has heeded the voice of the cattle lobby, of the big farmers, of the big business group—practically everybody except the American public.

In refusing to permit price-rollbacks on beef, the Congressional majority has told the special interests that super-profits should be considered normal. Consumers have been told they have a "perfect right" to pay any extortionate price that the producers of the necessities of life may be able to get away with.

This is a devil of a way to run an anti-inflation program. As it now shapes up, the Defense Production Act looks more like a pro-inflation bill than an anti-inflation bill.

If the same coalition of conservative Congressmen and their business lobby pals believe that labor will permit strict controls to be leveled only against wages, while every other element in the economy gets the green light—then some people in Washington are due for a surprise in the months ahead.

There is still time—though not much time—for the Congressional alliance of southern Democrats and northern Republicans to reverse its action. We doubt that they will do it. And we doubt that the American public will soon forget this crime against consumers.

The Silly Season

Perhaps it's the heat, perhaps it's the humidity, perhaps it's the hangover—but spokesmen for big business seem to be making sillier statements than ever. Three recent samples:

Exhibit A: Mr. Clarence Randall, president of the Inland Steel Co. and a big shot in the National Association of Manufacturers, opines that the women of America "are voting us into socialism." Why? Because, says Mr. Randall, "they don't understand the American profit and loss system." (They do know that prices and profits are going up, however.)

Exhibit B: Mr. Wilford King of the extremist Committee for Constitutional Government—sponsored by many big companies and wealthy individuals—finds that the popular demand for price controls and lower prices is a "sinister scheme to regiment industry—thus cutting down production and helping the enemy?" Who does Mr. King blame for all this? You've probably guessed it: ". . . the CIO bosses . . . the power behind the throne."

Exhibit C: Mr. Carlton W. Smith of the American Envelope Co. writes an impassioned letter to the NAM News suggesting that the NAM "select a name that would get away from the term 'profit.'" Mr. Smith says that corporation reports of "profits before taxes" are misleading—that they're not really profits at all until taxes have been deducted. Mr. Smith doesn't tell us what they are.

On the basis of Exhibits A, B, and C, the CIO News respectfully suggests that the three statements be placed in the Smithsonian Institution as perfectly preserved examples of silly-season talk, 1951 style.

Study The Record

On another page, the CIO News prints the Senate voting record on the beef-price rollback. That vote was a key to the fate of effective price controls.

We suggest you study it, and remember clearly how your Senator voted on this important issue.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV July 2, 1951 No. 27

The Spirit Of '51

A Quiet Campaign Progresses

The following article on the campaign to impoverish the federal government was written by Columnist Lowell Mellett and was printed in newspapers throughout the country. It is particularly timely in view of the slashes made in recent appropriations (see story on Page 9) when bills reached the floors of the House and Senate. The Committee to Limit the Federal Tax Power, another collection of tub-thumpers for great wealth spewed by Edward A. Rumely and the Committee for Constitutional Government, is working toward the same end as the American Taxpayers Association.

By LOWELL MELLETT

WHATEVER HAPPENS to the new tax bill just passed by the House of Representatives, boosting most everybody's taxes—whether the Senate will attempt to reduce the rates or to hike them further to provide the total revenue declared necessary by the President—it will be interesting to see what the effect will be on an extraordinary campaign now under way in behalf of the big taxpayers.

It has been under way for a dozen years, but conducted so quietly as to escape national notice.

This is the campaign for a constitutional amendment that would limit to 25% the amount of a man's income that could be taken by Federal income tax. The same limitation would be put on gifts and inheritances.

The amendment originated with an organization called the American Taxpayers' Association, Inc., a blood brother of Dr. Edward A. Rumely's Committee for Constitutional Government.

Dr. Rumely and his associates have been carrying on their campaign with all the zeal and much of the effectiveness of an army of termites. The work is done in State legislatures.

The legislatures are asked to adopt resolutions calling on Congress to call a constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing the amendment. When two-thirds, or 32, of the States have acted favorably, Congress, in their theory, would be required to follow suit.

This apparently is open to some argument, never having been tried before. At the rate the legislatures are being persuaded, the question may be put to the test within a year or two.

Four State legislatures took the desired action this year, Utah, the latest, very recently. That brings the total to 20, only 12 short of the needed number. In some other States the resolution is still pending after favorable action by one of the two houses.

The new Federal tax bill could give a new impetus to the movement, bring to its support persons who would be required for the first time to pay more than 25%. That would apply to a single person who now pays $2436 on a $10,000 income, but would pay $2741 under the bill passed by the House. It would not apply to the millions whose taxes also are being boosted, but who makes less than $10,000 a year.

The real beneficiaries of the proposed amendment, however, would not be people in the middle-income group, but those in the upper brackets.

If, for instance, you make $1 million a year, the House bill would take $900,000 of that. Or to put it another way, you would have only $100,000 left after paying your tax. The amendment, if adopted, would allow you to keep $750,000 of your hard-earned wages.

THE EFFECT of the amendment on the Government's revenue requirements obviously would be devastating. No studies have been made recently, but in 1944 the Treasury estimated that the 25% limitation, if in operation that year, would have reduced the national revenue by $6 billion.

Continued for a time, this would have smashed the Government's credit to smithereens and brought on a national catastrophe. That is, it would have unless other sources of revenue, disregarding the principle of ability to pay, could have been sufficiently exploited. Which means sales taxes, in various forms.

These things are so well understood in Congress that no such amendment could originate there, as Rumely's busy little band seems to have understood.

Some of the legislatures also have come to understand. Three that adopted the amendment later rescinded their action. But in the case of 20 the action still stands.

FEPC Urged As Weapon Against Freedom Foes

THE U. S. SENATE last week was called upon to enact civil rights legislation and to use it "as a weapon to turn against the enemies of the free world."

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) led a group of nine senators in introducing eight civil rights bills comprising a comprehensive legislative program for carrying out the recommendations of the President's Commission on Civil Rights and the Dept. of Justice.

The FEPC measures were introduced on June 25, the first anniversary of the Korean invasion and the 10th anniversary of the late President Roosevelt's executive order creating the first Fair Employment Practice Commission.

Humphrey declared it "altogether fitting and proper that on this day of commemoration, the U. S. Senate make itself again aware of the need to face up to its responsibilities," by enacting civil rights legislation.

While America is winning the global conflict with the forces of communism in military terms, he said, it is in danger of losing the political and ideological fight because of discriminatory policies at home.

"Soviet propagandists point daily to the discrepancies between the American theory of democracy and its practices at home," Humphrey declared. "The lack of equality of rights accorded to our Negro citizens has furnished the Soviet propaganda agents with valuable and effective items.

"Russian propaganda has done an all-out job of putting American democracy on the defensive. It seems to me a sad commentary that Americans have to be apologetic for such a weakness in our great democracy."

Another propaganda weapon used by the Soviets to their advantage, Humphrey said, is the contention that Negro soldiers are being used as "cannon fodder" in the Korean war.

He quoted from an article distributed in Czechoslovakia by the Communists which declared that "even on the battlefields of Korea, Negro soldiers feel that they belong to an oppressed and persecuted race."

The article stated further that "the black skins of the wretched victims who have been ordered into the Army serve as a camouflage for the colonial character of the Korean expedition."

Humphrey said that Soviet propaganda, by playing on the Negro question "in this utterly fallacious manner," is directed toward creating disunity in this country and towards breaking up the unity of the free world, which includes many countries with non-Caucasian populations.

HE CALLED discrimination in America "the skeleton in our closet" and "a stubborn infection which saps our strength." He added:

"People everywhere respect, honor and accept America's great leadership in the fields of science and technology. Here we are strong. We can and do face the world with pride and assurance.

"But democracy is more than an achievement, more than material progress, more than elections and government. Democracy is essentially a faith of freedom, of equality, of human dignity and brotherhood."

Humphrey called attention to the significant strides made in the elimination of segregation in the armed forces. He said the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services, established in 1948, recommended last year the complete integration of minority racial groups in the armed forces. Steps in that direction had already been taken, he added.

Humphrey declared that human relations are of the utmost importance to people in foreign lands seeking to establish their independence as free and equal nations. At no time has it been so imperative for America to set the example as a practicing democracy, he asserted.

"Organizations representing more than 65 million citizens have gone on record favoring legislation assuring full civil rights to minorities," he said.

"Churches, veterans groups, labor organizations and civic and community organizations all are in the midst of the effort.

"Today, as a result of Fair Employment Practices legislation passed in our cities and states, more than 50 million Americans live in communities which have proclaimed their opposition to discrimination in employment.

"It remains now for Congress to act in accordance with the vast majority of the people of America. It is only in Congress, particularly in the Senate, that the area of civil rights action is ignored."

The bills designed to carry out the civil rights program would:

- Prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion or national origin.
- Protect persons from lynching.
- Outlaw the poll tax as a condition of voting.
- Establish a Commission on Civil Rights in the executive branch of the government.
- Ban segregation and other forms of discrimination in interstate travel.
- Strengthen existing civil rights statutes.
- Protect the right of political participation by minority groups.
- Strengthen the criminal laws relating to peonage, slavery and involuntary servitude.

(CIO Pres. Philip Murray was one of 16 national labor, civic, veterans and religious organization leaders who last week urged President Truman to create a federal Fair Employment Commission by executive order.)

For Your Union Hall

This Ad Fooled You Once! Will the Same Trick Work Again?

Remember NAM-GOP Inflation! Don't Let It Happen Again!

POSTERS like the above, measuring 12 x 18 inches, are now being distributed by the Democratic National Committee to warn the public against "NAM-GOP inflation." Write the committee at 1200 18th St., N.W., Washington, D. C., for copies.

Labor Unions--Society's Bulwark

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

ASK THE average businessman if he thinks unions are too strong and ought to be curbed and he'll almost be sure to say yes.

In management circles, hope hangs on stubbornly that the day will come when the labor movement can be broken or at least seriously weakened.

Outstanding current example of this big business dream, of course, is the complicated, confusing and silly system set up by the Taft-Hartley law to drive labor nuts.

Yet this anti-labor dream would actually be a boss' nightmare if it came true, in the opinion of Dr. Frank Tannenbaum, author of the new book, "Philosophy of Labor."

Tannenbaum believes that if industrialists succeeded in destroying unions, they would cut their own throats. For trade unionism, he says, is the main bulwark that stands between the survival of the business enterprise system and some form of state ownership.

FURTHERMORE, the trade union is in fact "the conservative force of our time," according to his analysis. But there is nothing static about it, he says, and to look upon "this profound social drift" as "a problem to be solved" is nonsense. He regards unionism as a force "changing the structure of our economy and redistribution of power in our society"—and he sees it as decidedly for the good.

Something new and startling has been happening almost unnoticed, it has taken place so rapidly. That is, "We have become a nation of employes." Most of us work for others and "have become completely dependent upon wages," says Tannenbaum, continuing:

"Such dependence of the mass of the people upon others for all of their income is something new in the world. For our generation, the substance of life is in another man's hands.

"This dependence upon a job has been a cumulative process and has been growing with increasing speed and intensity."

It is against this background that Tannenbaum studies the role of the labor union. He comes up with some surprising and controversial conclusions.

TRADE UNIONISM is a social and ethical as well as an economic system and is a conservative force because its values are those of an older day, he says.

"It is an unwitting effort to return to values derived from the past: security, justice, freedom and faith," he goes on. "It is in those values, explicit and inherent, that man had found his human dignity."

Tannenbaum reminds those who complain some big national unions are centralized and dictatorial, that "they rose to power in the midst of armed conflict." He points to the findings of the La-Follette Committee that 200 agencies employing over 40,000 operatives engaged in labor spying for various firms at a cost of many millions of dollars.

Unlike most modern writers on labor, Tannenbaum does not give the New Deal and Wagner Act the credit—or blame—for increasin the power of American unions. This would have happened anyway, he believes.

"The New Deal merely hastened the process. It neither initiated it nor could have prevented it." The forces making for the rapid growth of unionism lie much deeper, he says.

"The trade union saved the worker his initiative and gave him an opportunity to act as a moral person," he says. "The 'society' that he needed had returned. He was a man once again, not just a cog in a machine, and not just a 'hand' to be discarded and abandoned."

INTELLECTUAL reformers, Utopians and revolutionaries, Tannenbaum thinks, failed to understand or accept trade unionism as sufficient, but have sought to use it for their own purposes. Indeed, he says, unionism has had few outside friends.

"Everyone seems to know where the trade union ought to go except the trade unionist," he says, and the unionist himself hasn't done much talking about it.

He has "had to live by the light that was in his mind and to resist attempts by outsiders either to disrupt or to capture his organization."

Tannenbaum believes that an outstanding evil of the day lies in the separation of both worker and owner, or stockholder, from moral identity with his source of income.

It is sometimes hard for people to see what is too close to them. Dr. Tannenbaum, as an earnest and intelligent observer studying the struggle between labor and industry from the sidelines, calls attention to important trends leading—nobody knows yet just where.

A Philosophy of Labor. 199 p. Alfred A. Knopf, New York. $2.75.

URW To Open Talks With Two Of 'Big 4'

The CIO Rubber Workers will open contract negotiations with two members of the industry's "Big Four" early this month.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said talks will begin in New York City on July 10 with the Goodrich Tire & Rubber Co., and in Cleveland the next day with the Firestone Tire Co.

Negotiations will be held under wage reopening provisions of contracts signed late in 1950.

ANG Pres. Martin:

'Newspaper Industry Is Committing Suicide'

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

THE NEWSPAPER industry of the country is committing suicide, Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newspaper Guild told the 18th annual ANG convention in Pittsburgh last week.

In a bitter attack on the policy of the nation's daily papers in curtailing operations "without warning and without rhyme or reason," Martin cited the recent suspension of the St. Louis Star-Times as an example of "wanton, barefaced and selfish slaughter of a free and independent newspaper" by management "in one long, murderous stroke."

He pointed out that as a result of the paper's closing, more than 500 workers, including many ANG members, were thrown out of their jobs. He condemned the action as "cold-blooded, cowardly murder."

"What have we come to when newspaper owners would rather kill great and influential papers than tackle the problem of rising costs with courage?" he asked.

Sam B. Eubanks, retiring ANG executive vice president, declared the publishers have allowed an "international trust" to seize control of newsprint. The trust dictates what publishers shall pay for newsprint "and in some cases determines who gets it," he charged.

THE STEEL industry, for example, could not operate without knowing how much iron ore it will get and how much it will cost, he pointed out.

"Newspaper publishers, however, don't know from one day to the next what price they're going to have to pay for their raw material," he said, "And we the people who work for them must suffer the consequences."

Eubanks outlined for the delegates plans for the establishment of a national labor daily newspaper designed to advance and interpret better the cause of labor.

IT MUST HAVE BEEN a good story Pres. Harry Martin (left) of the CIO Newspaper Guild told at the Guild convention in Pittsburgh to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, ANG Executive Vice Pres. Sam B. Eubanks (at the right of Murray), who was not a candidate for re-election, and ANG Secy.-Treas. Ralph Novak (right). Plans were laid for a labor daily.

The ANG executive vice president, who is retiring from office after 10 years' service to promote the undertaking, pictured the new paper as a medium to create new jobs and to pioneer the way to newspaper expansion in the country.

The project is an outgrowth of a highly successful experiment of Pittsburgh newspaper employes in publishing the Pittsburgh Daily Reporter during a 47-day lockout of the city's three dailies last fall.

The Pittsburgh Guild and 11 AFL unions in the newspaper mechanical departments formed a publishing corporation at that time which has never been dissolved. A surplus of $50,000 left in the treasury after the Reporter ceased publication is understood to be available for promotion of the new daily.

Eubanks will start a tour of the country in July to begin a subscription drive among trade unions to determine whether such a paper is needed and if support for it is to be forthcoming.

ANG Secy.-Treas. Ralph Novak called for an intensive organizing drive for new members in cities not covered by Guild contracts. He urged that an end be put to "free riders," those newspaper workers who get the benefits of ANG contract gains without being dues-paying members.

Declaring that the organizing program cannot be successful without help from local or neighboring Guildsmen, Novak called for the establishment of "functioning organizing committees" to assist national representatives.

"There are 5000 potential members who are outside the Taft-Hartley law, who are outside the National Labor Relations Board's delaying action, who are unaffected by the legal objections of publishers' attorneys," he said. "They are under our contracts, yet they are not helping to sustain our union."

Martin, who is serving the Economic Cooperation Administration as director of the Labor Information Division in Europe, said a new international federation of the world's free journalist unions is desperately needed to replace the Intl. Organization of Journalists. The IOJ was captured and destroyed by the Communists.

"Our friends among the European journalists unions, embittered by their unhappy experience in the IOJ, have been reluctant to chance a repetition and consequently have left themselves wide open for a Communist propaganda binge," he told the convention.

Only since the first of the year has genuine support for a new international union been mustered among the journalistic groups of Europe, he explained.

Referring to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions' World congress of white collar workers in Brussels in April, Martin declared he had "every confidence" that the new project will make a great contribution toward international understanding among white collar workers in every country outside the Iron Curtain.

Convention speakers included R. J. Thomas, assistant CIO director of organization and Tilford Dudley, assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

THE CONVENTION went on record as favoring establishment of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission by executive order; called for support of Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor; and endorsed the work of CIO, AFL and the railroad brotherhoods in the United Labor Policy Committee.

Delegates also passed a resolution urging the federal government to lend money at low interest to U. S. manufacturers interest to U. S. manufacturers interprovide domestic newsprint at reasonable prices.

Communications Workers Win Pay Boosts For 20,000

THE CIO Communications Workers last week signed a contract with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. that gave a 10% wage increase and other benefits to 20,000 workers.

The agreement covers long-lines employes in 42 states and the District of Columbia, and is the ninth signed by CWA with Bell System companies since June 2. Together the nine contracts cover 151,914 employes.

The settlement follows the 10% wage increase pattern established in earlier agreements. However, a portion of it—1.6%—is subject to Wage Stabilization Board approval.

Basic wage increases range from a low of $3 weekly for starting rates in some smaller towns to a high of $9 a week in larger cities. AT&T employes in 19 communities across the country were reclassified upward by an additional $1 to $3 weekly.

In Maryland, employes of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. voted to strike unless the company moves on the union's wage proposal. CWA has asked a 10% increase and contends that the company offer is less than that amount.

Northwestern Bell recently seized the opportunity afforded by the intervention during negotiations of the AFL Electrical Workers to give a unilateral $3 to $6 weekly increase, which CWA charges is considerably below the 10% pattern established by other Bell companies.

CWA spokesmen pointed out that the long-lines contract covers several hundred workers in Northwestern Bell territory. Their basic increases range up to $8 weekly,

Meanwhile, the strike of Southern California CWA members against the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. continued,

The company has agreed to put a 10% wage increase into effect for its 20,000 workers, but refused to agree to changes in working conditions proposed by the union.

Murray: Inflation Is '5th Column'

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, speaking at the Newspaper Guild convention, unleashed a blistering attack on "selfish interests" which, he said, "have been victimizing the American consumer" during the national emergency.

He accused big business of "common everyday theft" in what he termed extortion of exorbitant profits taken from the pockets of wage earners.

The Defense Production Act must be strengthened to provide enforced price controls "with no appeasement to any specific selfish group," he declared.

Calling for a fight against totalitarianism at home as well as abroad, Murray said inflation is just as much a threat to the nation as the aggression of the Communists in Korea.

"Inflation has cost American consumers more than $17 billion since the start of the Korean war," he declared. "It is the fifth column in this country and the most dangerous enemy we have at home.

"Manufacturers have been charging fantastic prices for the articles they manufacture and the consumer has been the victim of their selfishness.

"No American citizen disputes the right of an industry to earn a reasonable return on investment. But no industry should attempt to exploit the people in order to pile up its tremendous profits."

He called the Defense Production Act a "hypocritical piece of legislation" even when it was first passed and said he predicted at the time it would be unworkable because it would spread national discontent.

The record, he said, has borne him out. He appealed to the American people to "rise and protest" against continuation of the Act in its present form.

ON THE ISSUE of communism, Murray said the Guild had done a "tremendous job" in ridding the union of left-wing leaders and had set an example which other CIO unions followed.

"Your union took the initiative against the Communists who had infiltrated with the idea of taking over the Newspaper Guild for their own use," he declared.

"You fought them successfully in your own way and today the Guild can be proud of the part you took in the battle against these disrupters."

Guild collective bargaining contracts have made newspaper writing a career, he said.

$600,000 Needed For Labor Daily

It has been estimated that approximately 30,000 annual subscription at $20 a year will be required to meet operating expenses of the proposed national labor daily newspaper.

This will permit the paper to sustain itself without either advertising revenue or a subsidy.

ROLE OF CIO in international affairs has resulted in representation at many world meetings in Europe this summer. Above, labor spokesmen get together at conference of United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris. Left to right, seated, are Hans Gottfurcht, Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions' chief of education service; Harry Nutt, general secretary of the United Kingdom Workers' Educational Association and secretary of the Intl. Federation of Workers Educational Associations, and Frank L. Fernbach, associate director of CIO Dept. of Education and Research; standing, Pres. John E. Eklund of AFL Teachers Union. UNESCO sponsors cultural exchanges.

ANOTHER meeting that drew a CIO delegation was that of the Intl. Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland. Seen during a recess are (left to right) U. S. Assistant Secy. of Labor Philip Kaiser (partly shown); Rudolph Faupl of AFL Machinists; Boyd Wilson, field representative of CIO Steelworkers; John T. O'Brien of AFL Teamsters, and Michael Ross, director of the CIO Intl. Affairs Dept.

UNESCO'S Progress Is Global

THE United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization is operating in high gear, its director-general, Jaimes Torres Bode, reported to its convention at Paris, France.

The UN affiliate has a mission of spreading understanding and cultural exchanges among nations.

During the past year, Bode announced, UNESCO has accomplished:

- The award of 69 international fellowships for students and experts.
- Purchase of books worth $1.2 million, through UNESCO book coupons, for distribution in countries where currency problems prevent import of sufficient numbers of textbooks and other specialized volumes.
- Signing by 22 countries of an agreement permitting free circulation of educational material.
- Convening of four seminars on adult education.
- Progress toward a Universal Copyright Convention.
- Sending of educational missions to Bolivia, Burma and India.
- Establishment of a Fundamental Education Center at Patzcuaro, Mexico.

The Mexican Center was hailed both by Torres Bode and Howard H. Sargeant, head of the U. S. delegation and deputy Assistant Secretary of State of Public Affairs. Sargeant was elected conference president.

"On the day when UNESCO can reckon not a single center but 100 to 200 centers like Patzcuaro," Torres Bode said, "men will have come to recognize in the Blue flag of the United Nations, the guardian symbol of justice and progress."

The conference admitted Japan, Laos, Viet Nam and Western Germany to UNESCO membership.

Frank L. Fernbach of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research is one of the advisers to the U. S. delegation.

Finns Put First Things First; They Withdraw From WFTU

THE TRADE unions of Finland opened their national convention in Helsinki last week with the first item on the program their withdrawal from the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

Formal withdrawal would only formalize a situation that has existed since 1949. At that time the Social Democrats, who control the Finnish unions, waxed indignant when WFTU officials went to Finland and joined in a fight between the Labor government and the Communists over the large strikes shaking the country.

The Finns immediately stopped paying dues to the WFTU, and have paid none since.

Social Democrat delegates to the convention outnumber their combined opponents by 152 to 65.

WFTU big shots from all over Europe were on hand for the convention, along with a generous representation of observers from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions headed by General Secretary J. M. Oldenbroek. Several Russian union leaders also were in Helsinki.

Franco Takes Revenge For Strike Wave

THE RECENT strikes in several provinces of Spain are serving as a pretex for Dictator Franco to repress all who are considered enemies of his dictatorial Falangist regime, according to word received from the Union General de Trabajadores de Espana in exile.

Pascual Tomas, exiled Spanish labor leader now in France, has informed the CIO that the method being used by Franco in taking vengeance upon the workers consists of banishing them to other provinces.

Tomas reported that on June 11 such deportations occurred at Bilbao, Baracaldo, Portugalete, Ermua and Durango.

Communists Teach Lesson In Pettiness

Communist resentment at the sturdy independence of their next-door neighbors, the Finns, manifests itself in petty fashion on occasion.

The Workers Intl. Athletic Games are being held in connection with the Finnish national trade union convention in Helsinki. When it became apparent nothing would stop the withdrawal of the Finnish workers from the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions, the Iron Curtain countries suddenly boycotted the sports contests.

Give A Buck To PAC

CIO Aide Hits Effort To Weaken ILO Plan

THE 34TH international conference of the Intl. Labor Organization was heading toward a close last week with delegates representing 64 nations preparing to vote on the proposals they had been discussing for the previous three weeks.

A host of hot issues faced the assemblage. They ranged from minimum wages for farm workers to equal pay for equal work.

An employer attack on a proposed ILO convention covering equal pay for equal work was hit hard by Boyd Wilson, of the CIO Steelworkers, a member of the Equal Remuneration Committee. A Dutch employer had asked that it be watered down by an exemption for women workers "when statistics show they produce less work."

"People can't be reduced to charts and graphs," Wilson exploded. "We are dealing with people, not machines. This suggestion is making a guinea pig out of a basic principle which, it has been proved time and again, will work.

International communism lost its last place on the ILO governing body June 26 when Poland, which had been represented on the body, was replaced by Portugal. The change was voted by government members. It led to speculation as to future ILO activities by other Iron Curtain countries,

Bulgaria tried to vote after a bitterly condemnatory speech against Japan. William Rappard, who was presiding, ruled the nation could not cast a ballot because her dues haven't been paid for two years.

In addition to Wilson, CIO advisers to the American delegates are Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee and president of the Clothing Workers; Martin Kyne, executive vice president of the Retail & Wholesale Workers, and Michael Ross, director of the CIO Intl. Affairs Dept.

Fette Elected By Reich Labor

CHRISTIAN FETTE was elected president of the increasingly powerful German Federation of Labor at its recent convention at Essen, in the British occupation zone.

He succeeds Hans Boeckler, who died in February after leading the successful fight for a labor voice in the direction of the coal, iron and steel industries.

Delegates representing 5,641,000 members attended the convention —the first large-scale congress of free labor in Germany since Hitler assumed power in 1933.

They showed their opposition to communism by voting down, 244 to 7, a Red move to debate armament.

"We are against war and strongly favor peace," George Reuter, deputy chairman of the federation, told the Communists. "But delegates of a power that is armed to the teeth cannot demand that we make ourselves defenseless."

At the same time the delegates warned the government that the unions will "act" unless it does something to curb nazism.

Dollar Drive Of PAC Aided By Inflation

CONGRESSIONAL fiddling while inflation destroys the nation's economic house is spurring political activity all over the country, dollar drive collectors for the CIO Political Action Committee report.

More than ever before, they say, union members are becoming aware of the importance of political activity and recognizing that their voluntary contribution of a buck to PAC is still their best investment.

At the same time, according to PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, there is increasing activity along the all-important line of building block and precinct organizations and registering union members as voters.

"Inflation," said Kroll, "has already cost each union member over $110. We could have saved that in 1950 had we done a better job in the congressional elections of electing to Congress more people aware of their responsibility to their constituents."

"There are indications we will have the funds and the organization to do that better job in 1952."

The key to successful voluntary dollar drives, it was reported, is individual contact between the collector and the donor.

UNIONS are discovering that "dollars don't walk in" but that most union members are willing and anxious to help political action if contacted in person. Shop stewards form the backbone of the voluntary dollar drive organization.

PAC Comptroller George Rettinger reports more PAC dollar activity than ever before and credits the fact to inflation and the realization that the kind of Congress the country has determined the kind of anti-inflation action that will be taken.

"Practically every union is today doing a better job than it ever has before," Rettinger said. "If they keep it up we should be able to make labor's political voice even more powerful."

PLANS FOR ACTION to stop inflation were laid by these Milwaukee CIO local union presidents at a recent conference—and included a lot of letters they and their wives wrote as soon as they returned home. Nat Goldfinger, associate director of the CIO Research & Education Dept., was the principal speaker. CIO action to halt inflation continues at local levels.

Carey Urges More Public Housing

SECY.-TREAS. James B. Carey of the CIO last week called for the construction of at least 75,000 public housing units this year and the reinstatement of stricter rent controls in the Defense Production Act.

"By cutting back on our already meager slum clearance program," Carey told the National Housing Conference, in Washington, "we strike at the very ideals of better democratic living which must activate our whole military program."

The House cut the public housing program to 5000 units, but the Senate voted to restore the figure to 50,000 units.

Carey, who is also president of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, put the CIO on record as "bitterly and vehemently" condemning the "butchering job" which the Senate Banking and Currency Committee did on the control sections of the DPA.

The 350 delegates heard Carey put the blame for the defeat of essential legislation on the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

"The program of the NAM and the Chamber of Commerce," Carey declared, "as we see it expressed before congressional committees, in its lobbying, in its propaganda, can have no other result—if it should be successful—than in the undermining of our economy."

Delegates from cities and states throughout the nation gave "battle reports" in the fight by local communities for slum clearance and low rental housing. Everywhere local housing authority leaders and civic leaders found an almost identical pattern of growing support for slum clearance and low-rent housing led and encouraged by labor.

Other speakers included:

- Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), who warned public housing authorities that high costs would kill the program.
- Sen. Taft (R. O.), who thought that there was justification for more than 50,000 public housing units.

In a letter to the conference, President Truman attacked the "selfish interests" who "have been urging action in the name of defense that would in effect destroy the public housing program."

He said that he "was very glad that the Senate, on both sides of the aisle, could not be misled" by the interests' campaign of misrepresentation and "has strongly backed a substantial public housing program that is so clearly within our present means to perform even though it is less than we should do."

THE PRESIDENT said that he was counting on the conference's membership to help him put across not only the public housing program, but to assist him "on the whole broad front of defending our country, maintaining a sound economy, and assuring fair play under our democracy."

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers is a vice president of the conference.

Directors elected or retained include John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, Irving Rosenberg of the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union and Newark Housing Authority commissioner; Edward Leonard of the CIO Steelworkers, chairman of the Allegheny County (Pa.) Housing Authority, and Robert Gaitens, Steelworkers' staff representative.

Kamp Guilty In Defiance Of Congress

JOSEPH P. Kamp, the surly fuehrer of the Constitutional Educational League, last week won the unenviable distinction of being the first person ever to be convicted twice for contempt of Congress.

A jury in U. S. Court in Washington found him guilty, after but 15 minutes' deliberation, of wilful defiance last year of the House Lobby Investigating Committee headed by the late Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.).

Specifically, it found he refused to disclose to the committee on June 6, 1950, the names of large contributors who helped his organization carry a goodly share of the anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal, neo-fascist and anti-Semitic propaganda being dumped on Americans by reactionary spokesmen for great wealth.

A few days later, he began serving a four-month term in the District of Columbia jail on another contempt of Congress conviction. tion. This one grew out of his refusal to answer similar questions put to him by House lobby investigators in 1947.

He fought the conviction all the way through the U. S. Supreme Court before it stuck and he served his term.

KAMP is subject to a maximum of one year in jail and a $1000 fine on the new conviction. He continued at liberty in bail and said he will appeal.

The conviction followed a trial of less than four days that included a few hectic moments.

On June 27, Judge Burnita Shelton Matthews warned Benedict F. Fitzgerald, Jr., a government witness who had served as counsel to the Buchanan committee, and John J. Wilson, Kamp's attorney, to keep their politics out of the trial. The two had engaged in a bitter wrangle when Fitzgerald testified that Rep. Brown (R. O.), a committee member, had "played politics" with the investigation and was a "self-appointed counsel" for Kamp.

Wilson accused him of using the trial as a sounding board for his political views before the judge quieted them.

Lausche Does About-Face; Vetoes Bill To Aid Disabled

GOV. LAUSCHE (D.) of Ohio, who has blown hot and blown cold before, did it again less than 24 hours before the Ohio Legislature shut up shop and went home.

He vetoed what had been called the "most human bill of the session," a measure he had supported, and which labor and industry, Democrats and Republicans had backed.

It would have given 3800 permanently and totally disabled industrial accident victims $25 a week to live on instead of amounts as low as the $8 and $9 a week they have been receiving—for as long as 28 years — from workmen's compensation.

Lausche's excuse was the need of balancing the budget. The bill would have cost the Ohio treasury about $3 million. Besides, he said, its enactment would have opened the door to other pensioners.

And the money should have come from the workmen's compensation fund rather than the general fund, he claimed, conveniently ignoring the fact that such action would have violated the Ohio Constitution.

The people who would have benefited from such a law are those who have lost both arms, or both legs, or both eyes in industrial accidents, or who suffered broken backs. Many of them have been confined for years.

The plight of the older cases among them is particularly touching, as they have not received any of the increases in workmen's compensation since they were injured.

The Republican-controlled Legislature, eager to break away for home, reacted characteristically. The GOP decided to make political capital of the veto, and complete with all arms, legs, eyes and strong backs, went home without over-riding the veto.

Orchid Awarded ACW Housing

High praise was bestowed at the National Housing Conference at Washington on the New York City cooperative housing developments of the CIO Clothing Workers.

S. F. Boden, executive director of the United Housing Foundation, Inc., said that, "with one outstanding exception we must look to the European democracies to discover what cooperative housing can mean to the social and economic life of the nation. The only exception is the three projects sponsored by the Clothing Workers."

Rumanian Union Committee Jailed; Tried To Aid Workers

MEMBERS OF Rumania's Danube-Black Sea Canal Trade Union Committee have been fired from their positions and dumped into jail—for trying to improve the inhuman working conditions of the thousands employed in digging the huge ditch.

It took place only little more than a week after Rumania's Communist-controlled newspapers were filled with praise for the progress of work on the canal.

It served as a forceful reminder to all union leaders behind the Iron Curtain that their function is not to improve the lot of their members, but to act as slave drivers.

Coming as it did in the wake of the press campaign lauding of the canal project, it also showed how easily the Communists can label a thing a success or a failure—and then switch labels.

The committee was charged with everything from infringing on the principles of "democracy" to turning the union's premises into a saloon and pleasure resort, according to the New York Times of June 24.

The canal is intended to cut the water distance between Cernavoda, on the Danube, and the Black Sea by 75%. In addition, it will speed the industrialization of Dobruja and open to irrigation and agriculture thousands of barren acres.

Most of those digging it are reported to be slave laborers from Hungary and other Iron Curtain countries, and members of the vanished Rumanian middle class.

'Econo-Misers' In Congress Make With Meat-Ax

DESPITE THE fact that all government agencies are girding themselves to handle the record-breaking workloads caused by the national defense program, Congress seems determined to cripple their efficiency.

Using "economy" as a smokescreen, a coalition of Republican-Dixiecrat reactionaries is re-enacting the same kind of anti-labor, anti-social legislation that typied the ill-famed 80th Congress of 1947-48.

The pattern was established in the case of the first of the current appropriations bills to reach a vote, that providing funds for the Dept. of Labor, Federal Security Agency and related bureaus.

Through floor maneuvers in both House and Senate, anti-labor "hatchet men" combined to push through amendments severely crippling many vital public welfare services.

Chief pressure groups behind such wasteful "economies" are the National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the Committee for Constitutional Government. All have urged the meat-ax technique of making reductions in government expenses without proper consideration of the value os services rendered.

THE "ECONOMY" block is now applying the same method to all other bills appropriating funds to run government agencies in the critical year ahead.

Most damage is being done by amendments that aim at reducing the number of employes in each federal agency. Acting first, the House adopted a rider sponsored by Rep. Jensen (R. Ia.) that would gradually reduce jobs by 20% by allowing agencies to fill only one of every four jobs that become vacant.

After six days of bitter wrangling, the Senate went further and adopted an amendment proposed by Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.) that cuts payroll funds by 10%. Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) joined in leading the "economy" drive.

NEARLY SIX MILLION AGED now getting checks each month through the Social Security Act provisions for public assistance, old-age and survivors insurance will feel the Congress "economy" block's cut in funds for Labor-FSA personnel. Efficient service may be impossible with a 10% cut in funds for processing their claims.

The "economies" voted by the Senate in the Labor-FSA appropriations mean inevitable cuts in the services of agencies dealing with child health and welfare, vocational rehabilitation, general health activities, social security, industrial safety, conciliation and mediation, and labor and public welfare in general.

In one of the bitterest debates on record over such relatively small sums of money, opponents of the cuts—led by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) and Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.)—accused the economy group of being "heartless" and of measuring a few dollars against many lives.

Lehman sought to have the Senate exempt several federal health agencies from Ferguson's proposal.

He pointed out that the relatively small amount of money ($705,563) that the Senate was denying would reduce important research in cancer, heart disease, mental health, drug addiction and tooth decay, and that no one could tell how many lives would be lost because of such false economy.

Bluntly referring to Ferguson as a "hatchet man" and to Douglas as "a great liberal on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, but a great conservative on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays," Neely said the Senate's action in cutting the staffs of the health agencies will be "disastrous to the afflicted, the agonized and the dying."

Despite their valiant battle, 36 Republicans joined 22 Democrats in pushing through Ferguson's rider by a vote of 58 to 24. Seventeen Democratic supporters were from the South.

House and Senate conferees are now working out the final version, but heavy personnel cuts are certain.

Besides the Dept. of Labor and FSA, the National Labor Relations Board, Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and Railroad Retirement and National Mediation Board will be affected by the cuts in this bill.

If the House concurs with the Ferguson amendment, it will mean:

- A reduction in the staffs of the Labor-FSA agencies by an estimated 4700 employes.
- Not only the forced abandonment of certain emergency services planned, but the discontinuance also of some of regular, peacetime activities.

ALTHOUGH industrial harmony is essential to full defense production, the Congressional "economies" will make huge cuts in agencies which handle labor disputes.

It is estimated that the number of employes cut in these establishments will be as follows: National Labor Relations Board 150, National Mediation Board 25, and Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service 70.

At the same time, Congress would also contribute directly to the causes of industrial disputes by critically reducing the staff available for enforcement of federal labor laws, such as the Fair Labor Standards Act, Davis-Bacon Prevailing Wage Law, etc.

The Solicitor's Office in the Dept. of Labor, which carries on this work, took a cut of $100,000 in the House and $75,000 more in the Senate.

The Bureau of Labor Standards, which through its inspection programs insures minimum standards of safe working conditions, also was cut by 25 jobs.

Veterans, including those now fighting in Korea, also will feel the result of the "economy" axe.

The House hacked $839,000 also from the Veterans' Employment Service, which devotes special attention to getting jobs for GI's. The cut would mean a loss of about 144 jobs and a great reduction in service. The Senate put most of this back, however, after the big veterans' groups put on the heat.

NEVERTHELESS, the Ferguson rider also would cut the Dept. of Labor unit on veterans' reemployment rights.

If Congress showed no concern for the sick or wounded veterans, it was at least consistent in also not sparing either the aged or the young.

It hacked an estimated 1500 jobs from the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, making the efficient processing of claims from the aged, widows and orphans almost impossible. The Railroad Retirement Board was also hit in similar fashion, taking a reduction of 90 jobs.

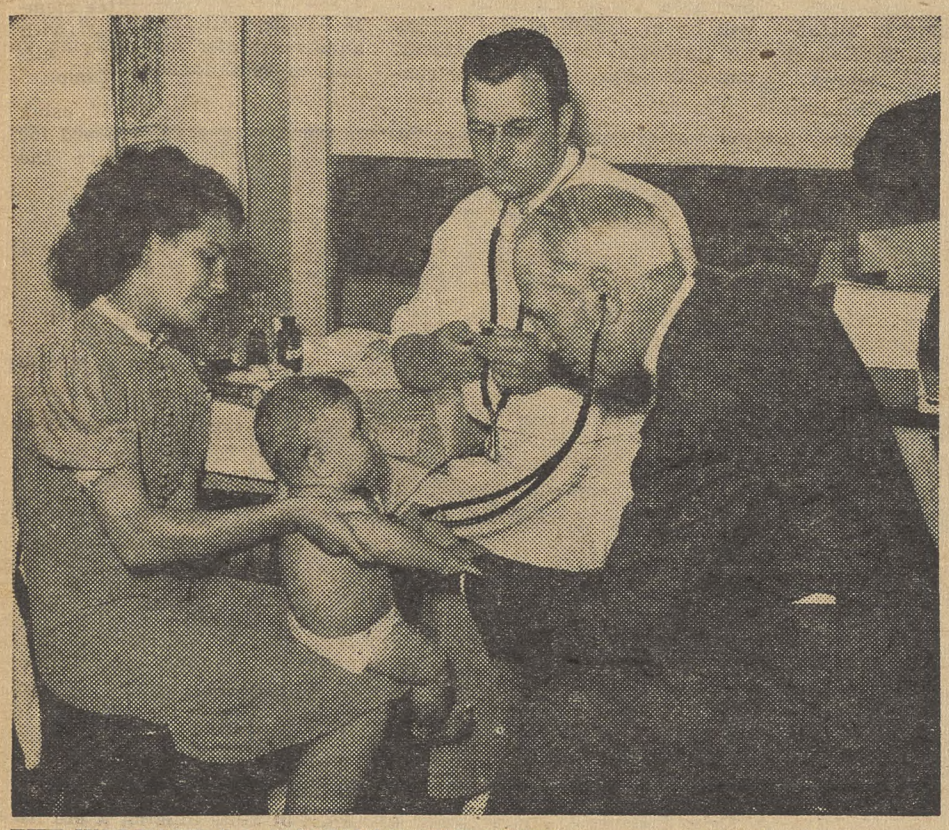
Child Welfare services were also seriously curtailed. The Children's Bureau lost 35 positions and the Office of Education 60.

The curtailment of services of any agency, however, is not reflected fully in the total number of jobs lost in that agency alone.

In the case of child welfare services, for example, the Secretary of Labor is vested by law with responsibility for promoting improved working standards for children. His office was cut 33%, with the loss of about 100 jobs.

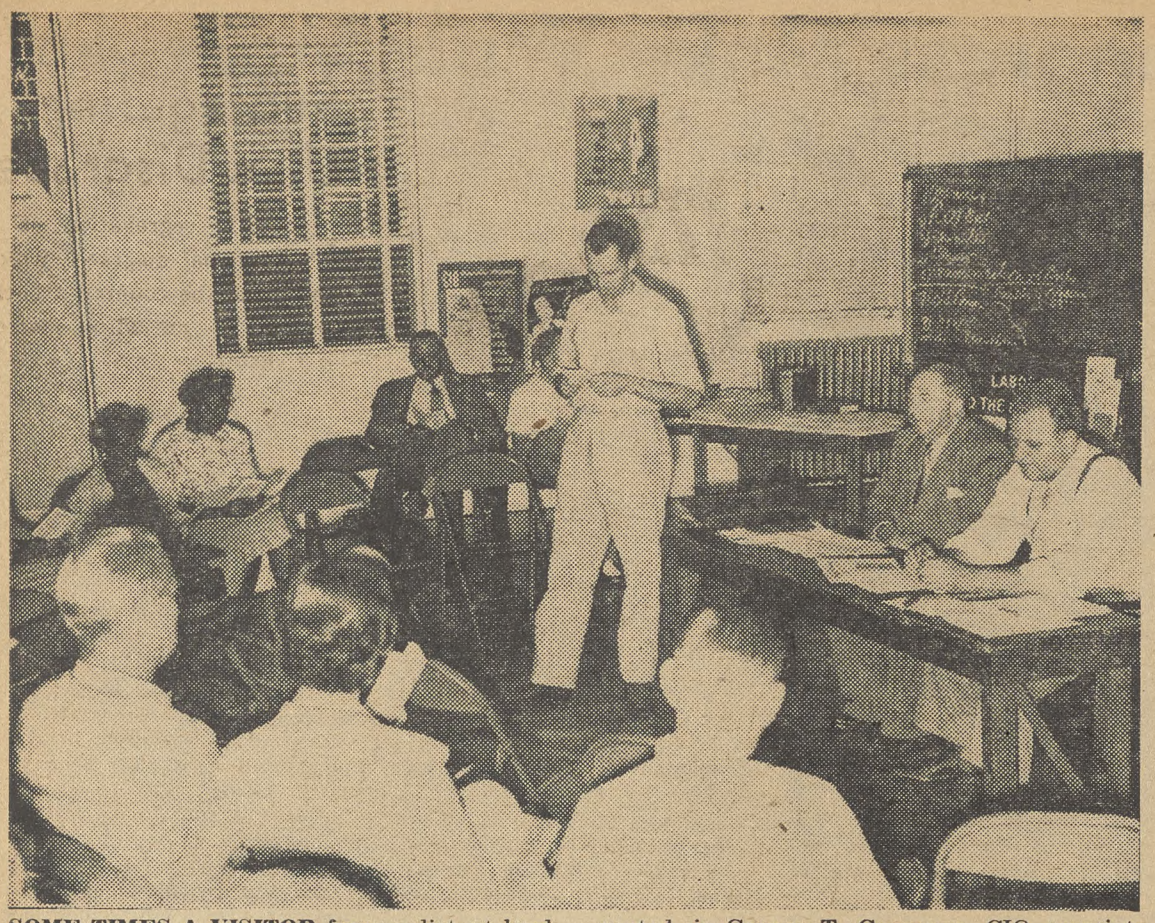
In addition, the lax enforcement of existing laws that will result from the reduction in the department's legal staff makes the work of the Children's Bureau all the more important.

Yet it will have a smaller staff with which to do a much bigger job.



THE WELFARE OF AMERICAN CHILDREN was scorned by the Senate when it upheld the Ferguson Amendment to the Labor-FSA Appropriations Bill curtailing funds for many services to young children. This child health clinic is administered by funds made available through the Children's Bureau.

MAXIMUM PRODUCTION for defense and civilian needs will be hampered severely by the cut in Labor-FSA funds voted by the Senate. The best possible use of available manpower depends upon counseling and placement advice such as that of the U. S. Employment Service pictured here.



SOME TIMES A VISITOR from a distant land pays a visit to a CIO school. Seated second from the right is John F. Kenny, Australian trade union leader and member of the Australian Parliament. At the extreme right, seated, is George T. Guernsey, CIO associate director of education. Philip Weightman of PAC staff is in the center background, and Stuart Brock of the CIO education staff is standing in the center.

TYPICAL of the informality at CIO summer schools is this scene at the Maryland-Virginia School showing the students seated on the steps at the Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md., listening to a lecture. Three CIO schools have been held and three are scheduled for July and August.

The Students Make Each CIO School Different

THE CIO Summer School season is well on its way. Three schools have been held. Three more will be held during July and August. Others are planned later.

Each school has an atmosphere all its own—an atmosphere that sends the students away boosting CIO schools. Which is natural, for the students help to create the atmosphere they enjoy.

The Maryland-Virginia School is an example. Wearing identifying labels, the entire student body one night drove from the school which was held at the Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md., to Baltimore to attend the founding meeting of the Maryland United Labor Policy Committee.

One of the students helped the others to understand the significance of the meeting. He was Joseph Brennan, a member of Local 33, Shipbuilding Workers, Baltimore, who explained that as a matter of fact labor has been working together in Maryland for over a year through the United Labor Political Action Committee.

ABOUT HALF of the students were Negro members of the CIO. After the entire group had been studying and playing together for five days as a harmonious team, it was one of the Negro students, James E. Lindsey —also a member of Local 33 of the Shipbuilding Union, who uniquely summed it up in a piece he did for the school's paper.

"It's here that I have met and here I have won, not a friend, but many friends."

In addition to the Shipbuilding Workers, five other unions were represented at the school. They were the auto, textile, clothing and telephone unions and the Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

Murray On Board Of Red Cross

The board of governors of the American Red Cross has elected CIO Pres. Philip Murray a governor at large for a term expiring in 1954, according to an announcement by Pres. E. Roland Harriman.

Schools also have been held for the Iowa-Nebraska area at Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, and for the South at Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn.

Schools scheduled for July and August are:

Missouri School, YWCA, near Kimmswick, Mo., July 22-28; California School at Camp Asilomar, Pacific Grove, Cal., Aug. 12-18; Rocky Mountain School at Estes Park, Colo.; Association Camp, Aug. 26-Sept. 1.

For the first time the National CIO will conduct the school in cooperation with the California CIO Council the unions and Univ. of Southern California. Each union will be in charge of day classes for its members, but recreational and evening programs will be conducted by the CIO Education and Research Dept.

Speakers scheduled for the evening programs include Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers, and Dr. Rammanohar Lohia, leader of the Indian Democratic Socialist Party, who will be in this country under the auspices of the Foundation for World Government.

Applications should be sent to George T. Guernsey, CIO Associate Director of Education, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Other schools planned later are: Oklahoma—Oklahoma Univ., Sept. 9; Pennsylvania — Brydenwood YWCA Camp, Wernersville, Sept. 16; Texas—Palestine, date to be announced later, and Alabama, details to be announced later.

THAT THERE ARE GOOD TIMES at the CIO schools is obvious. Here Joe Brennan (left) and James Lindsey are enjoying a light moment during the course. Both are members of Local 33, Shipbuilding Workers, Baltimore, Md., and attended the Virginia-Maryland School.

STUDENTS at the CIO Missouri School study outdoors. The fifth annual Missouri School, which will be held at the YWCA Camp, near Kimmswick, Mo., will offer a wide range of subjects including mobilization problems, international affairs, building unions, labor history, educational committees, political action training, public speaking, etc. This photo was taken during last year's session of the school. Looks nice and cool.

Wash. Council Backs Fight For Strong DPA

THE Washington State CIO Council, in its first convention since throwing off the Communist yoke 14 months ago, voted solid support for the National CIO in the fight for an effective Defense Production Act.

The convention was held in Seattle.

The 125 delegates called for repeal of the present DPA and for enactment of a legislative program to include:

1. A roll back of prices to pre-Korean War levels.

2. Prohibition of speculation in basic commodities.

3. The right of labor to organize, to obtain wage increases and to improve working conditions.

4. Guaranteed cost of production prices to working farmers, with subsidies if necessary.

The convention showed how it stood on the Korean situation when it voted down a resolution criticizing the United States for supporting all nations which oppose Soviet Russia. Other resolutions urged sweeping liberalization of federal veterans' programs and tightening of the State's safety laws.

Ernest Preston, Seattle Steelworker, was elected president, defeating Arvid Swenson, Seattle, a member of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee. Vice Pres. George Bradshaw, Puyallup, Brewery Worker, and Secy.-Treas. Harold Slater of Raymond, Woodworkers, were re-elected without opposition.

Named to the executive board were Marjorie Strand, Seattle; Ed Heber, Bellingham; Julius Wickre, Hoquiam; Jim Yamouchi, Pasco; James Thompson, Spokane, and R. J. Caroni, Tacoma.

U. S. Policy On Leave Lagging

PRIVATE employers' leave policy is more liberal than that of the U. S. government, Richard Shoemaker, legislative representative of the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee, told the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee last week.

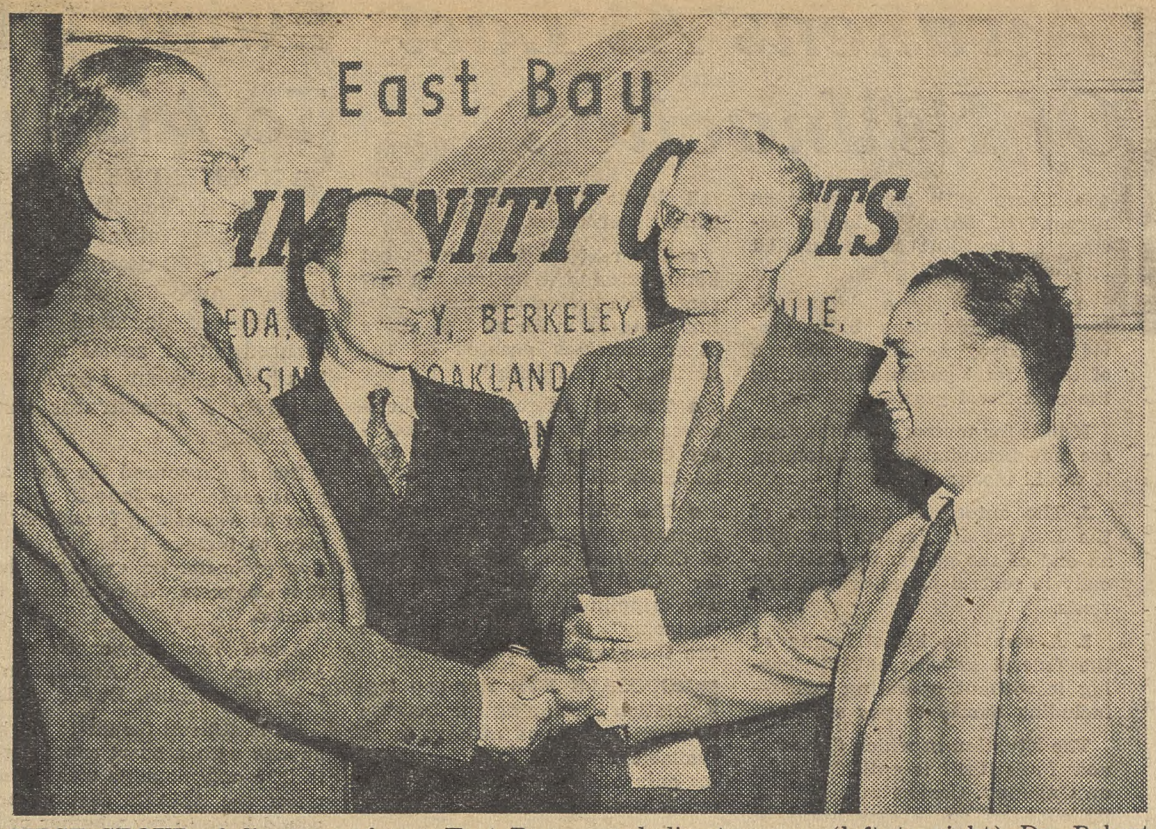
Shoemaker, who argued for more annual leave instead of proposed reductions, said:

"Excused absences in private industry are not charged against vacation time. In Federal service they are."

Conroy To Head CCL Delegates To ICFTU

Four delegates will represent the 360,000 members of the Canadian Congress of Labour at the Milan World Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

They are headed by Secy.-Treas. Pat Conroy, a member of the ICFTU executive. The others are Fred Dowling, Canadian director of the CIO Packinghouse Workers; James E. McGuire, of the railroad unions, and Silby Barrett, Canadian director of the Mine Workers' Dist. 50. CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with the CCL.



FIRST GROUP of directors of new East Bay Federation of Community Chests, just organized at Berkeley, Cal., includes Pres. Romildo Caruso (right) of Local 76, CIO Auto Workers. Shown with him at reception to new officers and directors are (left to right) Dr. Robert Gordon Sproul, president of Univ. of California and also of the federation; Secy.-Treas. S. M. Pratt of the Greater Alameda County CIO Council and Norris Nash, campaign chairman.

Memo To NLRB: Clean Of WHAT?

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board has taken the leadership in a "Keep-the-Plant-Clean" campaign.

There may be plenty of steel shavings on the plant floor for the janitors to worry about but no longer will they have to bother with those filthy pieces of union literature.

The NLRB's unanimous decision on the subject came in a case involving the Portland Cement Co., Monolith, Cal., the AFL Cement Workers and an unaffiliated union.

"An employer," the board ruled, "can lawfully prevent the distribution of literature in the plant proper, even during the employes' non-working time, in the interest of keeping the plant clean and orderly, at least where it is not evident that such activity cannot really be conducted somewhere off the employer's premises."

The trial examiner in the case was not such an eager-beaver clean-upper as the NLRB members. He had held that the company illegally interfered with the employes' right to organize when it removed an election campaign bulletin posted in the plant and prohibited the distribution of union literature in the factory.

The NLRB, in over-ruling him, did not explain how union notices on bulletin boards cluttered up the plant.

Union organizer pointed out that bulletin boards served a very useful purpose of keeping members informed of union activities. Their use is the first step in breaking down employes' fear of company reprisals if they join the union.

Six GOP Congressmen Don't Like Foreigners

Congress has adopted a resolution expressing friendship for all the peoples of the world, including the Russians. The Soviet government was asked to lift the Iron Curtain.

The Senate was the first to pass the resolution. The House last week voted approval, 349-6. The dissenters, all Republicans, were: Reps. Hoffman (Mich.), Werdel (Cal.), Reed (N. Y.), Smith (Kans.), Schwabe (Okla.) and Wood (Idaho).

Organizationally Speaking

This column, during Mr. Haywood's absence, is being prepared by his staff.

ADOLPH GERMER, director of organization for the Intl. Woodworkers, reports a representation victory at the Abrigonie Lumber Co., Longview, Wash., where 25 of 40 eligible voters chose the CIO against 7 for no union.

Allan Haywood

Local 35, United Paperworkers, CIO, won a recent representation election at the Standard Index Card Co., Philadelphia. The vote was 13 for UPA and 4 against. Joe King is to be congratulated for doing a fine job.

Reg. Dir. George De Nucci writes in that the Steelworkers emerged victorious in two representation elections in Ohio. At the Aluminum Wall Co., in Grademhutten, with Rep. George Turner handling the election, the Steelworkers tallied 79 votes against 7. In Coshocton, at the General Electric Co., the Steelworkers defeated two AFL unions — the Chemical Workers and the Machinists. The election showed the CIO with more than a 2 to 1 victory over its combined opposition. The results: Steelworkers 339, AFL Chemical workers 73, AFL Machinists 90. Staff Rep. George Turner was in charge.

The CIO Rubber Workers report an overwhelming victory at the Columbus Plastic Co., Columbus, O. With Staff Rep. Harley Brown in charge, the Rubber Workers won by more than 2 to 1, with 166 votes for CIO, 57 for an independent union and 24 for no union.

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports two union shop wins for the Auto Workers. Both victories were unanimous and were chalked up by Local 710. In Kansas City, Mo., at the Kansas City Poster Co., the workers voted 17-0 in favor of the union shop. At the Minneapolis Moline Co., in Kansas City, Kan., the results were 14-0 for a union shop. Leland Cox, president of Local 710, is to be congratulated.

REG. DIR. W. B. TAYLOR reports a smashing victory for the CIO Textile Workers in Louisville, Ky. At the Ohio Falls Dye & Finishing Works Co., the Textile Workers received 61 votes against only 2 for the AFL Fireman and Oilers. Intl. Rep. Lillian Yadon handled the election.

Local Industrial Union Local 1064 won an overwhelming victory in a recent election held in Detroit. The LIU Local will now represent the cafeteria employes at the Nash-Kelvinator Corp. cafeteria as the result of a vote which showed 24 of the 27 employes wanted to join the CIO.

Willkie Says Segregation U. S. Disgrace

RACIAL segregation is a "national disgrace" which has given the country a background of prejudice, hatred and shame, an Indiana Republican legislator told the 42nd annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Atlanta, Ga., last week.

Philip Willkie, son of the late Wendell Willkie, charged that the issue is marked by "hostility in the South and apathy in the North."

"It has provided a background of bad ethics," he said. "It has led to ugly characteristics that have betrayed our basic principles in government. It offers a hypocrisy that could only result in the general lowering of our moral conduct."

Willkie who is chief counsel for the Senate subcommittee studying morals and ethics in the country, declared that in the struggle against world domination by Russia, we need the support and friendship of 1 billion non-white peoples of the world.

IF WE lose them, he warned, we must live indefinitely in a "garrison state" in which we will be stripped of most of our historical liberties and freedoms.

He urged support for the civil rights measures introduced into the Senate last week and declared that those who oppose the bills will likely base their arguments on the ground that there can be no legislation against intolerance.

"In an atom bomb race there is no time," he warned. "We must push civil rights legislation strictly in the interests of all Americans.

"It means, in fact, the lives of American boys, and no matter how you look at it, it's just that simple."

The NAACP convention adopted a new over-all policy aimed at discriminatory state statutes, local ordinances and public and private regulations which buttress the South's segregation system.

A legal action program calling for an immediate attack on all racial segregation practices was adopted unanimously by 40 lawyers representing the NAACP Legal Strategy Board, led by Thurgood Marshall, chief association counsel.

Marshall said the program would hinge entirely upon NAACP's recently adopted courtroom theme that racial segregation at any level creates "psychological roadblocks" that prevent Negroes from attaining equal status as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment.

HE SAID the association's legal staff would continue to give "top priority" to its campaign to eliminate segregation in public education. He declared that sufficient precedent had been established in the courts to warrant a broader attack on discrimination supported by local and state laws.

In line with the new policy, the NAACP disclosed an appeal would be made to the Supreme Court from a recent Federal Court of Appeals decision holding that public schools in Clarendon County, S. C., could be maintained on a separate basis if facilities were made equal.

Congress Awakens At Last To Peril Of Its Inaction

By MILTON PLUMB

APPARENTLY recognizing at last that it is apt to go down in history as even worse than the 80th Congress, the 82nd Congress last week decided to try and do something about it.

Confronted with one of the most serious legislative log-jams in years, Democratic leaders began—at the 11th hour—to grope toward at least a minimum objective.

Majority Leader McFarland announced June 26 that he had obtained unanimous agreement of Democrats to keep the Senate in session until Congress finishes a four-point program.

The minimum program involves action on:

- Defense production and price-rent-wage controls legislation.
- Authorization and funds for an estimated $8.5 billion program of military and economic assistance abroad.
- The new tax bill, passed by the House with an increase in revenue of only $7.2 billion instead of the $10 billion requested by the President.
- Approximately a dozen different appropriations bills, providing money for the operations of the federal government during the next fiscal year.

If bills for temporary extensions are not immediately forthcoming it would mean:

1. The automatic expiration of the Defense Production Act and an end of the government's authority to control prices, wages, and rents.

2. A complete hamstringing of the federal government by leaving it without operating funds—including money to pay salaries.

The situation in which Congress now finds itself is entirely of its own making. Concentrating all of its energies on investigations, it has spent the last six months wrangling over such issues as Gen. MacArthur's dismissal and the competency of the Secretary of State.

In such an atmosphere, the influence of lobbyists for big business and other special interest groups has reached an almost unprecedented high.

Last week alone, for example, the lobbies chalked up these victories:

- The farm interests beat down in the House all efforts to require farmers hiring Mexican farm hands to respect the country's immigration laws—by not doing so, they get help at substandard wages.
- The beef interests succeeded in getting the House Banking Committee to kill two scheduled price roll backs on beef—the only roll backs that would directly benefit consumers.
- The real estate interests got both houses to write into the new rent law a provision actually raising rents as much as 20% above other increases granted on the grounds of "hardship."
- The oil interests got themselves voted by the House Judiciary Committee a gift of the rich tidelands oil deposits.
- The National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the Committee for Constitutional Government won crippling cuts in the name of "economy" in appropriations to run the government next year.

PROPOSALS FOR stop-gap legislation continuing the Defense Production Act and making funds available to run the government, for only 30 days in each instance, ran into sharp opposition.

In one of the few constructive moves Congress has been in many a day, the Democrats, led by Chairman Cannon (D. Mo.) of the Appropriations Committee, promptly fixed things so that the continuing resolution was not subject to amendment.

The House then rejected a motion by Rep. Taber (R. N.Y.) to recommit the bill so that cuts of 10% or more could be made in all items except Dept. of Defense funds. Then it approved the resolution by voice vote.

The temporary extending resolution on controls ran into the possibility of even tougher obstacles. The House was pushing the resolution forward, although even this stop-gap measure was meeting with almost unprecedented amendments weakening the old law before extending it.

Ewing Offers Plan To Aid Ailing Aged

AN AMENDMENT to the Social Security Act providing hospitalization insurance up to 60 days a year for persons over 65, and for dependents of deceased persons insured under social security, has been advocated by Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing.

Ewing announced his plan at a press conference June 25 and said that he was asking President Truman to include it in his legislative program. He expressed hope that Congress will consider it this session.

Asked how he expected the American Medical Association to react to his plan, Ewing replied:

"It is difficult for me to see how anyone with a heart could oppose it. The only possible way it could affect the AMA is that a doctor would have to say whether or not a patient should receive hospital care."

However, AMA has already indicated that it will oppose this plan, as it has every other medical plan for individuals in which there is any suggestion of government participation.

Ewing's proposal also got a cool reception on Capitol Hill. Chairman Doughton (D. N.C.) said that he doubted that his House Ways and Means Committee, which has jurisdiction over matters affecting social security, "would want to wade into that very soon."

Under the plan, straight hospitalization insurance would be provided to those eligible, in addition to present social security benefits.

The program would be financed out of the surplus in present social security funds, without any increase in payments. However, Congress will have to authorize use of the funds for this purpose.

Even if Congress acts favorably and early, the program, which would cover about 7 million people, could probably not become operative until 1953.

The plan is not intended as a means of caring for the chronically ill who require constant hospitalization. Tubercular and mental cases would be specifically excluded from coverage.

THE PROGRAM is designed to provide protection for people who cannot get hospitalization insurance from non-profit or commercial companies, either because of their age or because of prohibitive costs.

"These people," Ewing declared, "as a whole need more than the average amount of hospitalization. They have much less than the average income with which to meet the costs of hospitalization and much less than average opportunity to obtain private insurance.

"It would protect them against having to ask for private charity or public aid with which to pay hospital costs, and would reduce federal, state and local expenditures for public assistance.

"It would also reduce the deficits of hospitals that have to furnish free or part-pay services."

States To Get Tidelands Oil In House Bill

THE HOUSE Judiciary Committee on June 27 voted 18 to 6 to turn over the rich tidelands oil deposits to the states—a move long supported by big oil company interests.

The action was another indication that special interest groups now are in virtual control of Congress. Lobbyists for the oil industry have been actively seeking such a measure for many years.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Walter (D. Pa.), would accomplish the oil industry's goal in the name of "states' rights" by taking control of the tidelands away from the federal government and giving them — nominally — to the states concerned. The Supreme Court has held that the lands belong to the nation.

THE COMMITTEE bill would give a three-mile strip of oil-rich submerged land to California and Louisiana, and a 10½ mile strip to Texas. Backers of the bill predicted that the House would pass it in a fresh defiance of President Truman, who vetoed a similar measure in 1946 and has said that he is ready to do so again.

Walter said that he was sure of enough House support to override a veto, but he was not certain of the necessary two-thirds vote in the Senate.

Rep. Celler (D. N.Y), committee chairman, bitterly opposed the Walter substitute on the ground that it "fritters away an American heritage." He said that the bill "turns over to huge, vested oil interests most valuable property."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate & House Banking Coms. reported crippling bills. Senate and House are debating further weakening amendments.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes H.R. 4473	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House passed bill providing $7,206,000,000 increase. Senate Finance Com. now holding hearings.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
Importation of Mexican Farm Labor S. 984 H.R. 3283	Provides for importation of cheap foreign labor; encourages extension of substandard conditions for both domestic and imported farm workers.	Senate passed Ellender bill (S. 984). House on June 27 approved unsatisfactory Poage Bill (H.R. 3283).	Urge House and Senate to substitute Ellender Bill for Poage Bill and add strengthening amendments.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Now before Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.
Labor Dept.-FSA Appropriations. H.R. 3709	Appropriates funds for operations of the Labor Dept. and Fed. Security Agency.	Passed House with cuts. Senate voted further 10% cut in personnel funds.	Ask Senators and Congressmen to restore funds.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

House OK's Exploitation Of Wetbacks

DIFFERING sharply with the Senate, the House on June 27 passed the much weaker Poage bill, providing for the importation of Mexican agricultural workers to help meet the farm labor shortage.

The chief difference in the House and Senate measures, which a conference committee late last week was trying to resolve, is whether or not the new law should provide punishment for farmers who hire "wetbacks." That is the name given Mexican farm hands who enter the United States illegally by swimming or wading across the Rio Grande River.

The House passed the Poage bill after overwhelmingly defeating the punishment section. The Senate previously had adopted a bill sponsored by Sen. Ellender (D. La.) which calls for a maximum penalty of one year's imprisonment and a $2000 fine for hiring a Mexican "reasonably" suspected of being in this country illegally.

LED BY Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.), and Rep. Polk (D. O.), opponents of the measures were beaten back consistently by the House farm block in all efforts to add strengthening amendments.

The House passed the Poage bill exactly as it came from its Agriculture Committee.

Defeated amendments would have set up reception centers at inland points as well as at the border, and would have increased the amount farmers could have been charged for transportation of the Mexicans.

The Mexican government announced that it would stop American recruiting in Mexico under the old law on June 30.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 9, 1951 82 No. 28

Congress Stalls On Price Controls; Administration Warns Of Let-Down

(See Stories On Inside Pages)

President Truman On Controls . . .

President Truman, transmitting to Congress the second quarterly report of Charles E. Wilson, head of the Office of Defense Mobilization, wrote:

"Everything that Mr. Wilson says in this report emphasizes the tremendous importance of obtaining good, strong control legislation to see us through this crucial period, while we are building our defensive strength.

"We need strong production controls, price and wage controls, credit controls and rent controls—we need them all and we must be prepared to use them all if we are to keep our economy on an even keel, protect our living standards and meet the defense goals which this report describes.

"The Congress has now extended until July 31 the Defense Production Act and our present rent control law. Both these laws would otherwise have expired June 30, with nothing on the statute books to keep our program going. The Senate has passed a new bill, to take the place of these present laws and the House is scheduled to debate this new measure shortly.

"It is a matter of great urgency that the Congress complete action on this new bill well before July 31.

"And it is absolutely vital that the new bill be a strong one, which will give this government the powers it must have to do the job . . . "

. . . General Ridgway On Production

Praise for the part played by equipment made by American labor in defeating the Communists in Korea was expressed by Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, supreme UN commander in the Far East, in a cable to CIO Pres. Murray.

The message was in reply to a cable sent Gen. Ridgway by Murray on behalf of the CIO Anti-Inflation Conference which met last month in Washington.

"Thank you very much for understanding and support," Gen. Ridgway said. "Weapons and equipment of all kinds being built by American labor are every day proving their superlative quality under the toughest of combat conditions.

"Firepower and mobility and communications are tools of war, which in the hands of our great-hearted men allow us to defeat again and again greatly superior numbers. Keep the tools coming."

Murray's cable pledged continued support of Gen. Ridgway and the United Nations soldiers. It continued:

"Recognizing that steadily rising prices have already cost our defense effort over $7 billion, we are determined to prevent inflation in interests of the national welfare and defense. We solemnly pledge our support to insure most effective continued development of defense mobilization program in support of UN efforts to strengthen free world."

Economic Outlook Warns:

It's No Time To 'Drop Guard' On Prices

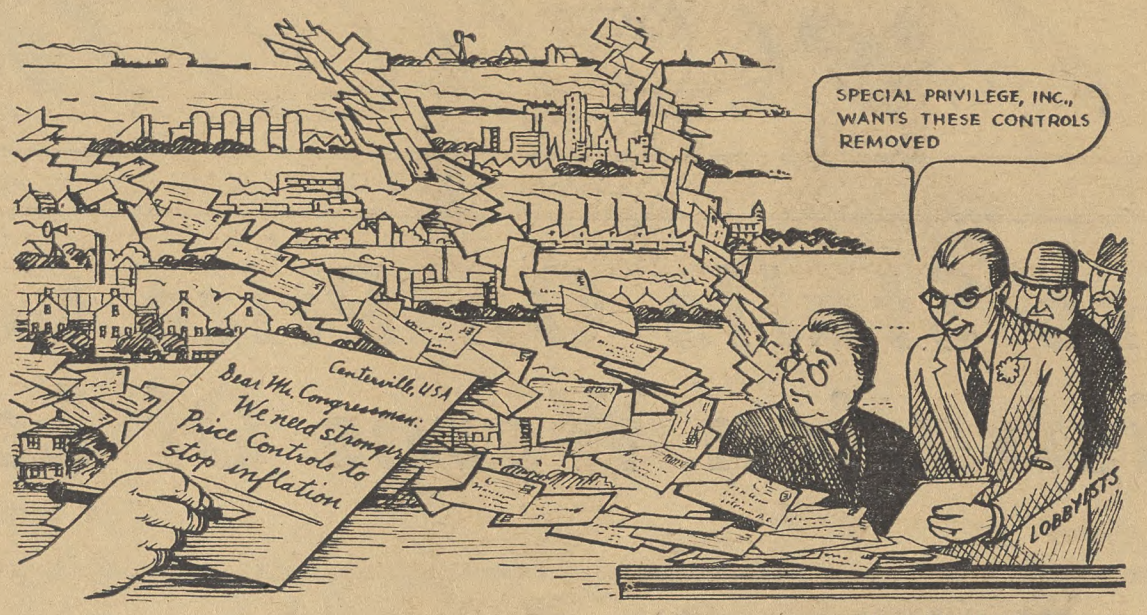
THE COUNTRY cannot afford to let down its guard against inflation with defense needs due to take up 18% to 20% of total output by late in 1952, the CIO Economic Outlook warns in its current issue.

The Economic Outlook is published by the CIO Dept. of Research and Education. It also cautioned that if the international situation were to take a turn for the worse, "we will have to increase those estimates."

"We cannot delay the enactment and enforcement of every measure necessary to combat inflation," it said. "The attempt to evade effective price controls in the months since the start of the Korean war has already caused tremendous damage."

Inflation has already created serious damage to our national economy and to the defense effort, the Outlook declared, adding:

"It is undermining the living standards of the American people —especially those who depend on fixed incomes, wages and salaries . . . It can undermine wage stabilization, for the wage earners of America cannot be expected to accept wage stabilization while prices soar."



—From The Economic Outlook

The Outlook warned that "unless firm and effective controls are imposed without delay, new inflationary pressures, based on material shortages, will shoot prices up even higher than they are at present."

The destruction of Office of Price Stabilization beef price regulations, it added, "will wreck any possibility of the government's attempt to achieve over-all economic stability . . . An equitable wage stabilization program must be premised upon effective control over living costs, including beef prices."

Eight suggested methods of stengthening the Defense Production Act to make it a more workable statute were recommended by the Outlook:

1. Granting of authority to the government to "use subsidies, when needed, to control food prices and, at the same time, assure a fair return to the farmer."

2. "Firm" rent controls over both residential and commercial sites.

3. Removal of the prohibition on the Office of Price Stabilization from requiring grade labelling of price-controlled commodities, and removal of a similar restriction on the use of quality-control measures by OPS.

4. Removal of the prohibition on OPS from limiting the production and sale of high-price lines, through which some manufacturers have by-passed price control regulations.

5. Substitution of general dollars-and-cents ceiling prices for the present percentage mark-up order.

6. Granting to OPS the power to license sellers of articles covered by price controls.

7. Authority for the government to establish margin requirements on commodity market purchases.

8. Elimination from the act of the wage-price tie-in provision dealing with selective controls.

Monopoly Gang In Congress Set For Another Raid On The People

CONGRESSIONAL advocates of big business are trying again to legalize price fixing—a device that would enable corporate giants to wipe out small competitors at will.

The Senate will vote Aug. 3 on a bill sponsored by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) which would permit manufacturers to charge different customers different prices for the same commodity if they can show that "the price differential had been made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor."

The effect would be to allow big corporations like chain stores to return to at least two merchandising practices that made them big:

They could force manufacturers and wholesalers to give them price discounts by threatening to stop buying certain products. This would give them a definite sales advantage over smaller competitors — they would buy for less and could sell for less.

They could match prices in all areas with smaller, more efficient competitors by engaging in price matching.

The bill allows price cutting and price discrimination when it's done in "good faith." To keep the big boys in line, the Federal Trade Commission would have to prove "bad faith." Opponents of the bill point out this would be virtually impossible.

Administration Democrats—and some Republicans—are trying desperately to amend the bill to give the FTC power to clamp down on price cutting and price discrimination where these practices lead to lessened competition. But they fear they will be out-voted when the showdown vote comes.

The McCarran bill grew out of a recent Supreme Court decision upholding the right of Standard Oil Co. of Indiana to give lower prices to four large customers than were given smaller customers in the same area.

Standard Oil argued it had to give preferred treatment to the four big customers in order to keep from losing them to a competitor who was underselling Standard Oil. The Supreme Court ruled Standard acted in "good faith" and that "good faith" was a "complete defense" even though the price discrimination allowed Standard's four big customers to drive hundreds of independent filling station operators out of business.

Opponents of the bill, led by Sens. Long (La.) and Douglas (Ill.) contend the "inevitable result of the proposed legislation would be that the big firm—no matter how inefficient—would destroy either the incentive or the ability of its smaller competitors to reduce prices."

Long demanded full public hearings. He was blocked by McCarran, who argued Congress has enough knowledge of the problem gained through years of study. McCarran said his Judiciary Committee, which aprpoved the bill, had conducted a further study this year.

Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) and several small businessmen and associations wrote McCarran asking for public hearings but he would not consent. LPA

California CWA Strike Settled

THE CIO Communications Workers have settled a strike against the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co., which had idled 20,000 CWA members in Southern California.

The union won most of its proposals, including a 10% pay raise, arbitration of dismissals and demotions, reclassification of certain areas, wage differentials, and promotions on a strict seniority basis. The settlement brought to 10 the number of Bell System contracts signed by CWA during June. The agreements cover an estimated 200,000 workers.

Gold-Lust Twins Howl In Pain Over House Tax Proposals

THE SPECIAL interest groups now making the highest net profits in history as the result of the failure of Congress to enact strong anti-inflation legislation have begun to gang up on the new tax bill.

At hearings last week before the Senate Finance Committee, the House-approved tax measure was sharply criticized by spokesmen for both the National Association of Manufacturers and the Committee for Constitutional Government.

Willford I. King, chairman of the CCG, indulged in a little of the committee's typically nonsensical red-baiting in an effort to discredit the conservative chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rep. Doughton (D. N. Car.), and other members of his group for having dared to write a relatively strong tax measure.

As reporters in the committee room exchanged smiles, King declared that the House tax bill "is based almost entirely upon the Communistic philosophy."

The NAM program was presented by Charles R. Sligh, Jr., chairman of its taxation committee.

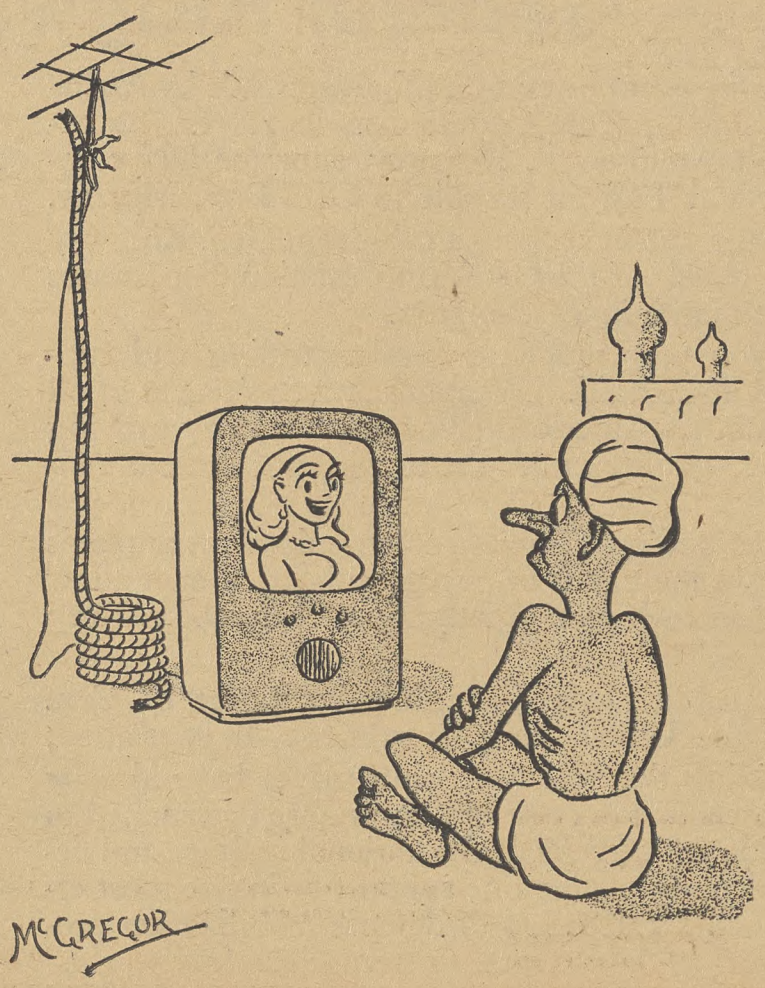
Sligh called for further cuts in Federal appropriations, opposed the House bill's personal income tax increases, and demanded that corporation taxes be held at present levels with any changes in the excess profits tax law in the direction of "relief."

WHY FIRMS making three and four times pre-war profits should need "relief" was not explained.

Sligh also called for the adoption, as an alternative to the House increases, of a "broad consumption tax, levied at the manufacturers' level." He urged that this form of sales tax should produce the bulk of the additional money needed.

Sen. Millikin (R. Colo.) differed sharply with the NAM on this proposal.

He pointed out that retailers would pyramid the regular "mark-ups" on top of the manufacturers' sales levy and pass the extra burden down to the consumer.



Give A Buck To PAC

House Dawdles Toward Vote On New 'Controls' Bill

DESPITE A growing public protest over the highest living costs in history, the House last week continued to reflect the general indifference of Congress to the nation's need for strong anti-inflation legislation.

Having got last-moment Senate agreement to its stop-gap resolution continuing the old Defense Production Act through July, but banning future price rollbacks, the House began debate July 5 on the amendment-riddled price-rent-wage control bill drafted by its Banking Committee.

Almost half of the members of the House were completely apathetic. They simply stayed away.

As debate opened, House leaders had considerable trouble mastering even a quorum. Despite the importance of the legislation, only 231 of the 433 representatives answered a quorum call.

In a desperate effort to make Congress realize that its continued shilly-shallying with anti-inflation legislation is menacing the country's security, President Truman and other administrative leaders issued further warnings that run-away inflation is a grave danger.

In an Independence Day address, the President said that unless strong controls are enacted, the consumers "may be plundered by renewed inflation and our whole mobilization program threatened with disaster."

'Over His Dead Body'

Later, in a letter transmitting to Congress the quarterly report of Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, the President asked the legislators to reconsider the crippling changes they contemplate making in the controls law.

"We need strong production controls, price and wage controls, credit controls and rent controls," the President declared.

In his report, Wilson also strongly reiterated the need for strengthened inflation control legislation, including the power to order price rollbacks. Without such authority, he said, it would be possible only to stabilize prices at "horrible levels."

Even higher living costs are in prospect, he emphasized.

Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston told a news conference July 5 that Congress either must restore the price rollback authority or face an "economic Pearl Harbor" that would add a dollar a day to every household budget in the land.

Johnston said that any bill such as that passed by the Senate —which prohibits price rollbacks and requires all cost rises to be translated into increased prices —could jump living costs 6% to 7%. That would mean $12 to $14 billion added next year to consumer costs, and $3 to $5 billion to the cost of rearmament.

MEANWHILE, Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle, at a banquet sponsored by the CIO Auto Workers in Toledo, O., accused the special interests which oppose reasonable price ceilings of a "brazen, bold and arrogant disregard of the public welfare and the national security."

He said that the forces shouting the loudest to get rid of controls were "those who made controls necessary in the first place."

Organized labor also was continuing down to the last moment its efforts to secure enactment of a sound price-rent-wage control law.

The CIO Economic Outlook for June, published July 5, summarized the inflationary dangers and set forth a constructive program for meeting the challenge.

At Portland, Ore., the executive board of the CIO Woodworkers demanded that wage controls be eliminated unless effective price controls, rent controls and price rollbacks are provided in the new law. It charged that the consumer is being made the "scapegoat."

Guaranty Trust Favors Controls

Maybe a lot of industrialists and financiers—big and little—are frantically opposed to price controls, but the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, one of the country's largest banks, doesn't agree with them.

"It is more than conceivable," the bank says in the current issue of its publication, Guaranty Survey, "that, without price control, the next two years might bring a sharp advance in prices, followed by a collapse after comparative normality was restored.

"This is precisely the sort of situation in which the temporary and artificial stability produced by price control can be most helpful.

"If the regulatory structure can be held together for two years, it will have done all that can be reasonably expected of it."

Dear Senator:

'Due To The High Cost Of Meat I'm Eating Dandelions'

Union members ARE writing letters to their Congressmen and Senators about the high cost of living —and they tell a story of desperation in the face of sky-rocketing prices for the necessities of life.

Printed here are a few letters penned by members of the Textile Workers Union in the area around Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to Republican Senators Duff and Martin. Copies of the letters were made by TWUA staff officials after the members had written them.

Dear Senator,

I've been reading in the papers about this Defense production act and I think it ought to be passed for another year. I have two children to support and I have a hard time supporting them on what I earn at the Mill. I've just been out of work for four weeks in order to get a 5% raise. But prices have gone up a lot more than that. Please let me know what you can do to keep the prices down.

Thank you,
Mrs. Sophie Tane
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

* * *

Dear Senator:

I would like to have price control continued for the next year. I went to the market yesterday and the price of beef was enormous—$1.39 a pound, and I got a quarter of a pound of bone. How do you expect a family of three to live on $60 a week. If you ever find out just let me know.

If rent controls get any higher, I guess we'll have to pitch a tent, somewhere.

Personally, I don't see why big businessmen like Eric Johnston and Charles E. Wilson have to be the ones that are running the defense program.

Please let me know if there is something you can do about it.

Sincerely yours,
Mrs. Mary Beirele
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

* * *

Dear Sir:

I am a housewife and due to the high cost of food I will have to go to work which I can't due to a serious operation. I just can't.

In order to help ordinary people like me, price control and defense production act should be continued for 2 years. I think the ceiling prices should be posted in the stores.

Sincerely yours,
Mrs. Michael Masgay
Larksville, Pa.

Dear Senator,

I'm a housewife and due to the high price of beef it is almost impossible to feed my family a balanced meal. I am working in the mill and work is very irregular. We work a few months and off a few months. In order to help people like me I would like to see price control and rent control stay for a few more years.

Loretta Bragg, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

* * *

Dear Senator:

I am writing you this letter to let you know as a tax payer in Penn. how I feel about the price of food. I am employed in the textile industry and have a mother to support, a sister that is working and no men or small children in my home.

Last week I thought I would get a order from a chain store in my neighborhood, because as the head of my home I try to save a penny (pennywise) because we all know pennies make dollars (if we live long enough we might make a dollar). Well I didn't get the thing that I would like to have purchased because they were much out of order, for my pocket book.

I make on the average of ten dollars a day, pay $50 for rent, insurance, light, gas and telephone, necessities in our everyday life. I think living cost is a way out of order. We must eat to be able to do a day's work. Therefore, whatever you do for us, will be greatly appreicated.

Miss Audrey Johnson

* * *

Dear Senator:

I am vice president of our Local Union. We have just had a four-week strike to get a 5 percent wage increase but this is not even close to the rise of the cost of living.

I think we should have a new defense production act to keep down the cost of living. I have a hard time supporting a family of four on what I make in a mill.

I think that food prices are way too high and would like you to do something about it. I think that the Wage Stabilization Board should be able to handle labor disputes.

Earl Worcekorak
Vice President Local 956, TWUA

* * *

My dear Sir:

Prices of food are too high for a single person earning their own living.

Even though I work it is impossible to make the weeks pay stretch to the next week.

Ruth Evans
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Dear Senator,

I am a house wife. I was working in a silk mill. Work is very irregular. The prices of goods in the stores as well as the meat in meat markets is beyond my reach. I cannot make ends meet.

I would like to see rent control stay on for 2 more years at least.

Francesann Boyer
East Plymouth, Pa.

* * *

Dear Senator:

Due to the high cost of living it is almost impossible to get along on wages we get in the mill.

Mill work is off and on. I think the Defense Production Act should be passed for a least 2 more years with strict price controls.

Mrs. P. Gardzalla
Plymouth, Pa.

* * *

Dear Senator:

Due to the high cost of meat I'm eating dandelion greens. I made myself a small garden, not even knowing anything about gardening. I had to learn or starve. This is not meant as a joke either. My rent has gone up but my income has not.

Mrs. George Grohol
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

P.S. Why do you think I voted for you?

* * *

Dear Mr. Senator:

Please keep the rent controls and price controls. Visiting people in our neighborhood they complain bitterly. Also complain at local union meetings. Please try to roll back prices.

Peter Sharkus
Vice-Pres. Local 164 TWUA
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

* * *

Dear Senator:

We are a family of 5 and our store bill is higher than it has been a year ago, and very little to eat.

A few weeks ago I went to a store in my locality and bought 3 lbs. of rump. It cost me $4.22, after it was roasted there was very little meat for a family of 5.

With small children growing they need a lot of nourishing food but how can we do it with prices going up and up and up and our wages going down.

Mrs. Elizabeth Gaugham
Sugar Notch, Pa.

No 'Cease-Fire' On Prices

There's real fear in Washington that a cease-fire in Korea may lead Congress to declare a cease-fire against inflation. Such a decision will leave the country in an unholy mess.

The fear is doubled by the fact that even when the Korean battle was raging at its heaviest, a majority of Congress showed little interest in legislation to keep prices down. So, inflation cost each American family an estimated $300 last year.

If the Soviet-inspired aggression in Korea is halted, there'll be a tendency here at home to "get back to normalcy." There's nothing that would please the Kremlin more.

For even an uneasy peace can be preserved only through the strengthening of the military might of the free world. That means a continued defense production program—with its strain on our economy and its "built-in" inflationary tendencies.

ODM Chief Charles E. Wilson predicts that the "full impact of our program" won't be felt until next year. And, he adds, "if we get a controls law which forbids rollbacks in prices, and allows only for increases, we'll see prices reach horrible levels."

Perhaps the Congressional conservative majority, which has scoffed at the protests of labor and the consumer, will heed the words of Charlie Wilson—who is not known as much of a radical in the trade.

Perhaps the House and Senate will take action, before it is too late, to keep a lid on prices—regardless of what happens in the Korean armistice talks.

If Congress fails to do so, the Republican-Dixiecrat majority certainly can't use the excuse that "nobody told me" about inflation.

The Facts Speak Out

The latest report of the government's Office of Defense Mobilization must be causing at least a wee bit of embarrassment in certain business circles.

The report shows that actual production of defense goods is running 20% behind schedule.

This happened during a period when most of the controlling jobs in the defense production program were in the hands of corporation executives.

These are the same people who shook their heads sadly about the demand of the United Labor Policy Committee for greater participation by labor and the public in the defense program. The corporation people indicated that only they had the know-how and the intelligence to run a program successfully.

The 20% lag in output, however, offers strong if belated endorsement of the correctness of labor's criticisms of the defense program last winter and early spring.

Curious 'Laws'

Pres. Harry Martin of the American Newspaper Guild was speaking for all the American public when he protested to the Czechoslovakian Embassy in Washington against the forced and phony confession wrung from AP Correspondent William Oatis.

An embassy official, speaking indignantly, claimed that Oatis would be assured a fair trial under the laws of Communist Czechoslovakia.

Those are curious laws that interpret honest newspaper reporting as espionage, or that keep a defendant incommunicado for 70 days pending his "trial."

As ANG Pres. Martin noted, they constitute a "savage assault upon . . . freedom of press and freedom of speech."

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV July 9, 1951 No. 28

Flattening Out The Rollback

'If Peace Comes In Korea'

Excerpts from a radio talk by Robert R. Nathan, nationally known economist, who broadcasts under CIO auspices each Saturday at 6:45 P.M. EDT time over the ABC network.

By ROBERT R. NATHAN

THERE IS BOUND to be considerable confusion and concern among workers and businessmen and farmers as to what will happen if the Korean war comes to an immediate end, which is likely and certainly desirable.

From an economic point of view, the most important question is not whether the war in Korea stops, but what we are going to do in terms of our whole mobilization program. If military spending were suddenly to decline precipitously because of peace, then we might well be faced with a difficult problem of adjustment. We won't have the backlog of unsatisfied consumer wants as was true immediately after World War II. As a matter of fact, we have had an unprecedented level of production of civilian goods in the past year.

However, it is not very likely that military spending will be curtailed. Much more likely is a continued increase in defense expenditures. The Administration is determined to go ahead with building up our Armed Forces. It is very doubtful whether Congress will cut military appropriations.

The end of the war in Korea is no guarantee that communist aggression may not start elsewhere. The collective action of the United Nations against the North Koreans and the Chinese Communists has been a most important victory, but continued alertness and increased strength may well be the key to continued peace.

If we go ahead with the mobilization program as planned, then peace in Korea should have a rather limited effect on the business situation in the United States.

More dollars will be spent by the Government in the coming months than in recent months. More plants will be cutting down on the production of civilian goods and will be increasing the output of materiel. Raw materials will be scarce. This means that the dangers of inflation will continue.

Probably there will be a temporary, and possibly pronounced, period of deflation before the upward pressure of prices begins to assert itself again.

It is doubtful whether such deflation would last very long.

In the first place, there still is quite a bit of buying power around the country and at reasonable prices consumers would probably be inclined to buy rather heavily. Second, the increase in Government spending will mean increased buying power for businesses and individuals. Third, as more critical materials are chewed up in the mobilization program, less will be available for civilian goods and that will help shorten any downward drop in general business activity.

In essence, what we may be in for is an economic "shake-down" for two or three months, during which time the consumers may get a good break because of lower prices. Some unemployment may occur, but it will probably be spotty and not of major proportions. Business profits may shrink a little, but they have been so fantastically large that they will probably continue far above World War II and most postwar levels.

OVER THE NEXT six to 12 months it is much more likely that we will be faced with inflation rather than deflation—even with peace in Korea.

If the mobilization program goes ahead as planned, shortages will appear in most lines of activity by the end of the year and will become intensified as we move into 1952. This doesn't mean that sizable supplies of civilian goods will not be available; it does mean that there will be less than we have had in the past year.

There is serious danger that Congress may get the idea that peace in Korea will eliminate all need for controls and that additional taxes will not be necessary. Such an attitude is very dangerous. We can readily find ourselves by the end of this year in pretty much the same situation as we experienced last fall and winter with serious inflation. If peace comes in Korea, the temporary let-down will provide a very good excuse for those who are against higher taxes and for those who don't want controls to scuttle the whole necessary anti-inflation program. It is going to be a difficult period because good judgment and farsightedness may give way to a shortsighted anti-control hysteria.

We need to keep our balance and look ahead. Let us not lose sight of our role in world peace and world security and throw away the opportunity for the United States to play the part which it must play in this important international emergency by inviting inflation and economic chaos.

Lehman Made 'Sick At Heart' By Senate Antics

One of the most moving speeches ever made in Congress was delivered by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) in the early hours of June 28. The Senate throughout the day before and far into the night had hacked away at the price and rent controls provisions of the Defense Production Act.

As it became obvious that the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition was in control, and that it was bent on serving big business and other special interests at the expense of the American people, Lehman, his voice tinged with sincere emotion, said:

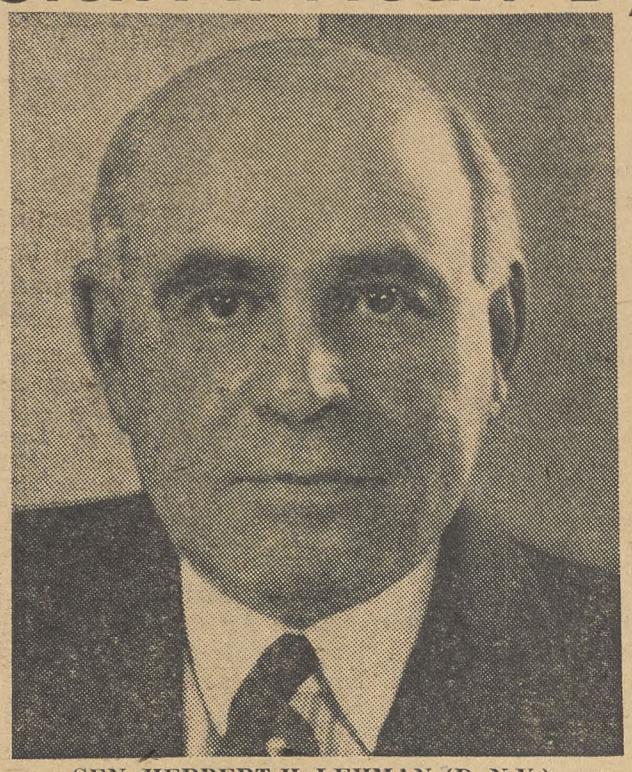
MR. PRESIDENT, I have had a long public life. I was president of the Senate of my State for four years. I was Governor for 10 years. I have been in the United States Senate going on two years. What I am about to say is not going to please my colleagues in the Senate. Yet I must say it.

I came to the Senate in the belief, which I had always held, that it was the greatest deliberative body in the world. I still want to believe that.

But certainly what has occurred here in the last few moments and in the last few days makes me doubt it altogether. Here we are engaged in a life-and-death struggle, a struggle for survival against the most ruthless enemy in history, fighting on two fronts, on the military and on the economic.

We ought to be engaged exclusively in considering legislation to benefit all the people of this country, legislation to keep our country on a sound economic basis.

Yet, here I see and hear Senator after Senator rise, not to concern himself with the issues before us, but to play politics, to blast the Administration, to attack those who have given up the comfort of their home towns and circles of friends and the profits of their businesses to come to Washington to serve their fellow Americans.



SEN. HERBERT H. LEHMAN (D. N.Y.)
" . . . it is about time that we stopped . . . "

I tell you, Mr. President, it has made me heart sick to hear all this.

It makes me feel that we are betraying the people who sent us down here, that we are not concerning ourselves with protecting the great masses of our people, but are moving to pass legislation which, far from reducing the cost of living, will inevitably increase and advance the cost of living.

I say to Senators that it is about time that we stopped that.

It is about time that we stopped it because if we do not, the people of the United States will feel that we are serving in a discredited body, a body which is not concerned with the interests of the people, not concerned with the protection of our Nation, but which is merely interested in politics, in political attacks, in seeing heads roll, no matter at what cost to the Nation.

Mr. President, we are about to pass a bill which is a bad bill, a bill which is not in the interest of the people of our country and designed to protect the economy of our country.

I know there is nothing I can say which is going to reverse the trend and bring about the ends I and many of my associates—and the people—seek.

DEEP DOWN in our hearts, we all know that these ends are necessary. Yet some are acting without regard to what is right. But I hope that we are not going to be supine or satisfied with what we have done.

I do not believe the American people are going to permit us to be supine or satisfied. They are not going to feel that we have properly represented their interests; they are going to rise, I believe, with such a chorus of criticism of what we have done that it will force the Congress to take note of it.

I am not going to offer another amendment. I end on the note with which I began. I assume that what I have said will not set well with some of my colleagues.

Yet I am glad I said it. I think it is something which had to be said on the floor of the Senate.

Report On Five States:

Taft-Hartley, Lack Of New Ideas Hurt New England Industry

By FRED ROSS

BACK IN the spring of 1950 there was widespread unemployment throughout the country, particularly in New England.

Many New England textile centers were threatened with becoming ghost towns. The outbreak of the Korean war in June, 1950, remedied that situation—at least temporarily.

Last week the White House issued a report on New England industry made by a committee of New England economists for President Truman's Council of Economic Advisers.

Their goal: To help New England improve its economic health.

Many recommendations are included in the 205-page report, but the committee is particularly hard on the lack of foresight of management of New England industries:

"NEW ENGLAND needs more enterprising management. The committee has been told time and again that some firms, especially in the older, declining industries, have often missed the opportunity to extend or even maintain their market position because of the failure to follow realistic policies in the scrapping and replacing of obsolete plants and equipment.

"We have likewise been told that even in the expanding industries, some firms have been unwilling to modernize and expand their plants and equipment to take advantage of the opportunities presented.

"Both labor and management have commented on the imperviousness to new ideas of many New England executives.

"Management responsibility in the hands of third and fourth generations, who often do not show the ability of the original owners, partially explains management deficiencies.

"In some cases, absentee ownership also contributes to management weakness because of an unawareness of technical problems and plant requirements. On the other hand, in some cases outside management has been the source of renewed vigor and improved management techniques."

THE ECONOMISTS, who were headed by Charles I. Gragg of the Harvard School of Business Administration, also took a crack at the Taft-Hartley Act for its harmful effect on New England industry.

"The Taft-Hartley Act," they reported, "has had the effect of freezing New England and the South in the comparative unionization which they had reached prior to its passage.

"The changes favorable to the employers in the Act, such as the so-called 'free-speech amendment,' and the encouragement the Act gave to anti-union employers have retarded the growth of trade unionism in the South.

For example, the Textile Workers Union of America lost southern elections involving 64% of the employes included before the Taft-Hartley Act and 87% in the two years after the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Since the South was already less unionized, the Taft-Hartley Act helped them maintain the region's competitive advantage. It affected adversely the labor-cost position of New England manufacturers in their competition with the South by retarding the equalization of labor conditions...

"There can be little doubt, however, that longer hours, fewer holidays, anti-union legislation, lower minimum wage legislation—these and other factors put the South at an advantage in comparison with the North and particularly New England, which lost to the South in part because of these differentials . . ."

"There are several alternative solutions for this problem. The most obvious is the slowing up of social legislation in New England . . . But this is not the most desirable long-run attack on the problem.

"Although many New England manufacturers, especially in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, recognize the desirability of social programs, they are urging a reconsideration of administrative regulations and an improvement in plant working conditions because of the pressure of competition.

"A SECOND way out is for federal legislation which sets higher minimum standards applicable to all regions and which thus reduces differences in competitive costs . . .

"A third way is legislation concerning hours, wages, and working conditions by the states with low standards . . .

"Finally, if labor and management wish to be self-reliant and aggressive, they will not depend on others for a solution to the problem of how to increase productivity.

"They will gain from social benefits which improve the quality of the labor force and will cooperate to lower unit costs of production in individual New England plants."

Three Firms Fined $42,000

U. S. Anti-Trust Suits Hit Monopoly Actions

THE DEPT. of Justice has cracked down on a number of companies and individuals charged with violation of the anti-trust laws.

At Tulsa, Okla., three corporations were charged in a civil complaint with conspiracy to suppress and restrain competition in the interstate transportation of passengers by motor carriers in Oklahoma and surrounding states.

The complaint contends that the defendants operate the Tulsa union bus terminal as a means of stifling competition by channeling passengers through the city to their bus lines.

The three defendants were: Southwestern Greyhound Lines, Dallas, Tex.; Transcontinental Bus Systems, Inc., Dallas; and Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma Coach Lines, Tulsa.

Three manufacturers of wire garment hangers were fined $42,000 in Detroit Federal Court after being indicted for conspiring to monopolize and restrain the wire hanger manufacturing industry.

The L. A. Young Spring and Wire Corp., Detroit, Mich.; Cleaners Hanger Co., Detroit, and the W. A. Laidlaw Wire Co., Peoria, Ill., were charged with eliminating competition by buying up competitors or driving them out of business by lowering prices.

Also in Federal Court in Detroit, General Mills, Inc., Minneapolis, Minn., and 11 other corporations were defendants in a civil complaint, charged with conspiracy to suppress and eliminate competition in the sale and distribution of dried beet pulp produced and sold east of the Rocky Mountains in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act.

At Asheville, N. C., a Federal grand jury returned an indictment charging the Draper Corp., Hopedale, Mass., with conspiring to fix prices and allocate territories for shuttle blocks in North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi.

Shuttle blocks are wooden blocks which are shaped and converted into shuttles for textile looms. The defendant, as a leading loom manufacturer, is the largest purchaser and consumer of shuttle blocks in the country.

THE INDICTMENT charges the defendant fixed prices paid for shuttle blocks to mills, and thereafter adhered to and policed such prices.

In Federal Court, in Pittsburgh, a civil anti-trust suit was filed against the Blaw-Knox Co., Pittsburgh, charging that the firm had participated in unlawful cartel arrangements which restrain interstate and foreign trade in cast metal rolls in violation of the Sherman Act.

The cast metal rolls are essential in rolling mills which process metals and alloys from ingots to finished products such as metal plates, strips, tubes, bars and rods. The defendant's annual sales of cast metal rolls was listed as $9 million.

The complaint charges that the defendant and three British firms have combined their technology to the exclusion of third parties and have used trade-marks to further their illegal objectives.

Gets Advisory Post

Edward G. Wilms, a representative of the CIO Auto Workers in New Jersey, was appointed to the advisory council of the Rutgers Institute of Labor and Management Relations on July 1.

MORE THAN A TABLE separates Jan Vinar (left), charge d'affaires of the Czechoslovakian Embassy at Washington, and Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newspaper Guild. Vinar rejected a resolution adopted by the Guild convention and brought to the Embassy by Martin, that the Czechs had extorted from AP Correspondent William Oatis a "phony" confession of espionage after "brutal "imprisonment and persecution."

Czechs Reject Guild Resolution Attacking Oatis 'Confession'

PRES. HARRY MARTIN of the CIO Newspaper Guild and Jan Vinar, charge d'affaires (or acting ambassador) at the Czechoslovakian Embassy in Washington, exchanged hot words last week.

Martin went to the embassy on July 3 to deliver a resolution, passed at the annual Guild convention in Pittsburgh the previous week, protesting the espionage trial in Czechoslovakia of William N. Oatis, Associated Press correspondent in that country.

Oatis was found "guilty" after an alleged "confession" which had been tortured out of him was read in the Czech court. He was sentenced to 10 years in prison, half of which may be remitted for good behavior.

The Guild resolution accused the Czech government of extorting a "phony confession from Oatis, and condemned his "brutal imprisonment and persecution."

Vinar refused to accept the letter containing the resolution, which was intended for transmittal to his government.

He and Martin had a sharp verbal exchange in the embassy before Vinar ended it by stalking from the room. Martin left the letter on a table in their meeting room and quietly departed. Vinar said he would mail it back.

Before he left, Vinar told Martin—and other reporters and photographers who were present—that American reporters were "lying" about what he described as his country's efforts to improve living conditions. He denied that his government was "pre-judging" Oatis, who had not been convicted at the time.

"I can assure you," he proclaimed, "that if anybody tries to throw monkey wrenches into our machinery we shall know how to deal with him, even if he is an American newspaperman."

MARTIN ANSWERED that the Czechs will "have to answer to humanity" for the conduct of the trial, and bluntly told Vinar that his government was "reverting to the dark ages" in the way it was treating Oatis.

The charge d'affaires said later that "no diplomat in the world would accept a letter containing such insulting language to transmit to his government."

President Truman and the State Dept. used language as strong as the Guild's in condemning the conviction.

"I hope and trust," said Press Officer Lincoln White of the State Dept., "the American people will understand the absolute worthlessness of any alleged 'confession' or 'revelation' beaten out of or otherwise obtained from anyone who is held incommunicado for 70 days or more."

The department in a statement described the "mock trial" as a "ludicrous travesty of justice" and "an attempted hoax on the intelligence of world opinion" intended to "intimidate" the United States and the free press of the world.

The President said the statement was submitted to him in advance for his approval and that he is in complete agreement with it.

Martin Re-Elected Guild President

Harry Martin was re-elected to his third consecutive term as president of the CIO Newspaper Guild at the closing session of the union's eighteenth annual convention in Pittsburgh.

Former Secy.-Treas. Ralph B. Novak was named executive vice-president, succeeding Sam B. Eubanks who retired to direct establishment of a national daily newspaper.

William J. Farson, former director of organization, was elected secretary-treasurer. Charles E. Crissey was appointed editor of the union's official organ, The Guild Reporter, replacing Wilbur E. Bade, who will become executive officer of the St. Paul-Minneapolis Guild, his home local.

UNESCO To Open Training Centers

The general conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris celebrated the Fourth of July by voting unanimous approval of a 12-year, $20 million international education program.

The plan calls for six regional training centers where specially selected teachers will learn the latest techniques in education, health, economics and social service. They in turn will instruct other teachers in their own regions as part of the international drive to raise standards of living.

One center already is in operation at Patzuaro, Mexico. Others will be set up soon in Latin America, the Far East, Equatorial Africa, the Near East and Southeast Asia.

Hollander Charges:

M'Arthur Talks Show 'Lack of Understanding'

THE NEW YORK State CIO Council has reaffirmed its support of President Truman's action in removing Gen. MacArthur from his post as Far East commander.

Speaking before the Democratic State Committee's "Fight for Freedom" conference in New York, Pres. Louis Hollander of the council charged that MacArthur, during his recent tour of Texas, revealed a "terrible lack of knowledge and a complete lack of understanding" of what has been happening in the country during the 15 years he was away.

Hollander predicted that "in the final analysis," the President will be upheld in his decision to remove MacArthur. The General, he said, "has put aside the uniform of the U. S. Army and has come out in the uniform of big business." He has no solution to offer for the problems which beset the country, Hollander said, adding:

"He only echoes the sentiment of Taft, Hoover and the National Association of Manufacturers in an impassioned plea for the return to the America of the depression days."

"Gen. MacArthur's discussion of domestic issues was an empty attempt to play on the emotions of his audience," said Hollander. "People in many countries, driven by hunger and fear, have been seeking some strong man into whose hands they could put their problems. The symbol of strength to which they seem to turn most readily is the military uniform and the military title."

Citing the "unfortunate" experience of Argentina under the rule of a military figure, Dictator Peron, Hollander called that country's present status "a paternalistic state based on totalitarian principles."

"As under Communist rule, there is no free press, no free assembly and no free trade unions," he declared. "The government decides what is good or bad for the people and treats them like children, to be seen and not heard."

He said he was reminded of these things as he read that MacArthur had "taken the American people to task" for the gains they had made during his absence.

Hollander charged that MacArthur had become the "rallying point" for all the reactionary forces in the country.

"Not because they support his foreign policy—they don't give a damn about that," he said. "They were isolationists before and they are isolationists today.

"THEY WANT to weaken America's position of leadership in the world and erect an armored curtain around our borders. They feel that such a nation, cut off from the world, will provide better ground for the cultivation of their kind of reactionary government.

"They are using Gen. MacArthur as a glamorous mouthpiece for the expression and extension of their ideas."

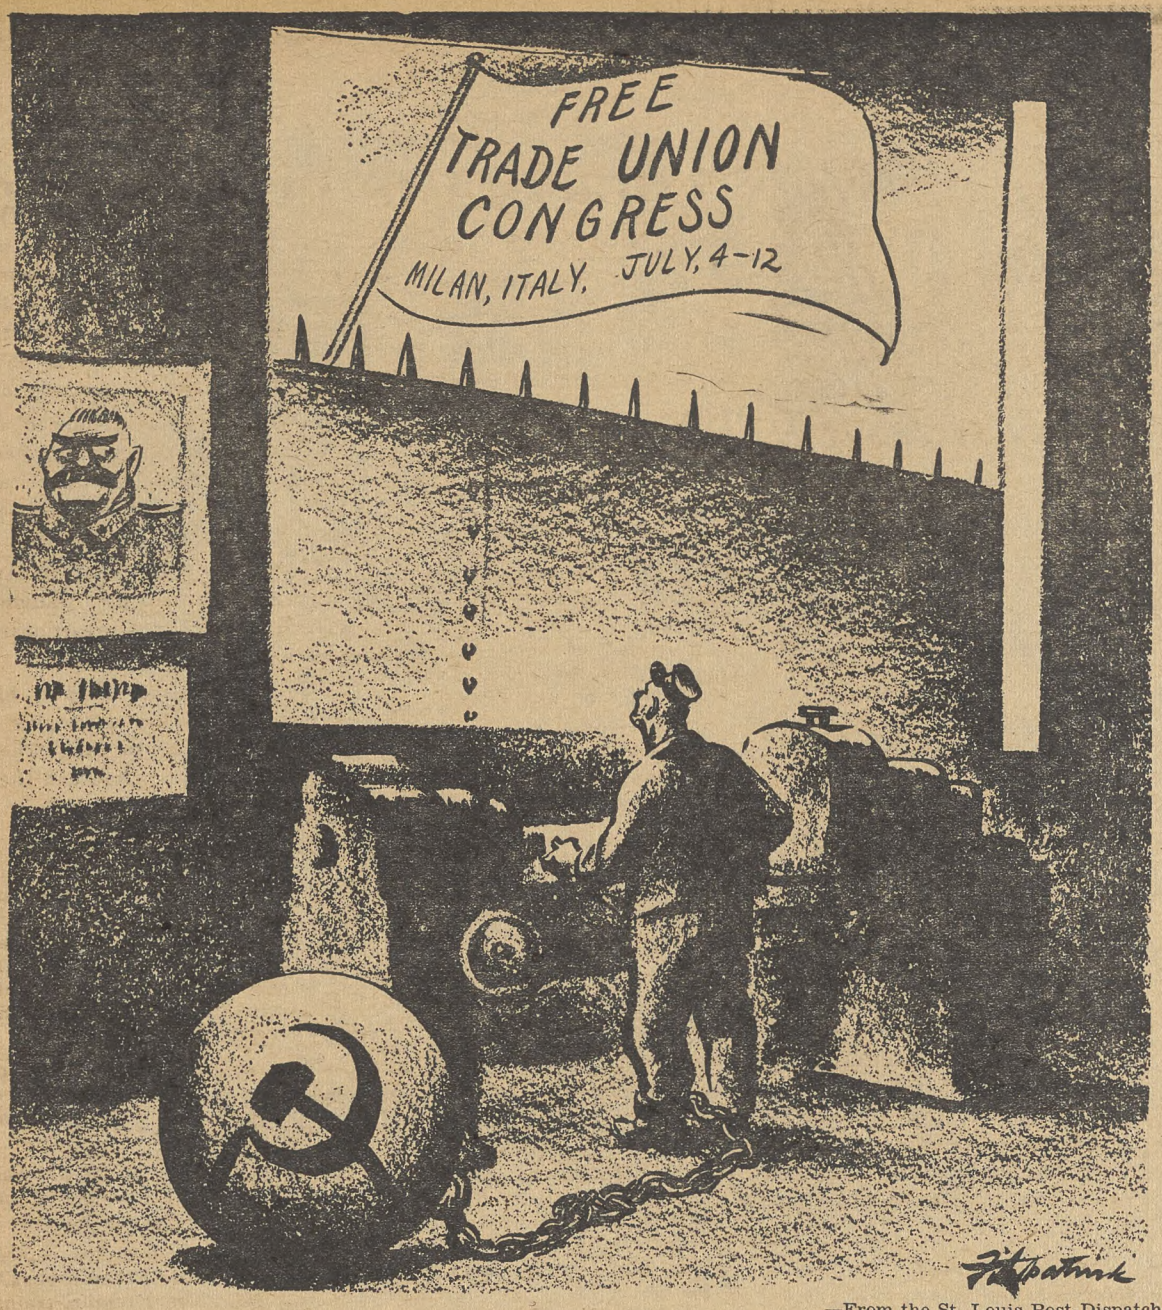
Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) was named by Hollander as one of the men advocating such a policy.

"McCarthy's tactics are copied directly out of the Kremlin book," he charged. "The Kremlin trains its apprentices in character assassination and distortion and teaches them to ignore any consideration of morals, truth or common sense.

"In their aim to confuse the American people, the Communists could ask for no better accomplice than McCarthy.

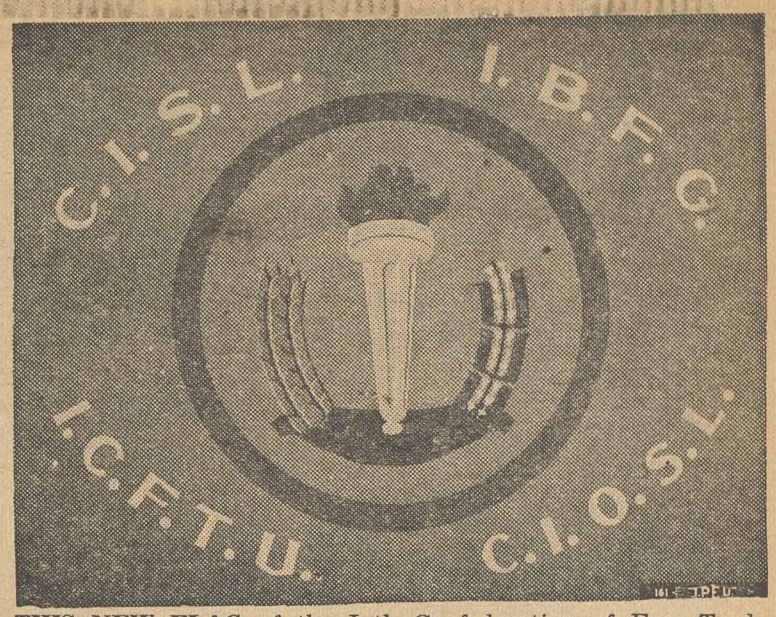
"He is doing the job with greater zeal than their fanatics ever could."

EVERYBODY is having a good time at this party which members of Local 630, CIO Textile Workers, gave for GI's at Camp Kilmer, New Brunswick, N. J. The affair originated when the local's financial secretary, Mary Grasso, heard at a meeting of the Middlesex County, N. J., CIO Council that the men at Kilmer needed entertainment.



—From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch

View From The Workers' Paradise



THIS NEW FLAG of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions was placed on public display at ICFTU's second World Congress which opened July 4, at Milan, Italy. Designed by the Flemish artist Rene Boschmans, the flag symbolizes the ICFTU slogan "Bread, Peace and Freedom"—an ear of corn, olive branch and torch of liberty.

Victor Reuther To German Labor:

Watch Out For 'Strange Experts'

THE FORMAL greetings of the CIO and its members were given to the recent convention of the German Federation of Labor, at Essen, by Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative.

Reuther also paid tribute to the memory of the late Dr. Hans Boeckler, who died in February after leading the successful fight for co-determination in the iron, steel and coal industries.

Christian Fette was elected to succeed him at the convention—the first large-scale gathering held by free German labor since Hitler assumed power in 1933.

"No single man in the free labor world," said Reuther, "has stood with greater dignity and steadfastness for democratic values or acted with more courage and tenacity for their realization than your departed union leader, and in no sphere of trade union activity did Hans Boeckler demonstrate these qualities to greater advantage than in his leadership of your recent and successful campaign for co-determination. [Co-determination is the system through which German unions get a voice in the direction of big corporations.]

"The CIO appreciates the fact that your struggle for co-determination has really just begun.

"We know there will be long months ahead in which you will seek to realize the fruits of the new legislation in the daily work of the enterprise.

"As the months go by, we can all expect that voices will be raised again, as they have already been raised from within and without Germany, predicting disaster if co-determination becomes a living reality within German industry.

"Some of our own American industrialists, who never really appreciated the virtues of unionism until the American labor movement demonstrated those virtues to them on the picket line, may seek to advise you again on the merits of another kind of 'more reasonable unionism.'

"We recommend that you regard these strange new union experts as unrepresentative of the American people, and that you regard their advice as one of the expressions of American freedom of speech rather than as a guide for your future.

"The Russians of the East may expect the Germans to act like Russians. But we Americans of the West, that is, the great majority, do not expect you to act like Americans.

"We shall be happy enough if you pursue your own road toward economic democracy."

Murray, CIO Send Greetings To Irish Union Conclave

VICTOR G. REUTHER, CIO representative in Europe, was unable to accept a recent invitation to the convention of the Irish Trade Unions Congress because of previous commitments.

However, he sent the convention and its delegates fraternal greetings in the names of Pres. Philip Murray and the members of CIO.

"We Americans, who are a nation of immigrants," he added, "have good reason to know of the high qualities of the Irish character, for those qualities have not been the least of the ingredients that have gone into the mainstream of American life and into the building of our labor movement.

"As Americans and as members of CIO, we are happy over the contribution that the European Recovery Program has been able to make toward the strengthening of the Irish economy, and toward the reinforcement of the already close ties that unite our two countries.

"In the name of CIO, I take pleasure in wishing you a most successful convention. And permit me the concluding hope that the day is not too distant when the Irish labor movement will participate with us in the international councils of the free world labor movement."

ICFTU Told:

Reds Hypocritcal As Peace Apostles

SOME 300 delegates, representing 53 million workers from one end of the world to the other, opened the Second Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions on July 4 in the Ice Palace at Milan, Italy.

The flags of the 63 countries from which they came hung from the walls and fluttered gaily as Guilio Pastore, general secretary of the Italian Confederation of Labor Unions, opened the meeting with an address of welcome.

Pastore called for a renewal of the ICFTU dedication to the goals of higher standards of living, social reform and a just and lasting peace, and accused "Stalinist aggressors" of "sheer hypocricy" in posing as defenders of peace.

He stressed the significance to Italian workers of the fact the congress is being held in their country. Italy, still beset by the aftermath of fascism and war, wants neither another war nor Stalinism, he said.

EVIDENCES of international worker solidarity were many. Germany, Austria, Italy and Japan are members of the ICFTU in good standing and were represented by delegates.

Twelve young German workers, who had bicycled to Milan from the Ruhr, presented a bouquet of roses to Pres. Paul Finet as a sign of the solidarity of West German workers with free labor everywhere. They were introduced by Christian Fette, new president of the German Federation of Labor.

Secy. Gen. J. H. Oldenbroek reported that the ICFTU now speaks for 84 national labor organizations—including the CIO—instead of the 67 groups it represented when it was organized in December, 1949.

The gains have been won at the expense of the Communists.

In illustration of this, an observer from the Finnish labor movement was present in the auditorium. The Finns had just voted, 143 to 63, at their national convention to withdraw from the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions and to affiliate with the ICFTU.

In his inaugural address, Finet, a Belgian, described the ICFTU's goals as social justice with abundance, individual and collective freedom, and security—all threatened by Stalinist aggression.

The Communists, he maintained, seek permanent unrest and the diversion of wealth from humanitarian ends to rearmament. By this means they seek to block social progress and prevent aid for underdeveloped countries, he added.

THE ICFTU's main task at present, said Finet, is to support the Western rearmament program in defense of democratic freedoms.

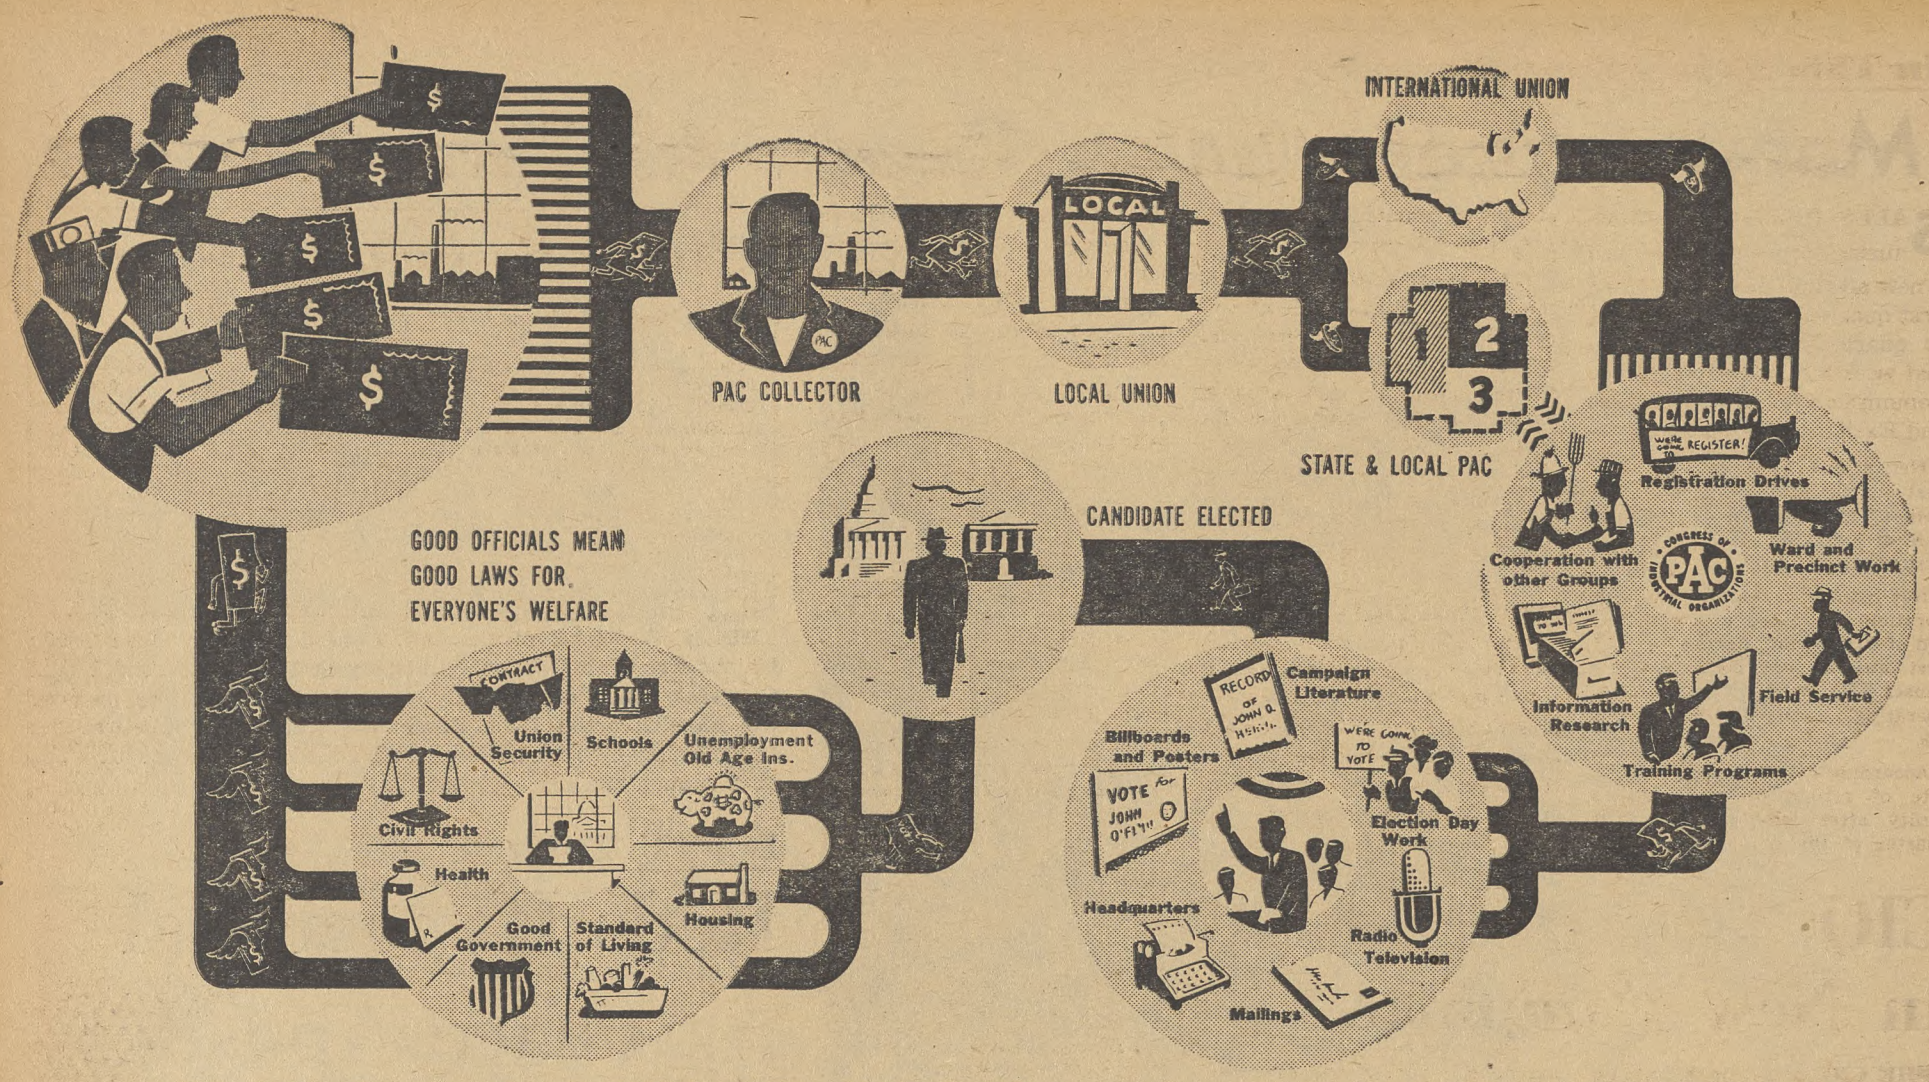
"However," he said, "we must see to it that the defense effort is not used as a pretext for social reaction, and that the present situation does not afford an opportunity for a re-birth of the worst sort of imperialism, which insures its supremacy by abusing the weakness of others."

The AFL and the Mine Workers are represented at the congress, along with the CIO and the Canadian Congress of Labour.

The CIO delegation is headed by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee and president of the Clothing Workers.

Others are Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union, CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, Reg. Dir. Sol Stettin of the Textile Workers, Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers, Victor Reuther, CIO European representative, and Michael Ross, director of the CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, Vice Pres. Martin Kyne of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, and Intl. Rep. Boyd Wilson of the Steelworkers.

The group is accompanied by John Brophy, ICFTU representative at the United Nations and former CIO director of industrial union councils.



YOUR P·A·C DOLLAR WORKS FOR YOU! CONTRIBUTE!

THE INSIDE STORY OF YOUR PAC DOLLAR. This leaflet is available from CIO-PAC, 1346 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C., for 1c each.

Work Injuries Increase By 42% Over First Quarter Of 1950

WORK INJURIES in manufacturing rose both in actual number and in relation to man-hours worked during the first quarter of 1951, the U. S. Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics announced last week.

An estimated 110,000 employes in manufacturing suffered disabling work injuries during the quarter, according to preliminary reports. This is an increase of about 5% over the estimate for the preceding quarter, and 42% over that for the first quarter of 1950.

The estimated volume of work injuries has now shown an increase in each of the last five quarters.

The bureau said that greater employment and longer hours of work have contributed, but that higher injury rates have been the principal factor. Over 400 workers died as a result of injuries during the first quarter of 1951, and 5600 others were known to have suffered some permanent body impairment.

More than 2.2 million man-days were lost during the quarter by these injured workers. The value of wage losses amounted to approximately $22 million.

This estimate, however, makes no allowance for continuing economic losses arising from deaths and permanent impairments, or for hospital, medical and other costs incidental to treatment.

The average injury-frequency rate for all manufacturing establishments was about 4% higher than in the fourth quarter of 1950, and was 16% above the rate for the first quarter of 1950. The short-term trend within the quarter was downward, following the usual seasonal pattern, but at a considerably higher level than in 1950.

AMONG individual industry groups, the principal increase in injury rates were found in the office, store, and restaurant fixtures industry, with a jump from 13.4 injuries per million man-hours in the fourth quarter of 1950 to 25.5 in the first quarter of 1951; miscellaneous leather products, from 7.9 to 15.8; logging, from 94.6 to 102.2; general machine shops, from 21.5 to 29.0; structural clay products, from 29.7 to 37.1; metal furniture, from 18.8 to 24.6; miscellaneous iron and steel products, from 17.6 to 23.3; veneer mills, from 34.2 to 39.5; and plate fabrication and boiler-shop products, from 15.9 to 21.0

The principal decreases were reported by sawmills, from 74.7 to 63.5; planing mills, from 44.2 to 34.7; aluminum and magnesium products, from 26.7 to 18.0; bottling of soft drinks, from 27.3 to 21.7; shipbuilding and repairing, from 22.3 to 17.0.

Outstanding low rates were reported by synthetic textile fibers —1.4; synthetic rubber—2.1; electric lamps (bulbs)—2.9; communication and signaling equipment other than radio—3.4; explosives —4.0; optical and ophthalmic goods—4.2; soap and glycerin—4.7.

Young GOP In Home District Wants McCarthy Booted

They may love him in the Senate—at least on the GOP side—but the Young Republicans of his home district can't stomach Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

At their annual picnic at Green Bay, they passed a resolution urging Wisconsin voters not to send him back to the Senate when he comes up for re-election next year. The resolution was passed after heated debate during which three members walked out when passage seemed assured. It read:

"We, the Young Republicans of the 8th District, hereby recommend that members of the Republican Party and citizens of the State of Wisconsin do not return Sen. Joseph McCarthy to office next spring for the following reasons:

"He has accomplished nothing of importance during his five years in office.

"He has engaged in character assassination and mud-slinging tactics, thus discouraging good men from holding public office."

Third CIO Maritime Union Settles, Shipping Resumed

ATLANTIC and Gulf Coast shipping has returned to normal as the CIO Marine Engineers, last of three striking CIO maritime unions, resumed work after an 11-day walkout.

The three separate agreements, signed by MEBA, the National Maritime Union and the American Radio Association, represented complete victory for all three unions. The contracts followed a similar pattern, except in the matter of money.

The American Merchant Marine Institute, the employer group with which negotiations were carried on and which finally agreed to the unions' proposals, complained that the terms of the settlement "would be very costly for the industry."

The MEBA contract contains the following provisions:

An 8% raise in basic wages and a 44-hour work week at sea to be reduced Dec. 15 to 40 hours for the duration of the pact; three weeks vacation for each engineer employed by the same company continuously for a 12 month period; all engineers up to and including second engineers to be hired through the union hiring hall, and payment of overtime for all men on watch between 5 p.m. and 8 a.m. when a cargo is being worked.

The companies also agreed to employ a relief engineer on every ship engaged in foreign trade while docked or anchored at a continental U. S. port.

The NMU contract raises able-bodied seamen from $248.41 to $267.09 monthly. Radio operators get an increase in base pay from $352.13 monthly to $417.61, and a chief engineer's pay is hiked from $696.95 to $788.54 monthly.

Heart Unit Board Picks McDonald

Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers has been named to the board of directors of the American Heart Association.

Announcing the appointment of McDonald and Pres. A. J. Hayes of the Intl. Association of Machinists, Dr. Louis N. Katz, AHA president, declared that "organized labor has displayed an increasing interest in the American Heart Association and its affiliates."

"This has been due to the growing realization that heart disease is as important and as challenging a problem to the working man as it is to the farmer and other large segments of the population," he said.

Heckler Of Pickets Draws $15 Fine

Pickets have been charged with many crimes and misdemeanors, including disturbing the peace, but a man in Detroit was fined—for disturbing pickets.

CIO Clothing Workers were picketing the Richman Brothers store as part of the union label drive.

Thomas Jerome started needling the pickets in raucous tones, wanting to know why the union was "letting Niggers picket."

Judge Joseph Gillis found Jerome guilty of disturbing the pickets. The sentence: $15 fine or 15 days in jail.

In This Year's First Quarter

Manufacturers' Sales Reach All-Time Record

SALES OF U. S. manufacturing corporations reached a new all-time peak during the first quarter of 1951, according to quarterly estimates issued last week by the Federal Trade Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Net profits after taxes in the first quarter amounted to $3.3 billion—a trifle below the second half of 1950, but 36% above the first quarter of 1950.

Net sales of manufacturing corporations increased to a new record of $53.1 billion during the 1951 first quarter but costs and expenses also went up so that net operating profit declined about 1%.

According to the report, the rate of return on stockholder's equity after taxes in the first quarter of this year is estimated at 14.8% on an annual basis, down 1.6% from the preceding quarter.

The annual rate of profit for the smallest sized group of corporations, those with assets under $250,000, increased from 8% in the fourth quarter of 1950 to 14.4% during the first quarter of this year.

Of the 22 different manufacturing industries classified in the report, five showed an increase of profits during the first quarter of 1951, compared with the fourth quarter of 1950. Industries showing increases were printing and publishing, motor vehicles and parts, chemicals, fabricated metals, and non-electrical machinery.

Related to sales, profits after taxes in the first quarter of this year ranged from 10.2c per dollar for the petroleum group to 2.6c for the food group. In the preceding quarter, the range of profits to sales was 13% to 3% for the same industries.

Total assets at the end of March, 1951, were estimated in the report at $131.2 billion. Current assets came to $77.8 billion and current liabilities were estimated at $31.4 billion.

Net working capital of manufacturing corporations at the end of the first quarter of 1951 amounted to $46.4 billion, or about $1.4 billion more than at the end of 1950.

Anti-Red Bill Vetoed

Gov. Adlai Stevenson of Illinois has vetoed the Broyles-Young bill to outlaw communism. He said present state and federal laws are adequate. Under the bill persons convicted of subversive acts faced up to 20 years in prison and $20,000 fine.

Profits By Industry Groups

Industry Group	Profits after Taxes—First Quarter 1951
Food	$ 220,000,000
Tobacco	32,000,000
Textile mill products	181,000,000
Apparel and finished textiles	33,000,000
Lumber and wood products	79,000,000
Furniture and fixtures	30,000,000
Paper and allied products	172,000,000
Printing and publishing	36,000,000
Chemicals	352,000,000
Petroleum and coal	496,000,000
Rubber	73,000,000
Leather	20,000,000
Stone, clay and glass	113,000,000
Primary non-ferrous metal	139,000,000
Primary iron and steel	253,000,000
Fabricated metal	174,000,000
Machinery (extending electrical & transportation)	291,000,000
Electrical machinery	164,000,000
Transportation equipment (excluding automobiles)	42,000,000
Motor vehicles and parts	265,000,000
Instruments, etc.	44,000,000
Miscellaneous	53,000,000
All Manufacturing	$3,261,000,000

CIO Tells Its Story In New Pamphlet

THE CIO is telling all about itself in a new pamphlet, "This Is the CIO," which has just been completed by the CIO Publicity Dept.

In a few pages, it tells the story of the 35 national unions, nearly 400 state and local councils, and six million workers who make up the CIO—the aims and hopes of the CIO, its history in brief, how it operates, and its role in politics and international affairs.

The aims and aspirations it tells in two brief paragraphs from the preamble to the CIO Constitution.

The booklet describes how the CIO was born in 1935 "out of the misery of wage cuts, unemployment and bread lines of the 1930 depression." Its first great job was to tackle the organization of the country's great mass production industries. How well it has done is part of the American story.

"In the 15 years of its history," the booklet says, "the CIO has gone far to achieve its goal of industrial democracy.

"Wages have been greatly increased. Workers won security, and they could no longer be fired from their jobs without cause; and their unions gained security through recognition by management and the signing of collective bargaining agreements. Welfare plans and pension programs have been instituted in wide segments of America's basic industry.

"THESE advances have not come easily. They have not been handed CIO on a 'silver platter'.

"The gains were wrested through militant union activity, through patient collective bargaining, and, where necessary, through strikes."

The booklet shows how CIO national unions operate independently in their own fields, and join forces in a confederation to form the CIO itself and to set general policy at the annual conventions and more frequent executive board meetings.

It also shows how the CIO acts as the joint voice of its national unions in dealings with the government, through special committees, and in the state and city councils.

Described separately is the work of the Political Action Committee, the arm of the CIO that seeks "to help win the nomination and election of the best possible candidates," and also tries "to assure that every union member is registered to vote."

LIKEWISE, THE increasingly important role of the CIO in international affairs is touched upon, with emphasis upon the CIO dedication "to developing the strength of free democratic trade unions and of combatting the attack on free trade unions by totalitarian governments."

The booklet also lists CIO unions and organizing committees and is illustrated by photographs. Order Publication No. 193 from the CIO Publications Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Price, 100 copies $6; 1000 copies $50.

Holderman Hits TV Channel Ban

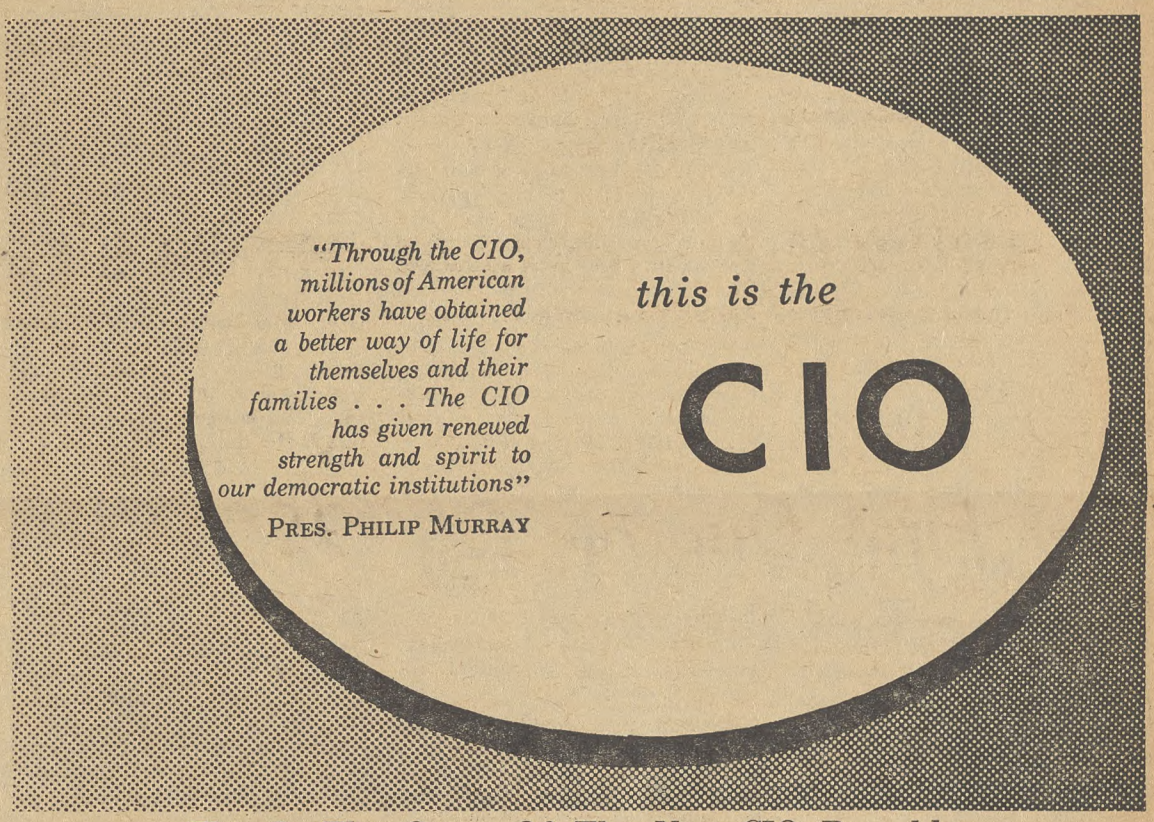
Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council has denounced the Federal Communications Commission's decision to deny the state any television channels for educational purposes.

Terming the action "doubly discriminatory," Holderman in letters to the FCC and State Education Commissioner John H. Bosshart said it "puts New Jersey in a class apart from the other 47 states, all of which have received allocations for educational television." He added:

"It also discriminates against non-profit education in favor of commercial profit television, since nine channels in the State have been allotted to commercial TV and none to education."

He pointed out that the CIO with 250,000 members in New Jersey "is largely composed of parents who have a vital concern with the educational progress of our state."

"We cannot permit our progressive educational system and the future sound education of our children to be endangered by this grossly discriminatory action," he declared.



This Is The Cover Of The New CIO Pamphlet

FTC's 'Independent Experts' 'Go Unlucky' For Luckies

COMES now the Federal Trade Commission to make official what a lot of citizens have strongly suspected for some time.

Namely: The claims of various cigarette manufacturers — that their product is "superior" to other leading brands because it allegedly contains less nicotine, acid, tar and throat irritants—is just so much stuff.

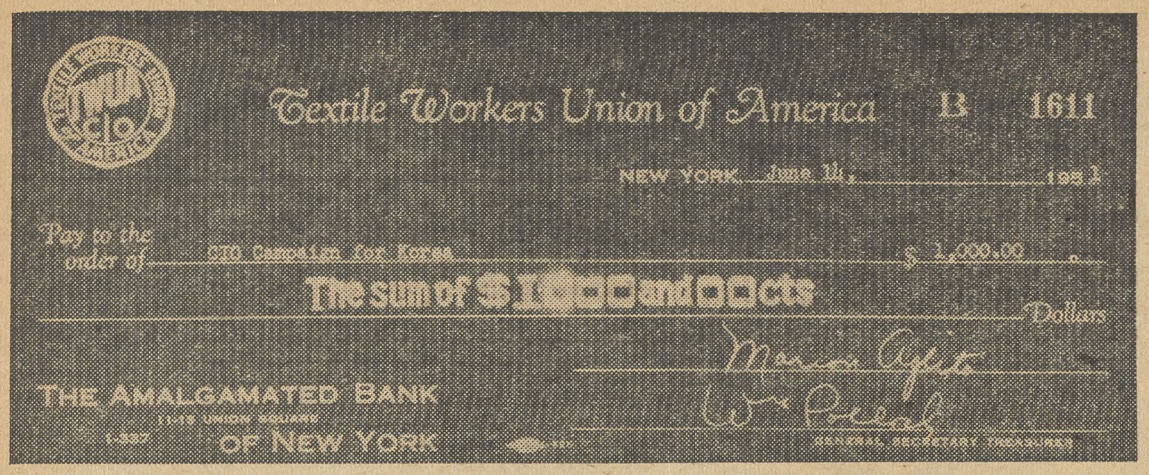
In cracking down on the American Tobacco Co., after eight years of effort, FTC declared in effect, that there is no scientific basis for the company's claim that a smoker will be rendered "Happy" if he or she "Goes Lucky."

The firm was ordered to stop claiming that Lucky Strikes are "less irritating to the throat, easy on the throat or provide protection against coughing."

FTC also called a halt to American Tobacco's practice of saying that Luckies are preferred "2 to 1 by independent tobacco experts."

Of the "independent experts" listed by the company, FTC agents found that some had no connection at all with the tobacco business; some had never smoked a cigarette; others who the firm has claimed said they smoke Luckies exclusively also smoke other brands, and some had yet to try a Lucky.

The findings in the Lucky Strike case parallel earlier reports about Camels and Old Golds.



THIS $1000 CHECK from the CIO Textile Workers was among the sizable checks received recently by the National CIO Community Services Committee for the CIO Campaign for Korea. The CIO Communications Workers and Local 271 of the CIO Electrical Workers, Cambridge, Mass., gave $500 and 22 cartons of food and clothing, respectively. The CIO fund provides packages for UN servicemen in Korea and aids in building democratic unions there.

'Walking Blood Bank' Pride Of USA Local

THE PRESIDENT of the CIO Steelworkers Local 1680 is called "The Blood Bank" around Erie, Pa.

He is Jack Kaiser, a 45-year-old plant guard at the Erie Enameling Co. Recently he was "tapped" for the 34th pint of blood he has given in a few short years.

When Jack walks into Hamot Hospital to make a contribution, they jot down his case history from memory. And there is never any discussion as to which arm the precious fluid will be taken from. He has only one.

He gave his first pint in Kane, Pa., during World War II. Since then he has maintained a regular schedule of donating once about every eight weeks.

Jack lost his left hand and part of his arm when he was 10 years old as the result of picking up a dynamite cap while on his way to school. The injury, however, was not permitted to restrict his activities.

When he left high school, he went to work in a lumber yard, unloading brick, cement, sand and lumber from box cars. Then he worked in a coal mine at Kramer, Pa., keeping pace with two-handed fellow workers for nine years.

He moved to Erie in 1945 and went to work for the enameling firm. He served as a grievance committeeman during the first year. In 1947 he was elected vice president of the local and since 1949 has been president.

Reuther Offers Plan To End Machine Tool Bottleneck

WALTER P. Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers, has presented the government with an extensive program for producing critically-needed machine tools on an assembly line basis to eliminate "the most critical bottleneck in our defense program."

In a detailed letter to President Truman and Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, Reuther asked the government to investigate the feasibility of his plan which, he said, would reduce the time lag in machine tool deliveries by 50 to 75%.

Reuther called his plan "unorthodox," but he said something had to be done to get machine tools. The entire defense program is being held up by a two and three year backlog of orders in the industry, he claimed. He recommended:

1. All-out utilization of machine tool and tool and die industries.

2. Governmental establishment of central machine tool assembly plants.

3. Large-scale farming out of contracts for component parts of machine tools to mass production industries.

4. A general tightening up of machine tool priorities to make sure that companies needing the complex machines most get them first.

Reuther said that while most plants would be unable to make whole machine tools, they could make parts which could be assembled quickly in central assembly plants.

He said this would speed up conversion to defense production and eliminate much unemployment caused by long shutdowns in cases where conversion lags because machine tools are lacking.

Two CIO Men On Panel

Martin J. Walsh, Boston, New England director of the CIO Steelworkers, and Daniel Gallagher, of Hartford, former Connecticut State director of the CIO Textile Workers, have been named to a new Panel on Human Resources of the Committee for New England. Gallagher is a TWUA international representative.

"What's the difference between 'Capitol' and 'Capital'?... Apparently none at this session, my boy!"

Lewis Charged With Planning UAW Raids

THE CIO Auto Workers' executive board has charged that the recent visit of United Mine Workers Pres. John L. Lewis to UAW Local 600's tenth anniversary of the Ford first contract was part of a program to raid the UAW membership.

Pointing out that representatives of UMW's Dist. 50 have lately approached former officials of the Auto Workers "with offers of highly remunerative posts with District 50," the UAW board said "the desire and intention to raid were there."

The board warned that if there is any further attempt on Lewis' part "to raid our union," it will be fought "with all the strength of our organization."

ATTENTION was called by the board to the fact that Lewis' salary of $50,000 yearly, "not counting his unlimited expense account, his custom-built Cadillac and his liveried chauffeur," is more than the combined salaries of all four UAW international officers. The statement said

"While Lewis blasts the Taft-Hartley Act, he continues to play politics with the very reactionary politicians who were the authors and sponsors of that Act, such as Sen. Bridges (R. Vt.).

"He has joined hands with the National Association of Manufacturers," the statement added, "in that organization's fight to destroy price control so that profiteers can pick the pockets of American consumers."

THE UAW statement further charged that while the union was attempting to organize the workers of a "runaway shop," Lewis' Dist. 50 "signed a back-door agreement" with the company, providing wage rates as much as 90c an hour less than those in UAW plants.

Ore. Woodsmen's Job Injuries Up

Job injuries are on the increase in the Columbia River area logging industry, Vice Pres. Jim McKay, of the Columbia River District Council of the CIO Woodworkers, said in a report last week.

McKay listed five incidents in which workmen received severe injuries at sawmill and logging operations. Regular reports on job accidents are made at each council meeting, he said.

Security vs. Freedom Views Collected

HOW SHALL we safeguard both the national security and the rights of free citizens living in a democracy?

This vital and pressing question is considered in the latest issue of the Library of Congress "Public Affairs Abstracts," entitled "Loyalty, Security and Freedom."

Twenty-nine recent books and articles dealing with aspects of the problem are summarized in this set. It also includes a short history of the control of subversive activities in this country and a selective bibliography of official government publications about the subject.

One of the featured articles is "Communist Tactics in American Unions," written by Nat Goldfinger, CIO Associate Director of Research, in collaboration with Albert Epstein.

Another summarizes the House Labor Committee's Report on Communist infiltration in the Fishermen's, Longshoremen's and Marine Cooks & Stewards Unions. All three unions were expelled from the CIO, although the abstract nowhere makes this fact known.

In an introductory statement, the publication notes that "the American people have been, from the earliest times, devoted to the concept of freedom as a vital principle dominating the lives of men."

Pointing out that the problem assumed serious proportions "since World War II as the true character of the international Communist movement has been revealed," the introduction warns:

"THE CONFLICT between security and freedom is serious and fundamental: without freedom, the America that we have known and cherished cannot exist, for freedom is an absolute essential to the 'American way of life'; but without security, there can be no freedom. If security is given preference, freedom may suffer; if freedom is given priority, it may be short-lived."

According to Eilene Galloway, editor, the material was chosen to point out, rather than to develop completely, the different aspects of the problem.

"Loyalty, Security and Freedom" may be obtained for 30c from the Card Division, Library of Congress, Washington 25, D. C.

McGrath Seeks To Tighten T-H Red Oath Wording

ATTY. GEN. J. Howard McGrath has proposed that Congress tighten up the Taft-Hartley Act's non-communist affidavit section.

A union official, in addition to swearing he is not a communist, would be required to state that he had not been one for the 12 months previous, under McGrath's proposal.

McGrath made the proposal in letters to Speaker Rayburn (D. Tex.), of the House and Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The present section reads that the union officer must make an affidavit that "he is not a member of the Communist Party, and that he does not believe in and is not a member of, and does not support any organization that believes in or teaches the overthrow of the U. S. government by force or by any illegal or unconstitutional method."

The phrase "and that for the preceeding 12-month period he has not been a member of the Communist Party," would be added to the above by McGrath's proposal.

The Justice Dept. has experienced difficulty in prosecutions under the section in its present form, McGrath said, because of the necessity of proving the union official making the affidavit was at that moment a member of the Communist Party.

He pointed out that since the required affidavit was couched in the present tense, no criminal prosecution was possible "unless it can be shown that the subject officers in fact continued their affiliation with the Communist Party."

Ever Try Renting Trolley Tracks?

The flimsiest evidence on which realty interests ask for removal of rent control has been uncovered by the United Labor Policy Committee of Shreveport, La.

In a brief filed with the Shreveport City Council, which is considering whether rent controls should be continued, the committee attacked the reliability of a survey made by Centenary College. The committee said that where the report listed a rental vacancy a check showed that "one corner is a vacant lot, another corner is an office building, another corner is a trolley run-around, and the other corner is a church, there being no housing units here at all, either vacant or occupied."

Pres. Robert L. Travis of Local 3411 of the CIO Communications Workers is the committee's secretary-treasurer.

CIO, AFL Finger Red 'Labor' Front

The "United Labor Action Committee" of New York city has been repudiated by CIO and AFL groups there as "Communist front" that has nothing to do with organized labor.

In a joint statement, both labor organizations declared that organized labor in the city had no part in a picket line sponsored by ULAC at the U. S. Wage and Hour Division office in New York. (This agency is headquarters for the Wage Stabilization Board in N. Y. C.)

"The ULAC in New York City is composed entirely of organizations and individuals long since repudiated by organized labor for being Communist and for slavishly following the Communist line," the statement said. "It is significant that the Communist party stooges have joined the National Association of Manufacturers in fighting the Defense Production Act and the necessary controls which are vital at this time."

In Auto Industry:

Faulty Reconversion Makes Thousands Idle

THOUSANDS of members of the CIO Auto Workers were idle last week because of sloppy government defense planning.

They had to be laid off, their employers said, because of restrictions on the use of critical materials that forced cutbacks in production, and to a certain extent by credit restrictions which have prevented the sale of cars already produced.

The UAW has maintained that proper planning would have channelled a flow of defense orders into the plants to take up the slack in employment.

The Chrysler Corp. cut its work force 15,000 under the June 1 level. As 2500 workers had already been laid off, the figure stood at 17,500 by the end of the week.

The Briggs Manufacturing Co. furloughed 6800 employes in the Detroit area and 1200 at Evansville, Ill.

At the Ford Motor Co. Lincoln plant in Detroit, 3000 employes worked only Thursday and Friday of last week. Some 13,000 others in this country worked a four-day week, while more than 10,000 in Windsor, Ont., have been jobless while the company plans cutbacks.

General Motors is shutting down for a week beginning July 28, in an effort to avoid mass layoffs.

UAW Asks Election At Stove Plant

THE CIO Auto Workers—which in May filed unfair labor practice charges against the anti-union Detroit-Michigan Stove Co. of Detroit—has now filed a petition for a National Labor Relations Board election at the firm's two plants in Detroit.

The first charge grew out of revelations of anti-union gangster activities at the plants, which were aired before the Senate's Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee.

The petition for the election was filed because "the stove workers flocked to the union . . . for union protection" during an organizing campaign that started May 23, according to Michael F. Lacey, the union's regional co-director.

During the UAW organizing campaign, said Lacey, workers were called into the office and told to sign "what amounts to a yellow dog contract" stating they did not want a union in the plant. Some who refused were laid off, he added, but "at the proper time, the union will take action against the company on the basis of its conduct" during the drive.

"Although John Fry, company president, stated last month that Detroit-Michigan Stove workers were 'free to join' any union they chose," Lacey commented, "it is now quite clear that Mr. Fry's statement had no more truth in it than the testimony he gave to the Kefauver Committee."

Major Gain Won By IWA In Texas

A four-year drive of the CIO Woodworkers in the east Texas lumber industry has paid off with the signing of a contract with the Kirby Lumber Co., Silsbee.

The new contract covers some 1600 employes and grants four paid holidays, vacations with pay, the check-off and union security. It establishes an 85c starting rate with wage increases ranging from 4 to 16c per hour.

"The establishment of paid holidays in the Kirby contract is a major gain for this area," IWA Rep. Bruce Brown said, "as it is something entirely new in the sawmills here."

Golden Is Named To ESA Salary Board

Clinton S. Golden, former vice-president of the CIO United Steelworkers, was named by Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnson to a five-member Salary Stabilization Board.

The group will develop and administer stabilization policy effecting salaries of executive, administrative, professional, and some sales and supervisory employes.

Golden is now consultant to the Economic Cooperation Administration and a Harvard University lecturer.

"I know we're members of the same union, but can't you stop calling me 'Brother'?"

Boiler-Plate Firm Called Monopoly

The Dept. of Justice has asked the Federal Court at Jacksonville, Fla., to declare the Western Newspaper Union guilty of trying to monopolize the sale and distribution of printing equipment and supplies to rural newspapers.

Besides selling supplies, the firm—it bears no resemblance to a labor union—does a large business selling "boiler-plate" to small weeklies and dailies. This consists of "canned" editorials, cartoons, columns and "filler."

The court also was asked to order cancellation of what the Dept. of Justice said are unlawful contracts between the company and certain publishing firms. Named with the WNU were two subsidiaries, E. C. Palmer & Co., Ltd., New Orleans, La., and the Harry W. Brintnall Co., San Francisco.

WSB OK's Two Hikes Above 10% Formula

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has approved pay increases of 9c hourly for 45,000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers employed by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co.

The pay raise was effective July 2.

The increase matches that won by the union at General Electric under terms of the escalator clause in the GE contract.

Westinghouse had made no objection to approval of the raise but the company has asked for price relief, despite the fact that sales are 506% of those of 1939, profits before taxes are 912% of the 1939 figure and earnings per share of common stock are 409% of that year.

The WSB approved the increase even though it exceeds the 10% limit, on the grounds that it was justified by rising living costs.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey wired company officials urging that they put the increase into effect immediately even in the absence of assurance of price relief "so there will be no uncertainties which may cause interference with production."

WSB also has approved a full 11c hourly raise for members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

The board several weeks ago approved a 9c hourly increase for the UPW but delayed action on the additional 2c because it would exceed the ceiling. And again the increased cost of living was the main factor in the board's action.

Floor And Demands Both Concrete

"Concrete" demands were presented by CIO Auto Workers employed at the Wright Aeronautical Corp.'s plant at Caldwell. N. J.

The 500 workers staged a one-day walkout in protest against having to stand on hard concrete flooring. They contended their feet, and defense production, suffer because of the footing; engineers demurred on the grounds the plywood mats they demanded might prove a safety hazard.

Transit Pact Averts Strike In New York

THREAT OF a strike in New York's vast subway and bus lines was averted by a last minute agreement granting demands of CIO Transport Workers for a 40-hour week at the same wages now paid for 48 hours.

The shorter week, to be put in effect in four steps, amounts to a 30c hourly increase for top bus drivers and subway motormen, with the over-all average 23c for the 36,000 employes of the municipal lines.

Beginning Oct. 1, as many employes as possible — most shop workers and non-operating employes numbering about 17,000— will start the 40-hour week.

All others who continue to work 48 hours will receive a monthly bonus of 10c an hour until Jan. 1, 1952, or until they go on the shorter week if that is sooner.

After Jan. 1 employes working more than 40 hours will receive time and half for all extra hours. On July 1, 1952, the five-day, 40-hour becomes effective throughout the system.

Complicated rescheduling made it necessary to put the shorter week into effect gradually.

White Urges South To Awaken

Walter White, executive secretary of the Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has appealed to the South to ditch its present "demagogic political leadership" and join the forces of freedom.

White, speaking at the closing session of the NAACP 42nd annual convention in Atlanta, Ga., cited a recent conference of the governors of three Southern states to devise plans for circumventing any U. S. Supreme Court decision invalidating segregation in public education.

He said the governors of Georgia, South Carolina and Mississippi attended the conference. White asked, "When will the intelligent South awaken to the insult to its intelligence such men represent?"

The conference, he suggested, "constituted a conspiracy to overthrow democracy through defiance of the government and threats to deprive all citizens, white as well as Negro, of education."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

(This column, during Mr. Haywood's absence, is being prepared by his staff.)

PRES. MORRIS PIZER, of the United Furniture Workers, reports that since May his union has won five representation elections and 12 union shop decisions. The representation election were: Oxford Cabinet Co., Oxford, Pa., UFWA 122, no union 37; Ware Mattress Manufacturing Co., Tampa, Fla., UFWA 42, no union 37; O'Hearn Manufacturing Co. Gardner, Mass., UFWA 37, no union 16; Elkins Furniture Co., Elkins, N. C., UFWA 105, no union 27, and Avalon Products Inc., Los Angeles, Calif., 30 recognized without election.

Allan Haywood

The union shop elections were: Melodigrand Corp., Long Island City, N. Y., 21 for, 2 against; Kranich & Bach, Long Island City, unanimous; Weser Piano Corp., Long Island City, unanimous; Hardman-Peck Co., Long Island City, 73 for, 1 against; Krakauer Bros., Long Island City, 19 for, 3 against; Sohmer & Co., Long Island City, 39 for, 6 against; National Piano Co., Long Island City, 38 for, 2 against; Winter & Co., Long Island City, 247 for, 23 against; Steinway & Sons, Long Island City, 344 for, 17 against; L. Kaufman Co., Los Angeles, unanimous; Arrom Mill Co., Los Angeles, 148 for, 14 against; Knott Manufacturing Co., Tell City, Ind., 44 for, 16 against.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that the Lithographers—CIO won a representation victory at Gamse Brothers, Inc., Baltimore, Md. Of 37 eligible voters, 23 ballots were cast for the Amalgamated and 6 against.

The IUE lists seven representation election victories at the following plants, according to Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett. The wins were: Ex-Ray Manufacturing Co., New York, IUE 16. no union 3; Erie Resistor, Erie, Pa., IUE 485, IAM 431, 6 challenged. 10 void; Micamold, Brooklyn, IUE 516, no union 25, void 21, challenged 11; Dumont Electric Co., New York, IUE 166, UE 120, no union 5, void 1; Champion Corp., Long Island City, IUE 69, no union 2; Hellige Corp., Long Island City, IUE 106, no union 5, and G & G Precision Co., Long Island City, IUE 29, no union 0.

Reg. Dir. George De Nucci reports a representation election and 10 union shop victories in Ohio. At the Ohio Power Co., Prospect, the CIO Utility Workers defeated the AFL by more than 7 to 1 in the representation win. Staff Rep. Ed Ward handled the situation. The union shop elections were held in Lima by the Brewery Workers. The distributing houses which won security victories were: G & K, Fair, Thompson, Buckeye, Shawnee, Bonamo, Klepper, Burkhardt, C & G, and Ringer. The Brewery Workers were represented by Joe Emmons.

The Steelworkers report two NLRB representation wins. De Nucci reports an 18 to 14 victory at the Meridian Plastic Co., Byesville, O. At the Volco Brass Copper Co., Kenilworth, N. J., the Steelworkers won a smashing victory over the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, the former bargaining agent. The vote was Steelworkers 212, Mine, Mill 135.

REG. DIR. MICHAEL LIVODA reports two representation wins for the Brewery Workers in Trinidad, Col., on the same day. At the Crystal Bottling Co., the Brewery Workers won a unanimous vote and at the Colorado Brewing Corp. there was only one vote against the CIO union.

Pres. Martin Wagner of the United Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers reports a 4 to 1 victory in a representation election at the plant of the Blue Ridge Stone Corp. Blue Ridge, Virginia. The CIO union polled 47 votes against 12 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson reports an NLRB representation victory for LIU 1756 in the Pacific American Fisheries Canning plant, Bellingham, Wash. The vote 48 to 8 in favor of the CIO, with 4 challenged ballots. In the June 18 issue of the CIO NEWS, a representation victory by LIU local 1754 at the Paragon Fish Co. was erroneously placed at Bellingham, Wash. The plant is located at Aberdeen, Wash.

Absentees Many As Work Piles Up In Congress

By MILTON PLUMB

THE 82ND Congress continued to coast along at a snail's pace last week, despite the fact that its inactivity has brought on one of the worst legislative log-jams in history.

Absenteeism ran rampant as many Congressmen took advantage of the Fourth of July holiday for vacation jaunts lasting over the weekend. The Senate did not meet July 4 and the House held a mere "token" session to mark the 175th anniversary of American independence.

The vacant seats in both chambers, however, were not unusual. The 82nd Congress, excepting only its zeal for mud-slinging and usually useless investigations, has acted as though it were vacationing ever since it came into existence.

Senate Majority Leader McFarland, apparently irked by his colleagues' failure to press forward even the minimum program they had reluctantly agreed upon the previous week, took the floor July 2 and bellowed:

"This is becoming known as the Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday Congress. You can't keep them on the floor on Friday, and you can't get them back here on Monday."

He spoke to many empty seats. As usual, the habitual long weekends away from Washington were being observed.

ON THE same day, the bipartisan Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report underscored his remarks by announcing the results of its study of the present Congressional inaction.

It compared the legislative and reorganization records of the 81st Congress with those of the 82nd so far this year and came up with the following totals of the laws of all sorts each had enacted to June 20 in the corresponding years:

81st Congress:
First session, 1949	114
Second session, 1950	126
82nd Congress:
First session, 1951	51

During the 81st Congress, 50% of the bipartisan Hoover Commission's recommendations for reorganization of the federal government along more efficient lines were adopted. Twenty public laws on reorganization were enacted and 26 reorganization plans submitted by President Truman were accepted by Congress.

The savings resulting from these 46 measures approved by the 81st Congress are estimated by the Citizens' Committee at $2 billion a year.

The committee noted a "striking contrast" between this record and the fact that the 82nd Congress has not yet favorably reported out even a single one of 20 additional reorganization proposals now before it.

As a matter of fact, the House has held hearings on only one minor measure, while the Senate has held hearings on only four minor proposals.

"These are the facts and the facts speak for themselves," commented Dr. Robert L. Johnson, President of Temple University and national chairman of the Citizens Committee.

The committee estimates that an additional $3.4 billion a year would be saved the government through full enactment of the Commission's report.

INSTEAD OF following a more constructive approach to government economy, however, the 82nd Congress, dominated by the misnamed "economy" bloc of Republicans and Southern Democrats, has used the meat-ax technique to cut funds for essential services from pending bills appropriating funds to run the government during the coming fiscal year.

The so-called Ferguson amendment, adopted by the Senate, for example, means a straight down-the-line 10% cut in personnel funds and a crippling of many necessary government activities.

Federal personnel men have pointed out that this kind of false "economy," advocated by the big business pressure groups, is actually wasteful and means added costs to the government in the long run.

It is this kind of hatchetman approach, however, that Rep. Brownson (R. Ind.) had in mind when he boasted July 5 that the House "economy" bloc has cut a little more than $1 billion from the eight appropriations bills passed. He said that about $123½ million more would have been cut if the Republican-sponsored amendments had been accepted.

He didn't say that much of the $1 billion thus "saved" would deny the American people many essential government services.

Nor did he point out that, if Congress hadn't been completely inactive on the Hoover Commission proposals, as much as an estimated $3.4 billions could have been saved through increased government efficiency.

6-L

Eleven Senators Have Solution:

Use Tidelands' Oil Royalties For Education

ELEVEN MEMBERS of the Senate last week fought back against the House Judiciary Committee's attempt to turn over to vested interests as an outright gift oil estimated to be worth more than $40½ billion dollars — the property of the American people.

Led by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.), the group joined in sponsoring a bill designed to resolve the long-standing dispute over the tidelands in the public interest.

Under their proposal, which is now before the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, the royalties from tidelands oil would be used to raise educational standards in all 48 states and—during the national emergency only—to help pay for defense undertakings.

The House bill, which the House Judiciary Committee approved 18 to 6, would give the states full control over the marginal sealands for a distance of three miles from their coasts. Texas, especially favored, would get such control for 10½ miles.

This move has long been supported by the big oil interests, which have always found it easier to have their way with state officials than with those of the federal government.

FORMER SECY. of the Interior Harold Ickes waged a successful fight against the oil interests by claiming the rights to the tidelands for the federal government.

He was upheld in a series of Supreme Court decisions, beginning in 1947 and continuing until just a few months ago, which made it clear that the lands in the marginal seas belong to the nation as a whole.

Even before the Supreme Court had ruled, however, stooges for the oil interests in Congress were plotting to give their masters the nation's heritage. Four years ago, President Truman vetoed a measure similar to the present House bill.

He has told Congress that he will again veto such legislation.

The new Senate bill would place all tidelands oil royalties in a special account in the U. S. Treasury where they would be available for defense and for grants to aid primary, secondary and higher education. It provides that a National Advisory Council on Grants-in-Aid to Education would be created to administer the program.

Other sponsors of the measure besides Hill include Sens. Douglas (D. Ill.), Humphrey (D. Minn.), Morse (R. Ore.), Benton (D. Conn.), Tobey (R. N.H.), Kefauver (D. Tenn.), Neely (D. W.Va.), Sparkman (D. Ala.), Hennings (D. Mo.) and Chavez (D. N. Mex.).

Sens. Douglas and Hill last week took their campaign to the people over a radio network.

Douglas declared that "The American people have much at stake in the drive to save the offshore oil for all the people."

He referred to the financial crisis now confronting American education and added, "if the American people know that a large part of their huge educational bill can be financed without any cost to them, out of money which rightfully belongs to them, I know they will support our amendment."

In a separate statement, Humphrey said:

"This proposal offers the greatest opportunity to American education since the dedication of a large portion of our public lands to educational purposes through the land-grant colleges.

"WITH THE funds thus available through the tidelands oil royalties, we would build schools, train teachers, raise teachers' salaries, provide scholarships, improve and extend medical assistance and research, and help build a more wholesome America without any cost to the taxpayer."

Murray Asks TrumanToVeto Wetback Bill

VETO OF THE bill covering the importation of Mexican labor, which Congress passed June 30, was asked last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a letter to President Truman.

Murray said the bill would "intensify the evils" deplored by the President's Commission on Migratory Labor, and that it ignored the commission's "constructive program for providing an adequate supply of agricultural labor under decent living and working conditions."

He charged that the bill, in legalizing government contracting of illegal entrants, is "in effect sanctioning violations of the immigration laws and encouraging further illegal entries." His letter also said:

"The bill, by holding out the possibility for a large supply of cheap labor in processing factories and on the farms, will encourage backward-looking employers to continue sub-standard wages and other conditions which are far below the American standard of living. Hundreds of thousands of Americans who could be attracted by decent employment conditions will be driven to seek jobs elsewhere, or to remain idle or on uneconomic farms of their own. The normal improvement of employment conditions on agricultural and processing jobs that would otherwise occur will be retarded.

"The family-type farmers, who comprise the backbone of American agriculture, will likewise suffer.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate passed crippling bill banning price rollbacks. House debating its weak version, also preventing price rollbacks on beef.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes H.R. 4473	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House passed bill providing $7,206,000,000 increase. Senate Finance Com. now holding hearings.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
Importation of Mexican Farm Labor S. 984	Provides for importation of cheap foreign labor; encourages extension of substandard conditions for both domestic and imported farm workers.	Congress passed bill June 30 that intensifies these evils.	Urge President Truman to veto the bill.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Now before Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.
Labor Dept.-FSA Appropriations. H.R. 3709	Appropriates funds for operations of the Labor Dept. and Fed. Security Agency.	Passed House with cuts. Senate voted further 10% cut in personnel funds.	Ask Senators and Congressmen to restore funds.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 16, 1951 82 No. 29

Dixiegop 'Wreckers' Peril Hope Of Holding Down Zooming Prices

(See Page 3)

ICFTU'S SECOND CONGRESS: (Top) General view of the meeting in Milan, Italy. (Bottom) CIO delegates and aides, left to right, front row, Frank Bellanca of the Clothing Workers, Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, CIO delegation leader; CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg; Victor Reuther, CIO representative in Europe; second row, Martin Kyne of the Retail, Wholesale Union; Boyd Wilson of the Steelworkers, and Michael Ross, CIO Intl. Affairs Dept. director. John Brophy, ICFTU representative at UN is at the extreme left in the third row. Sol Stettin of the Textile Workers, one of the delegation, does not appear in this picture. (Story on Pages 6 and 7.)

WSB Okays CWA Raises In Two Areas

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has approved a wage increase for 45,000 CIO Communications Workers and set a pattern for contracts involving 140,000 more members.

The board told the Southern Bell Co., Atlanta, Ga., to pay its 45,000 workers a 10% wage increase. It also approved other features such as shorter schedules, equivalent to 2%, making the total increase 12%.

The company had withheld payment of the 2% on the grounds that it exceeded WSB's 10% formula. In making its decision, however, the board ruled that the 2% did not come within the 10% wage formula because it did not change maximum or minimum wages.

The same increase will go to employes of half a dozen other Bell System companies.

Nine thousand operators in 31 CWA locals in northern California and Nevada were voting on a strike last week after six weeks of negotiations with the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. failed to produce results.

The workers have not had a wage increase since 1948.

Price Fix Bill Monopoly Aid House Told

A HOUSE bill to legalize price-fixing would lead to greater monopolies and would ruin small business, Stephen J. Spingarn declared last week.

A member of the Federal Trade Commission, Spingarn testified before the House Judiciary subcommittee investigating monopoly, on a bill introduced by Rep. Walter (D. Pa.).

A similar measure introduced by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) has been okayed by the Senate's Judiciary Committee. The Senate will vote on final passage Aug. 3.

Spingarn testified the bill would weaken the commission's ability to stop "monopolistic and oppressive practices" in business.

Both the House and Senate proposals would permit manufacturers to charge different customers different prices for the same commodity if they can show the price differential was made in "good faith" to meet competition.

The effect would be to permit big corporations, like chain stores, to return to at least two of the practices that made them big:

1. Giant retailers could force manufacturers and wholesalers to give them price discounts by threatening to stop buying certain products. This would give the chains a definite sales advantage over smaller competitors —they would buy for less and thus could sell for less.

2. The big retailers could match prices in all areas with smaller, more efficient competitors by engaging in price matching.

This would destroy competition, since there would be no advantage in a small businessman reducing his prices—the big businessman would be allowed to match any price he set.

A NEW USE has been found for the old gray mare. The idea is set forth in this sign in a window of a restaurant on fashionable Connecticut Ave., Washington. Horse meat is not on the menu. The manager said that if controls are removed, high prices would force him out of business and would cause people to eat horse meat.

Grocery List Memo:

Get Horse Meat For Congressmen

THE 82nd Congress "stands at the threshold of immortality" and may go down in history as "the Horse Meat Congress—the Congress that put the old grey mare on the family dinner table," Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.) said last week during debate on Defense Production Act amendments.

Rabaut declared that because of high prices "already large numbers of the American people are being reduced to a diet of horse meat."

He quoted from the July 9 issue of Time magazine a report that Portland (Ore.) Journal's cooking expert is dispensing recipes on the preparation of horse meat for human consumption.

"This report says that the number of horse butchers has trebled, and sales of horse meat have increased three-fold because that's all the people can afford," Rabaut told the House. He noted that Time pointed out that horse meat had been "hitherto eaten as a stunt or only as a last resort."

RABAUT suggested that the song "The Old Grey Mare" might well be a fitting theme song "for a Horse Meat Congress."

"Many prices are out of line and need to be rolled back," he said. "And any amendment to deny roll-back authority can properly be called a Horse Meat Amendment."

Rabaut ended by saying that "when the old grey mare became the main course on the family dinner table because of the failure of Congress to support adequate price controls, I can only say that America isn't what it used to be."

As the week ended, reports circulated Congressional mail boxes began to contain packages of horse meat.

However, no Congressman who had eaten any of it could be found.

John Meskimen Named To OPS Labor Post

JOHN K. Meskimen, a member of the AFL Brotherhood of Railway Clerks who began his career as a messenger boy in the general office of the Atcheson, Topeka and Santa Fe, last week became labor assistant to Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle.

He was nominated for the post by the United Labor Policy Committee.

Before being inducted into the Army in 1943, Meskimen held various positions in the Arizona Division of the Santa Fe and for six years was general chairman of his union's system committee.

More than five years' service abroad in the U. S. manpower and labor-relations program in Germany followed his discharge from the Army. Since last February Meskimen has been a consultant to the Labor Dept. Defense Manpower Administration.

He is 42 years old and is a native of Lawrenceville, Ill.

"We have been working on the problem of setting up machinery for a labor liaison program for OPS for some time," DiSalle said.

"We have set up an industry advisory committee . . . and the appointment of Mr. Meskimen is another step toward assuring a role for every citizen in the battle against inflation."

JOHN K. MESKIMEN (left), labor adviser to Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle, is congratulated by DiSalle after the latter gives him the oath of office. Meskimen is a member of the AFL Brotherhood of Railway Clerks.

NLRB Knifes Union Shops Won In '47-9

THE National Labor Relations Board last week threatened the status of several thousand CIO union-shop contracts signed during the period between the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act in mid-1947 and the end of 1949.

The NLRB, in a case involving the Auto Workers at the Ford Forge Div. at Canton, O., held that union shop provisions based on elections before national CIO's officers signed T-H non-Communist affidavits in December, 1949, are no longer valid.

Then, going a step further, the board ruled that all contracts with union security provisions won after elections during that same 2½ year period, are no longer a bar to elections sought by competing unions.

Thus, hundreds of CIO industrial unions face danger of possible craft unit raids until the situation can be corrected. The case at Canton involved the effort of an AFL craft union to seek a special election. It claimed the UAW union shop contract could not stand in the way of a board election. The NLRB agreed.

The NLRB ruling—made without any full hearing on the issues —was in theory based on a Supreme Court decision, which had held that national officers of CIO and AFL must sign T-H non-Communist affidavits in order to make any affiliated union eligible to use NLRB's facilities.

The CIO—which had challenged the constitutionality of the affidavit provision of the anti-labor law—did not instruct its officers to sign the affidavits until December, 1949.

In a number of court cases, the need for CIO officers to sign the Taft-Hartley oath forms was an issue. The Supreme Court finally ruled that such signatures were necessary if affiliated unions were to use the NLRB.

That decision over-ruled the previous orders of the board itself, which had maintained that affidavits by officers of the parent federation were not necessary.

On the basis of the NLRB's earlier interpretation, unions went ahead with the special union security elections required by Taft-Hartley

But now the NLRB has ruled that though the unions were acting in "good faith" when they sought the elections and the subsequent security contract provisions, new elections may be necessary not only to save the union security clauses but the contracts themselves.

A sharp wave of protest against this needless action by the NLRB is almost certain to come from CIO unions around the country.

First reaction came from Thomas E. Harris, CIO assistant general counsel, who immediately branded the ruling as the "worst example yet of the board's inability to administer the Taft-Hartley Act."

He called the decision "exceedingly unjust and unnecessary," and accused the board of deciding too many big issues without full argument by the parties concerned.

Harris contended that the decision went farther than required by the Supreme Court's ruling.

Price Control Periled By Dixiegops

Action Taken Despite ULPC Warning

FRIDAY, July 13, 1951, the day a coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats in the House of Representatives brought to a peak their drive to kill price controls, will go down in history as "Black Friday the 13th" for consumers.

That was the pessimistic prediction of Rep. Spence (D. Ky.), chairman of the House Banking Committee and floor manager of the administration's fight for stronger anti-inflation controls.

His reference to Black Friday recalled one of the greatest financial crises in the nation's history, on another eventful Friday in 1869.

Abandon Hope

All through last week as the House considered amendments to the Defense Production Act, the Dixiegop combination which has done so much to discredit the 82nd Congress rode rough-shod over outnumbered administration forces. As the week closed, all hope of keeping any authority for future rollbacks on the prices of food and other farm products had been abandoned.

On July 12, by an overwhelming voice vote, the GOP-Southern Democrat "wrecking crew" threw out a proposal to permit food subsidies. And by a 159 to 139 margin it refused to permit the government to acquire and operate necessary defense plants.

The two votes followed warnings by representatives of the United Labor Policy Committee that labor will not submit to a wage stabilization program if Congress insists upon killing price controls.

While a final vote on the House bill is not expected until late this week, the trend has become clear enough to make it practically certain that sound price controls are doomed.

Two Objectives

At press time, administration forces had decided to concentrate on two objectives:

1. Stopping a farm bloc drive to repeal last month's 10% rollback on cattle prices, which would immediately result in a hike in beef price ceilings.

2. Stop a Republican drive to prevent further rollbacks on manufacturing prices. Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle has said this would also force the lifting of ceilings on new automobiles immediately in order not to discriminate against the industry.

Rep. Priest (D. Tenn.), Democratic whip, said that he thought these objectives might be realized, since the Dixiegop coalition was likely to split.

Many Republicans from urban areas were expected to break with the Dixiecrats in their drive to kill the 10% beef price rollback already in effect. They do not want to be in a position where they would be responsible for driving the already scandalous prices of beef still higher.

The Southerners, on the other hand, were expected to break with the GOP on the question of banning further rollbacks of manufacturing prices. Most Dixiegops have rural constituents. The present temporary suspension of price rollback authority has prevented the Office of Price Stabilization from rolling back prices of farm machinery.

Lobbyists Active

Why the American people were taking such a beating was made clear by Majority Leader McCormack (D. Mass.), when he took the floor to answer an attack by Rep. Halleck (R. Ind.). Pointing to the corridor outside the House floor, McCormack said that "representatives of pressure groups" are "handing out amendments to Congressmen" to be offered during debate.

"I have seen members of the House called off the floor by lobbyists and being handed amendments by the lobbyists," he charged

Rep. Walter (D. Pa.) saw in what was going on the reason why the consuming public had not answered the President's plea for a flood of letters supporting price controls.

"The people," he said, "apparently believe the cards are stacked against them and there is no use writing about it. They seem to be discouraged."

Elections Awaited

Other observers, however, saw it this way: The people, seeing that the 82nd Congress had already sold out their hopes for sound price control legislation to the big business and special interest groups, were merely waiting for next September's elections.

The Republicans will have a hard time explaining the additional $7 weekly in living expenses that each American family will then be paying because of the GOP action in killing price controls.

'No Friend Of High Prices Can Be A Friend Of Labor,' Says ULPC

The following statement was issued last week by the United Labor Policy Committee:

THIS IS A WARNING and an appeal to the American people from representatives of 15,000,000 American workers.

Congress is letting down our country's defenses.

Congress is now voting to weaken the Defense Production Act. We cannot have an effective defense production program without an effective stabilization program.

We believe that the American people agree that so long as the policies of the Soviet Union and its satellites continue to threaten free people anywhere, America and other free nations must continue to build their military power. A cease-fire order in Korea does not justify a cease-fire in our defense production or in the campaign against inflation.

In the Senate a combination of Dixiecrats and reactionary Republicans already has forced through a bill that will increase the cost of living a dollar a day for each and every American family. A similar coalition in the House of Representatives is now following suit. There is no justification whatsoever for higher prices now. Yet, lobbyists for the profiteers are exploiting the possibility of truce in Korea to further weaken price controls. Congress is succumbing to pressure from special interest lobbies with the excuse that the American people "just don't care."

Time is running out, but there are a few days left in which any American family can write, phone or wire their Congressman asking his vote for an effective stabilization program.

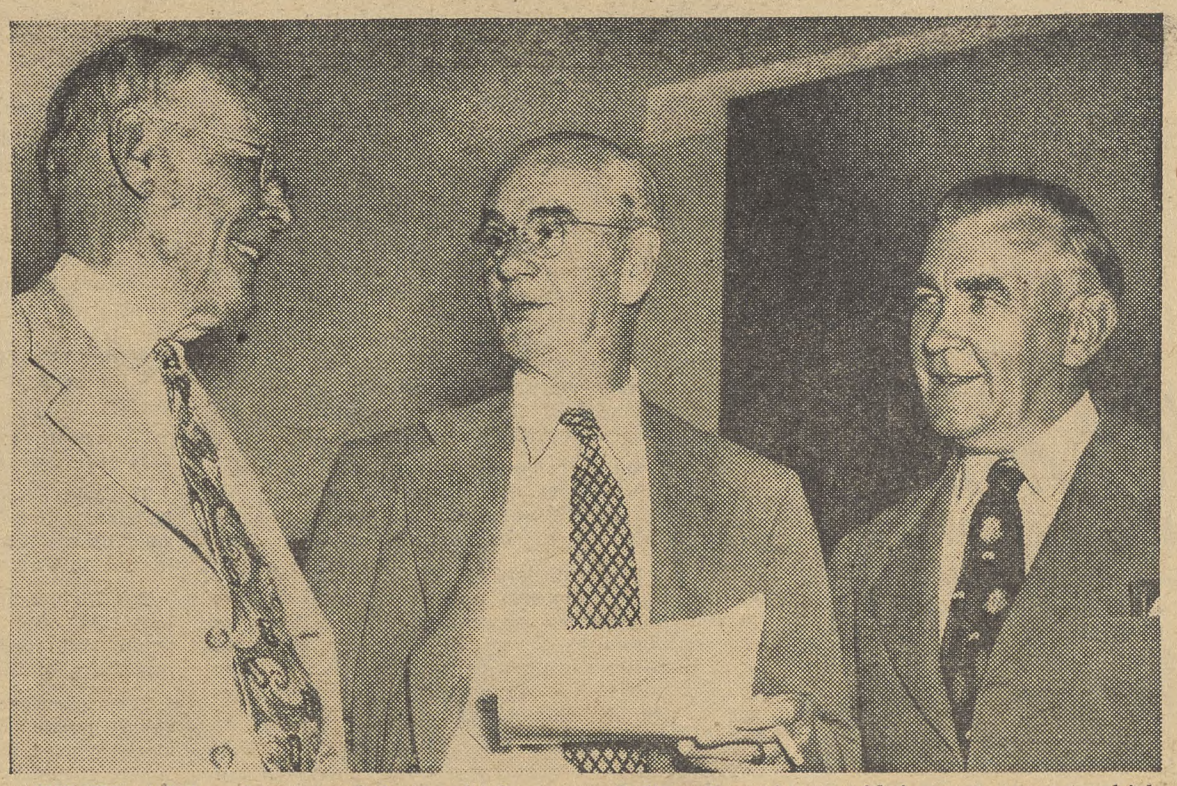
Members of Congress are answerable to the American people, not to any group of big business lobbyists. We ask now that the Representatives stand up and be counted and let the people judge at the next election.

The labor organizations represented on this United Labor Policy Committee pledge themselves to conduct a widespread educational campaign on the basis of the votes in the Senate and House on the Defense Production Act. American workers, looking at the voting record, will know that no friend of high prices can be a friend of labor.

Few Strikes In May

Just 400 new strikes started during May, the U. S. Dept. of Labor reported last week.

A total of 150,000 workers was involved. Total strikes in effect during the month numbered 580, including those in progress at the beginning. It was estimated that 250,000 workers participated.



"THERE ARE a few days left in which any American family can write, phone or wire their Congressmen asking his vote for an effective stabilization program," the United Labor Policy Committee said in a statement which CIO Pres. Philip Murray (center) is holding. Others are AFL Pres. William Green (left) and Machinists' Pres. Al Hayes.

Carey Warns Congress Of 'Disaster'

CONTINUING its fight for a sound price-rent-wage control program down to the last possible moment, organized labor held an extraordinary closed-door meeting on Capitol Hill with nearly 175 Congressmen.

The meeting, attended by both Democratic and Republican members, was arranged by Rep. Sabath (D. Ill.) and Rep. Javits (R.-Lib. N.Y.).

It was held in the House Ways and Means Committee room, just one hour before the House resumed voting on amendments to the Defense Production Act.

Besides three representatives from the United Labor Policy Committee, Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson also addressed the gathering.

Sabath later told reporters that he had asked Wilson to appear because "the main object of the meeting was to bring home to Congressmen that business as well as labor wants an effective controls program."

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey told the group that Congress is "trifling with disaster" in its actions on the new controls law.

AFL Pres. William Green said that Congress doesn't seem to sense the fact that labor "won't submit to wage controls" unless effective price controls are established. He said the Senate-passed bill is "inadequate."

Also speaking for the ULPC was C. T. Anderson, chairman of Railway Labor's Political League.

A Republican representative asked Carey if it wasn't President Truman who had abandoned price controls.

In reply, Carey read from a letter sent out by the National Association of Manufacturers in 1946 making it clear that "the NAM, not the President, dug the grave for controls." His response was warmly applauded. Even a substantial number of Republicans seemed impressed.

Pointing out that the bill now being considered by the House would guarantee high prices and increased rents and allow profiteering and speculation "to not only continue but to now get the blessing of Congress," Carey said that, if it approves such a law, Congress would be telling the American people:

"You who are worst off—you of fixed incomes and low incomes, you who are disabled servicemen or families of servicemen, you who are on pensions or are poorly paid white collar workers—to you we promise higher and higher prices and rents, no matter how little you are able to bear it."

Carey told the Congressmen that organized labor "cannot and will not support an economic stabilization program that is a fraud on the American people.

Give A Buck To PAC

There's Still Time

"We cannot have an effective defense production program without an effective stabilization program."

That statement, made by the United Labor Policy Committee, is a simple expression of fact. It has been said, in just about the same language, by President Truman, Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston and a host of responsible American citizens.

(For warning that price controls are a necessity, Wilson and Johnston—both of them businessmen—have been savagely attacked by the National Association of Manufacturers.)

It is clear from the record that the members of Congress who have been engaged in trying to scuttle, or to weaken, anti-inflation controls, don't care very much whether the defense production program moves ahead successfully, or whether it is wrecked on the rock of inflated costs.

Organized labor—CIO and AFL alike—have pleaded for a workable anti-inflation law, that will keep living costs down and keep production figures up.

But organized labor is not going to accept a "false-bottom" package which is labeled as a controls bill but actually encourages profiteers to make still greater super-profits.

Nor is organized labor going to accept a lop-sided bill that provides next to nothing in price controls while offering workers a tight control over their wages.

There is still time for the public to wire or write to Congressmen and Senators their demands for a bill that will actually control prices and bring down the cost of living.

And there is even more time for a majority of Congress to get out of the hypnosis induced by the special profit interests—and to pass an anti-inflation bill that will help our defenses and help our people to achieve equality of sacrifice.

Heard Round The World

The second convention of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions—which ended July 12 in Milan—struck a blow for freedom that will be felt in every part of the world.

The ICFTU meeting was anti-Communist. It condemned communist dictatorship as well as fascist repression. It scornfully turned aside a Trojan-horse proposal of "cooperation" from the Cominform's labor organization—which just a week before had been calling the ICFTU a "scab" organization.

But the value of the ICFTU is not limited to being against communism. The free unions of the world are for freedom and higher living standards and the abolition of poverty and insecurity wherever they exist.

Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who headed the CIO's delegation to the Milan meeting, truly challenged the Communists at a key point. For, Potofsky reminded the ICFTU conference, "the concept of freedom is, and always will be, a world revolutionary idea," since it "rejects the inevitability of poverty and injustice, and eternally seeks human betterment."

In its brief two years of life, the ICFTU has shown guts and a real determination to strengthen the democratic forces of the world. At Milan, it paved the way for greater activity on a world scale.

The CIO is proud of the International Conferedation of Free Trade Unions, and proud of American labor's help to the workers of every country who aspire to a better, more democratic way of life.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

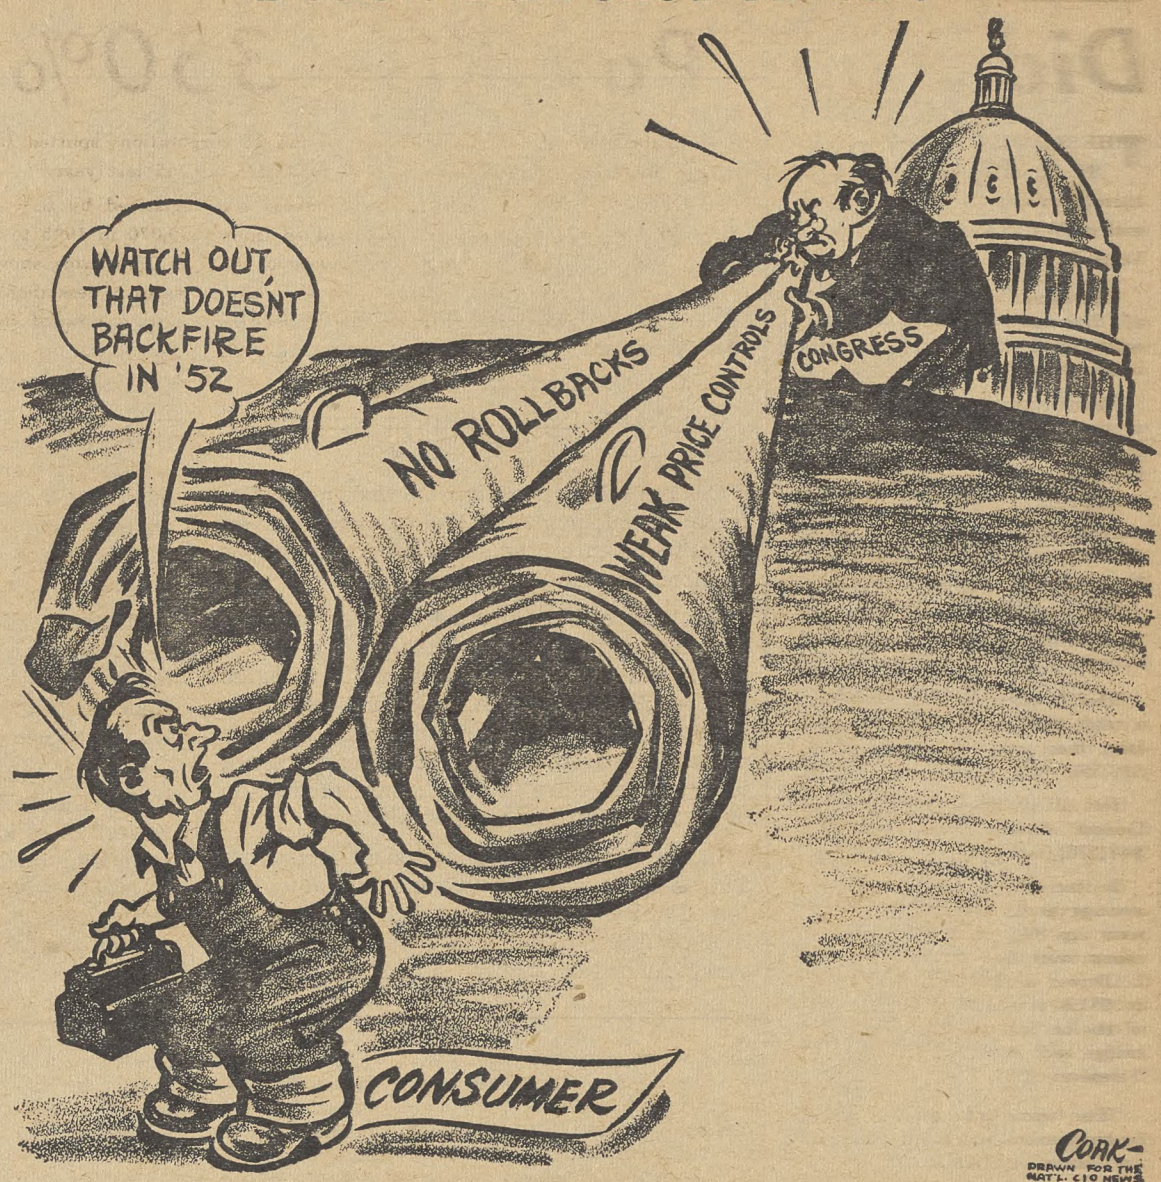
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV July 16, 1951 No. 29

Double-Barrelled Threat!



Why Public Housing?

On June 18, Rep. Phillips (R. Cal.) questioned the right of the Los Angeles CIO Council to speak for its members. Rep. Phillips challenged statements in a wire from the Council, which had protested a severe cut in appropriations for building new public housing units.

On July 9, Rep. Yorty (D. Cal.) inserted into the Congressional Record a letter from Secy. Treas. Albert Lunceford of the Los Angeles CIO Council. In the letter, Lunceford explains why the members of the CIO are angry about the housing situation. Excerpts of his letter follow:

UNDER THE Constitution of the United States, the people of this country are guaranteed the right of petition to the Congress. Our organization believes in exercising that right through the representative government of the structure of our union.

We believe in and support the declaration of policy enacted by the Congress of the United States that "the elimination of substandard and other inadequate housing through the clearance of slums and blighted areas, and the realization as soon as feasible of the goal of a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family, thus contributing to the development and redevelopment of communities and to the advancement of the growth, wealth, and security of the United States."

In the exercise of our democratic rights under the Constitution, we appealed from the tentative decision of the House restricting public housing starts to 5000 for the entire United States.

Here in Los Angeles, according to the Bureau of the Census housing survey just released, we have 59,000 substandard units of which 38.2 percent are considered to be so "run-down or neglected or of inadequate original construction, so that they do not provide adequate shelter or protection against the elements, or endangers the safety of the occupants."

The families who occupy these units on the whole make more effort to secure adequate housing than any other segment of our population.

One out of three of them pays 20 percent or more of the family income for shelter, and one out of seven goes to the extreme length of paying 35 percent or more of their family income for rent, and while the BLS shows an increase for April 1950 of 30 percent, the Census Bureau shows an increase of 54 percent over 1940.

Since that time rents have increased very substantially here in Los Angeles, with some families receiving increases as high as 100 percent.

Those who benefit most from our housing activities have been and continue to be those who are veterans of World War II. We supported the provisions for preference in any housing program to any of these veterans.

Those who say that public housing is not of prime interest to the veteran, his organization and the families of his deceased buddies would find difficulty in explaining the ardent support for this program by the entire list of recognized veterans organizations.

Our organization has worked with the representatives of these organizations in support of public housing, even though we recognize that the overwhelming majority of members of CIO, through the success of collective bargaining, are ineligible to secure the benefits of the public housing program.

NOR CAN WE ACCEPT the argument that the United States is about ready to go into bankruptcy.

We are the richest country in the world. The only thing we cannot afford is slums.

The public-housing program, as I understand, it is based upon Government guaranty of bonds issued by local housing authorities, which are sold in the investment market.

The high value of these bonds is shown by the low rate of interest which is charged for the money secured therefrom. This low rate contributes materially to the benefits of the program.

The real-estate industry and many of those who oppose public housing, support the use of Government insured credit for high-interest-rate-bearing bonds, such as the FHA and the VA.

These bonds, through the operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association, create a more serious drain on the United States Treasury than the contingent liability of the guarantee of public-housing bonds.

Business Executives Doing Fine, Thank You

Did Your Pay Rise 350% In Five Years?

THE SALARIES of corporation executives in the Newark, N. J., area have outstripped the wage increases of their production workers by an average of 350% since the end of World War II, according to a study by the Essex-West Hudson CIO Council.

The council study listed the earnings for 1945 and 1950 of 75 executives employed by 25 area corporations with which CIO unions have contracts, and found they had increased 137%.

Then it struck an average wage for a production worker in these same plants for the same years and found it has increased but 40%—from $47.50 weekly in 1945 to $66.58 last year.

The executives' salaries were taken from the reports submitted by each corporation to the Securities & Exchange Commission. The production workers' earnings came from the records of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The study also disclosed that the profits of the same 25 corporations in the vicinity gained 212% in the five-year period.

The 75 executives whose earnings were studied collected a total of $3,635,739 in 1945, the study shows. Five years later their pay envelopes had fattened to a total of $8,629,759.

Not all of them did as well as Frederic G. Donner, of General Motors, whose pay was upped 687% to a tidy $441,070 last year.

In fact, 16 of the executives didn't do as well as the average production worker; their take over the five years went up 8% to 39%. That, however, is no reason to mourn over their plight. The man who got only 8%, Frank L. Driver, of Driver-Harris, had a raise of $2668 a year—or $51.30 a week—to $37,108 in 1950. And the lowest-paid of the lot last year had earnings of $20,000—P. N. Trowbridge and Walter F. Gray, both of New Jersey Bell Telephone Co.

"The term 'salaries' includes all remuneration received by the executives for work performed during the year listed," the council explained.

"It does not, however, include retirement and pension benefits. Almost every listed corporation has such retirement benefits for its executives. In many instances, these retirement benefits for executives equal and in some cases even exceed the annual stipend received by the executives at the end of the war."

The earnings of the 25 corporations spurted from $554,068,904 in 1945 to $1,728,129,765 last year.

The greatest increase was registered by the Lionel Co., where the net jumped from $199,070 in 1945 to $2,263,534 in 1950—an increase of 1037%. Two firms showed losses, one a deficit, and four had increases of less than 40%. But 17 of them showed increases ranging upward from 103%.

"ON THE basis of facts contained in this report," the study concludes, "it is important to point out that any solution to inflation must contain, at least, the following:

"A stiff excess profits tax on all corporations.

"A sharp rise in income taxes for all high-income corporation executives.

"A rigid freeze on corporation executives' earnings—such as has been imposed upon production workers."

"Standings" in the Council's League of Heavy Earners are:

NAME AND FIRM	1950	1945	% Increase
F. G. Donner, GM	441,070	55,922	687
H. H. Curtice, GM	526,100	91,200	478
A. Bradley, GM	541,425	101,000	436
M. E. Coyle, GM	526,100	100,000	422
A. M. Raphael, Lionel	95,731	19,200	405
L. Cowen, Lionel	96,655	20,439	385
L. A. Wilson, AT&T	178,000	36,666	381
T. C. Fogarty, Con. Can	68,100	15,350	344
C. E. Wilson, GM	626,100	151,000	315
J. J. Schumann, GM	271,200	66,400	308
H. Blancke, Celanese	229,177	63,382	263
G. H. Richards, Celanese	79,543	22,537	247
P. H. Marfuggi, Lionel	31,652	9,620	244
K. Meinken, Natl. Union	61,303	18,000	241
G. A. Price, Westinghouse	205,239	61,232	236
R. Tucker, P'burgh Plate Glass	138,515	52,810	165
C. V. Giaimo, Lionel	39,980	15,886	150
N. R. Abrams, Congoleum-Nairn	42,933	17,550	144
H. A. Eggerss, Con. Can	96,405	40,100	140
J. L. Bonanno, Lionel	37,603	15,553	137
J. L. Cowen, Lionel	88,440	37,680	135
G. Schneider, Celanese	108,788	49,211	120
P. D. Cooper, Celanese	58,340	26,871	117
H. Higgins, P'burgh Plate Glass	175,733	81,350	116
C. Brown, P'burgh Plate Glass	136,955	65,680	108
S. Behn, IT&T	127,295	62,020	105
B. Somervell, Koppers	102,733	50,750	102
E. Asplundh, P'burgh Plate Glass	128,515	64,150	101
E. Griffin, P'burgh Plate Glass	128,515	64,150	101
T. E. Wilson, Wilson	151,200	75,550	100
P. N. Trowbridge, N.J. Bell	20,000	10,000	100
C. Jarchow, Amer. Steel Found.	72,000	36,000	100
A. W. Hawkes, Congoleum-Nairn	41,340	21,340	95
A. Aronson, Ronson	77,900	41,070	90
A. Harris, Ronson	79,900	42,240	89
E. F. Wilson, Wilson	76,200	40,599	88
C. F. Beran, Celanese	104,726	56,167	86
W. McC. Cameron, Celanese	145,503	79,057	84
F. F. Addicks, N.J. Bell	33,000	18,000	83
F. T. Small, Celanese	73,160	40,287	82
J. B. McCullen, N.J. Bell	26,000	15,000	73
G. W. Douglass, N.J. Bell	20,500	12,000	70
C. F. Craig, AT&T	192,860	60,958	69
P. W. Eberhardt, Walter Kidde	26,533	16,131	64
J. W. Breathed, Cudahy	30,250	18,547	63
E. M. Voorhees, U.S. Steel	167,166	105,500	58
I. S. Olds, U.S. Steel	166,766	106,300	57
W. F. Gray, N.J. Bell	20,000	13,000	53
F. T. Caldwell, IT&T	53,672	35,000	53
C. Heater, Amer. Steel Found.	54,000	36,000	50
F. W. Hoffman, Cudahy	60,220	40,370	49
T. L. Shaffer, Congoleum-Nairn	43,969	30,750	43
H. C. Ramsey, Worthington	80,000	56,000	43
W. J. Wardell, Amer. Can	63,800	44,650	43
C. H. Black, Amer. Can	128,700	89,700	43
J. D. Cooney, Wilson	50,000	35,000	43
R. C, Taylor, Amer. Can	71,200	50,100	42
H. T. Sweeney, N.J. Bell	24,000	17,000	41
K. J. Ralph, N.J. Bell	24,000	17,000	41
H. C. Roemer, IT&T	44,130	31,820	39
J. E. Sandford, Armour	84,913	61,300	39
B. F. Fairless, U.S. Steel	213,966	154,600	38
G. C. Willard, Congoleum-Nairn	28,906	21,000	38
W. H. Pitkin, IT&T	53,370	39,540	35
E. Schwanhausser, Worth. Pump	53,500	40,000	34
T. G. Walker, N.J. Bell	32,000	24,000	33
N. L. Miller, U.S. Steel	111,400	85,200	31
A. P. Monroe, N.J. Bell	26,000	20,000	30
M. A. Sunstrom, IT&T	43,235	34,700	25
R. E. Christie, Crucible Steel	46,951	37,500	25
J. H. Ray, AT&T	90,200	73,700	22
B. Steinetz, Congoleum-Nairn	60,504	50,000	21
D. W. Figgis, Amer. Can	154,200	129,000	19
W. Colvin, Jr., Crucible Steel	72,666	63,214	13
F. L. Driver, Driver-Harris	37,108	34,440	8
TOTAL	$8,629,759	3,635,739	137

Some Bosses Even Play Their Executives For Suckers

ANY TOP corporation executive who has had only a miserable 100% or 200% pay raise since the end of World War II (see article at top of page) is just being played for a sucker by his bosses.

That, at any rate, is the logical conclusion to be drawn from a story in the July 9 issue of the Wall Street Journal. The story says that a lot of corporations have found ways other than the pay envelope to help their big brass keep the wolf from the door.

"In the past few years," it says, "there's been a steady stream of plans approved by stockholders which increase executive pay by means other than hiking salaries.

"Since Jan. 1, this year, the stream's become a flood. More than 100 major concerns have boosted compensation of key men in one of three ways:

"By granting them options to buy common stock at fixed prices, regardless of how high the market price may have gone when the options are exercised.

"By increasing payments under retirement programs.

"By adopting more generous profit-sharing plans."

THE FINANCIAL newspaper says that the right to purchase stock at a discount is the most popular of these plans, and has been put into effect by a least 75 additional firms since the first of the year.

The executive who benefits doesn't have to put up the cash immediately; he can make his purchase on the checkoff, if he wishes—the same technique that many companies are reluctant to apply to the union dues of their production and maintenance employes.

Most firms using this stunt limit the number of shares any one person can obtain, and usually limit the number of persons who can participate. The participants most often are exclusively top executives, but a few permit stock purchases by any employe after he has established a reasonable amount of seniority.

Among the firms offering stock to top executives on an installment-plan basis this year is U. S. Steel, which is putting up 1.3 million shares for 300 to 500 executives to scramble for, with a 30,000-share limit.

The price is the market quotation at the time the option is granted—no bargain except that they don't have to go out and buy it on the stock market and, perhaps, bid up the price. But the lucky purchasers have 10 years to pay for it.

Other large offerings include Standard Oil of New Jersey, 600,000 shares; Sinclair Oil, 598,700 shares; Sears Roebuck, 500,000 shares; Gulf Oil, 400,000 shares, and May Department Stores, 400,000 shares.

Sinclair and May executives get their securities at the full market price at the time of option, the Standard of New Jersey people at 95% and the Gulf and Sears Roebuck bosses at 85%. The Gulf and May people have 10 years to pay, the Sears Roebuck and Sinclair brass five years. Details of the Standard of New Jersey down payment contract were not fully disclosed.

THE RUSH of stock options was touched off when Congress passed the Revenue Act of 1950, according to the Journal.

"Before that act was passed," says the story, "an executive who exercised an option to buy stock in his company at a price below the market had to report the difference as additional income. He had to pay taxes on it at ordinary income rates. It didn't matter when he sold the stock or if he ever sold it; his 'paper profit' was considered to be additional income.

"Under present law, if the stock option and its use conform to certain restrictions laid down by Congress, this rule is changed and an executive buying stock under an option receives two tax benefits:

"He is not considered to have received any income when he buys the stock; and his profit may be treated as a long-term capital gain. Since only half of this gain is taxable, this provision offers an important tax advantage."

Minority stockholders have often fought losing battles against bargain sales of securities to executives. The greater the number of shares outstanding, the less each share earns in profits. In addition, the proportion of ownership held by those who bought their shares on the open market is smaller and their control of the enterprises, if any, is watered down.

Many companies have long cut their executives in on the profits. The trend now—less widely used than stock options—is to increase the pool in one way or another. The reason: higher taxes have cut down on the amount available for distribution.

Thus, recounts the Journal, Philip Morris stockholders are voting soon on a proposal to increase payments into the profit-sharing fund by setting aside a proportion of them before taxes, instead of after taxes as in the past.

Stockholders of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., Van Raalte Co., Inc., and Gabriel Co., among others, have already approved similar changes, the Journal says.

The third method of making the job more attractive to the key executive does it by making his future more alluring, rather than by giving him more money now.

A NUMBER of companies have increased the amounts their executives will draw when they go into retirement. Some have abolished maximums, others have raised them, according to the Journal.

Colgate-Palmolive-Peet recently boosted the top retirement payment from $1666.67 to $2500 monthly. The National Biscuit Co. eliminated its top limit of $1500 a month, and the Air Reduction Co., the Journal said, raised its maximum from $15,000 a year to $25,000, or "40% of the employe's five highest annual salaries, whichever is greater."

Most CIO members whose contracts provide for pensions are assured of a minimum of $100 a month, including social security, when they retire. The maximum, usually depending on length of service and earnings, runs a comparatively small amount more.

Steelworkers Attend Labor Institute

Sixty-two members of the CIO Steelworkers attended the first week's session of their fifth annual Labor Institute last week on the campus of the Univ. of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana.

This week about 75 additional members are attending classes in labor activities, public speaking, community relations and motion and time study. The institute is conducted by the university's Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations and the Div. of University Extension.

ICFTU Acts To Aid Unions Thro

The articles on this page are based on air mail and cable dispatches and newspaper reports from Milan and are necessarily incomplete. A round-up story will be carried in a later edition of the CIO News.

MORE THAN 300 men and women of all colors, creeds and nationalities marched out of the huge Ice Palace at Milan, Italy, July 12, determined to carry on the global struggle for democracy.

As spokesmen for 53 million workers, they had just concluded the Second World Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the worldwide organization of free laboring men and women who hate totalitarianism.

They were tired because they had just finished eight days of intensive activity—the same kind of committee meetings, drafting sessions, formal and informal discussions and official debates that leave many an American limp and spent after he serves as a delegate to his own union convention.

Reason To Be Happy

They were happy because they had given new strength to the apparently unending fight against tyranny—the tyranny of communism, of fascism, of every other kind of totalitarianism. They had forged new weapons for this fight against terror and repression, because they had planned new blows not only against the communists, but also against the international reactionaries who block the road to social and economic justice and to the ICFTU goals of bread, freedom and peace.

Most of them were having a quiet laugh to themselves, too. For they had ended their session by throwing one of the Comintern's little tricks right back in the faces of the Soviet Union's stooges.

On July 6, two days after the Congress got under way, it received a proposal from the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions to join in a "united front."

The proposal suggested that the two groups "act together on questions concerning the improvement of living and working conditions of the workers—whatever the differences in our political or religious convictions."

The delegates quickly recognized the invitation as a propaganda weapon the WFTU was confident would be turned down. What the WFTU didn't know, however, was the way it would be turned down. The reply approved at the final session read:

"We are ready to talk about a common front when you abolish all concentration camps and all practices of slave work—when you permit your unions to exist as organizations separate from the Communist Party and from the government—and finally, when you show yourself to be a real trade union body and not a ghost organization."

The North American delegation was composed of representative of the CIO, AFL, Mine Workers, Canadian Congress of Labour and the Canadian Trades & Labor Congress. It operated as an amicable unit during the sessions.

On motion of Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, Vice Pres. Matthew Woll of the AFL was named chairman unanimously. On Woll's motion, Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO delegation and chairman of the CIO International Committee, was picked as secretary without opposition.

At a press conference later, Woll emphasized that "the AFL and CIO will work together to see what can be done to raise the standards of living of all workers," and that "on all international questions we will act together because we are taking common lines of action." Potofsky, at his side, nodded agreement.

Reject WFTU Proposal

In one of its most important actions, the congress voted to assume the responsibility of helping the struggling unions of Asia and the Middle East by helping to educate potential union leaders and by setting up regional offices, particularly in underdeveloped areas, to recruit union leaders and to organize the workers.

This involved an accompanying increase in dues to offset the heavy increase in the cost of operating the ICFTU.

Dues of the CIO and other national organizations with five million or more members were raised from $5.60 to $7 per thousand members.

The assistance program brought warnings from delegates in the areas to be affected that the labor movements of their countries would welcome assistance. But they said they would reject it if it meant domination by the ICFTU or the labor movement of any of the larger countries. Spokesmen for the ICFTU and the larger national affiliates reassured them that nobody had domination in mind.

At a preliminary session on former colonial areas, the warning had been sounded by Aftab Ali, of the All-Pakistan Labor Federation, who stressed that his country would never tolerate foreign dominance in any form.

Pres. William L. Doherty of the AFL Letter Carriers, speaking for the North Americans, recounted that even before the ICFTU was formed, U. S. unions had aided workers in many other lands.

"American labor never forced help on anyone," he said, "and never attached any political strings, or sought to impose any ideology except democracy. Through ICFTU, American labor will continue to the limit of its resources to support free labor internationally."

Goldberg Reports

Goldberg reported to the congress for its Economic, Social and Political Committee on July 11. He stressed the necessity of rearming the free world and simultaneously taking effective measures to protect the interests and rights of workers.

The resolution called for immediate peace treaties with Germany, Japan and Austria, and revision of the treaty with Italy.

It condemned dictatorships everywhere, including those of Russia, Spain, Argentina, Venezuela and Peru, and it called for the solidarity of free labor with the workers of those countries.

In addition, it urged all governments to implement agreements adopted at the recent conference of the Intl. Labor Organization, especially that on full employment; called for more adequate financing of technical aid to underdeveloped areas; and it urged the economic unity of Europe as essential to defense and to prosperity.

A resolution on peace welcomed the cease fire talks under way in Korea when it was introduced. Chun Chin Han, of the Korean Federation of Labor, expressed the "deepest gratitude of the Korean masses for the efforts of the free world to rescue our country from Communist imperialism."

The American delegation joined in publicly expressing its support of the CIO Newspaper Guild protest against the persecution by the Czechoslovakian Communists of William Oatis, Associated Press correspondent recently "convicted" of "espionage" and sentenced to 10 years in prison.

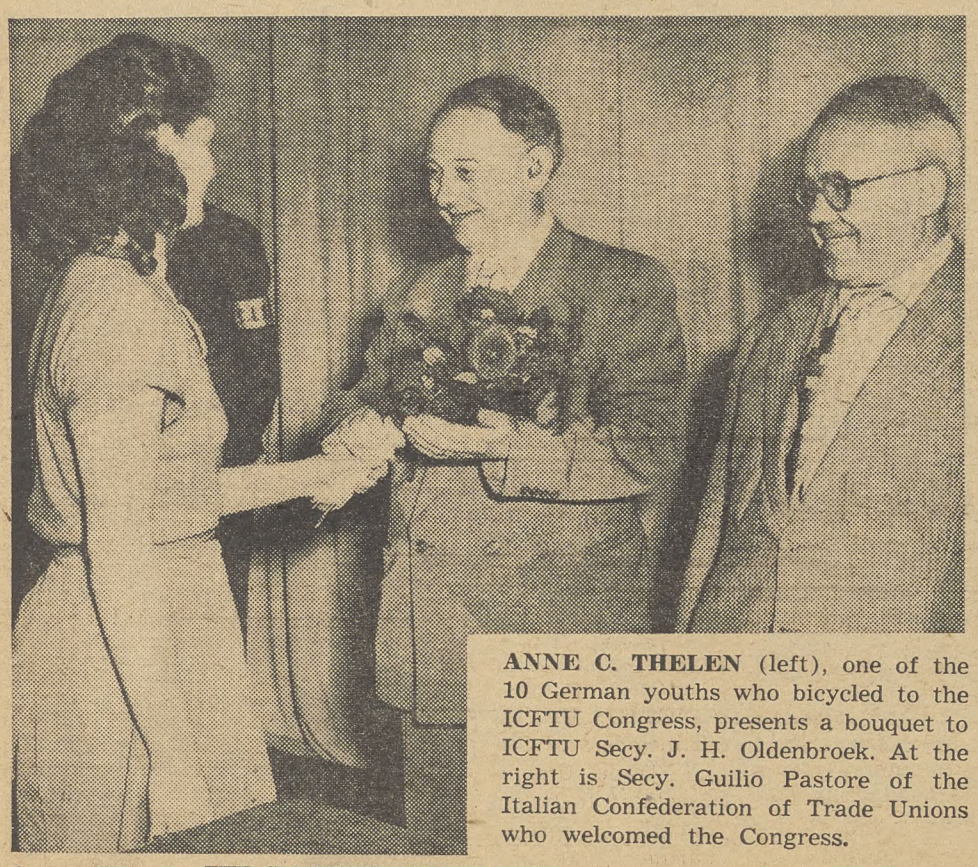
Secy.-Gen. J. H. Oldenbrock was re-elected without opposition. CIO Pres. Philip Murray was renamed to the executive board.

Italian Workers Honor Delegates

More than 80,000 members of free trade unions from all parts of Italy went to Milan on July 8 for a monster demonstration in honor of delegates to the ICFTU congress.

They arrived aboard 35 special trains and some 700 buses, and participated in a program in the city's central Piazza Duomo. ICFTU Secy. J. H. Oldenbroek and delegates from many countries addressed them. All voiced the solidarity of free labor with workers enslaved behind

SOME U. S. DELEGATES: L. to r., CIO General Counsel Goldberg, ILGW AFL Pres. Dubinsky, CIO Delegation Leader Potofsky, CIO Delegate Quill.



ANNE C. THELEN (left), one of the 10 German youths who bicycled to the ICFTU Congress, presents a bouquet to ICFTU Secy. J. H. Oldenbroek. At the right is Secy. Guilio Pastore of the Italian Confederation of Trade Unions who welcomed the Congress.

'ICFTU Is Best H Democracy, Secu

THE FRATERNAL greetings of Pr Philip Murray and the six milli members of the CIO were conveyed the Milan congress of the Intl. Conf eration of Free Trade Unions by Jac S. Potofsky, head of the CIO delegati and chairman of the CIO Internatio Committee.

"We of the CIO," he said, "regard t ICFTU as the best hope for peace, democ cy and security the world over."

Potofsky, who also is president of the C Clothing Workers, bitterly assailed dictat ships of both left and right, and urged t Congress to keep up its fight for a f measure of social justice for all peoples the world.

"Our aim must be continuously strengthen human freedom and to preser the inherent dignity of man," he told t delegates.

"The concept of freedom is and always w be a liberating one, a world revolutiona idea that rejects the inevitably of pove and injustice, and eternally seeks hum betterment.

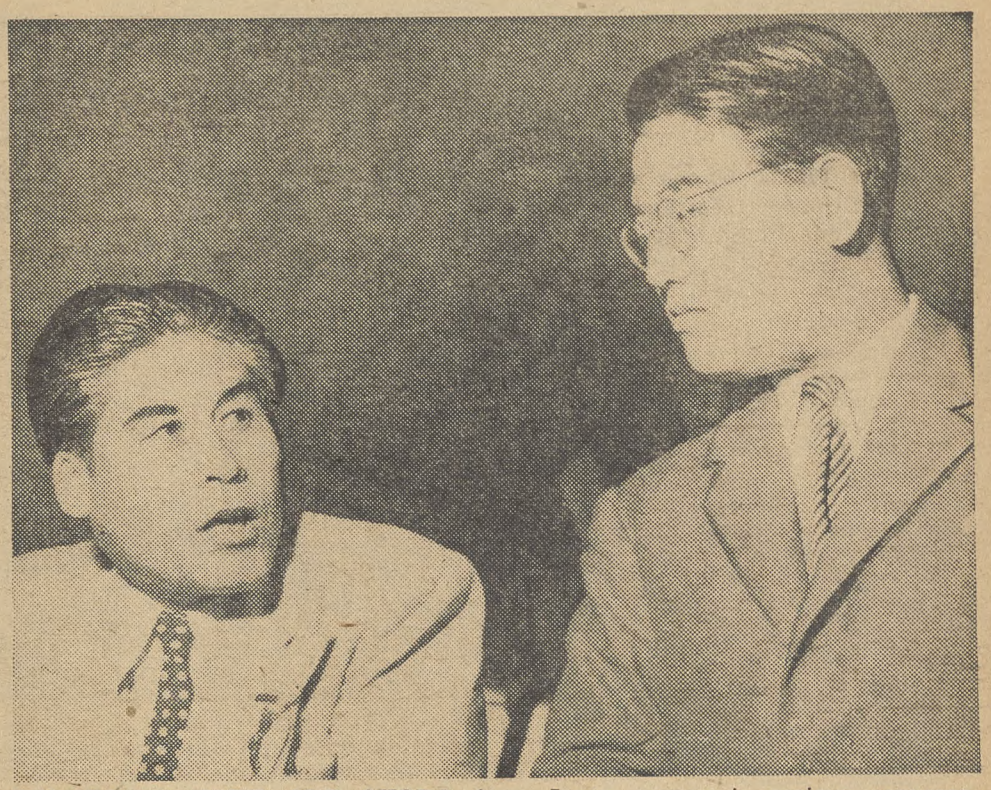
"Improving the standard of living is t only sure weapon for fighting off comm nist and fascist aggression. An improvi standard of living is the strongest ally of d mocracy and peace.

"Our concept of economic developme

PAUL FINET, first president of ICFTU was succeeded by Sir Vincent Tewso general secretary fo the British Trad Union Congress.

ghout World Improve Democracy

LISTENING INTENTLY to the discussions are the Haitian delegates, Gerard Bastian (left) and Kesler Clermont.



DELEGATES HORII AND SHODA from Japan engage in serious conversation at the ICFTU Congress at Milan.

e For Peace, y,' Says Potofsky

arries with it land and other reforms, a liv- ng wage, fair and rising labor standards, ull participation in the benefits arising rom increased wealth or income, the remov- l of discrimination based on race, color, na- ionality, religious belief, cast or sex.

A Broad Concept

"It includes freedom of the intellect, free- om of speech, freedom from want, the right f trial by jury, the right to vote, the right f self-organization, the right to work, the ight to strike. It also includes training in emocracy to enable all the people to take n active part in public affairs.

"Freedom can be achieved only through conomic and political democracy. We must chieve a world in which people are free rom the tyranny of Communist, fascist, fa- ngist and any other form of totalitarian- sm, as well as from the domination and ex- oitation of concentrated economic power n the hands of cartels and democracies.

"We reject the false theory that workers ust sacrifice political and spiritual freedom o obtain economic security and social ustice.

"In the worldwide struggle over conflict- ng ideologies, we must remember there ust be economic security and social justice or all.

"The task before us is to mobilize the tools f abundance possessed by the industrially dvanced nations of the world, assure full mployment, security against want, old-age nd sickness, and to provide ever-rising tandards of living and a richer and fuller fe for peoples everywhere."

Potofsky summarily rejected suggestions hat free labor ally itself with "little Fas- ists" to fight communism. Dictators, "how- ver violent their anti-communism, are not ssets" in such a struggle, he maintained.

Peron, Franco Hit

To illustrate his point he cited the recent losing of the newspaper La Prensa by the ightist Peron dictatorship in Argentina, nd the recent strikes against the Franco ictatorship in Spain by workers "demand- ng a government responsive to their needs nd representative of their hopes and aspi- ations."

He sharply criticized the United States for ans to Argentina and Spain which he said ere being expended to strengthen the re- ective dictatorships.

Tale Of Red Terror Told By Chinese Delegate

THE SPEAKER was a thin, tired-looking machinist. He didn't look like anyone of particular importance, yet the top labor leaders of the free world sat on the edges of their seats and listened in hushed silence when he spoke.

His name was Wang Chun. The fact that he didn't look particularly important had probably saved his life many times. For he served the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions for two years as its field agent in China.

His very inconspicuousness helped him escape to the safety of Milan, Italy, half a world away—there to tell the ICFTU how the Communists are murdering and enslaving millions of his compatriots.

"I have just escaped from Red terrorism in China," he said. "I disguised myself as a peddler, doing business from town to town.

"I made secret contacts with workers' resistance hideouts from Hankow right down to the Hongkong border. For 20 days I lived in the dark shadow of imminent death.

Face To Face With NVD

"Many a time I found myself face to face with members of the NVD. I slept by day and travelled by night. After five nights of forced travel, I boarded a train and reached the lower end of the Iron Curtain by the last week of June.

"I crawled under the bristling barbed wires at night amid heavy gunfire of Communist border police. I was a physical wreck, but it was a small price to pay for my freedom.

"It is my mission today to bring first-hand reports on conditions prevailing under the heinous Soviet Chinese regime.

"Before the usurpers came, we worked eight hours. Now we work 12, and, since the Korean intervention, even 16 hours without overtime pay. There is a boom in war industries, but production of consumer goods has been cut. Indoctrination meetings after work has been compulsory for months.

"I started work while my wife and children were in bed. When I returned home at midnight, they were asleep again.

"In 1947 my pay was the equivalent of 600 pounds of rice monthly. When I fled, it was 200 pounds, and it was further reduced to 150 pounds by nominally voluntary contributions which were actually compulsory. There was barely enough for six bowls of soup daily for each of the five members of my family.

"A thousand slave labor camps besmear my dear country. For 16 hours of work, the slaves get two bowls of soup daily. Malnutrition and fatigue increase accidents, which take a heavy toll of the slaves who are supposed to be free workers.

"The Reds suspended genuine trade union activities until they gained control. Then they made unions agencies of a regime that blacklisted all 'unreliables.' Workers were kept in suspense, fearing their names might appear in the list for the mass trials at which no one dared oppose conviction.

"Later, as resistance grew, the secret police executed at will without the mockery of a trial—innocent workers as well as convicted opponents of the regime.

"I trembled as the police vans came at dawn and police knocked on the doors of my neighbors.

"The Soviet system is a speedup worship of labor heroes who exceed production norms. But these worker heroes soon fade away from exhaustion, like lemons squeezed dry and thrown into the gutter.

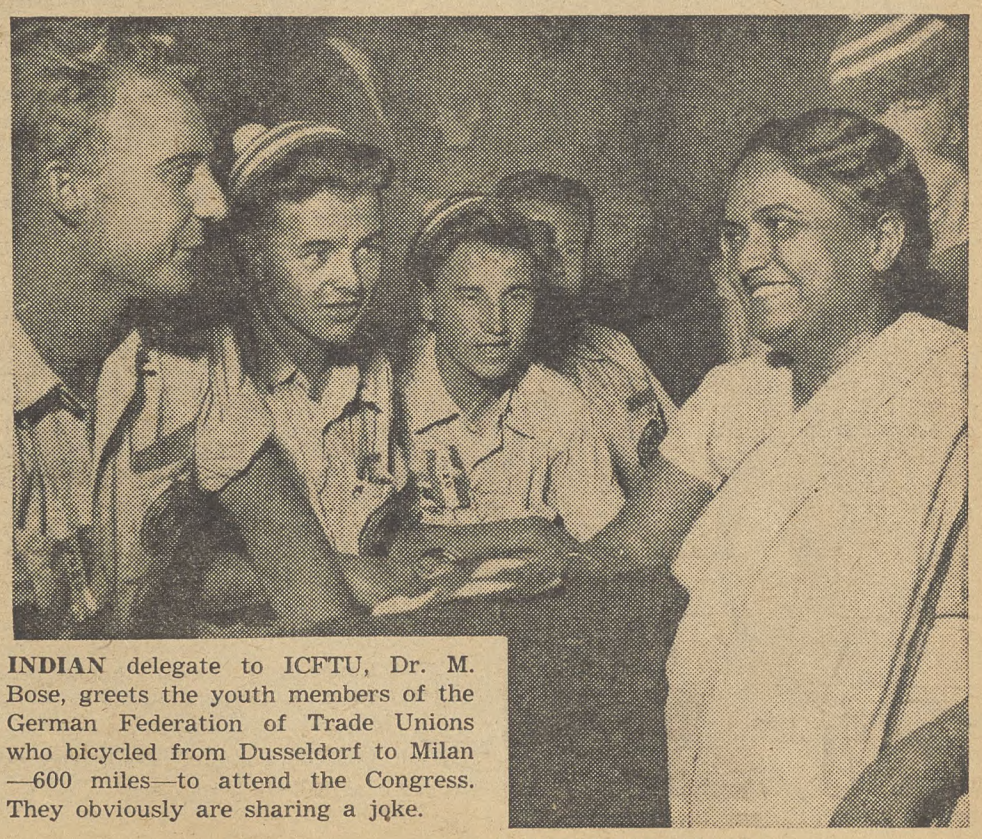
"The Chinese intervention in Korea caused great discontent in China. So the regime played safe and executed everyone who grumbled, including thousands of innocent persons whose deaths I witnessed.

China Disillusioned

"I have seen workers flayed to death for refusing to confess. According to Chou-en Lai, one and a half million anti-Communists were shot. Actually the number killed was far greater, indicating mass opposition.

"After two years of ruthless exploitation, oppression and massacre, my countrymen are disillusioned and almost unanimously opposed to Soviet tyranny.

"Millions have become guerillas in hills, forests, and village hideouts. Countless thousands are unemployed in every city. Peasants disappointed in the so-called land reform are in the resistance movement and in cooperation with free China Labor League fighting for liberation."



INDIAN delegate to ICFTU, Dr. M. Bose, greets the youth members of the German Federation of Trade Unions who bicycled from Dusseldorf to Milan —600 miles—to attend the Congress. They obviously are sharing a joke.

Reserve Board Walks Out On The People

By MILTON PLUMB

ARE YOU HAVING difficulty getting better housing, or a new car, washing machine, television set or other household goods?

If you are, it is because an unpublicized "strike" against the public is being waged by America's 12 most influential financiers, according to Rep. Patman (D. Tex.).

A member of the House Banking and Currency Committee, Patman is widely recognized as one of the country's foremost financial experts, and as a champion of small business and the consuming public.

Last week he charged that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Open Market Committee have joined money lenders in a strike against lower interest rates fostered by the New and Fair Deals.

He submitted an amendment to the Defense Production Act which would require the two financial groups to end "discriminatory" credit and financial regulations.

No other government agency with such far-reaching powers over the nation's economy operates with as much authority and independence as the Federal Reserve Board. Created in 1913 by an act of Congress, it exercises virtual dictatorial control over the country's financial structure.

FEDERAL RESERVE Board Building, like board members themselves, seems to be entirely independent of government control. Whether it belongs to the government or the board is an "interesting question," according to Rep. Patman, who promised to find out. U. S. Public Buildings Service told the CIO News it has no authority over the building.

No Control

Despite this, the board is not accountable to any branch of the government. Neither the President, nor the cabinet, nor Congress is represented in its membership.

"The 12 biggest men in the United States today," Patman declared, "as far as finances are concerned, are the seven members of the Federal Reserve Board and the five members of the Open Market Committee. They are away from the government, not under any branch of government at all.

"And they are encouraging an increase in interest rates at a time when they should be going down."

The Open Market Committee is a regulatory body composed of five bankers and the seven board members. It also was created by Congress, in the Banking Act of 1933.

The banks themselves select their representatives and despite their life and death power over the nation's economy, they are not subject to either congressional or administration approval.

The operations of the committee in regulating credit are part of a highly complex economic picture. As a result, the spotlight of public scrutiny is rarely, if ever, turned upon its activities in a way that makes them understandable to the average citizen.

Yet the average citizen is vitally affected by almost every action that the committee takes.

"Open market operations" is the bankers' term covering the banks' activities in buying and selling government obligations and certain other securities. No federal reserve bank may engage, or decline to engage, in open market operations except as directed by the committee.

Last Mar. 4, the Federal Reserve System decreased the price it pays for government securities. In the last few weeks it has bought several hundred million Treasury bonds at prices below par—at about 97%. That meant an immediate tightening of money available for credit, because previously government obligations could readily be converted at 100% of par value.

Barron's, a leading business and financial weekly, on July 2 reported this result:

"Rates on business loans have advanced steadily. Bank credit spigots have been twisted tight. By no coincidence the number of commercial and industrial failures recently started to run ahead of year-ago figures."

Credit Scarce

All this is happening, Patman points out, at a time when there is a plentiful supply of money. Savings banks report that deposits are at an all-time high.

Credit, a much more important medium of exchange, is what has become scarce.

"Many veterans, as well as thousands who are not veterans, who would like to build small, modest homes," said Patman, "are unable to get the money because the insurance companies would have to sell their bonds below par in order to let them have money, and they are not going to do it.

"Therefore, we will have less housing in this country as long as that rule prevails."

Rep. McCormack (D. Mass.) said that he was "very glad" Patman had brought the matter to congressional attention. He reminded Congress that after World War I, when government bonds fell to 82% of par, the moneyed interests bought them up and later sold them at as high as 110%.

"Millions of people who owned the bonds in World War I and sold them were the ones who suffered," McCormack said.

Patman recalled that in 1948 and 1949 the lenders had gone on strike by refusing to advance money for 4% GI housing loans in the hope that the government would be persuaded to increase the rates. A similar strike was waged even earlier in connection with the 4½% FHA program.

"They are on a strike now," Patman said. "But unfortunately they have the support of the Federal Reserve Board in this strike."

The previous strikes were broken when the government held firm to its low-interest policies. The present action is succeeding.

Reports from coast to coast reveal that the interest rate on home mortgages in many instances has gone back to 6%, the historical rate prior to government entrance into the home mortgage field during the depression.

Moreover, while the government is still willing to approve GI and FHA loans, lenders are unwilling to finance them. On top of this, the Federal Reserve Board's so-called Regulation X prevents more than 90% of would-be home owners from obtaining loans by requiring high down payments.

No Lenders

One builder in Dayton, O., an important defense center, recently told the National Association of Home Builders that for the first time in 16 years he has been unable to find a lending institution willing to make FHA loans.

He reported a backlog of 400 customers who need homes. Of this number, only 7% could provide the Regulation X down payment, but mortgages could not be found for even this 7%, he said.

In recent testimony before the House Banking Committee in support of a stronger Defense Production Act, the CIO called for a relaxation of Regulation X and Regulation W, both of which, it pointed out, benefit the wealthy at the expense of the poorer purchaser.

Inventories of automobiles, furniture, television sets and other consumer products have been piling up in dealers' storerooms because Regulation W requires high down payments and short-term financing. Unemployment in these industries—a major portion of the economy—is increasing as a result.

On July 10, the Dept. of Commerce reported that business inventories had reached an all-time high of $69 billion by the end of May. It estimated that the increase has continued since that time, and pointed out that the figure was more than $16 billion above the total a year ago.

Patman believes that this situation, which means idle men in certain basic industries, is due to the reserve board's failure to make its regulations elastic enough to take care of a temporary situation. The high down payments required by Regulation W obviously aren't necessary in cases of goods which are overproduced.

Chairman Maybank (D. S. C.) of the Senate Banking Committee became so concerned over the effect of Regulation W that some time ago he asked the board to relax its application.

On July 10, Board Chairman William McC. Martin, Jr., informed Maybank that the group must decline to relax its restrictions on installment buying credit. Both committees of Congress, however, have recommended that the board be prevented by law from requiring down payments of more than one-third or less than 18 months to pay.

The battle between the board and Congress had not been resolved as this issue of The CIO News went to press.

But one thing was certain.

The higher cost of money was being felt in every segment of the economy. Millions of home owners, farmers, every businessman, and every city, state and county, as well as the federal government, are paying more for what they buy.

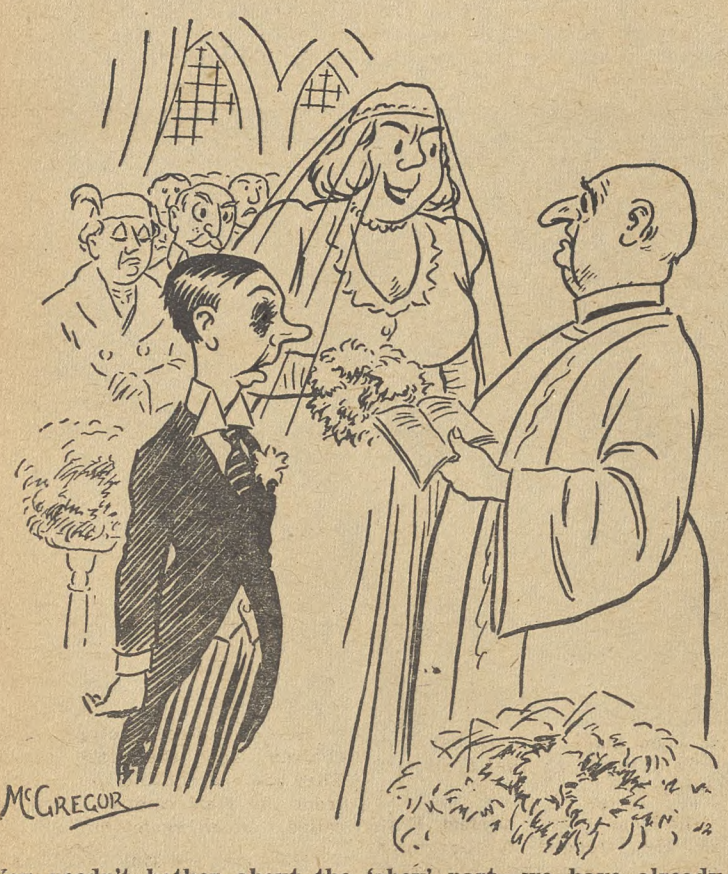
For interest rates contribute in a very substantial way to the total cost of any product, whether it be a home, an automobile, or a new building or equipment needed by a government agency.

Some PROFITS Without Honor

Big business is freezing out new enterprise through "costless profits" and high interest rates, Rep. Patman believes.

Patman referred to testimony by a corporation head before the Economic Committee on the Economic Report, in which he called the capital acquired by raising prices—"costless capital."

"What chance would I have," Patman asked, "starting out by borrowing money to go into business, on which I would have to pay interest, when across the street one of these huge concerns making huge profits through costless capital, puts in a store just like mine? Their investment is absolutely nil. There is no cost at all to it. I just don't have a chance."



"You needn't bother about the 'obey' part—we have already reached an agreement on that."

Cornell Offers International Course

Establishment of a new Institute of International Industrial and Labor Relations within the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y., has been announced by Acting Pres. Theodore P. Wright.

Prof. Leonard P. Adams, head of the school's research program, has been named acting director of the institute under the general leadership of Prof. M. P. Catherwood, dean of the school. Several years will be required for its full-scale development.

"The need for an educational program in this field," said Dr. Wright, "has developed because of:

1. "The importance of the worldwide ideological struggle and the crucial importance of the United States in that struggle of developing and preserving capacities for cooperative relationships between management and labor at home and abroad."

2. "The fact that such relationships can best be developed by educational processes."

3. "The absense at present of adequate research and instructional programs in this field."

—From St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Trial Behind The Iron Curtain

ILO Parley OK's New Wage Bases

THE 34TH conference of the Intl. Labor Organization, held at Geneva, Switzerland, ended with approval of new international minimum standards on phases of wages and industrial relations.

Four international conventions, each supported by a recommendation, were approved. They must be further approved by the proper legislative body in each country before becoming effective.

One convention called for equal pay for men and women for work of equal value; it was passed by a vote of 105 to 33, with 40 abstentions. Another called for the setting up of minimum wage-setting machinery for agricultural workers and was approved by a 116 to 31 vote, with 27 abstentions.

Others called for creation of machinery to aid in collective bargaining and to assist in the voluntary conciliation of industrial disputes.

The attitude displayed by U. S. employers at the conference was sharply criticized by the conservative New York Times. The U. S. employers opposed international standards for wages and social security, and campaigned for "realism" in agreements on labor standards.

"THEY are out of tune with the dominant political and psychological forces in most of the rest of the world," said the Times in an editorial

"The only visible results have been to arouse vehement opposition and caustic criticisms from the labor and government representatives of other countries and to cause a certain amount of embarrassment to the U. S. government and labor spokesmen in their dealings with labor groups from the under-developed and Communist-threatened lands."

Wanna Take Trip To Russia? Become Prominent In UE

It's easy enough to stroll right through the Iron Curtain right into Moscow—if you amount to something in the Communist-dominated United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

William Wallace and Mrs. Laura Dennis, both of Cleveland, O., found it a cinch. Wallace is secretary of UE Dist. 4.

Mrs. Dennis is a steward in a Cleveland UE local and the wife of Ray Dennis. Dennis, a business agent for the Mine Mill & Smelter Workers, formerly was secretary of the Ohio Communist Party. Both the UE and MM&S were expelled from the CIO because of their Communist domination.

Wallace on his passport application said he was going to England and France "for pleasure"; Mrs. Dennis said she was going to France for "health and vacation."

Both turned up in Russia, where the Moscow radio said they visited "at the invitation of the Central Council of Soviet Trade Unions."

They spoke over the same radio, telling the Russians how "democratic" their trade unions are and how they protect the interests of the workers. (Ed. note—Like the UE, no doubt?)

Iceland Union Leaders Study Labor In U. S.

FIVE leaders of the Federation of Icelandic Labor Unions are in the United States to study American labor organizations and working conditions under the technical assistance program of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Their visit offers American labor its first opportunity to establish relations with the Icelandic group.

Members of the delegation are Helgi Hannesson, president of the federation and mayor of Hafnarfjordur; Saemunder E. Olafsson, vice president of the federation and chairman of the Reykjavik Joint Council of Labor Unions; Halfdan Sveinsson, chairman of the Akranes Labor Union; Ingimundur Gestsson, federation secretary and also secretary of the Reykjavik Drivers' Union, and Gudmundur Sigtryggsson, a member of the federation's central committee.

THEY ARE being piloted by Finnur Jonsson, a Social Democratic member of the Iceland Parliament, head of the government's Purchasing Dept., and a former member of the federation executive committee. He also is acting as interpreter.

The federation threw off its Communist domination in 1948. The general convention last November affirmed the executive board's action in bolting the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

It then voted to join the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and was represented at the ICFTU world congress meeting in Milan, Italy.

Labor is highly organized in Iceland and the unions have considerable political power. The Communists in them, though a minority, are higly organized, vocal and often effective.

Leave Monument Unspoiled—CIO

The CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation has asked all CIO councils and regional directors to join in the fight to have Dinosaur National Monument, in Northwestern Colorado, set aside as a national park and left unspoiled by the construction of dams.

In a letter to all councils and regional directors, Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the committee, asked them to request Secy. of the Interior Oscar Chapman to recommend that Congress appropriate money to develop the monument for recreational use.

Smith also urged that Cross Mountain, Gray Canyon and Desolation Dams be substituted for Echo Park and Split Mountain Dams, which would "destroy all possibility of establishing a park in this area and would seriously impair recreational value."

Smith asked that Chapman be requested to recommend that the monument be considered a national park.

The CIO position was determined by the Committee on Regional Development and Conservation and representatives of the Utah and Colorado CIO Councils.

African Labor Leader Visiting U. S. Unions

FROM Nigeria, on the west central coast of Africa, Afolabi Adenekan Adio-Moses, secretary and organizer of his country's Amalgamated Union of Clerical and Allied Workers, came to Washington last week to start a tour of the country.

Dressed in the loosely-hanging, colorful woven cotton attire he wears at home, he found the nation's capital no cooler than his native Lagos, on the Atlantic Ocean only a few hundred miles north of the equator. But he said he was at least comfortable, which was more than the permanent residents of the city could say.

Adio-Moses is in the United States on a four-month tour as a guest of the Labor and State Depts. under the labor leaders' program of the Office of Intl. Labor.

But for a delay in securing his passport, he might never have arrived at all. It made him miss the weekly plane out of Lagos on which he had intended to start for this country—the transport plane that crashed last month in the jungle of Liberia, killing all aboard.

ADIO-MOSES set up his union in 1947. It has 3000 members out of a potential 30,000, he said in an interview at CIO headquarters. It is affiliated with the Nigerian Labor Congress, which was organized last year.

Organized labor in Nigeria is weak, he conceded. Only about 50,000 of the 300,000 to 400,000 workers are union members, but they constitute a nucleus which is determined to grow and to fight for better living and working conditions.

"The clerical workers in my union," he said, "are employed by private firms. They work six days a week for wages of four British pounds a month (a pound is worth about $2.80 in U. S. money).

"Laborers earn about three shillings a day in the cities (1 shilling equals 14c)—and a shilling, 11 pence (about 25c) in the provinces.

"The standard of living is low because it takes about 12 pounds a month to support an average family of four persons decently, and eight or nine pounds for a single man."

The labor movement in Nigeria got off to a start in 1938 with passage of the Trade Union Ordinance, giving unions the right to organize, by the Nigerian Legislature. Adio-Moses himself got a start in 1940 with the African Workers Union while he was employed by the United Africa Co., Lagos.

As an organizer, his first job was to lead a drive for cost of living wage allowances when prices soared during the war.

MOST of the workers are engaged in agriculture, with cocoa the most important crop. There also are rubber works, coal and tin mines, and considerable lumbering, and recently a start has been made in food canning, he said. Most of the firms are British.

Adio-Moss speaks perfect English. He attended St. Gregory's College in Lagos, and in 1947-48 was a student at Ruskin College, the trade union school at Oxford Univ. in England.

He was secretary of the Trade Union Congress of Nigeria for seven years before its dissolution in 1948.

He brought greetings to the CIO from the workers of Nigeria, who, he said, "recognize the brotherhood of our movement and the identity of our struggles."

"Whatever can be done on either side to improve the lot of labor should be done," he declared, "especially in the free countries of the world."

DRESSED FOR CAPITAL

Afolabi Adenekan Adio-Moses, Nigerian labor leader, found his native costume comfortable while in Washington during a hot spell last week.

Dane Charges 14 Million In Soviet Camps

Slave laborers in the Soviet Union's teeming camps outnumber the combined populations of the Scandinavian countries, Pres. Eiler Jensen of the Danish Federation of Labor said in a recent radio speech.

"I have some documents in front of me," he said, "from which it appears that there are 14 million slave workers in the Gulag (the Central Administration for labor camps is abbreviated into 'Gulag').

"I have a map of the enormous Soviet country with camps from Kamchatka (peninsula projecting from the mainland of Asia toward the Aleutian Islands) all over the country, right to the Western European border. There are 175 camps.

"Here are three photographs of chidren from the slave camps. They are exactly like the pictures from the Nazi camps of the so-called 'human skeletons.'

"They are like tiny skeletons.

"It is horrible . . . "

Chrysler Delegation Protests Layoffs

A DELEGATION of CIO Auto Workers from the union's Chrysler Dept. last week lodged a vigorous protest in Washington with the heads of the Defense Production Authority over announced material cutbacks drastically affecting employment.

Led by Norman Matthews, director of the Chrysler Dept., the delegates loosed a barrage of questions of Manley Fleischmann, director of the National Production Authority; Courtney Johnson, chief of NPA's Automotive Branch, and Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson.

The group also appeared before the Senate Small Business Committee in regard to the employment problems of Chrysler's supplier plants, and discussed the matter with members of Congress from areas where Chrysler plants are located.

Matthews pointed out to both agency heads and lawmakers that curtailment of car and truck production is due chiefly to shortages of steel, copper and aluminum "resulting from the need to channel these materials to defense contracts and to 'so-called' defense-supporting industries."

The UAW spokesman declared that if a solution is to be found for the serious unemployment already forced on the auto workers and the still greater unemployment ahead of them, answers must be found to two questions:

1. Where is the steel going?

2. Where are the defense contracts?

THE UNION is also interested, he said, in knowing if the mobilization agencies are fully aware of how much unemployment exists in the industry at present.

"Since the end of World War II, the UAW has repeatedly warned against the effects of the failure of the steel industry to expand its capacity," Matthews declared.

"Since the beginning of the Korean situation and acceleration of the mobilization program, the UAW has again been in the forefront demanding an expansion of capacity to produce scarce materials and a coordination between increasing defense production and declining civilian production that would minimize the dislocation of workers and shorten the period of unemployment during the transition from civilian to defense work.

"Although some of our suggestions have been heeded by government agencies, the drastic mass unemployment which is now beginning at Chrysler and other plants is the result of the failure of the defense mobilization agencies to adopt completely the proposals we have been urging over this long period of time."

MATTHEWS predicted that early relief is not likely to provided through employment on defense contracts. He listed three reasons why:

1. Auto companies will not be tooled up and getting into production on defense contracts until the middle of 1952.

2. Auto companies are building new plants for their defense work instead of using closed or idle sites which could re-employ existing manpower.

3. The buildup of defense contracts is not rapid and may never fully offset the reduction in car and truck output.

Matthews charged that mobilization agency officials have been misled by the over-optimistic employment forecasts. He said he understood they have been told that layoffs will be comparatively few "and will last for only brief periods."

The next day Wilson admitted a "mistake" had been made in permitting unemployment to mount, particularly in Detroit, and said he would "do all I can to correct it."

Fleischmann told the delegation that auto production, cut back to 65% of normal, will not be reduced further this year. He said he will make sure enough material goes to the industry to turn out passenger cars and trucks to that figure.

Matthews said Wilson and Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna M. Rosenberg agreed to:

1. Make a survey of jobs and unemployment in Detroit "in a matter of days."

2. Obtain a report from the Munitions Board telling how much defense work has been allocated Detroit firms and how much they have farmed out.

3. Get a report from defense agencies on how many defense contracts not yet let can be given to Detroit plants.

LEADERS of CIO Auto Workers locals in Chrysler plants come to Washington to protest to Defense Mobilization officials announced material cutbacks which have drastically cut employment. Seated at the table fifth from the left is Courtney Johnson, director of the Motor Vehicles Division of the National Production Authority. At his right is Norman Matthews, director of the UAW's Chrysler Dept., and at his left is Tom Burge, NPA labor specialist and former UAW local president. Don Montgomery, UAW's Washington director, is second form the right. Union group also met with Senators.

Union Fights Big Rent Hike At Oak Ridge

THE proposed 28% rent increase for all residential units at the atomic energy plant in Oak Ridge, Tenn., is being opposed by Local 288 of the CIO Chemical Workers.

A delegation from the local, together with GC&C Pres. Martin Wagner, last week discussed the proposed increase with Tennessee congressmen in Washington, and also with members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the House Banking and Currency Committee.

The increase was approved by a special panel of the Atomic Energy Commission, and on July 1, Oak Ridge renters were asked to sign new leases containing the rent boosts.

As a result of the delegation's Washington visit, Sen. Kefauver wrote Chairman Gordon Dean, of the Atomic Energy Commission, asking that "favorable consideration" be given to deferring action "until some effective rent control legislation is enacted for Oak Ridge."

Rep. Gore told the GC&C members that he would introduce an amendment to the Defense Production Act that would freeze the rents in Oak Ridge until the rent control law goes into effect there.

CIO CHEMICAL WORKERS protesting to Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) the 28% rent increase proposed by the Atomic Energy Commission for tenants in government-owned houses at Oak Ridge, Tenn. Left to right: Pres. Martin Wagner of the Chemical Workers; GC&C Local 288 Pres. Jerry A. George, Oak Ridge; Sen. Kefauver; CIO National Housing Committee Dir. Leo Goodman; Clyde Terry, local 288, and Benjamin C. Sigal, union counsel.

Unemployment Hits Philadelphia Workers

THE Philadelphia CIO Council last week took steps to halt the unemployment crisis resulting from mass layoffs in a number of the city's key industries.

Some 100 delegates at a special conference heard officials of the Textile Workers declare that of the 11,000 workers normally employed in textile plants in the area, more than 3000 have been furloughed. Most of the mills were reported to be working part time.

Few of the plants have government orders but Council officers said the textile companies themselves were the cause of the current situation, since they are pricing their products out of the market or holding down production to keep prices high.

Representatives of the CIO Electrical Workers from radio, television and refrigeration locals reported more than 6000 workers have been laid off out of a total work force of 10,000 during the last two months.

Skilled electronic workers are leaving the industry, they said, because of slack work. This fact will cause serious trouble when contracts due later in the year get into actual production.

The council voted to send delegations to the city and State authorities to ask aid and this week a group will visit Washington.

Miss Lenroot Retires As Head Of U. S. Children's Bureau

PRESIDENT Truman last week expressed "real regret" at the resignation of Katharine F. Lenroot as head of the U. S. Children's Bureau in Washington.

Miss Lenroot will leave the bureau Aug. 31 after almost 37 years' service, during the last 17 of which she has been director. Appointed to the latter post in 1934 by the late President Roosevelt, she became known as "the foster mother to millions.'

Truman, in a letter accepting her resignation, paid tribute to her long service as a "tough and persistent champion of America's children."

He said her long tenure of office was especially significant because she "has been one of that small and select group of women who have risen to high public office through merit and determination.

"I hope that from time to time I shall have the chance to look to you for advice and help in matters affecting the children of our country," he said.

Miss Lenroot said she has reached the age when she "must have more leisure."

The President nominated Dr. Martha M. Eliot, assistant director general of the World Health Organization for the past two years, and former associate director of the Bureau, as Miss Lenroot's successor.

Miss Lenroot joined the Bureau in 1915 as a special investigator in the Social Service Division. In 1921, she was made director of the Editorial Division and the following year became assistant chief of the bureau from which post she was advanced to chief 12 years later.

Dr. Elliot will return to the Bureau where she served 25 years prior to a two-year absence in Geneva, Switzerland, working in the UN's health agency.

Katharine F. Lenroot

CIO Members To Serve On Manpower Units

SECY. OF LABOR Maurice J. Tobin has appointed a number of CIO representatives to serve on regional labor-management committees being established throughout the nation in the mobilization of civilian manpower for defense.

The committees are composed of representatives of labor and management from industry, agriculture, transportation and retail trade.

Tobin said that area labor-management groups also will be set up in all labor markets which have — or anticipate — manpower problems resulting from the defense effort.

The CIO members and the regions they represent:

Region 1 (Conn., Mass., Maine, Vt., N. H. and R. I.): Joseph Salerno, Clothing Workers; John O'Connell, Auto Workers, and Kenneth Glynn, Steelworkers, all of Boston.

Region 3 (Penna. and Del.): Otis Brubaker, Steelworkers legislative director, Pittsburgh; David Monas, Clothing Workers, Pottsville, Pa., and Frank Blechinger, Electrical Workers, Philadelphia.

Region 4 (Va., Md., N. C., W. Va. and D. C.): Boyd E. Payton, Textile Workers, Lynchburg, Va.; James A. Pendleton, Auto Workers, Norfolk, Va., and Harley Richards, Steelworkers, Parkersburg, W. Va.

Region 6 (Ohio, Ky. and Mich.): August Scholle, CIO regional director, Detroit; F. M. Hannley, Rubber Workers, Akron, O., and B. W. Ohler, Steelworkers, Cleveland.

Region 7 (Ill., Ind. and Wisc.): Samuel C. Evett, Steelworkers, Chicago; Dallas Smith, Electrical Workers, Fort Wayne, Ind., and Reuben Block, Clothing Workers, Chicago.

Region 8 (Minn., Mont., N. D. and S. D.): Andrew Jones, Electrical Workers, Minneapolis; Glenn Chinander, Packinghouse Workers, St. Paul, Minn., and Floyd J. Hill, Steelworkers, St. Paul.

Region 12 (Cal., Ariz. and N. M.): David D. Brymer, Oil Workers, Los Angeles; Tim Flynn, CIO regional director, San Francisco, and Nicholas C. Dragon, CIO regional director, Arizona.

Region 13 (Wash., Ida. and Ore.): John Hawkins, Woodworkers, Portland, Ore.; Marjorie Strand, Communications Workers, Seattle, Wash., and Otto Orr, Steelworkers, Spokane, Wash.

Five additional regional committees will be established in the near future.

Legislature Leaves Mich. Minus Funds

THE MICHIGAN Legislature saved the corporations from all but a token tax increase—but it adjourned without giving the State enough money to carry on its business.

It adopted a budget that will yield a deficit estimated at $80 million — with Michigan corporations still not having to carry their just share of the tax load.

Gov. G. Mennen Williams had proposed that the general fund be balanced by a percentage tax on the profits of Michigan corporations as a substitute for the unfair franchise tax. The Republicans wouldn't go along. Instead they lifted the $50,000 ceiling on the franchise fee and raised the tax slightly.

Williams called the bill a "mouse-like achievement" for so much effort, but signed it for lack of anything better. He said it wouldn't meet the State's needs, but was "a step in the direction of a more equitable tax structure and toward a corporation profits tax."

The change in the franchise fee eliminated the advantage which the 27 largest corporations in Michigan had enjoyed.

Under the old ceiling, an industrial giant like General Motors paid only 5c or 6c per $1000. Other firms paid the full $2.50 per $1000, which the new law raised to $3.50.

TWU Gets Highest City Transit Pay

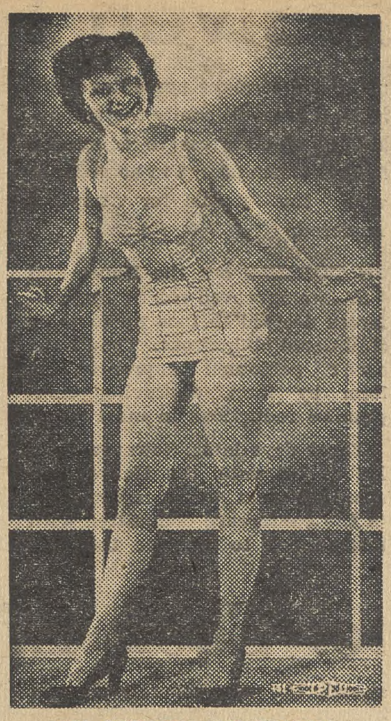
CIO Transport Workers in New York City will have the highest hourly income in the municipal transport industry, as a result of the new agreement covering 36,000 employes of city-owned lines.

Under the agreement, all employes of the city's bus and subway systems will be working 40 hours a week with the present 48 hours' pay by next July 1.

Starting Oct. 1, 1951, a large proportion of the employes will work a 44-hour week, with 48 pay, and by next January 1, all employes will be working on that basis. Six months later the 40-hour week will go into effect.

Guildsmen Give Play

Newspaper Guild members on the Daily News, New York City, staff presented a play written by a fellow Guildsman. Production aides also were Guild members.



TV QUEEN OF WEEK

Named TV Queen of the Week in a Chicago contest, Jean Juranek, a member of Steelworkers Local 3614 in the Windy City, will compete in the fall for $10,000 in prizes and the title of Television Queen of the Year.

Ruttenberg Dissents On P.R. Minimum Rate

A new minimum wage of 58c an hour—an increase of 18c—for the banking, insurance and finance industries of Puerto Rico was announced last week by Wage-Hour Administrator William R. McComb.

The new rate was recommended by a special industry committee on which Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the CIO Dept. of Research and Education, was an employe member. He filed a vigorous dissent in which he maintained there was no good reason why the industries should not pay at least 75c minimum.

The 58c rate will go into effect this week unless formal opposition is registered. Rates below the statutory minimum of 75c are permitted in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Coast CIO Learns PAC Better Than Lobbying

By BILL MILLIS

"ELECTING good legislators is more effective than lobbying for good bills."

That's the big lesson for workers from the recently-adjourned session of the California Legislature, as summarized in a review by the California CIO Council.

With CIO and other labor representatives forced into a defensive fight throughout the session at Sacramento, the CIO Council warned:

"We must renew our efforts to keep in Sacramento those lawmakers who are working for the general welfare and to increase their number.

"The present drive for dollars for PAC gives every union member an opportunity to put his effort where it counts: in political action to elect legislators who are responsible not to special limited interests—but to the needs and wishes of the people."

Specific gains for labor included a $5 increase in workmen's compensation benefits to $35 weekly, a $5 increase in disability insurance benefits to $30 and some widening of its coverage, extension of child care centers and defeat of a long series of "hot cargo" and "right to work" bills designed to curb union organizing.

"All in all," the State CIO reported, "it was a session in which labor was forced to fight a defensive battle and had won defensive victories. A few benefits were pushed through but only because employers did not choose to bring their full opposition to bear on these measures.

"Improved election laws and welfare measures were given rough treatment and major improvements were killed.

"A reapportionment bill was passed which will make election of liberal, pro-labor legislators even more difficult than it has been in the past.

"FEPC laws were defeated and the California Senate in repeated debates and votes displayed its deep prejudice in matters relating to members of minority groups.

"The power of pressure groups and lobbyists representing business interests, including the private utilities, was repeatedly displayed."

Warren Vetoes Ban On Time Off To Vote

After strong protests led by CIO California Industrial Union Council and affiliated local unions, Gov. Earl Warren has vetoed a GOP-fathered bill which would greatly restrict the right to vote of California workers.

The Governor vetoed a bill which would virtually wipe out provisions of the state's 60-year-old "time off for voting law."

In his veto message, Warren said:

"It is not too much to ask of an employer to encourage widespread voting by releasing his employes for a period on election. day. Exercise of the right of franchise should be encouraged rather than discouraged."

The "time off for voting" law has been challenged by employers in several court cases, most recently and unsuccessfully by the Tidewater Associated Oil Co., in a case involving 64 members of CIO Oil Workers Local 445 at Martinez, Calif.

Ordained As Priest

A former member of the Ford Auto Workers local at Detroit, Francis J. Assenmacher, has been ordained as a Catholic priest. His father has worked for Ford more than 34 years and also is a member of the Auto Workers.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Note: During Mr. Haywood's absence this column is being prepared by his staff.

ADOLPH GERMER, director of organization of the CIO Woodworkers, reports that the IWA won the following representation elections: Coleman Lumber Co., Dublin, Ga., IWA 26, no union 8, challenged 5; Mercury Lumber Co., Oroville, Cal., IWA 7, no union 1; Mercury Lumber Co., Forrest Ranch, Cal., unanimous vote for IWA-CIO; P. & S. Planer, Lincoln, Mont., organized and recognized without an election; Canyon Lumber Co., Inc., Lincoln, Mont., organized and recognized without an election; Hansen Brothers Lumber Co., Roseburg, Ore., IWA 11, no union 1. A union shop election was held at Hansen Brothers on the same day, the result being 10 for and 2 against.

Allan Haywood

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that in a representation election at the American Body & Equipment Co., Kansas City, Mo., the workers favored the Auto Workers by a vote of UAW 16, no union 5. The organizational work was done by Leland Cox, president of Local 710, UAW-CIO.

A. T. Stephens, vice president of the Packinghouse Workers, reports the following representation election victories. Swift & Co., Harrisburg, Pa., UPWA 70, Independent 62, challenged 1, neither 1; Kingan Co., (cafeteria workers), Indianapolis, Ind., UPWA 26, no union 0.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports that the Auto Workers won a representation election at the Little Rock Road Machinery Co., Little Rock, Ark., by a vote of UAW-16, no union 9, challenged 3. The campaign was conducted by William Kimberling and Jack Crump, UAW representatives.

Martin Grayson, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Lithographers, reports that in a representation election at the Advance Decal Co., Cincinnati, O. the Lithographers were victorious by a vote of 11 to 3. A contract was also secured with the L. C. Young Co. (HRD Co.), New York, N. Y., following a strike. Fifteen members were involved in the strike. The local had filed for a NLRB election and subsequently the shop delegate was fired. Due to this action of the company the strike was voted, and after one week a contract was signed granting the union full recognition, reinstatement of the shop delegate, and provisions for raising the plant to area standards.

Reg. Dir. Leary reports that Local 710 UAW-CIO won a union shop election at the Dart Truck Co., Kansas City, Mo., by a vote of 74 for and 3 against. The organization work was handled by Loyal Pilan, financial secretary of Local 710.

Labor Laws Strengthened In Illinois

ILLINOIS labor legislation was strengthened and extended before the State Legislature adjourned at Springfield. In sharp contrast to many states, not one piece of anti-labor legislation was put on the books.

Unemployment, occupational disease and industrial injury benefits were increased along with blind and old age assistance payments.

Another law requires employers to issue pay checks within 13 days after the end of each earning period. This measure was fought by the rail companies, some of whom have allowed such periods to extend as long as 18 days.

Employers were also prohibited from requiring a job applicant to pay for a medical examination as a condition of employment.

A provision was approved which makes it possible for workers to maintain group insurance by cash payments during layoff or illness when no paycheck deduction can be made. LPA

Congress 'Wreckers' Given Temporary Set-Back

THERE WERE a few heartening signs last week that the growing public indignation at the antics of the 82nd Congress was finally beginning to spur more members of that body into passing a workable price control law.

The coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats which has so successfully hacked away at the administration's program was still in control.

However, there were enough disaffections of Congressmen concerned about their political futures in 1952 to check, at least temporarily, the coalition's drive to hamper the government's defense program.

On July 9, a group of Southern Democrats brazenly self-styled themselves the "wrecking crew" and boasted that they would do a "thorough pruning job" on all bills appropriating funds to run the government during the coming year.

The United Press reported that all Southern states were represented in the group, and that it had a close alliance with the Republican "economy" bloc.

By the end of the week, however, the group had been made to eat its words—at least partially.

The chief—if temporary—victory for the administration came July 11 when House-Senate conferees tossed out of the Labor-Federal Security Appropriations Bill both the Jensen and Ferguson amendments.

Under Jensen's proposal, federal agencies would be prevented from filling more than 25% of the jobs that became vacant, while the Ferguson rider would reduce personnel funds by a straight 10%.

President Truman has indicated that he will veto any measure making a straight percentage cut, since it is traditionally the responsibility of Congress to determine federal expenditures in accordance with the need for services rendered.

IN TOSSING out the House and Senate approved riders, the conferees decided to face up to their traditional obligations. They went over personnel appropriations item by item, approving compromise reductions in most cases.

Three days later, however, by a 222 to 169 vote, the House irresponsibly sent the measure back to the conference committee with instructions to approve the Jensen plan. The bill was still in conference at press time.

The conferees eliminated from the bill the Jenner amendment, which would have turned the spotlight on misery by permitting states to open their relief rolls to public inspection without losing federal welfare funds. The Indiana Legislature has passed a law requiring publication of the names of beneficiaries, although the federal law prohibits such publication.

Republican efforts to force Secy. of State Dean Acheson's ouster proved unsuccessful July 10 when the House Appropriations Committee completed work on the State-Justice-Commerce Appropriations Bill. However, a renewal of the drive when the measure came to the House floor was in prospect.

Also last week, the House Public Works Committee, which has been sitting on legislation creating the St. Lawrence Seaway Project for some time, finally got around to a meeting to consider the measure. Southern Democrats' efforts to kill the defense-important undertaking received a set-back when Chairman Buckley (D. N.Y.) reportedly blocked a vote when the Dixiecrats could have killed the measure by a one-vote margin due to the absence of some supporters.

Big Biz Line: Sock Little Man With Taxes

WITH irresponsible disregard for both the national interest and sound economic facts, big business spokesmen last week descended on the Senate Finance Committee. The purpose: to shift most of the new tax burden upon the low and middle-income groups.

Using the same techniques of high-pressure lobbying — including outright lies and misrepresentations—which they had applied so successfully in their drive to kill sound price and rent controls, a steady stream of hawkers took the witness stand to cry the special interest line.

This is the pattern of the business tax philosophy that emerged:

1. No increase in corporate income or excess profits taxes, despite the fact that profits, after taxes, are now twice the previously record profits of World War II years.

2. A sales tax, either directly on consumers or at the manufacturers' level. This would place most of the cost of the defense production program upon the low and middle-income groups already the most severely pinched by run-away inflation.

3. No increase in income taxes, or if one is necessary, a flat percentage increase in the rates in all brackets, despite the fact that low-income groups are already bearing a disproportionate share of the tax burden.

(Union economists, doing some quick and informal figuring on the big business tax plan, estimate that the tax burden on some high income families would be cut to about 4% of income. Lower income groups would have to pay for the tax burden thus passed off by the wealthy.)

Roswell Magill, representing the Committee on Federal Tax Policy, tried to persuade the committee that the new tax bill passed by the House, in conjunction with state tax laws, would take 100% of the top bracket income of taxpayers in six states.

A staff expert for the Congressional tax committees immediately refuted his statement.

He pointed out that state income taxes are deductible in computing the Federal tax. After this has been done, he said, the maximum combined rate in any state would be 94.89% for income over $80,000 for single taxpayers and over $160,000 for those filing joint returns.

Among the business organizations which called for a sales tax were the New York Commerce and Industry Association, the Investors League, Inc., and the Committee for Economic Development.

SECY. OF the Treasury John W. Snyder hit back at their proposals. He pointed out that it is "generally recognized that a sales tax would impose regressive burdens and apply with special severity to low-income families." He said that it would not fit into a price stabilization program, since it would tend to drive up wages and farm prices.

Snyder also pointed out that the proposal would be costly in that it would require new tax collection forces.

However, one sensible note did come out of the business groups' caterwauling.

George J. Burger, vice president of the National Federation of Independent business, had taken the trouble to check his facts. He informed the committee that a poll of the membership of his organization had shown 20% in favor of such a levy, while 78% were opposed.

The small entrepreneur knows where the excess profits have been going, and that, certainly, hasn't been to him.

Testimony of the CIO is scheduled to be presented July 16.

Javits Offers Elders' FEPC Bill In House

A BILL setting up a fair employment practices code to protect older workers from discrimination by employers because of their age was introduced in Congress last week by Rep. Javits (R.-Lib. N. Y.).

Entitled the National Act against Age Discrimination in Employment, the bill would make discrimination in hiring against workers over 45 an unfair employment practice which could be redressed with recovery of back wages. Although the bill emphasizes conciliation and investigation, it would provide an opportunity for review by the courts.

"If we do not see to keeping our workers over 45 employed during the next 25 years, they are likely in increasing numbers to become public charges," Javits said.

He cited the experience of New York City as typical of the mounting demands on federal, state and city budgets for old-age assistance. There, Welfare Commissioner Henry L. McCarthy reported that in the nine months between July 1, 1950, and March 31, 1951, the number of employables over 40 on the relief rolls rose from one-half the total to two-thirds.

"Older workers represent the most fruitful source of employment with the least economic and social dislocation," he claimed. "Those who employed older workers in World War II found them steady and reliable with a minimum of absenteeism due to illness or other causes."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate passed crippling bill banning price rollbacks. House debating its weak version, also preventing price rollbacks on beef.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes H.R. 4473	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House passed bill providing $7,206,000,000 increase. Senate Finance Com. now holding hearings.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Now before Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.
Labor Dept.-FSA Appropriations. H.R. 3709	Appropriates funds for operations of the Labor Dept. and Fed. Security Agency.	In conference.	Ask Senators and Congressmen to restore funds cut out.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

GOP Kills Bill For FEPC In Pennsylvania

RACIAL discrimination in the highly industrialized state of Pennsylvania was given a green light last week when a Senate committee killed a Fair Employment Practices bill in secret session.

The measure was designed to end discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color or national origin. It had been passed by the House before being given the hatchet treatment by the Senate Judiciary General Committee on a 14 to 9 vote.

The 14 members voting to let the bill die in committee were all Republicans, the party which has claimed to be champion of the Negro race.

Although the vote killing the bill was secret, the identity of those supporting the move to scrap the measure became known when supporters disclosed their position as the ballots were collected.

LISTED among the ax-wielders was Sen. T. Newell Wood, Luzerne County political lieutenant of Republican Gov. John S. Fine. Fine had supported the bill.

The action of the 14 Republican Senators was contrary to a 1950 party pledge made by Fine and other members of the statewide ticket to support FEP legislation.

The measure called for creation of a three man commission to halt discrimination in employment. It carried a $350,000 appropriation to finance its operation.

Commenting editorially, the Philadelphia Inquirer termed the killing of the bill by the committee "one of the most disgraceful and dishonorable acts of this or any other session of the Pennsylvania Assembly."

The editorial said that if the administration is sincerely in favor of FEPC legislation, "it should not accept this committee's action as final."

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

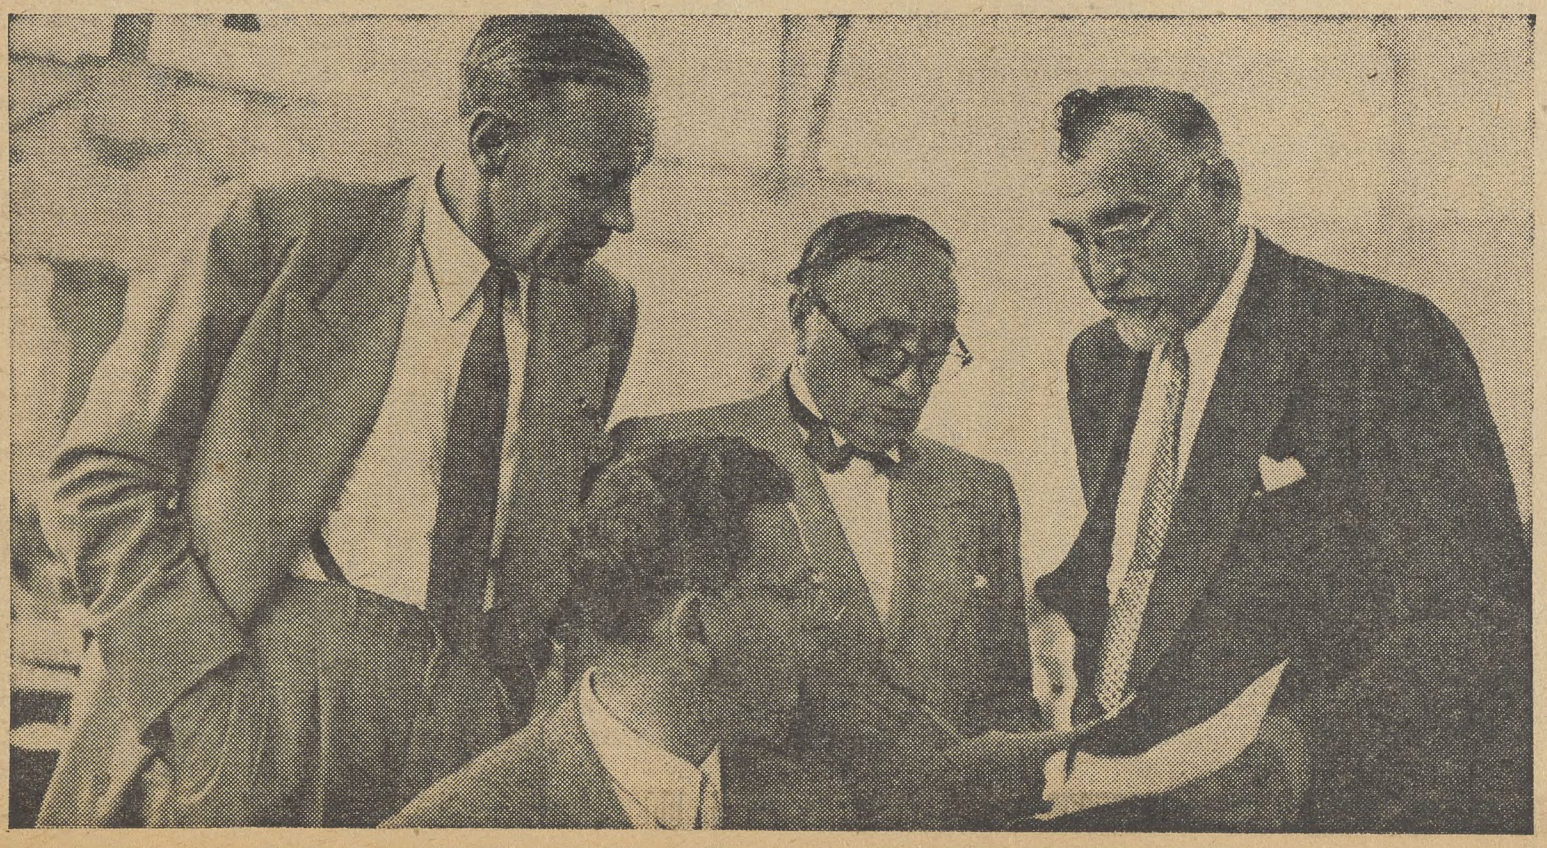
The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 23, 1951 82 No. 30

House Kills Lucas Anti-Labor Bill; Price Controls Get 'Knife' Treatment

(See Stories, Page 3)

CIO DIRECTORS ON JOB: CIO regional directors and field staff men leave headquarters in Washington after discussing anti-inflation legislation. Many of them reported "back home" sentiments to their Congressmen during course of the visit to capital. (See Page 3 for stories on the control bill and on the defeat of the Lucas amendment.)



ON JOB ABROAD . . . Members of the CIO delegation at the ICFTU congress at Milan conferring with AFL Vice-Pres. Matthew Woll. Left to right, Dir. Michael Ross of the CIO Intl. Affairs Dept., CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, Woll and Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky. (See Pages 6 and 7.)

←

CIO Testimony In Senate:

Equality Of Sacrifice Tax Would Raise $10 Billion

THE CIO last week called upon Congress to enact a new tax law "based upon the principles of ability to pay and equality of sacrifice."

Testifying before the Senate Finance Committee, Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO Director of Research and Education presented a four-fold program for improvements in the new tax bill approved by the House:

1. Exempting from tax increases any individual whose total taxable income does not exceed $1000.

2. Increasing excess profits tax rate on corporations to 85%, and closing major loopholes in the present excess profits law.

3. Eliminating the increase in excise taxes, as called for in the House bill, and refusing to consider the demands of big business for a Federal Sales Tax.

4. Closing loopholes in present tax law to raise at least 25% of the total increase in taxes.

Ruttenberg said that the CIO believes strongly in the principle of pay-as-you-go "within the concepts of present contemplated government expenditures."

The budget indicated, he added, that the additional $10 billion in taxes requested by President Truman would be necessary to cover defense expenditures.

Spare Low Incomes

"We can still raise this amount of taxes without increasing the tax burden on any individual whose total amount of taxable income does not now exceed $1000," Ruttenberg said.

"For all practical purposes, this means that a married couple with two children with a gross income between $3000 and $4000 would not be subject to additional taxation."

The CIO recommendations called for raising the additional $10 billion in the following way:

- From corporations — at least $5 billion.
- From individuals — $2½ billion.
- From plugging tax loopholes —$2½ billion.

Ruttenberg attacked particularly the proposal of the National Association of Manufacturers and other representatives of big business before the committee that most of the increased tax income be raised through a sales tax.

Points To Fallacy

He pointed out that these same groups, in opposing price controls, had testified before other committees that the economy should be stabilized through the use of indirect controls with the main emphasis on credit and taxation.

"These same employer groups, after testifying on the stabilization program," Ruttenberg declared, "come before this Finance Committee of the Senate, when it is considering tax legislation and reveal a tax program designed to relieve themselves of tax increases and impose the burden upon those least able to afford an increase.

"Their program is to tax the poor, tax the low-income individual, give relief and incentive to the wealthy."

Actually, even with the 12½% individual income tax increase proposed by the House, individuals earning $50,000 a year will still be left with $28,000 after taxes, while those earning $3000 will be left with only $2600, Ruttenberg said.

Only 3 Senators Hear CIO Plea

Absenteeism at committee hearings, as well as on the floor during votes and debates, has been a serious shortcoming of the 82nd Congress.

The Senate Finance Committee has been listening to a preponderance of spokesmen for big business—but when someone presenting the case for the people testifies, most of the members of the committee don't even bother to put in an appearance.

On July 16, for example, the CIO began presenting its testimony with only two members of the 13-man committee present. They were Sen. George (D. Ga.), the chairman, and Sen. Millikin (R. Colo.). Later, Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) put in an appearance.

The following Senators simply stayed away: Connally (D. Tex.), Byrd (D. Va.), Johnson (D. Colo.), Hoey (D. N. Car.), Frear (D. Del.), Taft (R. O.), Butler (R. Nebr.), Brewster (R. Me.), Martin (R. Pa.), Williams (R. Del.).

"For millions of American families there is hardly enough to support minimum standards of decent family life," the CIO spokesman declared. "To further increase taxes upon these individuals simply will deprive them of the ability to buy goods that are essential to a healthy and decent existence."

Proposes Increases

On the other hand, tax rates on middle and high-income individuals can be substantially increased and existing loopholes closed without curtailing their ability to buy the necessities of daily life, he said.

Citing government figures, Ruttenberg showed that in 1948 the top 10% of families by income—with earnings above $6000 a year—purchased almost the same amount of consumer goods as the bottom 50% — who earned less than $2840, although there were five times as many families in the lower group.

"Here is a large area for taxing, if 'ability to pay' and 'equality of sacrifice' are to be given real meanings, before we seriously consider reducing still further the standards of the low-income families of America," Ruttenberg said.

Sound Features

Ruttenberg declared that the House bill provision for increasing individual income tax by 12½% is "based on a sound and fundamental principle of developing and maintaining a progressive tax structure, one which is based upon the ability to pay, which places the tax burden upon those individuals most able to afford the tax increase."

He also endorsed the corporation tax increase proposed in the House bill, but said that it should be strengthened to produce $5 billion additional instead of only $2.855 billion as contemplated.

He pointed out that the House Ways and Means Committee had reported that, even after the tax increase voted, corporation profits are expected to be about $20 billion, or about 180% to 230% of corporate profits after taxes during the last war.

As much as $4½ billion to $5 billion might be raised in additional revenue by merely closing loopholes in the tax structure, the CIO official predicted.

He listed a number of major loopholes, such as (1) the split income provision, (2) estate and gift taxes, (3) capital gains, (4) interest from tax exempt securities, depletion allowances, (6) stock options, and (7) taxes upon life insurance companies.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman George (D. Ga.) has indicated that he does not think there is any likelihood of Congress accepting the big business proposal for a sales tax.

—From St. Louis Post-Dispatch

"We've fixed up a socko for Truman!"

U.S. Asks Consumers To Report Price Fixing

MANUFACTURERS, distributors and retailers who have persisted in certain price-fixing practices despite last May's Supreme Court decision on "fair trade" laws face "prompt and vigorous action" by the Dept. of Justice, Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath promised last week.

The court has held that attempts to force dealers who have not entered into "fair-trade" contracts to adhere to minimum resale prices were contrary to the Sherman Antitrust Act.

McGrath said that "the Department of Justice is seriously concerned" over reported violations of Federal antitrust laws "by concerted efforts on the part of manufacturers and of distributors of commodities."

He said that firms engaging in programs or schemes of any of the following types, involving commodities in interstate commerce, may be subject to criminal prosecution:

1. Agreements among competing retailers to maintain and adhere to specified minimum prices.

2. Agreements to coerce and induce wholesalers or manufacturers, through threat of boycott or other reprisals, to refrain from selling to price-cutting retailers.

3. Agreements to coerce or induce manufacturers or wholesalers to enter into so-called "fair trade contracts."

4. Agreements to coerce or induce retailers to sign such contracts.

5. Agreements on the prices or margins of profits which should be set forth in such contracts and on methods to require producers or wholesalers to specify certain prices or markups in such contracts.

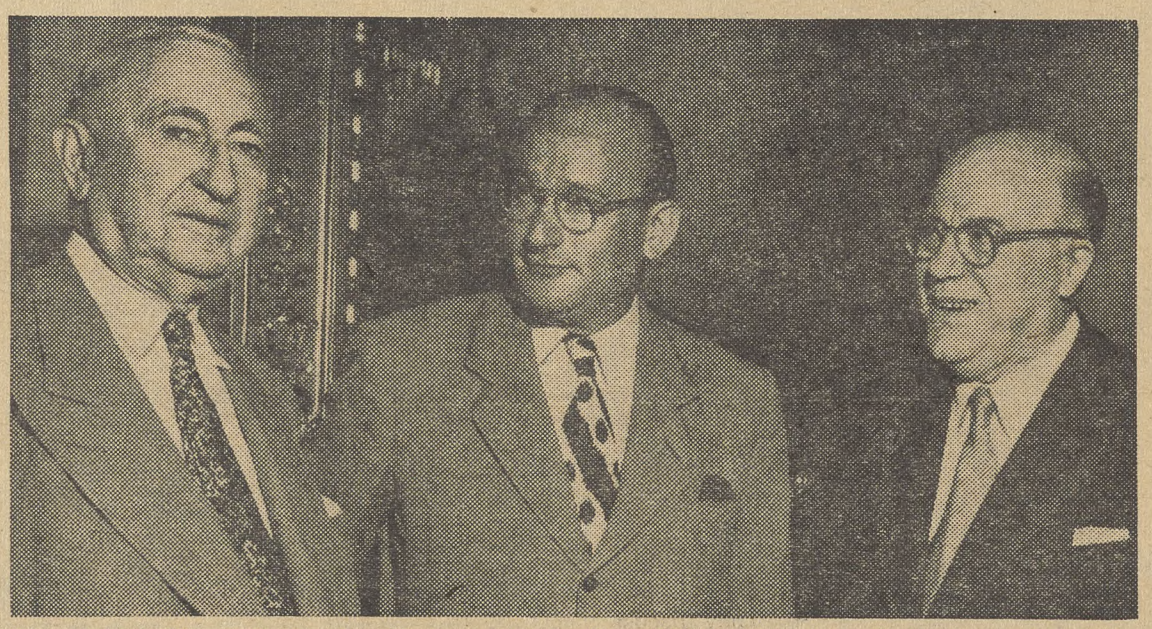
Assistant Atty. Gen. H. G. Morrison, in charge of the anti-trust Division, promptly followed up McGrath's statement, calling upon the consuming public to aid the Justice Dept.'s effort to prevent illegal price-fixing.

"Anyone having knowledge of any combination, conspiracy or agreement among competitors to fix or maintain prices, including the prices at which wholesalers and retailers sell goods, owes it to himself and to his country to bring such information to the attention of the Dept. of Justice," Morrison said.

He added that public support of the Justice Dept.'s anti-trust activities was especially important during these times of high prices and inflationary pressures.

Seek Funds For Camp

A joint CIO-AFL committee in Muskegan, Mich., is conducting a drive for $10,000 to finance the summer day camp for children. It's the fifth year unions have sponsored the camp.



CIO RESEARCH DIR. Stanley H. Ruttenberg stands between a Southern Democrat, Sen. George (Ga.), chairman of the Senate Finance Committee (left), and a northern Republican, Sen. Milliken (Colo.). Ruttenberg asked the committee to apply equality of sacrifice to the bill. Neither George nor Millikin seemed enthusiastic about the proposal.

Lucas Bill Killed; Control Wrecking Still On

GOP Shouts 'Devotion' To Price Curbs

By MILTON PLUMB

LAST WEEK was Say-one-thing-do-the-opposite Week for the Republicans in the House of Representatives.

Minority Leader Martin (R., Mass.) and Rep. Wolcott (R. Mich.), leader of the GOP strategy to wreck the government's anti-inflation program, both complained of the "campaign of untruth and calumny" which they said "falsely" represents the Republicans as "sabotaging price, wage and credit controls." The Republicans aren't opposed to controls, at all, they contended.

During the entire week, the Republicans in the House lined up almost solidly with Southern Democrats in sponsoring and voting for increased prices and all but one of the Dixiegop amendments designed to wreck new legislation regulating the national economy.

Surprise Move

On July 19, a surprise move by the Dixiecrat-GOP coalition resulted in the adoption of an amendment which would freeze wages and prices for 120 days at July 7 levels but leave most farm and food prices free to rise.

The Republicans joined with the Southern farm bloc in beating down efforts to include farm prices in the freeze and another proposal by Rep. Fogarty (D., R. I.) that would have rolled wages and prices back to Sept. 8, 1950.

Democratic leaders charged the coalition with "pulling a rabbit out of the hat" at the last moment to make controls unworkable.

But the efforts of most Republicans to pose as supporters of strong price controls weren't getting very far. It was too easy to check the record.

And while the public's memory may be short, it was not short enough to have forgotten that Rep. Wolcott on July 9 had offered an amendment declaring Congress' intent was that no wage-price-credit controls "shall be used unless" other indirect means of stabilizing the economy are tried.

House Banking Committee Chairman Spence (D. Ky.) immediately pointed out that Wolcott's amendment, which the House defeated, would have "scuttled" the price control program and "nullified every provision" the bill contains.

Spence said Wolcott's amendment would have required price controls to be suspended, placing the economy in the hands of a group of "non-elected officials," the Federal Reserve Board.

There was also the record of how the Republicans had voted after their leaders had protested that they really, actually, honestly were for controls, after all.

One Day's Event

Take, for example, one day, July 18.

One that day, the House handed the administration four serious setbacks in its program to hold the line on food prices. With the Republican-Southern Democratic coalition solidly in the saddle again, the House adopted amendments to its controls bill which would:

1. Force price ceilings to be set so that processors and manufacturers of all items would be allowed a profit equal to the average of the three best years of the four-year period, 1946-49.

2. Provide special profit protection for food processors. Price stabilization officials said this would force boosts in ceiling prices on many foods.

3. Set ceilings which would guarantee packers and slaughterers a "reasonable profit" on each kind of meat animal they handle, figured separately.

4. Deny the administration's request for authority to tighten up farm price ceilings through a so-called "parity freeze."

The House shouted approval of an amendment by Rep. Gamble (R., N.Y.) which would exempt fees for professional services from price control.

The House also approved an amendment by Rep. Halleck (R. Ind.) designed to benefit the retailers of Indiana. The amendment would require that ceiling prices fixed by the OPS take into account gross receipts or gross income taxes.

Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle termed the first action—the cost-plus, guaranteed profit amendment—"the most damaging blow to price controls that has so far been approved by either branch of Congress."

Old Gray Mare Scares Packers

The "old gray mare," now being found on many dinner tables, will become "rarer," if the meat industry has its way.

As reported in last week's issue of The CIO News, higher prices resulting from the drive by the cattle industry to kill price controls on beef and other meats have forced an increasing number of American families to eat horse meat.

Last week Joseph B. Danzansky, attorney for the National Association of Meat Processors and Wholesalers, asked city commissioners in Washington, D. C., to prohibit the sale of horse meat where "regular meat and meat products are sold."

He asserted that his clients "do not want to compete for the consumers' dollar with horse meat sold at the same counter."

Wants Happy Home, Votes For Controls

One Republican in Congress, at least, has made it clear that he is not going to go along with the GOP-Dixiecrat drive to kill all price rollbacks.

His reason: If he did, "I won't dare go home."

Rep. Canfield (R. N.J.) said last week that he has "five hungry children" to feed on a 1946 salary and that he is "having difficulty" at today's prices.

On the issue of price rollbacks, he said, "I've been pursued day and night by a charming and persistent lobbyist—my wife."

Two Moves To Curb WSB Defeated

IN THE ONE bright action taken during last week's continued Congressional massacre of price-rent-wage controls, the House turned thumbs down on two big business proposals to wreck the Wage Stabilization Board.

By a vote of 217 to 113, it defeated a viciously anti-labor amendment to the Defense Production Act introduced by Rep. Lucas (D. Tex.).

The amendment would have reconstituted the board's membership by requiring a majority of public members over representatives of labor and industry, and would have ended its powers to act in non-wage disputes.

Earlier, by a 190-to-152 vote the House rejected an amendment by Rep. Kersten (R. Wis.) to limit the board's authority exactly as proposed by Lucas but to leave its membership unaltered.

Both actions were by "teller" votes. Names are not recorded in this kind of voting.

"A united front on the part of organized labor" was credited by the New York Times and other observers with helping "materially" to bring about defeat of these amendments.

In turning down the proposals, the House gave the National Association of Manufacturers and other special interest groups one of the few setbacks in their drive to sabotage the pending anti-inflation legislation that they have received from the lobby-dominated 82nd Congress.

The Lucas proposal had been strongly endorsed, if not written, by the NAM. It followed exactly the proposals which the NAM had made to the Labor Subcommittee, of which Lucas is chairman.

Sen. Taft (R. O.) also had called for a similar measure in a minority report objecting to the recommendation of a Senate Labor subcommittee that the wage stabilization program be unaltered at this time.

WSB Chairman George W. Taylor had warned that the Lucas amendment would cripple the wage stabilization program and lead to more strikes. Members of the board also united in opposing the provision which would have destroyed equal representation of labor, industry and the public.

JUST PRIOR to the vote, Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.) told the House that the Kersten and Lucas proposals would leave the board "powerless to do a fair and effective job." Rep. Fulton (R. Pa.) pleaded with the members not to "monkey with a program that is working well."

Rep. Green (D. Pa.) charged that the group in the House seeking to destroy labor in a time of national emergency was "either blind or don't give a damn." Green withdrew the remark later, on a ruling of the chair, after exception had been taken to it.

Although 65 Republicans reportedly joined 152 Democrats in opposition to the Lucas amendment, a House GOP leader Halleck (R. Ind.) made clear his party's policy. He supported the move to take away the board's powers to settle non-wage disputes.

The defection of Republicans, which offset the Southern Democrats' support of the amendments, was due at least in part to the active work against the Lucas proposal carried on last week in Washington by a large group of CIO regional and council officers.

Better Late Than Never: Senate May Create Consumer Unit

THE "forgotten" man" in Congress—the American consumer—soon may have a special Senate committee to consider his interests.

A resolution (S. Res. 169) calling for the creation of a 13-member Senate Committee on Consumer Interests has been introduced by Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.), acting for himself and 23 other Senators. Last week the proposal was awaiting consideration by a Senate Rules subcommittee.

The committee would be denied legislative jurisdiction, but it would have broad powers "to study and survey by means of research and investigation problems affecting consumer interests in the present national emergency."

It would "give special attention to prices charged the consumer for food, fuel, clothing and costs and methods of producing, processing and distributing these and other consumer goods."

In sponsoring the resolution, Gillette said, "The battle over economic controls has highlighted once again a major defect in our legislative structure: there does not exist any effective agency in the Congress through which the consumer's voice can be specifically heard."

He pointed out that in addition to housewives, millions of older citizens and veterans dependent on pensions and small fixed incomes, and a great mass of unorganized workers and lower-bracket salaried employes, "are being squeezed between low incomes and high prices."

"AS CONSUMERS," he said, "these millions of people—as well as everybody else—are entitled to adequate protection by the Congress."

There was strong bi-partisan support for the measure.

Co-sponsors, in addition to Gillette, included Sens. Hunt (D. Wyo.), Lehman (D. N.Y.), Flanders (R. Vt.), Humphrey (D. Minn.), Langer (R. N. Dak.), Lodge (R. Mass.), Smith (R. N.J.), Murray (D. Mont.), Kefauver (D. Tenn.), Moody (D. Mich.), Ives (R. N.Y.), Duff (R. Pa.), Clements (D. Ky.), Douglas (D. Ill.), Magnuson (D. Wash.), Young (R. N. Dak.), Green (D. R.I.), Sparkman (D. Ala.), Pastore (D. R.I.), Henrickson (R. N.J.), Hill (D. Ala.), Morse (R. Ore.) and Neely (D. W. Va.).

Three CIO Aides On Institute Program

Three CIO leaders will be among those participating in an institute on "Teamwork in Industry" at Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y., July 26-28.

Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council will be one of the principal speakers. Leo Perlis, director of the CIO Community Services Committee, and John Slocum, CIO Clothing Workers.

MEMBERS of the Philadelphia CIO Council were in Washington last week protesting mass layoffs of workers in that city's key industries. They discuss them with Rep. Barrett (D. Pa.), who is seated. Standing, left to right: Walter Mieloch, Electrical Workers; Lewis Tidley, Textile Workers; Robert Cox, IUE; Ellis Millard, TWUA; John Edelman, TWUA's Washington representative; Phillip Cooper, TWUA; Joseph Harkins, IUE; Fred Lauterwasser, TWUA; James McCaffrey, Auto Workers; William F. Miller, Philadelphia TWUA Joint Board, and George F. Kane, sub-regional director, UAW. The group also saw state officials.

Gone But Not Forgotten

The Lucas Amendment, which would have ruined the effectiveness of any Wage Stabilization Board, has been consigned to the legislative junk-yard. It should have been put there weeks ago.

The amendment had no real justification. Pure and simple, it was designed to "hit labor." It would have ended any responsible role for union representatives in the development of a fair stabilization program during the national emergency. It would also have kept the government from seeking fair settlements of disputes—in the hope that strikes would feel the full brunt of the unfair Taft-Hartley Act.

So the liberal Democrats and the many Republicans who voted—in the preliminary balloting in the House—to kill the Lucas Amendment to the Defense Production Act, showed considerable understanding of the dangers involved in such foolhardy legislation.

It is too bad that the conservative majority on the House Labor Committee—which should know better—fell for this big-business-sponsored piece of nonsense in the first place.

Grab, Grab, Grab

Rumors that southern Democrats and northern Republicans in the House might be in favor of bringing prices down, or of even holding them to present levels, were strictly inaccurate.

The coalition in the House has gone even beyond its opposite number in the Senate to appease the profiteers. It has given its tentative o.k. to a "cost-plus" profit amendment, which is described as "more damaging to price controls" than anything the Senate coalition had thought up.

If the "cost-plus" amendment is finally enacted into law, price controls—and equality of sacrifice—will be a phrase for the history books.

And the conservative coalition in Congress will once again be shown up for what it is—a craven group of servants for the special profit interests of America, even in time of national emergency and world crisis.

Reversible Error

Ever since it was handed the job of administering the Taft-Hartley law, the National Labor Relations Board has managed to produce some queer decisions.

None of them has been more queer, however, than the recent NLRB decision—in the case of the Ford-UAW contract at Canton, Ohio.

Without hearing, and without much thought, the NLRB undermined hundreds of union security contracts signed by CIO unions during the period of 1947-49—the period between passage of Taft-Hartley and the decision of CIO leaders to sign non-Communist affidavits. The Board now claims that these contracts have little status because the CIO technically "was not in compliance" with the T-H at that time—although the NLRB itself had ruled then that CIO unions were indeed in compliance.

Nobody benefits from the latest silly ruling of the NLRB except a few craft unions which maintain permanent fishing expeditions for the purpose of nibbling into the effective industrial-union contracts of CIO uninos.

This invitation to disruption of normal union-management relations comes at a time when the Administration—of which the NLRB is a part—is calling for stabilization. The Labor Board should admit its error in trying to out-do the Taft-Hartley law, and quickly reverse this whopping error of judgment.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV July 23, 1951 No. 30

Double Wringer Ceremony

U. S. Bases In Spain

Democracy And Dictator Franco

Last week, the U. S. State Department announced that talks had begun with Dictator Franco of Spain for a bargain over the leasing of Spanish ports and airbases to the U. S. armed forces. Such a deal raises many questions for the free nations of the world. Here are some comments on that subject made by the head of the CIO delegation at the recent convention of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at Milan, Italy:

By JACOB S. POTOFSKY
Chairman, CIO International Committee
President, Amalgamated Clothing Workers

THE FOUNDING conference of the ICFTU in the winter of 1949 adopted a resolution on Spain which included the following statement: I quote:—

"The Congress goes on record as opposing the granting of any assistance to Spain until such time as democracy and full trade union rights have been restored and the workers are once more able to make their contribution to the country's recovery."

We of the CIO can see no reason why we should depart today from the position taken in these resolutions. On the contrary, we insist with renewed vigor on a policy of no economic assistance to and no political appeasement of the dictator Franco.

The strikers of Barcelona, and Pamplona, and Bilboa and Madrid were not striking for a loan to Franco from the democratic countries. They were not begging for handouts.

They were demanding a government responsive to their needs and representative of their hopes and aspirations. They were calling for a government that could solve the great economic and social problems of Spain in a democratic fashion.

FRANCO HAS TRIED to explain away these strikes with the lie that they were provoked by Communists. In fact Communists of Spain sought and failed to assume the initiative in the Spanish strikes.

Unfortunately for Franco, it is the Spanish people who are against the Spanish regime, and not the minority of Communist agitators.

The democratic countries, and in particular, America, face a choice.

We can put Franco on a perpetual dole. We can sign treaties with his unrepresentative government. And we can look the other way when the Spanish people stand in the squares and ask for a share in the benefits of democracy promised by our short-wave transmittors and beamed to the rest of the world.

This choice we must reject.

Or we can give and should give Franco the final shove into oblivion, and give Spain back to the Spanish people.

This we can and we must do by denying him aid, by refusing him recognition, and by outlawing him from the family of nations. We should put a padlock on the Import-Export Bank loans given his government in Madrid until democracy is restored to Spain.

The Spanish strikes have made it clear for all to see that Spain is ripe for a change of regime.

Franco's economic difficulties brought on by his corrupt administration are insurmountable without substantial and prompt outside help. This help must and should be denied.

The strikes also proved for all to see that the old free organizations of the Spanish workers continue to live underground.

THE MILITARY MEN may see in Franco Spain a military base. We of the free labor movement see in the Franco dictatorship a prison camp for our fellow workers, and a social and economic liability of the democratic world.

Without claiming to be military experts, we must point out to the generals and statesmen that there is no strong point and no security for the democracies in Franco-Spain, but merely a cancer that must be removed from the democratic community of Western Europe.

The struggle for liberty and justice requires the highest degree of moral leadership. It cannot be led by men who do not believe, and in fact oppose, these high ideals.

Message For White Collar Workers:

'Join A Union And Cast Off A Yoke'

(Excerpts from a speech by the Secretary of Labor at the convention of the AFL retail clerks union in Washington)

By SECY. OF LABOR MAURICE TOBIN

THE NUMBER OF WHITE collar workers is growing; and American labor has got to keep up with it.

I've said that these workers need organized labor. Let me explain what I mean.

The average weekly earnings of production workers in industry have gone up 170% since 1939. The average weekly earnings of clerical and professional workers have gone up only 92%.

The average factory worker, in March of this year, was making $64.33 a week, or $1.57 an hour. The average worker in retail trade, was making $48.95 or $1.24 an hour.

A part of the superior wage position of the factory worker, I am convinced, is due to the strength of his labor unions.

But unionism for white collar workers isn't only important because it brings higher wages and better working conditions. It's important also because it gives the worker an opportunity to participate in deciding what those wages and working conditions should be.

A Democratic Right

It makes him a citizen of his firm or factory with a democratic right to a voice in its affairs. He isn't just a number on a time card. He's a man who has his say, through his elected representatives, in the way things are run. . . .

There are a lot of white collar workers who still turn up their noses at the benefits of trade unionism. They do it out of a kind of snobbishness; a feeling that unions are for factory workers, and that factory workers are beneath them. They don't want to "degrade" the white collar by belonging to the same labor movement with workers who wear overalls.

The factory workers earn more money. They can buy their families better food and clothing and housing. They can send their children to better schools. But some white collar workers still think it's a disgrace to be in the same labor movement with them. For any man who thinks like that, the white collar isn't a badge of distinction. It's a yoke.

SECY. OF LABOR MAURICE TOBIN

You would have thought that kind of thinking went out with the horse and buggy. You would have thought that kind of snobbishness was reserved for people who had something to be snobbish about. And the unorganized white collar workers haven't. Not a thing.

I want to tell you that the trade union movement has been one of the most constructive forces in the history of the United States. If there's any man too good to be associated with it, I'd like to know who he is.

It's a privilege to belong to an American trade union. It's an honor to belong to one. And any worker, no matter what color his collar is, can join one with pride.

The trade union is one of the noblest institutions this democracy of ours has been able to produce. It's the logical extension of democratic principles into the business and industrial life of America.

Democracy means having a voice. It means participating in making decisions that affect your welfare. And that's what trade unionism means: a voice in the factory, a voice in the store, a voice wherever workers are employed. It means the right to participate in the government of industrial and business life.

And who is the real citizen of the business and industrial community? Who is the good American? The factory worker who has a voice and uses it; or the white collar worker who sits back and obeys rules he had no part in making?

Union Security, Too

I have said that organized labor needs white collar workers, just as white collar workers need organized labor. Many of these workers, particularly in the technical and professional groups, have background and experience and training that can prove tremendously valuable to the labor movement. Their academic training and their intellectual approach can supplement the experience and practical wisdom of the seasoned trade unionists. . . .

I want to talk for a moment about one problem of organization in your own retail field. That's the problem of turnover. You know what a tremendous problem that is.

By the time you get a group of clerks organized, a large number of them have left their jobs and you have to start all over again with the newcomers. The organizers have got to work day and night to keep up with the turnover. One of them has said it's like pouring water into a sieve.

No union can continue to organize at that rate for very long. And, of course, no store wants to be the arena for a constant, never-ending organizing campaign. So the stores and the unions, through collective bargaining, have worked out an answer. And the answer is the union shop.

I don't mean to imply that the union shop has been granted by retail stores without a struggle; but, in general, retail employers have shown far less opposition to it than employers in manufacturing. Retailers have granted the union shop extensively in stores throughout the United States.

The union shop fits a particular problem of retail trade establishments; and, in my opinion, it belongs in union contracts in that field.

West Coast Hello Girls Vote Walkout 25 to 1

ARMED WITH a 25-to-1 strike vote, negotiators for the CIO Communications Workers last week were in eleventh-hour wage negotiations with Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. for a new contract covering 9000 phone operators in Northern California and Nevada.

More than 20,000 phone workers including PT&T, American Telephone & Telegraph and Western Electric employes—will be affected if the operators go out at the 6 a.m. July 20 strike deadline.

CWA local union and area strike committees were at work on all phases of strike preparations, announced Joseph Deardoff, CWA western regional director of San Francisco. Mannie Silva, Oakland local president, was named strike director.

"Some slight progress" in negotiations was reported by Deardoff after Federal Conciliator Omar Hoskins was called in by CWA and the union allowed a four-day extension of the contract.

Major present union issues are a 10% wage increase, upgrading in all cities and towns under the area wage differentials, reduction in the experience rating scale from a 7½-year to 5-year top, and other working condition improvements.

Under CWA's new industrial union organization, all telephone crafts are represented in the bargaining committee on the traffic contract.

Three More CSC Representatives To Aid Community Agencies

Leo Perlis, director of the CIO Community Services Committee, has announced the appointment of three additional full time CSC representatives to serve with community agencies.

The three are: Charles Bowers, former president of the Port Cities CIO Council and March Haas, president of CIO Steelworkers Local 216 and the Kalamazoo County CIO Council, both assigned to the Michigan Welfare League, and Frank W. Kleva, CIO Steelworkers, assigned to the Council of Community Services of the United Fund of South Bend, Ind.

Perlis said the number of CSC representatives in the field now totals 46.

Misleading Figures Used In Fight To Weaken Rent Control Lid

COMPLETELY misleading statistics are being used by Congress as its basis for wrecking rent control, the CIO National Housing Committee charged last week.

The Banking and Currency Committees of both the House and Senate drafted legislation permitting 20% rent increases in areas now under control—on the basis of "information" that rent expenditures now amount to about 11% of workers' income.

That is the amount indicated by the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumer Price Index.

In sharp contrast to this testimony are figures released by the Bureau of the Census, which reveal that for families with an income between $1000 and $10,000 annually, the average family spends 18% on rent. The bureau also reported that the following percentages of income are being paid for rent by these lower-income groups:

- 59% is being paid by those earning between $100 and $1000.
- 26% is being paid by those earning between $1000 and $2000.
- 19% is being paid by those earning between $2000 and $3000.
- 16% is being paid by those earning between $3000 and $4000.

"These figures are substantially above the 11% basis upon which the House and Senate Banking and Currency Committees voted a 20% increase on all tenants now under rent control," the CIO committee's statement said.

The committee pointed out that the BLS Index has been under criticism by CIO officials since 1945 as not accurately reflecting real living costs.

"All of the members of Congress have been deluged with misinformation based upon this index," the committee said. "It is therefore important to see that those who have been making the index have been following the real estate lobby's line that the portion of income going for rent has continuously dropped since 1940."

The committee recalled that the BLS index had claimed that rents increased between 1940 and April, 1950, by only 25.2%. In sharp contrast, 1950 census figures show an increase of 67%.

Only the Federal Reserve Board produces figures comparable with those of the BLS, the committee said, adding that every effort to check the basis upon which the BLS reduced the percentage of income going for rent to 11% "has been in vain."

IT POINTED out that the board "is controlled by the bankers who operate in favor of the mortgage banking and real estate industries."

The Federal Reserve Board's 1949 Survey of Consumers Finance showed a 13% rate of family expenditure for rent and housing, but for families whose incomes were under $2000 annually it reported that the amount was 21%.

Even the board's survey said:

"The portion of income devoted to maintaining living quarters is smaller among higher income families than it is among lower income families."

The CIO committee statement pointed out that more than 2.5 million substandard and dilapidated dwelling units located in major cities are the main concern of those opposing rent control.

IUE Greets GI Members Abroad

All locals of the CIO Electrical Workers have been notified that messages from home may now be sent free of charge from Tokyo to servicemen in Korea.

The messages will be put on the air in Japan by the Armed Services Radio and will serve to remind IUE members that the folks back home are thinking of them. The IUE is the first union in the country to take advantage of the offer.

ICFTU Meet A Milestone To Peace, Progress, Liberty

DELEGATES to the second convention of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions last week were plodding their weary way home—to union headquarters in some 47 nations throughout the democratic world.

They had made a major contribution to the struggle for peace, economic progress and liberty.

The eight-day session at Milan, Italy, brought together some 154 delegates from 56 union centers throughout the world. More than 90% of the ICFTU's 53 million members were represented at the sessions.

CIO's 10-man delegation played an important role in the convention, reports from Milan clearly showed.

CIO representatives headed the convention's resolutions and regional organization committees; served as secretary of the economic-political-social group; and served on several other committees.

In its closing session, the ICFTU lodged a strong complaint with the UN's Intl. Labor Organization that Peron's Argentina is violating basic trade union rights, and has practically abolished the right to strike.

Before winding up its business, the ICFTU re-elected CIO Pres. Murray to the Executive Board, and named Jacob S. Potofsky and Victor Reuther as his substitutes. Murray was also elected an ICFTU vice-president and a member of its emergency committee.

In closing the convention, the ICFTU repeated its basic platform calling for "peace, bread and freedom" for the working peoples of the world.

As an immediate step, the ICFTU decided to raise $700,000 for trade union organizing activities in areas where unions are weak. The money will go to pay organizers, rent office space and print educational material.

Delegates noted that the economic difficulties facing workers in Italy, where the conference was held, are mirrored in Asia, Africa and South America. Delegates from India, Sierra Leone, Greece and Venezuela all told the same story of low wages, oppressive employers, and the constant menace of reactionary dictatorships taking over the government.

Boyd Wilson, delegate from the CIO Steelworkers, moved the delegates with a frank attack on racial discrimination, which he says "causes 150 million Americans to hang their heads in shame." He added that "American trade unions have been in the forefront of the righteous campaign" to wipe out discrimination.

In one of the convention's major speeches, CIO Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg denied that an "economic interpretation of history" can explain the present state of cold and hot war between the Soviet world and the non-Communist nations.

"The men of the Kremlin cannot complain of a lack of raw materials, of space, of manpower or natural resources, or any of the other "economic reasons which have in the past moved empires to reach out toward their own destruction," Goldberg said.

"The aim of the American trade union movement," he said, "as indeed the aim of every free trade union movement, is the achievement of peace. There is no victory in war. But we have come to realize that peace cannot be achieved by wishing for it.

"WITH THE spirit of agression that emanates from the Kremlin these days, peace does not descend like rain from heaven upon the weak who merely sit and hope."

Goldberg said that the "spirit of equality of sacrifice" is not only a domestic issue for Americans, but is at the root of the North Atlantic Treaty and other international efforts to resist Soviet-inspired aggression.

"We deny the criticism of those who engage in the indiscriminate anti-Americanism of our enemies in discussing subjects of common concern," he added, "We seek peace—peace achieved through strength and firmly based on social and economic justice."

ECA Advisers Report Urges New Goals

THE PUBLIC Advisory Board of the Economic Cooperation Administration has issued a public report listing gains under the Marshall Plan and suggesting a six-point program for ECA.

The Board was set up under the original Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 and its members appointed by the President. CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey is a member of the Board.

Reviewing the activities of ECA during the past three years, the report noted that most of the basic work of reactivating the economic life of the war-damaged free nations of Western Europe has been done.

"Of lasting significance," the report stated, "is the emphasis that has been placed on inducing Europe to develop free intra-European trade and thus create her own vast continental market by acquiring the machines and know-how to produce goods on a mass scale at competitive world prices.

Strong Europe Is Goal

"These steps have been designed to bring about Europe's economic integration and to make her economically self-sustaining and a stronger ally."

The report called the work ECA has done in Europe "a tremendous job" and recalled that Defense Secy. George Marshall had termed it a "near miracle."

"The 275 million people of Europe are now producing as much on their farms as in prewar days, and industrial prduction is now running about 40% above the prewar level," the report said.

"As a result, Europe's income reached $160 billion last year. By European standards, this is fair; by American standards, it is low.

"ECA must, despite its near miracle, continue to try to get Europe to develop a mass market . . . to learn mass production techniques . . . and to increase its productivity much further in both agriculture and industry."

The report pointed out that in addition to its outstanding European job, ECA has been given additional responsibilities in some of the countries of the Far East and Southeast Asia.

"As Communists fomented violence and terrorism in these areas, it became evident that an orderly society could be maintained there only through the extension of economic and technical assistance.

"The Asiatic work, aimed chiefly at strengthening institutions, facilitating production and providing assistance in economic development, is being energetically prosecuted as a means of increasing internal stability and security."

Six-Point Program

The board recommended a six-point program for future ECA activities:

1. Do everything possible to further strengthen the civilian economies of our allies consistent with maximum defense production.

2. Administer U. S. financial assistance to obtain defense security objectives as established through the Committee on Intl. Security Affairs.

3. Promote appropriate control measures in allied and friendly nations to conserve their resources.

4. Continue to develop old and new sources of critical and strategic materials among free nations of the world.

5. Carry out whatever foreign economic activities are undertaken by this government to strengthen the free world in relation to those who oppose it.

6. Continue ECA information activities in support of the defense economic program.

The report declared that through ECA's "energetic efforts," the spread of communism in Europe "has been contained and a good start made in assisting countries in Southeast Asia to increase their economic strength and internal stability.

"There is reason to believe that ECA's work actually stopped Soviet Russia from swallowing up western Europe. A better, healthier Europe and stronger members of the free world elsewhere are emerging.

"In the present world crisis, it is vital that ECA be directed to carry on the economic defense job on the international level."

Scotland Steel Union Leader Visits Scottish-Born Murray

TWO MEN born a half-mile apart in Scotland, both destined to become leaders of big unions in the steel industry—one in Great Britain, the other in the United States—met for the first time last week.

John Campbell Lang, secretary of the Scotland branch of the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation of Great Britain visited CIO Pres. Philip Murray at the Pittsburgh headquarters of the CIO Steelworkers. Murray has been head of the steel union since it was organized in 1936.

In this country on a nine-weeks tour arranged under a government-sponsored educational exchange program, Lang arrived in New York by plane in May. He will return to Britain late in July.

Murray and Lang were born in the Glasgow area, but some years apart. Lang, the younger of the two, is in his fifties. Relatives of the two steel labor leaders know each other in Scotland.

Murray came to America with his family when still a boy, while Lang has remained in the region of his birth.

Lang also visited CIO headquarters in Washington and conferred with USA Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald and other CIO officials.

One of the highlights of his CIO contacts, Lang said, was the four days he spent at the CIO summer school at Grinnell College, Ia., directed by George Guernsey of the National CIO Dept. of Education and Research. He sat in on classes, sang Scottish labor songs at social gatherings, and told the students about British trade unions and the Labor Party, of which he is an ardent supporter.

Lang was particularly impressed with the rich farm lands he saw in the midwest as well as with America's big industrial plants.

Students at the CIO school were so delighted with Lang that they bought gifts for him and for his wife in Scotland to show their appreciation.

Lang said the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation, which has headquarters in London, has some 120,000 members. Of these, 14,000 belong to the Scottish branch, which has offices at Glasgow.

JOHN LANG, secretary of the Scotland branch of Great Britain's steel workers union, in this country on a U. S. government-sponsored educational exchange program, talks with some CIO aides at Washington. Seated are Lang (left) and Assistant Organization Director R. J. Thomas. Standing, l to r: George Guernsey, Anthony Federoff, Joseph Walsh, Paul Christopher and George Craig. Of the latter, all but Guernsey are on the Organization Dept. Staff.

Red Workers Blamed For Low Production

The Russians are having trouble with production—again.

Soviet union newspapers this time are blaming the workers for alleged failure to increase production the way the Kremlin's heavy thinkers calculate it ought to be done.

Criticism has been levelled at those employed in the oil, metallurgical, machine construction, lumber, building, railroad, textile and shoe industries, as well as those in some other consumer industries, according to the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

The Red labor press has been telling the unions to pay more attention to reaching 1951 production goals, and to broaden mass education activities which are aimed at increased production by all workers.

Cameraman's Record Of Second ICFTU Congress

DEMONSTRATION: By special trains and buses these members of free trade unions came to Milan from all parts of Italy to stage a monster demonstration in honor of the delegates to the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions' Congress. Union members took part in the event. About 90% of ICFTU's 53 million members were represented at the sessions. Delegates came from more than 47 nations throughout the democratic world.

THE UMBRELLA held by Pres. Leon Jouhaux of the French Force Ouvriere affords some protection for him, Secy. Guilio Pastore of the Italian Confederation of Free Labor and two unidentified men behind them, as they watch the demonstration. At the right is Secy. Andre' La Fond of the FO railroad workers.

CIO AT ICFTU: Members of the CIO group at the ICFTU congress at Milan, Italy. Left to right: Michael Quill, transport workers; ICFTU Secy. Oldenbroek; Jacob Potofsky, clothing workers; retiring ICFTU Pres. Finet; Victor Reuther, CIO European representative; John Brophy, ICFTU New York staff; Frank Bellanca, clothing workers. Second row: Michael Ross, CIO international director; Boyd Wilson, steelworkers; Martin Kyne, retail union; Arthur Goldberg, CIO counsel; Sol Stettin, textile union; Joseph Curran, maritime union; Meyer Bernstein, on leave from steel union, now on government job abroad.

GIVING the low-down on the terroristic tactics employed by the Communists in China is Wang Chung, delegate from the Free China Labor League.

HARD AT WORK: Like many other conventions much of the work of the ICFTU Congress was done by committees. Here members of the economic, social and political committee are working on their report. Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel and a member of the CIO delegation, is fourth from the right. Meyer Bernstein, formerly on the United Steelworkers staff is seventh from the right. Note the flags of some of the nations represented by the delegates.

Reconversion Safeguard

IUE Asks GE For Unemployment Fund

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week proposed that General Electric give its employes a "shock absorber" against temporary layoffs caused by material shortages or retooling for defense production.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey, heading the union's negotiating committee, requested the company to establish an unemployment security fund, out of which workers would be assured of full pay for the first two weeks of idleness and half pay for the next 12 weeks.

He called for GE to supply the difference between the total sum and the amount received by the workers in state unemployment insurance.

Carey stressed the need for a "productivity" wage increase of 5c hourly for the union's 70,000 members in 41 GE plants throughout the country.

In addition, IUE asked stepped-up payments under the present cost-of-living escalator clause and assumption by the company of the full cost of employes' pensions. A union shop was included among the IUE demands.

Company spokesmen were said to have indicated that GE favored renewal of the old contract, which expires Sept. 15, with only minor changes.

Lemuel R. Boulware, vice president in charge of employe relations, said the company was willing to extend the present agreement for five years, providing that "workers would be free to choose other union representation in a National Labor Relations Board election if they desired to do so."

Negotiations are expected to continue throughout the summer.

Cal. CIO Acts To Aid Private Education

THE CALIFORNIA CIO Council has taken the lead in supporting the bill exempting private, non-profit schools from taxation.

Council Secy.-Treas. John Despol said a resolution supporting the tax exemption bill and opposing the current referendum will be introduced at the State IUC convention in San Francisco July 26-29.

"The California CIO representatives whole-heartedly endorsed the recent action by the State Legislature in passing almost unanimously, the tax exemption bill for non-profit, private elementary and high schools," Despol said.

"We are definitely opposed to the abuses of the current referendum petition which seeks to invalidate this tax exemption bill.

"Private colleges in California have been tax exempt since 1914.

"We believe it is only just that tax exemption should also be granted to private, non-profit elementary and high schools, which are privately supported by thousands of parents-taxpayers who wish to send their children to such schools."

George Weaver Gets RFC Post

George L-P Weaver on leave of absence from the National CIO staff, has been appointed special assistant to W. Stuart Symington, administrator of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Weaver previously had been special assistant to Symington at the National Security Resources Board.

A native of Pittsburgh and a former red cap in the Chicago Northwestern Railroad station in Chicago, Weaver has served as director of the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination and as assistant to CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey. He attended YMCA college in Chicago and Columbia University in New York.

He has been assigned to the joint State Department-RFC mission now in Bolivia studying production costs of tin.

TWUA Wins 22c At Bauer & Black

A package agreement estimated to be worth 22c an hour last week ended a ten-week strike of the CIO Textile Workers at two plants of the Bauer & Black division of the Kendall Company.

The union won complete settlement of all issues in all disputes after a back-to-work movement instigated by the company at its Chicago plant two weeks ago failed. The firm manufactures surgical supplies.

Under terms of the settlement, workers at Chicago and South Bend, Ind., receive a general wage increase of 15c an hour—with 5c to be given immediately and the balance subject to Wage Stabilization Board approval.

Night shift bonuses were raised, a pension plan was put into effect and a cost-of-living clause was included in the contract.

GETS HUSBAND'S SEAT
Mrs. Maude Elizabeth Kee is shown leaving a voting booth at Bluefield, W. Va. A PAC-backed Democratic candidate for Congress, Mrs. Kee was chosen in a special election by the voters of the State's fifth congressional district to succeed her late husband, Rep. John Kee.

Marine Engineers Strike Isthmian

Strike action was taken last week by the CIO Marine Engineers against the Isthmian Steamship Co. of New York City when negotiations for a new contract broke down.

MEBA Pres. H. L. Daggert said the company had failed to accept a similar agreement to the one negotiated recently with all the dry-cargo steamship companies on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Coasts.

Georgia Wants To Sell Pro-UN Schoolbooks

Wanna buy 30,000 schoolbooks cheap? Georgia's Board of Education has voted to sell them, but outside the State.

They are copies of "American Government" by Historian Frank Abbott MacArthur, and the board thinks the book is "un-American."

For one thing, it advocates strengthening the United Nations Charter.

AT&T Reasoning:

Record Income—But Higher Phone Rates

PRIVATE enterprise — it's wonderful! It's particularly wonderful and extremely profitable if the private enterprise referred to happens to be the world's biggest monopoly, the American Telephone and Telegraph Co.

Gross operating revenues announced by the corporation and its principal operating subsidiaries last week set a new record high of $3,442,080,892 in the 12-month period to May 31. This compares to $3,028,550,011 in the preceding 12 months—a gain of more than $313 million.

The Bell Telephone System, which is an AT&T subsidiary, showed a consolidated net income of $371,977,300 after all operating expenses, taxes and other charges were deducted. This was equal to $13 a share on the average number of AT&T capital stock outstanding during the past 12 months.

This was more than $87 million more than the profits of $284,775,030, or $11.22 a share, reported for the preceding 12-month period. For the latest period they represent a rate of return of 6.17% on invested capital.

Figures begin to get astronomical in the net profit picture of AT&T itself for the past 12 months.

Net profits for the parent concern amounted to $311,300,000—up almost $57 million over the previously reported yearly period.

AT&T Pres. Cleo F. Craig, in his first report to the stockholders since replacing the late Leroy A. Wilson June 28, surprised no one by warning that new increases in telephone rates are in the books for subscribers.

"Telephone rate increases have been far less than the increases in costs already insurred in the last 10 years," he ventured.

"With costs continuing to go up, additional increases in rates will be needed. Accordingly, the Bell System companies are applying and must continue to apply to the regulatory authorities for higher rates as the need requires."

INK WAS HARDLY dry on a new agreement which one Bell company, Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co. of Maryland, signed with the CIO Communications Workers before the firm's Vice President, W. Griffin Morrell, declared: "We will need more income to meet record high labor costs and other rising prices."

The employes had to strike a week to win increases ranging to $30 to $10 weekly.

Segregation Ends On Balto. Links

Baltimore, the eighth largest city in the nation, has lowered the bars of segregation on its four municipal golf courses.

Last week the courses were ordered opened to all players, regardless of race, coror or creed.

The board had set aside one day a week for Negroes at three 18-hole courses and had limited a nine-hole links to Negroes only.

Among other facilities opened to inter-racial groups were seven tennis court, five baseball diamonds, six softball diamonds and six playgrounds.

Rent Boosts Postponed At A-Plants

PROPOSED rent increase, ranging up to 28% for residential units at the atomic energy plants, Oak Ridge, Tenn.; Richland, Wash.; and Los Alamos, N. Mex., have been postponed and will not go into effect until Oct. 1, 1951. The Atomic Energy Commission had proposed the rent boosts last February to be effective Aug. 1.

M. W. Boyer, general manager of AEC said in Washington last week that the increases were deferred "in order to make sure that before new rent schedules are put into effect, they are consistent with Federal policy relative to rents for quarters supplied employes of the Government and its contractors, and with the provisions of new Federal legislation, including that now under consideration on extension of rent controls."

Two weeks ago a delegation of CIO Chemical Workers from Local 288 at Oak Ringe protested the proposed increase to Tennessee congressmen and members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the House Banking and Currency Committee.

As a result of the delegation's visit, Sen. Kefauver wrote Chairman Gordon Dean of the AEC asking that "favorable consideration" be given to deferring action "until some effective rent control legislation is enacted for atomic energy plant tenants."

Tenn. Rep. Gore told the GC&C members then that he would introduce an amendment to the Defense Production Act which would freeze rents in the projects until the rent control law goes into effect.

Hate-Mongers Fight Buchanan's Widow

THE WIDOW of a fighting liberal Congressman who battled with some of the most reactionary pressure groups in America, is seeking to take his place in the House of Representatives.

She is Mrs. Vera Buchanan, running on the Democratic ticket in Pennsylvania's 33rd district. The election is on July 24.

Her husband, who died suddenly a few months ago, was chairman of the special House committee on lobbying activities.

The district is composed of one ward of Pittsburgh and industrial communities like Clairton, Duquesne and McKeesport in Allegheny County. Mrs. Buchanan has the strong support of unions in the area.

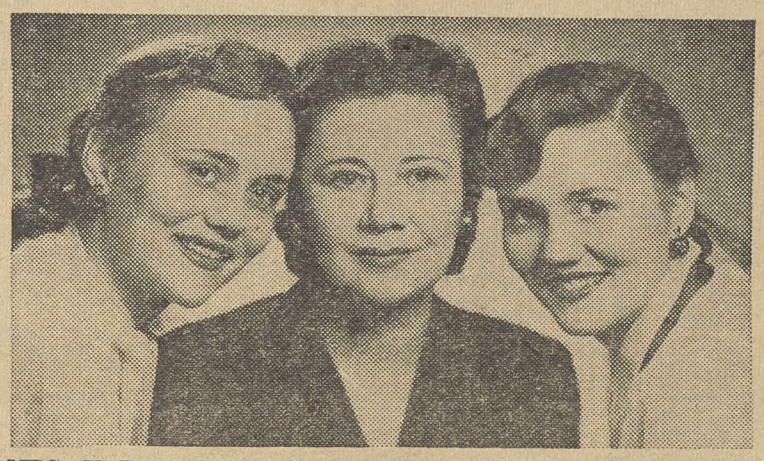
Rep. Buchanan's probe of lobbying activities brought him into sharp conflict with the Committee for Constitutional Government, one of the biggest of the ultra-conservative lobbying groups in the country.

Edward Rumeley, an official of that outfit, was found guilty of contempt of Congress after he refused to answer committee questions about the source of its finances.

Joseph Kamp, of the equally reactionary Constitutional Educational League, was also convicted of contempt after a similar refusal to answer questions by the late Congressman.

And it was Rep. Buchanan's committee which uncovered a famous quotation in a letter written by Herbert Nelson, a key official of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. Nelson had written to an associate:

". . . I do not believe in democracy. It stinks."



MRS. VERA BUCHANAN of McKeesport, Pa., widow of the late Rep. Buchanan, is the labor-backed Democratic candidate to fill the 33rd District Congressional seat left empty by the death of her husband, who headed the House probe of lobbies. She is shown above with her twin daughters, Jane (left) and Mrs. Joan Cavalcante. Vote is July 24.

Chicago CIO Warned State Of Cicero Riots

THE SHOCKING riot which took place in Cicero, Ill., suburb of Chicago, when a Negro family attempted to move into a rented apartment, could perhaps have been prevented if a warning of the Chicago CIO Council had been heeded sooner.

Cicero, notorious as a center for gangsters, racketeers and hoodlums, was once the headquarters of Al Capone and his gang.

Michael Mann, CIO director in Illinois, said last week that the Chicago Council through its Human Relations Committee had called the attention of local and state authorities to the seriousness of the Cicero situation.

The warning was issued several days before the anti-Negro mob wrecked and tried to burn down the apartment building into which the family of Harvey E. Clark, Negro bus driver, was moving.

MANN SAID that observers for the CIO committee had been watching events closely, as it does in all cases of threatened anti-racial outbreaks, and reported that violence was building up in Cicero.

Three days before the actual riot occurred, Mann sent a letter to Illinois Gov. Adlai Stevenson and to Cook County Sheriff John Babb, asking that the National Guard be sent in at once.

"The principles upon which the CIO is founded causes us to have a direct interest in the efforts of the Harvey Clark family to enjoy the peaceful possession and occupancy of its residence in Cicero, Ill.," Mann said in a letter sent to the Governor before the riot took place.

Speaking in the name of the Chicago CIO Council, of which he is executive secretary, Mann asked the Governor to send in troops because the local police authorities had made no effort to preserve law and order by curbing the rising terrorism. He also requested Sheriff Babb to ask Gov. Stevenson for troops.

Mann said that the Cicero police chief could not even be located and that other police authorities were doing nothing to prevent an outbreak.

Meanwhile, mob violence continued to increase until it reached a level of maniacal destruction and terrorism. Thousands of rioters milled around the apartment building, and roamed the streets of Cicero armed with stones, iron pipes, and bricks and other weapons.

They threw firebrands on the roof of the apartment house from which the occupants had already fled in terror. They tramped through the building, ripping out plumbing fixtures, plaster, and chopping up the woodwork until the place was shambles.

THE TROOPS advanced upon the mob slowly, swinging bayonets. Late that night they cleared the yelling hoodlums off the streets, but not before 16 injured persons had been taken to the hospital.

More than a hundred rioters were arrested; later they were released and their cases continued until Aug. 6.

Pres. Albert Thomas of the Chicago CIO Council commended the Governor's action in sending in the National Guard, and urged that steps be taken to prevent "these terroristic activities" in the future.

Pat Greathouse, the CIO Auto Workers regional director, also commended Gov. Stevenson for sending the troops and asked him to launch an investigation of the breakdown of law enforcement agencies in Cicero and Cook County.

Packinghouse Workers To Seek $3000 Guaranteed Wage

THE CIO United Packinghouse Workers served notice last week that it will press for a $3000 minimum yearly wage guarantee from the leading meat packers.

UPW Pres. Ralph Helstein, in an opening bargaining session with Swift & Co.—one of the industry's "Big Four"—said the union "is determined to secure for the packinghouse workers a steady income throughout the year and wipe out forever the hardships of layoffs and unemployment." The other big packers are Armour, Wilson and Cudahy.

At the UPW convention in Chicago last May, Helstein said the annual wage would be given "prime consideration" in negotiations this year but gave no dollars and cents figure.

"The $3000 minimum is for workers in the common labor grade, covering about one-third of our membership," Helstein said. Graduated increases above that amount will be sought for workers in more skilled classifications."

He said the 11c an hour increase recently approved for packinghouse workers by the Wage Stabilization Board will bring the earnings of common laborers to only $2443 yearly.

"Even with the increases approved by WSB, earnings are still far below the minimum required for adequate living," he said.

Contracts with the major packers are scheduled to expire Aug. 11, 1952, and contain three reopening dates on wages.

On the first reopener last February, the union threatened a nation wide strike over the industry's refusal to grant a 11c an hour increase. WSB subsequently approved the boost.

The next reopening date is August 11, and the third February, 1952.

Helstein said the annual wage would be based on a maximum eight-hour day and a 40-hour week with overtime pay, night differentials and other premiums paid above the annual scale.

Other proposals to be presented by the union will include company financed social service clinics providing free medical, dental, legal and family aid, in addition to cost of living monthly bonuses for inflationary rises. A union shop will also be asked.

Murray Issues Urgent Appeal For Funds For Flood-Stricken CIO Members

THE CIO joined with government officials and Congress last week in rushing relief aid to the flood-stricken areas of the Middle West.

The CIO and the United Steelworkers each dispatched $10,000 checks to the CIO Emergency Relief Committee in Kansas City, Mo., and the CIO Communications Workers donated $2000.

Pres. Philip Murray "urged very strongly" that CIO affiliates "make as large a contribution as possible to this very crucial relief program."

President Truman signed a bill July 18 providing $25 million for direct relief—less than 12 hours after he had toured the ravaged areas by airplane. The following day, Federal Housing Administrator Raymond M. Foley flew to the stricken section after Washington conferences with the President and Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson.

MEANWHILE the Reconstruction Finance Corp. announced that 64 extra men would be dispatched to the scene of the disaster as soon as the flood waters recede. They were instructed to speed loans for restoration of damaged property.

The American Red Cross assigned one of its top disaster experts to fly to Kansas City to confer with heads of Federal and State agencies "to be sure all immediate steps are taken to distribute the available funds."

The contribution of the CIO was sent by Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey.

In his letter to the CIO relief committee, Carey said the donation "is to be devoted to your committee's work in assisting CIO members who have been left homeless or have suffered economic loss as a result of the disastrous floods."

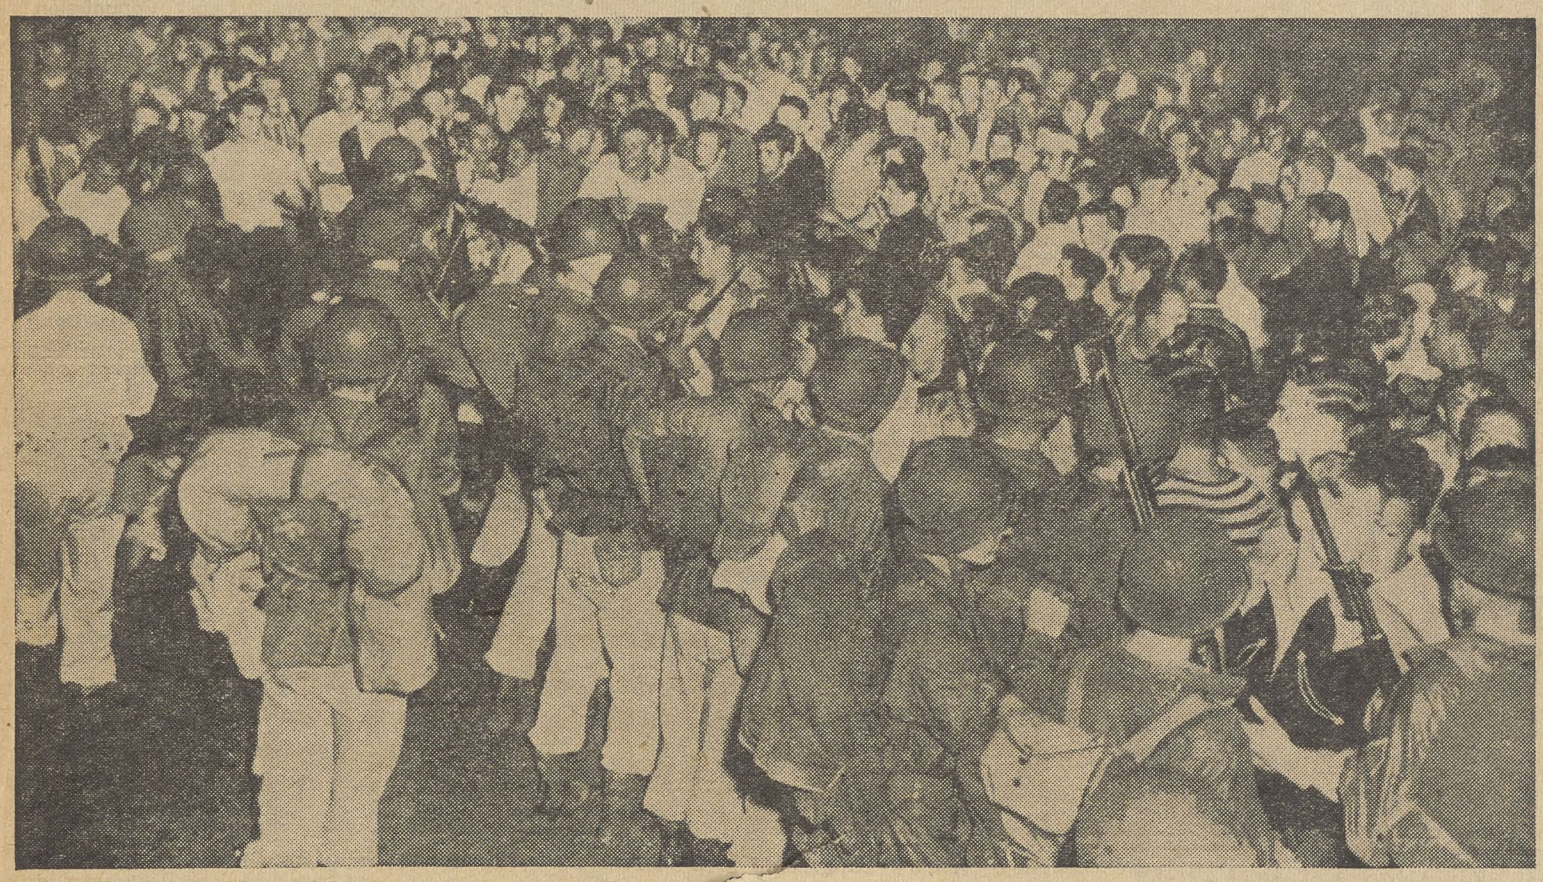
He added that the program and the efforts of the CIO committee "are further proof of the CIO's primary concern with the welfare of all Americans in time of distress and need."

Pres. Murray's letter to the CIO's affiliates said that "thousands of CIO members and their families in Missouri and Kansas have been left homeless because of the floods. Their suffering and their needs are acute."

He said the CIO was proud to "further the splendid humanitarian work" of the CIO relief committee.

"I wish therefore to urge very strongly that your International Union make as large a contribution as possible to this crucial relief program. It is a fraternal duty and privilege to be able to assist the thousands of our brothers and sisters in this time of their distress."

Checks and contributions should be sent to: CIO Emergency Relief Committee, 501 Railway Exchange Bldg., Kansas City, Missouri.



ILLINOIS NATIONAL GUARDSMEN restore order at an apartment building in Cicero, near Chicago. Note the young hoodlums in the background. Irate because a Negro family had rented the apartment, the youths were not dispelled until 16 persons were hospitalized. The Chicago CIO warned authorities that violence was building up several days before the mob went berserk.

ACW Asks Repeal Of McCarran Act

Loyalty to the Constitution requires immediate repeal of the McCarran Subversive Activities Control Act, Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, of the CIO Clothing Workers, has told all locals of his union.

He urged support of a bill (H.R. 3118) introduced by Chairman Sabath (D. Ill.) of the House Rules Committee providing for repeal of the McCarran Act. "We must do our part now to bring about the removal of this iniquitous piece of legislation from the statute books," he said.

The act, providing for the registration of all persons who have belonged to totalitarian, fascist or communist organizations, was denounced by President Truman as a threat to civil rights. It was passed over his veto.

All branches of organized labor opposed its passage.

Hollywood Makes Pro-Union Film

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

SUPPOSE the widow of a small town factory owner decided to turn over the management of the plant to the president of the local union after her husband's death in an airplane accident.

And suppose that just before his death, the plant owner had told the union he was being driven to the wall by the mass production methods and cheaper prices, of his competitor, and would have to install new machines that would mean heavy layoffs—temporarily.

Should the union president accept the job and the responsibility of trying to keep the mill a going concern?

This fanciful, although not entirely improbable situation—stranger things have happened now and then in small industry—is the theme of a new movie, "The Whistle at Eaton Falls," soon to be released by Columbia Pictures. It is said to be the first full-length pro-union story with labor-management problems ever produced by Hollywood.

Every union member who can should see it. You may not agree with its point of view, or you may like some things in it and get mad at other spots in the story, but it's interesting.

It has possibilities for provoking long and heated arguments and discussions among union members who see it, on a very important problem—how can the union best protect the interests of its members when new machines are introduced that can be run with fewer workers? And can a union official keep his integrity and loyalty to the union if he gets involved in affairs of management?

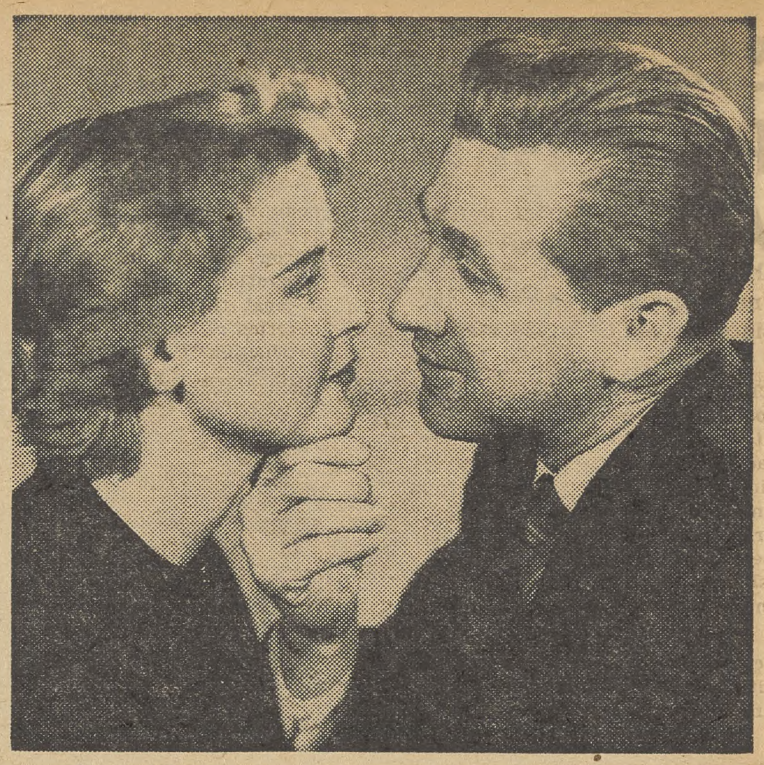
FROM A union point of view, the strongest criticism of the way "Eaton Falls" solves these problems lies in the danger of applying what possibly might happen under rare and unusual circumstances in a small plant to the whole of industry. Certainly what occurred in the Eaton Falls story does not fit the labor-management problems of big industry.

If the picture is intended to be or is used as propaganda to hoodwing unions into failng to press for labor's share in the increased production resulting from improved machinery and technical advances, it is muddled in concept and can do little damage. Union people know better.

If, as seems likely, its basic intent is to treat unionism in a friendly way as a gesture of better labor-management relations, it may do something to change the attitude of anti-labor Americans who know little or nothing about unions. Plenty of people who fear and hate unions may see the picture.

As for union members, themselves, they will enjoy arguing about it. In addition it is an entertaining picture—made with Hollywood's stock formula, with something in it for everybody: Love interest, laid on a bit thick; cheese cake—the girl friend of the company's industrial designer models for him in a provocative bathing suit; suspense, well maintained, and some good comedy lines. Union members will be able to pick out types of workers they recognize, though they may catch flaws in union procedure.

Don't miss it.



1. BRAD ADAMS, local union president in the new Columbia movie, "The Whistle at Eaton Falls," gets some encouragement from his wife. He needs it—as the union faces layoffs when company sales drop down. The workers are fighting mad and want Brad to do something to save their jobs.

2. THE UNION "grouser" (center) tries to stir up the members against their union president. The grouser's got a good gift of gab, and many of the things he says make sense. But in the story, he turns stooge for a double-cross planned later by Hawkins. "You're chicken!" he yells at a worker who tries to argue against his fiery demands for action.

3. TWO "VILLAINS"—a company bookkeeper (the gal) and Hawkins (right), a bitter union-hater—make life difficult for Adams when he's appointed president of the plastic factory at Eaton Falls, N. H. He's resigned his union presidency.

4. ADAMS MEETS with his old buddies from the union to tell them bad news—the company is going on the rocks. To meet competition, he says, new machinery will have to be introduced—and jobs will be lost. Meanwhile, the plant will have to be shut down. The union committee is crushed and bewildered.

5. THE SHUTDOWN brings hardship. Workers line up for meager unemployment insurance, and they're bitter. They cuss out Brad Adams, their former union president who now is boss of the factory. Some think he sold them out, others think he has bungled his job. They recall good old days when the former boss was alive. True, he'd warned them before his death of drastic lay offs, but Brad had shut down the whole plant.

6. BRAD ADAMS gets an order for millions of plastic gadgets, using new machinery and a process designed by some of the workers. The workers are called back to their jobs. The union votes to go to work with the new machines—and they knock down barricades set up by stooges sent there by Hawkins, and triumphantly return to their jobs.

7. ALL'S WELL that ends well—in the movie, at least. The plant runs on three shifts, there's work for all old hands and new ones, too. Adams gets congratulations from the owner and the sales manager on the difficult job he has done.

Steel Shortage Diet Perils Nation: Reuther

A SENATE subcommittee was told last week that the country has been on a "needless" steel shortage diet since the end of World War II.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, testifying before a sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Small Business last week charged that the nation's security has been weakened, and that thousands of workers are threatened by unemployment, because of a policy of "blind selfishness" on the part of the steel industry.

"It has been wedded to the economics of monopoly and scarcity, of high prices, high profits, and low output," he said.

Reuther reminded the committee that his union has been working on the practical job of getting the steel productive capacity of the country expanded to meet the nation's needs.

Earlier Complaints

He documented the efforts to increase the country's steel producing capacity of CIO unions since 1947.

The CIO Steelworkers have also frequently criticized the industry for its unwillingness to meet the nation's need for steel.

Reuther recalled that immediately following the outbreak of fighting in Korea, UAW officers warned both government and industry that steel shortages would create unemployment unless production was expanded and curtailment of civilian production was coordinated with increases in defense production.

When the UAW last year proposed a joint conference of representatives of labor and management in the automotive industry to discuss the impending steel shortage, Reuther said the major auto manufacturers refused to participate.

"In their letter of refusal, several companies stated that they anticipated no steel shortage whatever, and indicated that the defense production program in no way would affect automobile production schedules or employment levels," Reuther declared.

Ten Recommendations

The UAW president made the following recommendations to expedite defense production and to minimize dislocation and unemployment:

1. Break the serious bottleneck in machine tool production by all-out mobilization of that industry and of other industries capable of contributing to the machine tool program.

2. Establishment and rigid enforcement of a system of priorities for scheduling delivery dates of machine tools.

3. Vigorous steps to insure adequate expansion of steel production to meet the nation's needs both in terms of military and civilian production.

4. Establishment of more rigid and frequent inventory control to insure that defense contractors do not receive steel and other materials in short supply in amounts greater than they actually need.

5. Take immediate steps to provide federal funds to supplement unemployment compensation to guarantee workers 40 hours pay per week when laid off due to defense mobilization policies.

6. Place defense contracts in areas where curtailment of civilian production schedules will make manpower available for defense production and maintain civilian production schedules at the highest possible levels consistent with actual current defense production needs for scarce materials.

7. Stop the construction of non-essential plants which are using scarce material.

8. Initiate a nation-wide civilian scrap metal campaign to increase the scrap available for the steel industry.

9. Take steps to improve and accelerate the government's collection of information of the impact of the materials allocation program and other mobilization policies on employment.

10. Assure full consideration of manpower factors in the mobilization program, by giving labor an effective voice in the procurement centers where defense contracts are placed.

CIO Issues Record On N. J. Legislature

The New Jersey CIO Council has issued a voting record of the State Legislature.

Votes of the Assembly were listed on 22 measures "of prime public importance" and of the Senate on 13 issues.

The smaller number of Senate issues, the Council said, was "due to the Senate Republican caucus rule, which keeps bills bottled up and prevents roll call votes on the Senate floor."

NMU Acts Quickly

Blacklist Of Anti-CP Stewards Delays Hawaiian-Bound Liner

SUPPORTERS of the CIO National Maritime Union among West Coast cooks and stewards and NMU members last week blocked sailing of the S.S. Lurline from San Francisco as a protest against the blacklisting of anti-Communist trade unionists.

Two days of picketing forced Matson Navigation Co. to call off the scheduled voyage of its big luxury liner to Hawaii.

The NMU protested "kangaroo court" oustings of four pro-CIO cooks and stewards aboard the Lurline by the Commie-line administration of the Marine Cooks & Stewards, expelled a year ago from CIO. NMU now is seeking a coastwise election among cooks and stewards.

Matson got an anti-picketing injunction, but still couldn't sail the Lurline.

NMU called off its pickets, but members of the AFL Sailors Union of the Pacific—who respected the line along with members of the CIO American Radio Association — weren't "available" to man the ship.

The tieup of the Lurline on July 14-15 came after a long-developing "purge" by MCS against cooks and stewards who support NMU. Late in June, the Lurline was tied up for a short period, with Matson agreeing to pay lost wages and promising reinstatement to the four stewards.

On the eve of last week's voyage, MCS staged "disciplinary" proceedings against the four Lurline workers, which brought the picket line.

At the same time, when MCS attempted to replace a pro-CIO Stewards Dept. crew aboard the Matson freighter Hawaiian Logger, that crew sat down aboard the ship at the Crockett sugar refinery in the East Bay.

H. B. Warner, NMU vice president, who is directing the West Coast cooks and stewards organizing campaign, said after the Lurline tieup:

"THIS successful action has made the people of the San Francisco Bay area aware of the extent of Communist activity in certain maritime unions.

"This represents the beginning of an action which will break the Commie control through MCS over cooks and stewards and in all other maritime unions.

"Similar action will be taken to protect the rights of all Matson employes, and employes of other Pacific Maritime Association companies, to speak out and oppose the Commie officials of MCS without victimization.

"We'll tie them all up if Matson doesn't cease and desist from supporting this Commie-dominated union which was expelled from CIO."

Warner previously has charged PMA shipping employers with a "lobbying expedition" to Washington in which, along side MCS, they turned on the heat on the National Labor Relations Board, which dismissed NMU's first petition for an election.

NMU since has filed a second election petition, and the regional NLRB has found it demonstrated a 30% interest. Hearings on the election were under way last week in San Francisco.

When Matson's anti-picketing injuction forced NMU to withdraw its picket line, the four victimized Lurline workers — Harry Whitelaw, Jack Tiernan, Leonard Kralka and Robert Steward—took over. They were arrested under the court order.

During the picketing, MCS Pres. Hugh Bryson added to his "militant record" by suggesting to Matson that they proceed legally against the ARA and SUP because they respected the NMU picket line.

Rent Control Asked By CIO For S. F. Area

BECAUSE THE July 31 expiration of Federal rent controls is coming up fast—and Congress is delaying effective anti-inflation legislation—the San Francisco CIO Council has proposed enactment of a standby municipal rent control ordinance.

Draft of the emergency measure was introduced last week by Supervisor Dewey Mead, and the CIO Council was pressing for early hearings and final action by the board.

The proposed ordinance would be effective if federal rent ceilings were to lapse because of action or inaction in Washington, and would continue the existing Housing Expediter's ceilings and regulations in San Francisco.

In presenting the ordinance, CIO Council Pres. Arthur Hellender pointed out "the Board of Supervisors last fall recognized their local responsibility for rent controls by voting to extend them for six months.

"San Francisco was the only major city in the Far West where such action was taken. Now that the deadline for rent ceilings is again approaching, the responsibility again falls upon the Supervisors to act in the interests of tenants, workers and small income groups who can't take wide-open rent increases."

In Oakland, meantime, the Greater Alameda County CIO Council, and CIO and other local unions are organizing to block a move for rent decontrol, which will be heard next month before the city council.

Give A Buck

To PAC

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

During Mr. Haywood's absence this column is prepared by members of his staff.

DURING THE past week a number of our Regional Directors and Field Representatives were in Washington to talk with their Representatives about the proposed Lucas Amendment to the Defense Production Act and other legislation.

We have pointed out to Congressmen that this amendment, which would prevent the Wage Stabilization Board from even mediating Defense Production disputes between labor and management, and which would provide for a clear majority of "public" members on the Wage Stabilization Board, would seriously weaken the effectiveness of the WSB program. This amendment, directly or indirectly, was inspired by the same big business groups which have always tried to use Taft-Hartley against our unions.

Allan Haywood

Fortunately a large number of Congressmen seem to realize that Taft-Hartley is a punitive law, and that whatever else it may be, it is not the way to win workers support for the defense effort.

The Convention of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions at Milan, Italy, has turned down an offer of "united action" from the Commies' World Federation of Trade Unions. We want nothing to do with Communist union leadership, which has shown that it is always the pawn of the Communist Party and does not truly serve the interests of union members. It is clear from the decision of the ICFTU that workers in other countries know this as well as we do.

The National Labor Relations Board has gone out of its way to unstabilize relationships between labor and management. The NLRB has threatened the sanctity of hundreds of collective bargaining agreements containing union security clauses which were signed before 1949. That was the year when the officers of the CIO signed the ridiculous and ineffective non-Communist affidavits required by the Taft-Hartley Act.

Assistant Director of Organization R. J. Thomas spent several hours with the members of the NLRB pointing out the damage that this decision will do to peaceful labor relations in many companies. It's about time that members of the NLRB stopped trying to out-Taft the Taft-Hartley Act. Any more decisions like this will have a disruptive effect on the entire labor movement.

The CIO Communications Workers won an overwhelming three to one victory over the AFL's IBEW in a representation election held at the Associated Telephone Co., Southern California. This company is the largest independent company in the country. The vote was as follows: 4729 eligible, 3265 actually voted, 2280 CWA, 769 IBEW-AFL, 102 no, 91 void, 23 challenged.

REG. DIR. GEORGE DE NUCCI reports that in a representation election held at the Borden Milk Products Co., Mansfield, O., the workers voted in favor of the CIO Dairy Workers by a vote of 17 to 12 against. Rep. Gerald Hughes handled the election.

In a representation election held at the Columbus Bag & Burlap Co., Columbus, O., the workers voted in favor of the Plaything & Novelty Workers CIO by a vote of 9 to 7 against. Intl. Rep. Edward Rosenhahn was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election held at the Kingan Packing Plant, Indianapolis, Ind. for the cafeteria workers that of 29 eligible, 26 voted for the Packinghouse Workers, CIO. The drive was carried on by Burton LaRue, director, and the officers of UPWA Local 117 in Indianapolis.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers won a representation election at the shed of J. Budd Vukasozich in Yuma, Ariz., by a vote of 34 to 0.

Senate Unit Says 'Probes' Waste Time, Money

TOO MUCH time and money are being spent on overlapping, duplicating and wasteful "investigations" by the 82nd Congress, the Senate Expenditures Committee said last week in a special report.

Congressmen and Senators who like to argue against government extravagance don't seem to object at all to funds for almost any sort of "probe"—the better if it will get headlines or hurt the Truman Administration.

(A sample, last week, was a Republican call for an "investigation" of "direct Soviet influence in present and past Democratic administrations." Such a probe would obviously be something short of completely non-political.)

The report said that from January 1947, to date, special investigations in the House and Senate have cost more than $8¼ million, besides taking members away from their regular legislative duties. In the first five months of this year, the Senate alone "investigated" $1,167,720 "worth."

The totals do not include the additional funds of $10,000 for investigations which are automatically allocated to each standing committee in every Congress.

Meanwhile, Republican members of the House Un-American Activities Committee got caught out on a limb when they charged that Chairman Wood (D. Ga.) is keeping them in the dark about what the committee is doing.

Reps. Velde (R. Ill.) and Kearney (R. N.Y.) complained that they hadn't heard about testimony that Wood had released to the press.

Then it developed that the whole thing was due to a chronic ailment of the 82nd Congress—absenteeism. Wood said that only Rep. Walter (D. Pa.) had been available when the staff was ready to hold the hearing that the Republicans had missed.

OTHER Republicans were planning a meeting early this week to work out strategy to prevent the payment of salary to Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

Minority Leader Martin said that a meeting of the key GOP policy committee would be held just before the State Department appropriations bill reaches the floor.

Although the Supreme Court has ruled that Congress cannot deny pay to government officials it doesn't like, Rep. Phillips (R. Cal.) has proposed an amendment hitting at Acheson by denying pay to persons who formerly were associated with firms representing foreign governments.

The State Dept. pointed out that the proposal would hit at least 37 other officials besides Acheson, including Republican adviser John Foster Dulles and other GOP consultants in top policy posts. The Department also said that the provision would have affected such past secretaries of state as Charles Evans Hughes, Frank Kellogg and Thomas Jefferson.

Rep. Miller (R. Nebr.), however, termed the Phillips amendment "schoolboy stuff." He called for "impeachment proceedings."

As the lawmakers continued to waste time in fruitless investigations, bickering and "wrecking crew" tactics, however, they faced a legislative crisis.

IN A few days the "stop-gap" resolutions they had found necessary to continue the Defense Production Act and provide funds for government operations through July will expire.

With the House still debating the anti-inflation measure and with not one appropriations bill yet passed, it was beginning to look like the "investigating" 82nd Congress was not going to make even the month's tardy deadline it voted itself after failing to meet its responsibilities during the first six months.

7-23

'Wetback' Law Snags Talks With Mexico

NEGOTIATIONS on a new treaty to permit 200,000 Mexican farm hands to work in the United States in 1951 got under way in Mexico City July 14.

But on the same day Mexico halted the movement of its workers across the border.

The reason: Delay by the U. S. Congress in writing a new law had resulted in the expiration at midnight July 15 of the 1949 treaty before new arrangements between the two governments had been worked out.

The negotiators were seeking to find a quick formula to enable employers in the southwestern states to resume hiring Mexican migrant workers for jobs on U. S. farms "as soon as possible."

The basis of their discussions was the Ellender-Poage "wetback" bill, which President Truman had "reluctantly" signed into law, despite strong protests from all branches of organized labor.

The new law permits the Secretary of Labor to import thousands of poverty stricken Mexicans for exploitation in industrial agriculture in the southwest. The CIO, AFL and the railway brotherhoods had all asked the President to veto the measure.

Mexican officials, however, indicated that they might not go along with the U. S. Congress in sponsoring substandard working conditions.

They said that there are "many details to be ironed out," and indicated that they would demand added protection and advantages for farm laborers.

After signing the new law, President Truman on July 13 sent a special message to Congress asking for further legislation to better control imported Mexican labor and improve the lot of migratory farm workers. He said that he would not have approved the bill if Congressional leaders had not assured him that the follow-up legislation would get immediate consideration.

The President called for a law to punish those who may harbor or conceal "wetbacks." (Mexican farm laborers who enter this country illegally by swimming the Rio Grande).

He also asked for additional appropriations and enforcement authority for the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) immediately announced that he would offer a bill to implement the President's proposals.

His measure would impose a fine of $1000 or a year in jail or both for transporting aliens into this country illegally, for concealing them, or for knowingly offering them employment. Sen. Ellender's (D. La.) bill contained a similar provision, but the Southern farm bloc in the House succeeded in killing it.

The President also asked for repeal of the provision in the new law permitting Mexicans to be employed in U. S. food processing plants. But he emphasized that the "crucial point" is the growing stream of "wetbacks," whose illegal entry has been encouraged by the farm operators as a cheap source of labor.

The President's message pointed out that the presence of these illegal workers had depressed seriously wages and working conditions in the Southwest. Use of "wetbacks" has affected the conditions imposed on legal contract workers from Mexico, as well as American farm workers, the President said.

Enactment of the additional laws he requested would satisfy most of organized labor's objections to the Ellender-Poage bill.

Oil 'Grab' Bill Debate Cut To Four Hours

THE HOUSE Rules Committee last week cleared the way for House action on a bill to deny the American people their right to a share in the rich tidelands oil deposits.

The committee voted to allow four hours of debate on a bill sponsored by the big oil interests that would turn over control of the oil rich under-water coastal lands to the states. Such action would reverse a series of Supreme Court decisions which have held that the off-shore lands belong to the United States.

Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.), who waged a losing fight against the proposal in the committee, announced that he will seek to substitute his bill retaining federal control for five years.

He warned that President Truman probably will veto a "states rights" bill, as he did once before. If Congress could not override the veto, that would leave the tidelands oil operations in their present state of paralysis, at a time when that oil might be vitally needed if the Iranian oil supply is cut off, Celler pointed out.

Meanwhile, the Senate had before it a proposal, sponsored by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) and ten others, which would permit the federal government to use the royalties from tidelands oil—estimated to be worth more than $40½ billion—to raise educational standards in all 48 states.

Give A Buck To PAC

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1397 H.R. 3871	Extends and strengthens Defense Production Act to help fight inflation.	Senate passed crippling bill banning price rollbacks. House debating its weak version, also preventing price rollbacks on beef.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes H.R. 4473	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House passed bill providing $7,206,000,000 increase. Senate Finance Com. now holding hearings.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Now before Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.
Labor Dept.-FSA Appropriations. H.R. 3709	Appropriates funds for operations of the Labor Dept. and Fed. Security Agency.	In conference.	Ask Senators and Congressmen to restore funds cut out.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Protests Get Arizona Better Farm Camps

WHILE Congressional passage of the Ellender-Poage "wetback" bill was encouraging substandard working conditions among migrant farm workers in the Southwest, Arizona has been quietly taking steps to improve conditions in migrant farm labor camps.

Farmers and state health officers have agreed on a new code establishing better housing and sanitation facilities.

Credit for the new code is due to an aroused state citizenry, which became indignant at the farmers' heartlessness after a serious epidemic of typhoid and spinal meningitis broke out last fall and winter at camps in the cotton-growing area.

The Arizona labor camps, typical of others throughout the Southwest agricultural region, up to now have consisted of mere shanties, without sanitary facilities of any kind.

State health officers investigating the Arizona epidemic found filthy living quarters and contamination of water supplies in the disease area. Some camps, according to Dr. Clarence G. Salsbury, State health commissioner, were "unfit for cattle."

When State health officers this spring promulgated a sanitation code to correct this evil, some farm organizations immediately rejected it on the ground that it was "impractical" and that it would bankrupt farmers.

Their attitude, however, evoked a storm of protest.

One Phoenix newspaper, noting that the farmers were enjoying an unprecedented agricultural prosperity, warned that "the time is past when American agricultural workers can be treated like Russian serfs of the last century."

In the face of such pressure, a farmers' committee met with the health officers and together they have worked out a new code which Dr. Salsbury says embraces all of the essentials of the original proposal.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
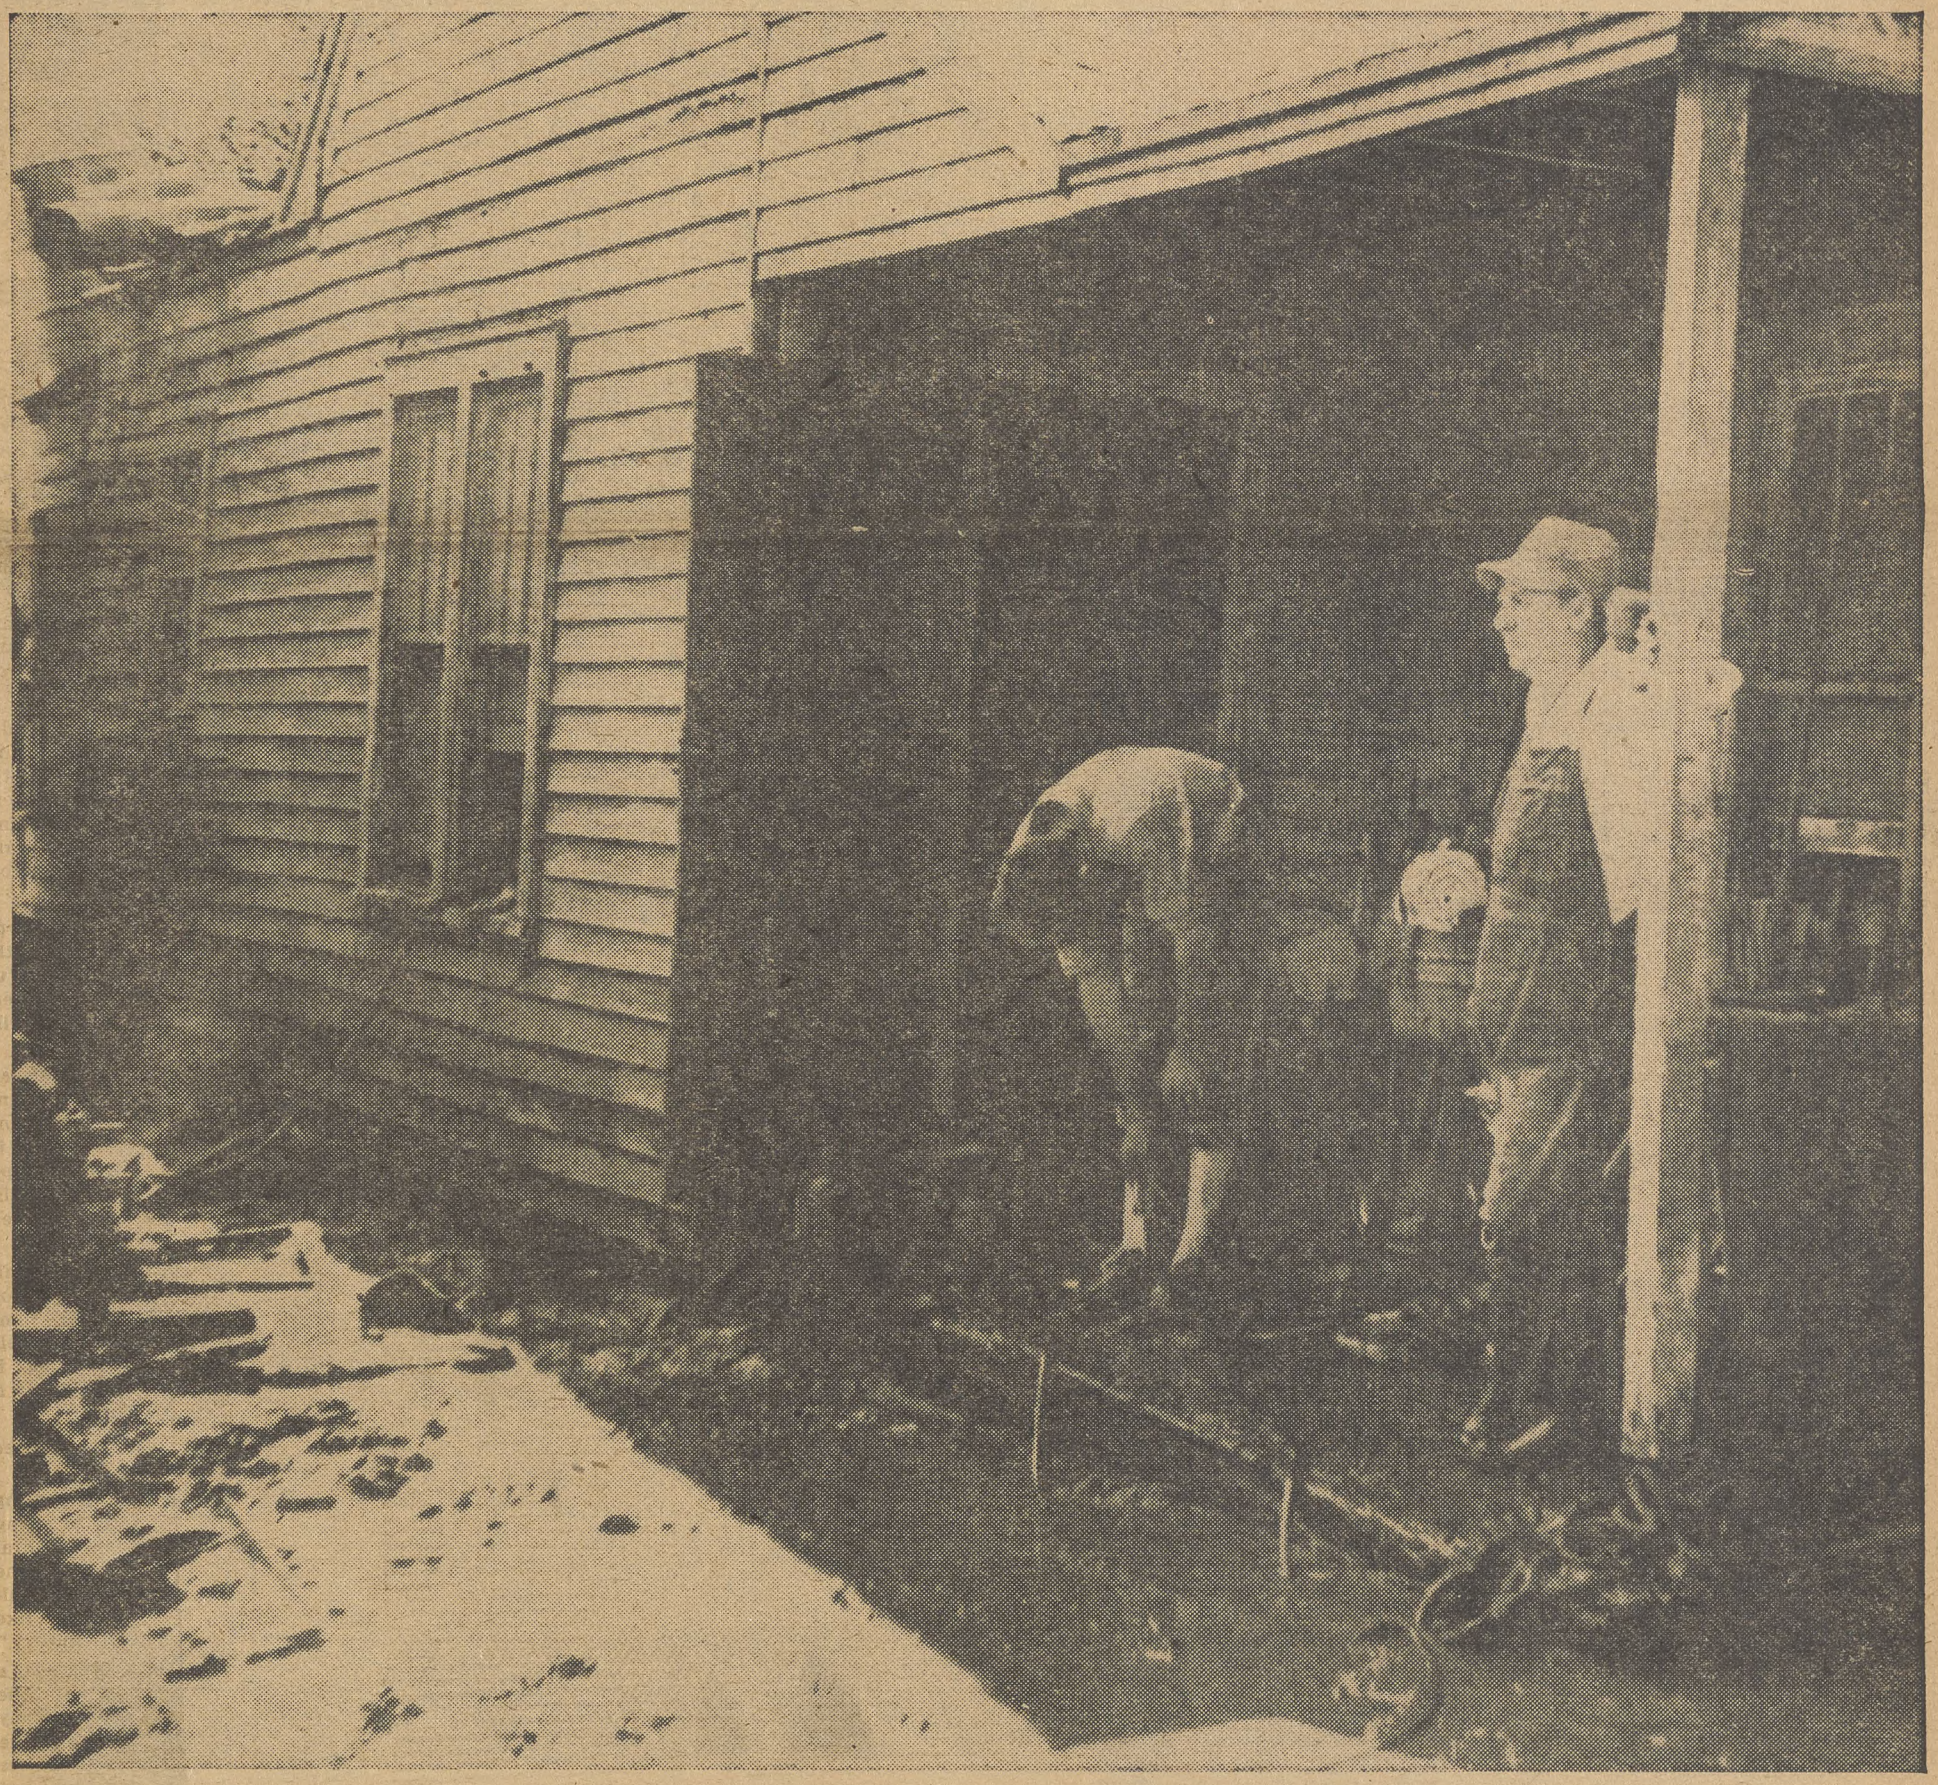
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 30, 1951 82 No. 31

'Anti-Inflation' Bill Due This Week; Small Chance Of Firm Price Controls

(See Story, Page 3)



IN NEED OF HELP: Scenes like this were common after the flood waters receded at Kansas City. A CIO member, George Homes (left), pauses for a rest while cleaning mud from his home. (See pages 6 and 7 for stories and other pictures.)

Some Benefits Exempt From WSB's 10% Formula

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has exempted, under certain conditions, fringe benefits—such as paid vacations and holidays—from the 10% wage formula.

Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston approved the WSB action. In its first recorded "split" vote, the WSB members voted 9-3 for the fringe exemptions.

All labor and public members approved the order in addition to one industry member. The three dissenting votes came from industry members.

The new regulation—Number 13—will allow paid vacations and holidays, shift differentials, premium pay, call-in pay and other similar benefits regardless of previous wage increases, if such benefits are normal in the particular industry.

In effect, it permits an employer to "catch up" with practices in his industry, but restricts any such increases to the prevailing rates.

It is required that requests for such fringe benefits must be submitted to the nearest Wage-Hour field office, which will forward the requests to WSB for approval. Any employer may grant a wage increase provided under the 10% formula without board approval.

HEALTH, welfare and pension benefits were not affected by the order, but the Board is considering a new policy on such fringe issues. These benefits now come under the 10% formula but Johnston has indicated they may be exempted if shown to be non-inflationary.

In another WSB action, a National Enforcement Commission was set up last week to deal with violations of Board regulations.

Miss Helen Humphrey, a law officer with National Labor Relations Board experience in St. Louis, New York, Philadelphia and Washington, was appointed chairman of the three-member commission. Other members will be appointed later.

Pointing out that "thousands of complaints of violations have been received," WSB Chairman Dr. George W. Taylor said a "vigorous enforcement campaign" would be launched with spot checks made on one out of every ten employers.

The board has already begun nationwide investigations of reported violations in the construction, shipbuilding and tool and die industries—all of which face serious manpower shortages.

MOST complaints, Taylor said, resulted from employers "overpaying" in order to fight manpower pinches. The complaints have been filed by competing firms, although some have come from "disgruntled employes" annoyed at pay increases given other workers.

All the investigation work being done by agents of the Wage and Hour Division of the Dept. of Labor will be under the supervision of the Board's enforcement and litigation division, headed by Arnold A. Rosen.

"As far as we are concerned," Taylor declared, "we are most interested in flagrant cases—those which would wilfully upset the stabilization program."

The WSB, meanwhile, was reported to be considering a broad wage boost policy for the duration of the emergency period.

The flexible new program which the Board may finish in two weeks would revise the present 10% "catchup" formula on straight wage hikes and provide general rules covering pay increases not covered by the old formula. Under the present formula wage increases up to 10% over the rate paid on Jan. 15, 1950, are permitted.

TAYLOR told a news conference July 24, that progress has been made in ironing out many of the complex wage problems which will be covered in the new formula.

These include "installment" pay raises, merit and length of service increases, employe bonuses, "inter-plant inequities" and exemptions for workers in industries where prices are exempt from controls.

Lower Taxes Urged For Disabled Workers

A bill granting additional income tax exemptions to permanently disabled workers or taxpayers supporting permanently disabled persons has been introduced in the House by Rep. Rhodes (D. Pa.)

House Vote On Two Crucial Price Control Provisions

Here are the House votes on two crucial amendments to the Defense Production Act. Column 1 is the vote on the Fugate Amendment to knock out two scheduled rollbacks on beef prices. The rollbacks would have saved the consumer about 10c a pound on beef. The amendment was passed by a vote of 234 to 183.

The other amendment—the vote on which is given in Column 2—would have provided cost-plus pricing on every product at every stage of production and distribution. Companies processing agricultural and food commodities would have made a real "killing" on this amendment. It was defeated 233-181. The votes took place on July 20.

In both tabulations R is a vote against the amendment, W is a vote for the amendment, PR is a vote paired against the amendment, PW is a vote paired for the amendment, and A is absent or not voting.

	No. 1	No. 2
ALA., Andrews (D)	W	W
Battle (D)	R	W
Boykin (D)	W	W
deGraffenried (D)	W	W
Elliott (D)	W	W
Grant (D)	W	W
Jones (D)	W	W
Rains (D)	W	W
Roberts (D)	W	W
ARIZ., Murdock (D)	W	R
Patten (D)	W	R
ARK., Gathings (D)	W	W
Harris (D)	W	W
Hays (D)	W	W
Mills (D)	W	R
Norrell (D)	W	W
Tackett (D)	W	R
Trimble (D)	W	R
CAL., Allen Jr. (R)	W	W
Anderson (R)	W	W
Bramblett (R)	R	W
Doyle (D)	R	R
Engle (D)	R	R
Havenner (D)	R	R
Hillings (R)	R	R
Hinshaw (R)	R	R
Holifield (D)	PR	PR
Hunter (R)	W	W
Jackson (R)	R	R
Johnson (R)	W	W
King (D)	R	R
McDonough (R)	R	R
McKinnon (D)	R	R
Miller (D)	R	R
Phillips (R)	W	W
Poulson (R)	R	A
Scudder (R)	W	W
Shelley (D)	R	R
Sheppard (D)	R	R
Werdel (R)	W	W
Yorty (D)	R	R
COLO., Aspinall (D)	W	R
Chenoweth (R)	W	W
Hill (R)	W	W
Rogers (D)	R	R
CONN., McGuire (D)	R	R
Morano (R)	R	R
Patterson (R)	R	R
Ribicoff (D)	R	R
Seely-Brown (R)	R	R
Sadlak (R)	R	R
DEL., Boggs (R)	W	W
FLA., Bennett (D)	R	R
Herlong (D)	W	W
Lantaff (D)	R	R
McMullen (D)	W	R
Rogers (D)	W	R
Sikes (D)	W	R
GA., Brown (D)	W	W
Camp (D)	W	W
Cox (D)	W	W
Davis (D)	W	W
Forrester (D)	W	W
Lanham (D)	R	W
Preston (D)	W	W
Vinson (D)	W	W
Wheeler (D)	W	W
Wood (D)	W	W
IDA., Budge (R)	W	R
Wood (R)	W	W
ILL., Allen (R)	W	W
Arends (R)	W	W
Bishop (R)	W	W
Busbey (R)	PW	PW
Chiperfield (R)	W	W
Church (R)	W	W
Dawson (D)	R	R
Gordon (D)	R	R
Hoffman (R)	W	W
Jenison (R)	W	W
Jonas (R)	W	W
Kluczynski (D)	R	R
McVey (R)	W	W
Mack (D)	R	R
Mason (R)	W	W
O'Brien (D)	R	R
Price (D)	R	R
Reed (R)	W	W
Sabath (D)	R	R
Sheehan (R)	R	W
Simpson (R)	W	W
Springer (R)	W	R
Vail (R)	W	W
Velde (R)	W	W
Vursell (R)	W	A
Yates (D)	R	R
IND., Adair (R)	W	R
Beamer (R)	W	R
Bray (R)	W	R
Brownson (R)	R	R
Crumpacker (R)	R	R
Denton (D)	R	R
Halleck (R)	W	W
Harden (R)	W	R
Harvey (R)	W	R
Madden (D)	R	R
Wilson (R)	W	W
IA., Cunningham (R)	W	W
Dolliver (R)	W	W
Gross (R)	W	W
Hoeven (R)	W	W
Jenson (R)	W	W
LeCompte (R)	W	W
Martin (R)	W	W
Talle (R)	W	W
KANS., Cole (R)	W	W
George (R)	W	W
Hope (R)	W	W
Rees (R)	W	W
Scrivner (R)	W	W
Smith (R)	W	W
KY., Bates (D)	R	R
Chelf (D)	W	R
Gregory (D)	W	R
Golden (R)	W	W
Morton (R)	R	R
Perkins (D)	R	R
Spence (D)	R	R
Watts (D)	W	R
Whitaker (D)	W	R
LA., Allen (D)	W	R
Boggs (D)	A	A
Brooks (D)	W	R
Hebert (D)	W	R
Larcade (D)	W	R
Morrison (D)	W	R
Passman (D)	PW	A
Willis (D)	W	R
ME., Fellows (R)	W	W
Hale (R)	R	W
Nelson (R)	R	R
MD., Beall (R)	R	R
Devereux (R)	W	W
Fallon (D)	R	R
Garmatz (D)	R	R
Miller (R)	W	W
Sasscer (D)	R	R
MASS., Bates (D)	R	R
Donohue (D)	R	R
Furcolo (D)	R	R
Goodwin (R)	W	W
Herter (R)	A	PR
Heselton (R)	R	R
Kennedy (D)	R	R
Lane (R)	R	R
McCormack (D)	R	R
Martin (R)	W	W
Nicholson (R)	W	W
Philbin (D)	R	R
Rogers (R)	R	W
Wigglesworth (R)	R	R
MICH., Bennett (R)	R	R
Blackney (R)	W	W
Crawford (R)	W	W
Dingell (D)	R	R
Dondero (R)	R	W
Ford, Jr. (R)	R	R
Hoffman (R)	W	W
Lesinski, Jr. (D)	R	R
Machrowicz (D)	R	R
Meader (R)	R	R
O'Brien (D)	R	R
Potter (R)	W	W
Raubaut (D)	R	R
Shafer (R)	W	W
Thompson (R)	W	W
Wolcott (R)	W	W
Woodruff (R)	A	PW
MINN., Andersen (R)	W	R
Andresen (R)	W	W
Blatnik (D)	R	R
Judd (R)	W	R
Hagen (R)	W	R
McCarthy (D)	W	R
Marshall (D)	W	R
O'Hara (R)	W	W
Wier (D)	R	R
MISS., Abernethy (D)	W	W
Colmer (D)	W	W
Rankin (D)	W	R
Smith (D)	W	W
Whitten (D)	W	W
Williams (D)	W	W
Winstead (D)	W	W
MO., Armstrong (R)	W	W
Bolling (D)	R	R
Cannon (D)	W	W
Carnahan (D)	R	R
Curtis (R)	R	R
Irving (D)	R	R
Jones (D)	W	W
Karsten (D)	R	R
Magee (D)	W	R
Moulder (D)	W	R
Short (R)	W	W
Claude Bakewell ( )	R	R
Welch (D)	R	R
MONT., D'Ewart (R)	W	W
Mansfield (D)	R	R
NEBR., Buffett (R)	W	W
Curtis (R)	W	W
Miller (R)	W	W
Stefan (R)	W	W
NEV., Baring (D)	R	R
N. H., Cotton (R)	R	R
Merrow (R)	R	R
N. J., Addonizio (D)	R	R
Auchincloss (R)	R	R
Canfield (R)	R	R
Case (R)	R	R
Eaton (R)	W	W
Hand (R)	R	W
Hart (D)	R	R
Howell (D)	R	R
Kean (R)	R	R
Rodino (D)	R	R
Sieminski (D)	R	R
Towe (R)	W	W
Widnall (R)	W	R
Wolverton (R)	R	R
N. M., Dempsey (D)	W	R
Fernandez (D)	W	W
N. Y., Anfuso (D)	R	R
Buckley (D)	R	R
Butler (R)	W	W
Byrne (D)	R	R
Celler (D)	R	R
Clemente (D)	R	R
Cole (R)	W	W
Coudert (R)	R	R
Delaney (D)	R	R
Dollinger (D)	R	R
Donovan (D)	R	R
Fine (D)	R	R
Gamble (R)	R	R
Greenwood (D)	R	R
Gwinn (R)	W	W
Hall, L. W. (R)	R	R
Hall, E. A. (R)	R	W
Heffernan (D)	R	R
Heller (R)	R	R
Gavits (R)	R	R
Kearney (R)	R	R
Keating (R)	R	R
Kelly (D)	R	R
Keogh (D)	R	R
Kilburn (R)	W	W
Klein (D)	R	R
Latham (R)	R	R
McGrath (R)	R	R
Miller (R)	R	R
Multer (D)	R	R
Murphy (D)	R	R
Ostertag (R)	R	R
O'Toole (D)	R	R
Powell (D)	R	R
Quinn (D)	R	R
Radwan (R)	PR	A
Reed (R)	W	W
Reihlman (R)	R	R
Rooney (D)	R	R
Roosevelt (D)	R	R
St. George (R)	W	W
Taber (R)	W	W
Taylor (R)	R	R
Williams (R)	W	W
Wharton (R)	W	W
N. C., Barden (D)	W	W
Bonner (D)	W	R
Carlyle (D)	W	W
Chatham (D)	A	A
Cooley (D)	W	W
Deane (D)	W	R
Doughton (D)	W	W
Durham (D)	PW	A
Jones, H. C. (D)	W	W
Jones, W. W. (D)	W	W
Kerr (D)	R	W
Redden (D)	W	W
N. D., Aandahl (R)	W	W
Burdick (R)	W	R
OHIO, Ayres (R)	R	R
Bender (R)	R	R
Betts (R)	W	W
Bolton (R)	R	R
Bow (R)	W	W
Breen (D)	PR	A
Brehm (R)	W	W
Brown (R)	W	W
Clevenger (R)	W	W
Crosser (D)	R	R
Elston (R)	W	W
Feighan (D)	R	R
Hays (D)	W	R
Hess (R)	R	R
Jenkins (R)	W	W
Kirwan (D)	R	R
McCulloch (R)	W	W
McGregor (R)	W	W
Polk (D)	R	R
Reams (IND.)	R	R
Secrest (D)	R	R
Vorys (R)	W	W
Weichel (R)	W	W
OKLA., Albert (D)	W	R
Belcher (R)	W	W
Jarman (D)	W	R
Morris (D)	W	R
Schwabe (R)	W	W
Steed (D)	W	R
Stigler (D)	W	R
Wichersham (D)	W	R
ORE., Angell (R)	R	R
Ellsworth (R)	W	W
Norblad (R)	A	A
Stockman (R)	W	R
PA., Barrett (D)	R	R
Bush (R)	W	W
Chudoff (D)	R	R
Corbett (R)	R	R
Dague (R)	W	W
Denny (R)	W	R
Eberharter (D)	R	R
Fenton (R)	R	R
Flood (D)	R	R
Fulton (R)	R	R
Gavin (R)	W	W
Gillette (R)	A	PR
Graham (R)	W	W
Granahan (D)	R	R
Green (D)	R	R
James (R)	R	R
Kearns (R)	R	R
Kelley (D)	PR	A
Lind (D)	R	R
McConnell (R)	R	R
Morgan (D)	R	R
Mumma (R)	W	W
O'Neill (D)	R	R
Rhodes (D)	R	R
Saylor (R)	R	R
Scott, Hardie (R)	R	R
Scott, Hugh (R)	R	R
Simpson (R)	W	W
Sittler (R)	R	R
Van Zandt (R)	R	R
Vaughn (R)	R	R
Walter (D)	R	R
R. I., Fogarty (D)	R	R
Forand (D)	R	R
S. C., Bryson (D)	W	W
Dorn (D)	W	W
McMillan (D)	W	W
Richards (D)	W	W
Riley (D)	W	W
Rivers (D)	W	W
S. D., Berry (R)	W	W
Lovre (R)	W	W
TENN., Baker (R)	W	W
Cooper (D)	W	W
Davis (D)	W	W
Evins (D)	W	W
Frazier (D)	W	R
Gore (D)	W	W
Murray (D)	W	W
Priest (D)	R	R
Reece (R)	W	W
Sutton (D)	PW	A
WYO., Harrison (R)	W	W
TEX., Beckworth (D)	W	R
Bentsen (D)	W	W
Burleson (D)	W	W
Combs (D)	W	R
Fisher (D)	W	W
Gossett (D)	W	W
Kilday (D)	W	W
Lucas (D)	W	W
Lyle (D)	W	PW
Mahon (D)	W	W
Patman (D)	R	R
Pickett (D)	W	W
Poage (D)	W	W
Rayburn (D)	Speaker
Egan (D)	W	W
Rogers (D)	W	W
Teague (D)	W	W
Thomas (D)	R	R
Thompson (D)	W	W
Thornberry (D)	W	W
Wilson (D)	W	W
UTAH, Bosone (D)	R	R
Granger (D)	R	R
VT., Prouty (R)	W	R
VA., Abbitt (D)	W	R
Burton (D)	W	R
Fugate (D)	W	R
Gary (D)	R	R
Hardy (D)	W	R
Harrison (D)	W	W
Robeson (D)	W	R
Smith (D)	W	R
Stanley (D)	W	R
WASH., Holmes (R)	W	R
Horan (R)	W	W
Jackson (D)	R	R
Mack (R)	R	R
Mitchell (D)	R	R
Tollefson (R)	R	R
W. VA., Bailey (D)	R	R
Burnside (D)	R	R
Hedrick (D)	R	R
Kee (D)	Not Sworn In
Ramsay (D)	R	R
Staggers (D)	R	R
WIS., Byrnes (R)	W	W
Davis (R)	W	R
Hull (R)	R	R
Kersten (R)	R	W
O'Konski (R)	W	R
Murray (R)	A	A
Smith (R)	W	W
Van Pelt (R)	W	W
Withrow (R)	R	R
Zablocki (D)	R	R

Strong Price Control Bill Appears Doomed

Weakening Proposals Considered

BY MILTON PLUMB

THE FATE of the Defense Production Act — and the economic stability of the country dependent upon it — was still being determined by a House-Senate Conference Committee as The CIO News went to press.

The committee began its deliberations July 25. It worked all through Wednesday and continued on Thursday in an all-night session ending at 5:15 a.m. Friday. Completion of its work was expected late Friday afternoon.

Congress has only until Tuesday midnight to reach a decision on a compromise bill. A 31-day extension of the controls act expires at that time.

As the conferees from the House and Senate sought to adjust the differences between the two bills, Administration spokesmen were hopeful that the compromise measure they were working out might prove better than either of the crippling versions with which they started.

House Speaker Rayburn (D. Tex.) and Senate Majority Leader McFarland (D. Ariz.) told President Truman that they believe a "workable" controls bill would emerge.

Progress reports of the conferees' actions seemed to lend some support to this view. But it seems unlikely, in the face of the strong lobbying pressure against them, that effective price controls can be saved.

Nevertheless, the conferees on Friday had reportedly reached at least tentative agreement to permit price roll-backs on non-agricultural items to pre-Korean levels. However, the government's authority would be restricted, since the Office of Price Stabilization would have to make allowance for any increase in the seller's costs.

The committee still had before it two proposals further weakening this authority, both sponsored by Rep. Herlong (D. Fla.),

One would guarantee wholesalers and retailers their customary percentage margins over costs based on the—inflated—period from Dec. 19, 1950 to Jan. 25, 1951.

The second would prohibit the OPS from rolling back a price, or refusing a price increase, simply because a seller's profit was above the figure of a specified base period.

In the case of agricultural roll-backs, the committee had tentatively adopted the House version. This would permit such "roll-backs" only to the near-peak inflation prices of May 19, 1951. Although this base date would protect the 10% beef price roll-back already in effect, it would ban the two scheduled rollbacks which would have directly benefitted consumers.

The conferees also were reported to have accepted the provision in both bills for 20% rent increases over June 1947 levels in areas now under federal rent ceilings. However, the committee dropped a House provision which would have allowed local governments to veto rent ceilings imposed in critical defense areas.

It also provided for relaxation of real estate credit curbs in areas brought back under federal rent controls.

In another important decision, the conferees took a slap at the Federal Reserve Board by voting to relax credit requirements on new and used automobiles and household appliances.

The committee accepted the Senate provision that the board may not require a downpayment of more than one-third on automobiles, or fix a maximum period to pay the balance of less than 18 months.

The Federal Reserve Board recently turned down a request of Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.) that credit restrictions on automobiles and certain household goods be relaxed. The CIO had requested this step in testimony before both Houses of Congress.

The United Labor Policy Committee has scheduled a meeting for Monday afternoon to consider organized labor's action in regard to the final version of the bill as reported by the conferees.

Whether or not the ULPC would urge a veto of the measure was still undetermined.

However, it is believed that the joint labor policy group may be reluctant to ask President Truman to take this step, since it would leave the nation without adequate authority for many activities essential to defense.

—From The Washington Post

'Any Quota On Slaughtering Consumers?'

Control Bill's Status Likened To 'Pauline's'

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) has likened the present status of the new Defense Production Act to that of the heroine of a famous silent movie serial, "The Perils of Pauline." Pauline got rescued at the last moment.

The Illnois Senator said that he was mildly hopeful that the measure may come out all right.

"It all depends on the Conference Committee," he said. "If it chooses, it can still save Pauline, the consumer, by permitting a roll-back on manufactured goods."

The reason for his hope?

"Men frequently get religion when they go into conference," Douglas explained.

Slaughtering Control May Be Restored

MEAT WAS the big "beef" in Washington last week, as a House-Senate Conference Committee worked out final provisions of the new Defense Production Act.

But the American people were eating less of it, particularly beef, to the detriment of their health.

Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle, saying he "won't give up until I'm buried," continued his fight for a better price controls law than is provided in either the House or Senate bills.

His main objectives were to persuade the conferees to restore power to control slaughtering and to roll-back beef prices.

Both the House and Senate voted to deny his present slaughtering control powers and tossed out two future beef price roll-backs which would have reduced the retail price of beef about 9c a pound by fall.

THE conferees, however, agreed unanimously to authorize slaughtering permits in the compromise bill. Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), chairman of the conference committee, predicted that Congress would reverse itself on this issue.

Maybank said that slaughtering "quotas" are needed "to break up black markets and put war profiteers in jail."

The new plan would permit regular processors to slaughter 100% of the animals being shipped to the stockyards, but would require them to obtain a permit to do business legitimately. Fly-by-night operators, who have begun to mushroom as black market operations grew, won't be able to get such permits.

DiSalle has contended that without such authority effective price controls on beef would be impossible. He was backed up by a number of independent meat packers, who said that the turn-down of slaughter quotas would mean the "complete collapse" of meat price ceilings.

Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.) had already pointed out that high prices were forcing many American families to eat horse meat,

Lack Of Meat Hurting Health

The harmful effects of the meat packers' and cattle industry's greed for higher prices upon the nation's health are beginning to show.

Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) read a letter from a Connecticut woman who had been turned down as a blood donor because lack of meat had made her blood too poor.

And the American Red Cross blamed the high cost of meat for a shortage of blood for the wounded in Korea. The proportion of rejects due to a lack of iron in their blood has gone up sharply at Westfield, Mass.

Red Cross officials said that the iron was lacking because the people willing to give their blood couldn't afford to eat enough meat.

and called the 82nd "the Horse Meat Congress."

Last week Rep. Bosone (D. Utah) came up with another title. She named it "the Dog Food Congress' after a constituent in Salt Lake City sent her a can of dog food with this note:

"If we don't get a good controls law, we'll all be eating this stuff."

There was evidence, however, that "the No Meat Congress" might be a nickname closer to the facts.

The Dept. of Agriculture reported that consumers ate less meat during the first half of this year than in the same period in 1950.

As July drew to a close, it was apparent that even the "solution" to the meat situation proposed by the cattle industry was no longer an "answer."

In testimony before the House Finance Committee May 22, H. M. Conway, of the National Live Stock Producers Association, told Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.), who had expressed concern for low-income families:

"If they can't afford beef, let them buy pork. Pork is cheap."

LAST WEEK DiSalle announced that the price of hogs has been rising steadily and is now at 99% of parity. The law prevents him setting ceilings until parity is reached.

The price of pork has increased, despite the fact that most of the additional meat produced this year has been this kind.

But inflation had also produced other hogs besides pigs.

E. Floyd Parks, president of the Western States Meat Packers Association, protested a U. S. Army plan to buy 50 million pounds of beef from Argentina. He said it would be "disastrous" to American producers.

Argentine meat packers immediately pointed out that the amount to be purchased is little more than a day's consumption of beef in the U. S.

The meat situation was "whole hog or none," however, for many American families as well as the packing industry.

Junior's piggy bank had disappeared.

Godfrey Upholds Price Control; Draws GOP Congressman's Ire

SOME Republican Congressmen don't like to get letters urging price controls and are inclined to label anyone asking citizens to write such letters a "Truman Administration lobbyist."

Arthur Godfrey, radio and television star of the Columbia Broadcasting System, had this tag pinned on him recently when he interrupted his morning program to remind his listeners, mostly housewives, that price controls are necessary to keep the cost of living from getting out of hand.

He told his audience to "get on the ball" and write letters to Representatives and Senators, demanding "price controls now."

Republican congressional reaction was immediate. Rep. Shafer (R. Mich) demanded that the Federal Communications Commission investigate "this misuse of radio and television time" and called attention to the laws governing political broadcasts.

SHAFER complained that the "invasion of political propaganda" into the entertainment field set "an ominous precedent with a Presidential campaign year impending."

The Republican congressman also criticized Godfrey for telling his program listeners to write their Senators and Representatives asking support for General Eisenhower and his North Atlantic pact army.

Godfrey held a roundtable discussion on CBS July 25 on the subject of price control. Guests were Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle, Allan B. Kline, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation and Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.).

Waste? Extravagance?

At various times in the past few years, the CIO and other organizations have suggested the wisdom of creating a Missouri Valley Authority, along TVA lines.

Proposals for an MVA have received the strictly cold-shoulder treatment in Congress. MVA bills have been variously described as "socialism," "waste," "extravagance"—and they have been confined to the pigeonholes.

But the record shows—particularly in the light of the recent floods in Missouri and Kansas—that the "waste" and the "extravagance" have come not from spending for the future, but from failing to spend in the past.

Nobody will ever know how much this latest flood cost—in dollars, in human suffering. Many of the costs can never be measured in terms of dollars.

But the cost of make-shift flood control programs and navigation projects—under the Pick-Sloan plan, which has been in operation on the Missouri for many years—can be measured. That "plan," which clearly does not protect the people of the Valley from floods and distress, has cost American taxpayers a billion and a quarter dollars in the past 23 years, according to the St. Louis Post Dispatch.

On the other hand, a well-thought-out program like the TVA has completely stopped the floods which once ravaged the Tennessee River and its tributaries. In addition, TVA has brought tremendous benefits to the whole area.

If it can be done on the Tennessee, it can be done on the Missouri. Meanwhile, Congress would do well to heed the plea of CIO Pres. Philip Murray that "America must do better in its flood control work—in the Missouri Valley and elsewhere."

Whose Responsibility?

General MacArthur, in a Boston speech generally interpreted as critical of the Truman Administration, asked:

"What is the plan for bringing to a halt this inflationary movement which is progressively and inexorably decreasing the purchasing power of our currency, nullifying the protection of our insurance provisions, and reducing those of fixed income to hardship and even despair?"

The plan, as we saw it, was a firm anti-inflation program, designed to bring about equality of sacrifice.

It was a good plan—and it was badly mutilated by special interest industrial and commodity groups, and by members of the southern Democratic-northern Republican coalition in the Congress.

Many of the men who knifed that program are the General's strongest political supporters.

Help Wanted: Hypnotist

News dispatches from Chicago describe the exploits of one Edwin L. Baron, a stage performer, who says he can hypnotize too hefty women into eating less rich food—so they're able to regain that schoolgirl figure.

If Mr. Baron's claims stand up, he's missing a golden opportunity.

There must be a high-paying job on the staff of the National Association of Manufacturers for any hypnotist who can convince Americans they'll be happier when hungrier.

The NAM has been trying to sell that argument for years—but hypnosis is obviously the factor needed to put the NAM line across with the public.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Josph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925.

Vol. XIV July 30, 1951 No. 31

All Wet!

Says The Senator From Oregon:

'Give Labor More Voice'

BY SEN. WAYNE MORSE

(Excerpts from an article by the Oregon Republican in the July issue of Liberty Magazine)

THE CEMENT OF OUR free society is voluntary agreement. We pride ourselves on the fact that the willingness of skilled labor to give its finest, most precise work, does not come from the fear of the police, or because loved ones are being held hostages, or because starvation is the prod.

Millions of American workers give their best because they take pride in their jobs, because they have selected their particular job—and may quit it at will—and because they enjoy the benefits of their labors through higher living standards and greater leisure.

Our mobilization program must be based on the proper use of our great system of economic freedom if the fighting men and the country as a whole are to receive the weapons which are needed to demonstrate to Stalin that he has everything to lose by continuing his aggressive threats against the free way of life.

The genius of American production does not rest in the heads of an exclusive circle of managers and directors. It can be found on the assembly line, in the drafting room, in a union hall—in a shipping clerk as well as the company president.

TO MOBILIZE our industry means to mobilize in such a way as to preserve the full values of all of it, and not allow any segment to dominate or suppress the other. Mobilization must not mean a jockeying around for special advantages on the part of either industry or labor.

To accomplish the essential goal of economic mobilization, the leaders of government, management and labor must stop dealing with each other at arm's length and must join hands in a good faith and understanding of each other's obligations, rights and duties.

The walkout of labor earlier this year from the program and organization of the Wage Stabilization Board cannot be dismissed with the prejudiced statement made by so many that "labor quit because it could not have its way."

A careful examination of the facts in that dispute between labor and government will convince any fair-minded person that labor walked out not because it could not have its way, but because it was denied a fair voice regarding its part in the defense mobilization program.

It asked for a voting voice in the determination not only of wage policies, but of those labor-management policies generally which were to be applied in national production. Labor asked for a voting voice for management and the public, too...

Labor did not walk out of the program summarily or impetuously. It pleaded with the Administration to take stock of the situation and to give heed to the criticism that all top positions in administrative control of the economic mobilization program had gone to industrialists or men without any labor background.

Not only was precious time lost by this unfortunate controversy over giving labor voting representation, but unnecessary ill-will was engendered between the leaders of labor, management, and government. . .

HOWEVER, much more needs to be done before all the knocks are eliminated from the economic motor of the country and it starts purring on all cylinders on production for defense. A greater number of responsible labor statesmen from the ranks of labor leadership need to be brought into top positions of the economic mobilization program along with comparable industrial statesmen from American industry. . .

The public has the responsibility of seeing to it through its government that fair, just and expeditious procedures are set up at once for the immediate settlement of controversies as they are bound to rise from time to time between labor and management. They are bound to arise, as we discovered in World War I, when it became necessary to create the War Labor Board of that war under the able chairmanship of the great ex-President Howard Taft; and again in World War II when we created the second War Labor Board, this time tri-partite in nature, with labor, management and the public having a voting voice on policy and the settlement of disputes.

Magazine Reports On Housing Near Camps:

'Vultures, Cheats, Sharpies' Gyp GI Families

ONE OF THE nation's leading magazines last week presented a factual picture of housing conditions in and around various Army camps.

The story refutes claims of the real estate lobby in Washington that construction of public housing units is not needed at the present time.

The article, entitled "Could You Live Here?"—appearing in the Woman's Home Companion—is a shameful and shocking story "of more than half a million abused, cheated, betrayed and neglected citizens of this country—wives and children of American servicemen."

It is the story of a U. S. Army sergeant and his wife and two children who consider themselves lucky because they pay "only' $70 a month for two tiny rooms near Camp Polk, La.—rooms equipped with a hot plate but lacking a private bath, a toliet or even running water.

"It is a story of vultures, cheats and sharpies being allowed to prey upon the families of military personnel—while government officials, civilians and military (with a few exceptions) close their eyes to the growing problem or shrug it off in callous indifference," the article declares.

Mistakes Repeated

"Our government made all the mistakes it is now making once before during World War II. It learned then the terrific price of these mistakes—impaired health, shattered morale, neglected children, broken homes.

"It learned too, how to put a limit on rent gougings; how to provide decent quarters for service wives and children; how to control the worst of the parasites who cluster around military training areas.

The landlords in Leesville, La., "whetted their knives," the article states, when word spread last year that nearby Camp Polk was to be reopened by the Army.

A month after the camp was opened, apartments which had been renting at $20 to $25 a month jumped to $60 and $75 for two tiny rooms and to $100-$125 for three-bedroom quarters.

"Since the last war the paper board walls of these temporary buildings had been punched full of holes, the doors had warped and roofs had turned to sieves," the magazine reports.

"But any soldier who stopped to cavil at such trifles soon discovered that 50 other families were desperately anxious for the same quarters, desperately ready to pay almost any price to get a roof over their heads.

"Then, to 'relieve the situation,' the federal government sold its last remaining housing project to a private corporation. Decrepit quarters that had gone begging at $27 a month were auctioned off to the highest bidder at $60, $70 and $80 monthly."

Trailer Facilities Costly

The article relates how many servicemen, remembering World War II housing headaches, hoped to avoid being exploited by buying trailers. They soon discovered that the gougers were ready for this move, too.

For the privilege of using the facilities of one trailer camp along state Highway 171, 40 families pay from $22 to $45 monthly, the story declares.

"For water these people share a single well only five feet from the nearest trailer, into which contaminating camp residue seeps," says the magazine.

"Twenty feet away a garbage burner solves the camp's disposal problem—when it works. The nearest grocery store operates in the back of a filling station more than three miles away."

There has been some effort made to reestablish rent control in Leesville and nearby DeRidder by both city council's. Local rent advisory boards ordered a rollback starting Mar. 8 under which landlords would be entitled to only 20% above their usual rents.

At Mt. Clemens, Mich, 800 Air Force families discovered recently what happens when federal rent control is lifted. One week after decontrol became effective there, scores of "reckless" rent increases were reported.

A typical hardship case was that of an enlisted airman who had been paying $55 monthly for an apartment with a normal $45 ceiling. After rent control ended, the tariff was increased to $80 a month.

The article called Camp Atterbury, Ind., "another sore spot." The Army had quarters on the post for only about a dozen families out of thousands of applicants.

—From The Washington Post

Everything In Its Little Cubbyhole

Camp Breckinridge, Ky., faced much the same problems. There the Army had only 136 housing units to take care of 4000 training-cadre soldiers and their families.

Washington has been bombarded by senior officers and post commanders of all the services with reports and surveys detailing the effects on morale of rent gouging, housing shortages, overcrowded schools and runaway retail prices.

Indifference Along Potomac

"But in Washington itself—except among a very few officials—indifference reigns," the author says.

The article points out that rent control is almost entirely ineffectual in military area camps. It lists eight states where rent control has ended entirely and says that even in the remaining states, it covers only the most limited sections, away from isolated camps.

"As much as Washington may wish to ignore the problem," the story concludes, "something will have to be done—and done quickly—to aid these half million service families being offered up as sacrifices to the gyps and gougers.

"A first step would be to pass an emergency military area rent control act, empowering federal officials to reinstitute rent controls where needed.

"A second step would be for Congress or the President to give the Dept. of Defense power to instruct post commandants to declare the worst of substandard housing off-limits in the areas surrounding their posts.

Senate Unit Alarmed

The magazine story appeared about the same time as a report on substandard housing and rent gouging in military areas by the Senate Armed Services preparedness subcommittee.

The Senate group described some of the hovels near Army camps "so hideous that they could not adequately be described by mere words."

Subcommittee investigators found servicemen forced to house their families in converted garages, coal sheds, chicken coops, barns, tool sheds, granaries, smokehouses, and in one instance, in a house built of empty whisky bottles and beer cans.

Rents were found to have been boosted in a number of cases 100 to 500% over those previously charged.

Subcommittee Chairman Lyndon B. Johnson (D. Tex.) termed the existing conditions "a disgrace to America."

He added that the report "constitutes a disheartening recital of the cruel indignity, irresponsible greed and actual distain for the self-respect of our men in uniform.

"In too many cases, servicemen are being shamefully victimized at the hands of civilians whose property and lives the men in uniform are dedicated to defend.

Housing conditions were terrible during World War II, said the report, "but they do not even compare with the deplorable conditions now."

CIO Steelworkers Win Surgical Benefits At U. S. Steel

SURGICAL benefits are now made available for employes and their dependents in United States Steel, under an agreement worked out between the CIO Steelworkers and subsidiaries of that company.

The Blue Shield surgical benefits become effective Aug. 1 and covers about 715,000 employes and their dependents.

Announcement of the agreement was made by Philip Murray, president of USA and CIO, and John A. Stephens, vice-president of U.S. Steel. It was completed July 20 and approved by the union's executive board in a telegraphic poll on July 24.

Highlights of the agreement, which means hundreds of thousands of dollars in saving for the employes, are:

1. Present employe and employer contributions will continue unchanged. (Each contributes 2½c an hour to the social insurance program).

2. In addition to all present benefits, Blue Shield surgical benefits for employes and their dependents will become effective Aug. 1.

3. Employes who cease work because of an occupational disability will be permitted to continue to be participants in the insurance program upon continued payment of their regular contribution.

4. If over the whole term of the basic insurance and pension agreement employe contributions for basic benefits exceed company contributions, the excess will be refunded to employes before the agreement expires.

5. At present there is an $8 million surplus in the insurance fund which appears to be sufficient to assure continuation of dependent surgical benefits for the term of the agreement. But if the surplus falls below $4 million it will be necessary for employes who elect to continue their dependent surgical coverage to contribute 50c a month. Should such a step be necessary and the fund later exceeds $4 million, such voluntary contributions will cease.

THE PRESENT 2½c joint contribution is sufficient to cover all phases of the insurance program including surgical benefits for employes. The possibility of voluntary contributions of 50c a month will arise only insofar as dependent surgical benefits are concerned—and then only if the surplus drops below $4 million.

(At the present time 120,000 employes of U. S. Steel are paying about $1.50 a month for surgical benefits for themselves and dependents under local, mutual voluntary plans, outside the scope of the national union-management social insurance program.)

The agreement providing Blue Shield benefits for Steelworkers is the first to be set up by the participating plans on a national basis.

As in Blue Cross, the pattern for the cooperative program was established by Abraham Oseroff, of the Hospital Service Association of Pittsburgh, who sees the non-profit voluntary prepayment plan as "a natural and essential part of any labor-management program where broad health care coverage is required."

In general surgical benefits will cover all surgery in or out of a hospital, except where surgery is required under a Workmen's Compensation case, and surgery is given free by state or federal governments.

It is anticipated that Blue Shield will pay approximately $3,960,000 annually to surgeons for surgical benefits.

A breakdown of the 220,000 employes covered, shows 165,000 have families and 55,000 are single. Thus, on an average of four persons to a family, the total covered will approximate 715,000.

NEGOTIATIONS to add surgical benefits to the program in U. S. Steel began when a review of the first year's record showed a favorable experience. Meetings were held over several months under Murray's direction.

Included in the meetings were the union members of the Insurance Committee, Directors John Grajciar, Eugene Maurice, William Donovan and James J. Thomas. Technical details were handled also by John Tomayko and Bernard Greenberg, of the contract dept. and Elliot Bredhoff, of the stafl of Arthur Goldberg, Steelworkers' and CIO's general counsel.

Give A Buck To PAC

Flood Impoverishes Thousands Of CIO Members

Union Group Operates Round Clock

By WILLIAM WEISS

TEAMWORK was the keynote as organized labor in the flood-ravaged states of Kansas and Missouri last week continued the tremendous job of rehabilitating and bringing relief to union members made homeless by the disaster.

The CIO Emergency Relief Committee, with headquarters in Kansas City, Mo., maintained operations on a 24-hour schedule caring for the needs of more than 35,000 CIO members idled—at least temporarily—by the devastating flood waters.

CIO regional director James J. Leary said that of this number 17,000 are without work for an indefinite period because of damage to factories. More than 7000 lost their homes and belongings, he said.

Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald, of the CIO Steelworkers, last week was appointed coordinator of all Economic Stabilization Agency flood relief activities in connection with the Midwest flood disaster by Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston.

The Kansas City CIO group has worked closely with the AFL, construction contractors and the official Kansas City Committee to clear the city of mud and wreckage. Both unions have recruited workers to do the job at the standard rate of $1.50 an hour. Contractors have provided equipment at cut-rate fees.

In a letter to Federal Housing and Home Finance Administrator Raymond M. Foley, whose agency has been given the responsibility of supervising the expenditure of a $25 million government appropriation, Leary called for elimination of "red tape" in providing assistance for flood victims.

He pointed out that the low wage industrial workers of the Kaw Valley had not only suffered the greatest damage to their homes but were also less able to finance rebuilding than the average victim.

"We are vitally interested in the welfare of our members, as well as the welfare of all the people who have suffered similar losses in the area," Leary wrote.

Business Aided

Leary noted that the Reconstruction Finance Corp. has prepared disaster loans to business firms and that industry would be given "every financial aid possible" to get back into production. But, the CIO official declared, he has been unable to find out "what relief is going to be given to the individual to rehabilitate his home or rebuild and refurnish homes destroyed."

He said organized labor realizes that streets must be cleared of debris, health hazards removed, and plants reopened as soon as possible—but the first concern should be to "alleviate the plight of the homeless and jobless."

"The waters are now receding," Leary said. "Many of our members are able to return to their homes to see the extent of the havoc and destruction which has been wrought to their possessions.

"They are without funds and in all cases need credit to rehabilitate the homes left standing or to rebuild and refurnish those which were destroyed."

The CIO Committee offered a three-point program for carrying out rehabilitation and relief work in the stricken area.

1. Rent controls to be restored in the affected metropolitan areas of Kansas and Missouri.

2. The Federal Housing Administration to establish a separate division to allocate funds to people whose homes were destroyed or damaged.

3. Organized labor to be accorded a voice on an advisory committee to help make and shape the policy of any future action.

Three representatives of the CIO Community Services Committee, Robert Kinney, William Donovan and Virgil McCormick, were complimented by Leary for outstanding work during the disaster.

All three assisted in setting up flood relief committees and central referral centers for CIO members.

Meanwhile, various CIO unions continued to send contributions to destitute members in the area.

The CIO Packinghouse Workers, with 2100 homeless in Kansas City and Topeka, called for "immediate and generous contributions to help flood victims."

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein, in a letter sent to 420 locals asking for funds, food, clothing and household goods, said "every available resource of our international union must be thrown in immediately."

Plea For Aid

A special edition of the union's publication, the Packinghouse Worker was sent to the entire 150,000 membership, pointing out that union members in the flood areas have lost everything they own, in some cases salvaging only a few articles of clothing.

"So severe is the damage to plants that there is doubt whether some will ever reopen," the Packinghouse Worker says. Other industries are similarly hit and thousands of workers are desperately searching for work."

The CIO Rubber Workers sent $7500 to its Topeka local, where nearly 1000 members suffered great losses from the flood.

URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster urged all local unions to contribute since the international's donation "will be only a small part of what is needed in the situation."

In response to an appeal from Pres. Murray, CIO unions have contributed more than $50,000 to the Emergency Relief Committee to date. Steel, Auto and National CIO each sent $10,000. Communications Workers $2000, Oil Workers $1000, and Shoe Workers $1000.

Checks and contributions should be sent to: CIO Emergency Relief Committee, 501 Railway Exchange Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Action Asked By Murray To Halt Floods

CIO PRES. Philip Murray, in a letter to President Truman said last week that "America must do better in its flood control work in the Missouri Valley and elsewhere."

He suggested a four-point program for the Missouri River basin to replace the "discredited Pick-Sloan proposals," under which piece-meal navigation and flood-control work has been conducted.

Describing the Pick-Sloan program as "wrong in purpose and wrong in method," Murray said the "knowledge and understanding is available on the basis of which is a constructive and workable program can be assembled rapidly and put into effect as quickly as funds can be made available.

CIO Sought MVA

"If a Missouri Valley Authority had been established a number of years ago, as the CIO advocated, such a program would be well along by this time, and the damage could have been sharply reduced."

He urged President Truman to take these steps:

1 Set up a President's Emergency Commission on the Missouri Valley "to draw up a sound river management for submission to Congress not later than Jan. 15." Murray said that the Commission should include representatives of leading labor, farm and conservative organizations.

2 Urge Congress to act immediately on a water storage program proposed by the Dept. of Agriculture for building small upstream dams and the development of farm ponds and terraces, to hold back millions of acre-feet of flood waters every year. Murray charged that the program for a Missouri River Basin has been pigeonholed for months by the Public Works and Agriculture Committee of the House.

3 Press for establishment of a Missouri Valley Authority to supplant the work of the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation, "which have botched the job" in the Missouri Valley.

4 Establish a Watershed Review Board to pass upon surveys, programs and decisions of all federal agencies engaged in river engineering work.

"We must not tolerate any further delay," Murray wrote, "for valuable property and precious human lives are in serious danger . . .

"We must not overlook the fact that the Missouri flood may be duplicated next year, perhaps sooner, in many other river basins in this country."

Murray Urges Contributions To Red Cross Flood Relief

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week called upon all CIO international unions, state and city CIO councils and regional directors "to contribute generously" to the $5 million special relief program of the American Red Cross.

He said that the recent unprecedented flood disaster which struck many midwestern states "has brought hardship to hundreds of families."

Murray added he hoped CIO members "would respond most generously with contributions to aid the scores of thousands of people who need emergency help at this time."

He pointed out that the Red Cross special fund, establishment of which was suggested by President Truman after surveying the flood area, "will not duplicate the work of the government, nor the activities of our own CIO Emergency Relief Committee."

He said the latter "is doing splendid work" to help CIO members in the disaster area.

"In this great natural disaster, it is necessary that aid be rushed to the scene at the earliest possible moment.

"I feel sure therefore, that CIO affiliates in every part of the country will act quickly to contribute to the Red Cross Relief Appeal," Murray added.

HELP CHILDREN: Secy-Treas. Gustav Faber of the CIO Transport Workers (right) presents a $1000 check for the Police Athletic League of New York City to Deputy Commissioner James B. Nolan, who is PAL president. PAL's activities include summer camps, youth centers and playgrounds, and have benefited the children of many TWU members.

Southern Group Hits Stand Of 3 Governors On Schools

THREE SOUTHERN governors have been taken severly to task for declaring that segregated schools would be retained in their states—even if the practice were ruled unconstitutional by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The letter was addressed to Govs. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, Herman E. Talmadge of Georgia and Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi.

The three were critized in an open letter from the Southern Regional Conference, the South's foremost inter-racial organization, which charged "the recent utterances of each of you have had a secessionist ring to them which echoes strangely in modern ears."

Conference members are leaders of both races in 13 states, and include some of the South's outstanding clergymen, educators, editors, civic leaders and representatives of labor and industry.

The council has distributed more than 40,000 pamphlets on inter-racial problems and has taken a leading role in effecting recent improvements in Negro housing, recreational facilities and the employment of Negro policemen in many Southern cities.

Following in part is the conference's letter:

"It is our conviction that the vast majority of Southerners have no wish to see their region isolated from, and at odds with, the rest of the country.

"Although national legislation or Federal court rulings may occasionally go against their grain, they are willing to sacrifice personal and sectional preference to a higher loyalty.

"They recognize that our system of government is a good one and that the South has more than a proportionate voice in the conduct of it.

"Until proved wrong, we will continue to believe that the people of Georgia, South Carolina and Mississippi will not—in the name of Southern tradition or anything else—be willing to declare a moratorium on American democracy.

"The main consideration is not what the Supreme Court will rule, or what will be the administrative outcome of its ruling; it is how we, as Southerners and Americans, will accept the results, whatever they may be.

"We sincerely urge that you use the prestige of your high offices to set an example in that regard which the whole South can follow in honor and good citizenship."

The Conference questioned the feasibility of a proposal to turn public school systems over to churches, or other groups to be administered on a bi-racial basis.

It pointed out that various denominations in the South had recently opened seminaries and colleges to students from both races, and added that "many sincere Southern people would be deeply distressed to see their churches cast in the role of champions of segregation.

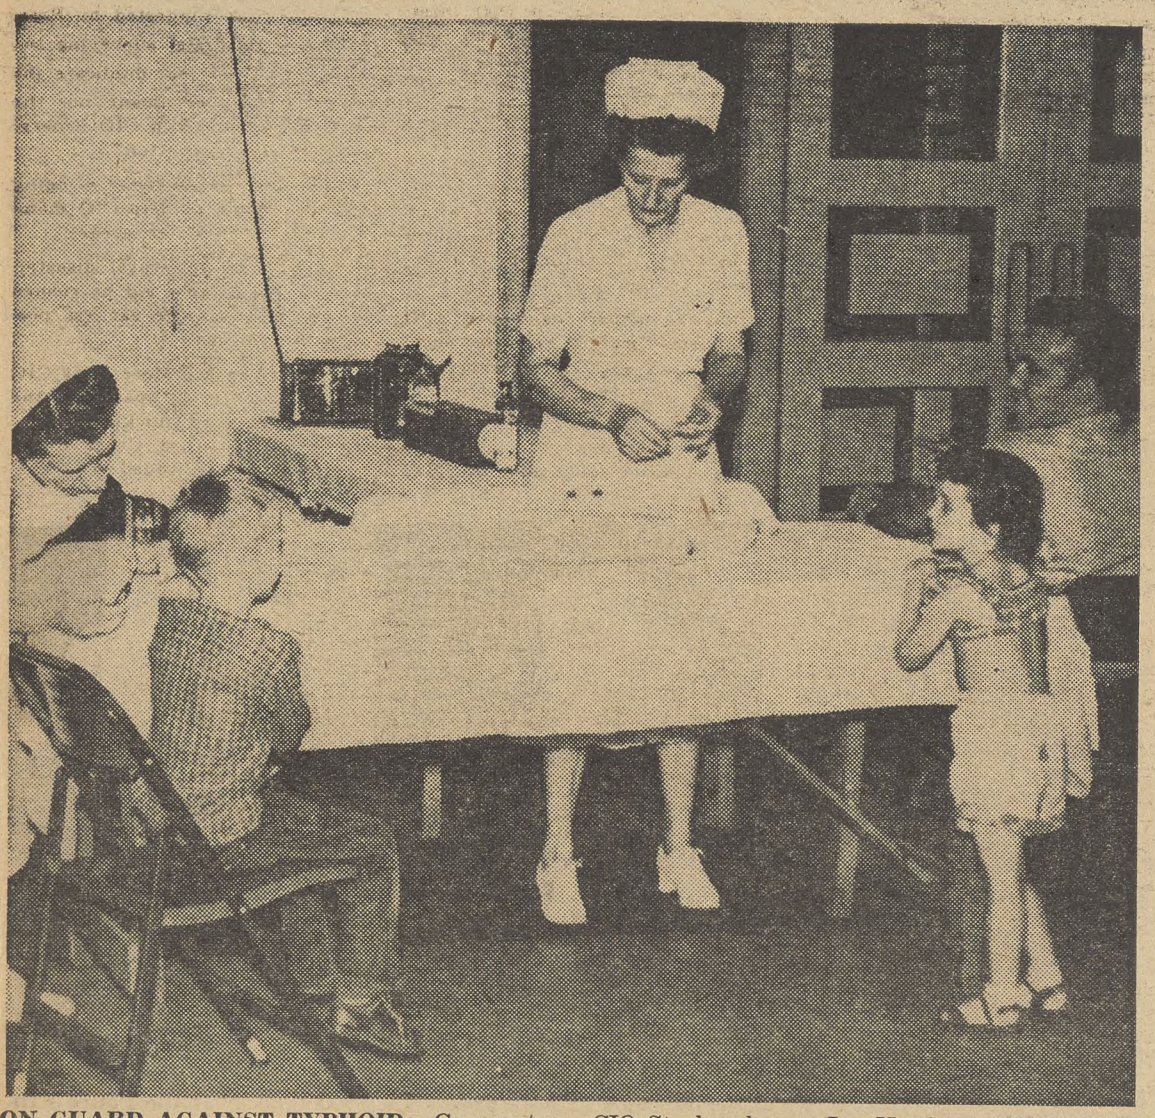
It was noted that as the result of recent Supreme Court rulings, Negro graduate students were attending state universities in Arkansas, Virginia, Kentucky, Louisiana, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Texas.

The Conference pointed out that these changes had occurred without disturbance.

CIO Acts Quickly To Aid Members In Flood Area

QUICK RELIEF: A case worker for the CIO Emergency Flood Relief Committee interviews John Guthrie, CIO Steelworker, who was injured when he tried to return to his Kansas City home after the flood waters receded.

NOT MUCH LEFT: The flood destroyed the porch, furniture and windows, and left two feet of mud in Guthrie's home. Note the mark showing the water line on the roof. Guthrie, who is married and the father of five children, was unable to return to work because of his injuries. Thousands of CIO members were affected by the flood.



ON GUARD AGAINST TYPHOID: Cooperating with the Red Cross and the Sheffield Steel Corp., the CIO Committee opened a typhoid injection station at the hall of Local 13 of the CIO Steelworkers. Jay Harden is about to receive a shot, while his father, R. B. Harden, a member of the local, and his sister, Nancy, await their turn.

CIO MEMBERS are helping the Salvation Army to ration clothes at a food and clothing collection center. They are sorting shoes. Note the pile of clothes on the table. Some CIO unions sent food and clothing.

URW's Joe Glazer Finds

Wages Low, Prices High And CP Strong In France

Joe Glazer, education director of the CIO United Rubber Workers, tells in this article some of his impressions of French workers and French unions—gained during a recent trip abroad for the Economic Cooperation Administration. Glazer, a "hot man with a banjo," has talked and sung to thousands of CIO members. His report should give union members on both sides of the Atlantic some food for thought.

By JOE GLAZER

YOU FIRST realize what a small world it is when you travel to Europe by air. I had lunch in New York on Thursday and early Friday morning I was eating breakfast in Paris, trying to figure how many francs to tip the waiter.

A busy schedule had been arranged for me in France. It included visits to rubber factories and meetings with officers, stewards and rank-and-file members of rubber and other unions. I also took along movies and a repertoire of American union songs to tell the story of the American labor movement.

Like the trips of other American trade unionists, my visit had two principal purposes:

1. To help the free French unions with information, ideas and techniques to build more effective organizations.

2. To help create a more accurate and realistic understanding among the French workers of the American trade union movement and of America itself.

Unions Are Weak

The French unions are pitifully weak. They simply don't have the collective bargaining strength to get their share of the things they produce.

I talked to tire builders like Charles Tissier, secretary of one of the unions in the giant Michelin Rubber Co. plant in Clermont-Ferrand (13,000 workers) and he told me that the average worker in the plant gets about $17 or $18 for the standard 48-hour week which everybody works.

Time-and-a-quarter is paid for overtime after 40 hours. However, to this must be added relatively large family allowances for married men with children.

The next question I asked was, "How about prices?" I was surprised to find that prices, (except for rents which are very low) were either the same or higher than they are in the U. S. Cigarettes were 20c a pack, butter a dollar a pound, coal was $35 a ton, beefsteak 95c a pound.

A ready-made suit cost about $50. Wives of American officials told me it was impossible to get a good ready-made dress at a reasonable price.

How do the French workers live if prices are so high and wages so low? Let me tell you in the words of T. L. Delaunay, secretary of a metal workers union in Marseilles:

"The French worker lives from day to day. The family allowance keeps the married men from starving.

"The worker spends 70% of his income on food. He has no savings, no reserves. He cannot strike for more than a few days or a week, because the unions have no money to feed him.

"He is much worse off than he was before the war. The government is either not willing or is afraid to pass strong price control laws and tax laws which will help the worker. And the French unions are too divided and too weak to fight for the things they should get.

"This is fertile ground for the demagogues of the left—the Communists, and the demogogues of the right—the De Gaullists.

"Both promise a 'strong government' and many tired and disillusioned workers follow them."

Labor Split

The French labor movement is split three ways. The largest group is the Communist-dominated federation called the CGT with two million members.

The other two groups are the Catholic trade unions and the non-Communist group of unions called the Fource Ouvrier (FO).

There are more workers out of the unions than in the unions The unions have very few contracts, practically no money and very poor organization. I was in many union halls where workers sat for hours on benches without backs because the union did not have enough money to buy chairs.

The checkoff and the union shop are unknown in France. There is no organized system of collecting dues and many who believe in the union and feel they are members have not paid dues for months.

Red Network

I had many long discussions with various union leaders about our checkoff system and how it worked, but the idea is very new to them.

The Communist question in France is a serious one. There is a large network of Communist daily, weekly and monthly publications. They have thousands of full-time officials, dozens of front organizations and a large number of deputies in the national parliament.

The entire Communist propaganda is directed against America; against the North Atlantic Pact which is designed to protect Western Europe against Communist aggression; against the Marshall Plan which has helped to put France partially back on its feet since the war; and against the American labor movement which supports the North Atlantic Pact and the Marshall Plan.

But the Communist threat in France (and the threat of the reactionaries under De Gaulle, which is just as real) will not be eliminated until the French worker gets some more food in his stomach and more clothes on his back. This means the adoption of modern production techniques and the building of the trade union movement so the workers can get their share of increased production.

One last point: In France there is no discrimination against minority groups and the Communists found that their best anti-American weapon was the discrimination that exists in the United States.

When I was in France the Communists were exploiting the case of Willie McGee, the Negro who was electrocuted in Mississippi for raping a white woman.

At a large meeting in the mining and textile center of St. Etienne, one of the workers asked what I thought of the McGee case. He wanted to know how the United States could preach about democracy when incidents like that occur in the United States.

I explaned the historical background of slavery and segregation—and showed the progress we had made in recent years in eliminating discrimination. But I had to admit that we still have a long way to go.

'We Need Help'

I felt pretty bitter at these individuals in the United States who continue to practice discrimination and those Congressmen or State legislators who refuse to pass fair employment legislation and yet maintain they are anti-Communist.

How many thousands of troops and planes and bombs would it be worth to us in morale and the support of other nations of the world if we fought discrimination effectively at home?

When I got back to my desk after a month in France my trip seemed like a far-away dream But I had my canceled airplane ticket and some deeply etched memories which told me the trip was real enough.

And I never would forget the face and the words of the young, militant trade union leader in Marseilles: "Tell your American comrades about some of the things you have seen. Tell them we need help.

"Tell them not to let the French workers down. We will do our share in keeping democracy alive in France."

THIS FRENCH AUDIENCE evidently enjoyed the program of labor movies and union song which Joe Glazer, educational director of the CIO Rubber Workers, presented.

USE OF FILMS to help unions is being discussed by Glazer (center) with Jean Rombach, Force Ouvriere education director in Lyons, France. Andre Dardy, ECA labor representative, is threading the projector.

TAFT GIVES COMMIES IDEA

This Communist poster proclaims: "No, the blood of Frenchmen is not for sale!" Idea for it was supplied by Sen. Taft who said: "It is cheaper to make war with the soldiers of other nations, even if America has to equip them rather than use our own soldiers."

Coca-Cola Plant Told To Stop Interfering

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has recommended that the Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Asheville, N. C., be ordered to stop interfering with the rights of its employes to organize.

The examiner also recommended that Joseph V. Bolch, a former worker at the plant who was fired last year for union activity on behalf of the CIO Furniture Workers, be reinstated to his former job with full back pay.

Stricter Curbs Asked On Sleeping Pills

Stricter control of sleeping pill sales is demanded by the Food and Drug Administration, which cited a heavy increase in manufacture and sale of the drugs—and in the number of deaths they cause.

A bill being prepared for presentation before a House Ways and Means subcommittee headed by Rep. Hale Boggs (D. La.) will seek, it is understood, a cut in production of the pills.

Give A Buck To PAC

Buchanan's Widow Wins Congress Seat

MRS. VERA Buchanan last week was elected to succeed her husband, the late Frank Buchanan, as Democratic Representative from Pennsylvania's 33rd District.

In the campaign she vigorously supported President Truman's policies.

Mrs. Buchanan served as her husband's secretary during his five years as Congressman and was in the thick of his battle with reactionary pressure groups while he was chairman of the special House committee on lobbying activities.

Although bereaved by the death of her husband on April 27, Mrs. Buchanan conducted a vigorous campaign.

"I'LL BE PROUD to support a President—Harry S. Truman—who has labored and devoted the highest office in the land to restoring law and order in the world," she said at a campaign rally.

Her Republican opponent, Clifford W. Flegal, McKeesport city controller, savagely attacked Truman, Secy. of State Dean Acheson and the administration's foreign policies—domestic and foreign.

Replying to his challenge to debate, Mrs. Buchanan replied with the same snap that carried her husband to victory in campaigns for Mayor of McKeesport and thrice for Congress:

"The oldest saw in politics is 'Let's debate.' This is no time for hot air. It's time for decision. If my opponent hasn't made up his mind at this late date, it's just too bad. My mind is made up."

In reporting Mrs. Buchanan's victory, the Pittsburgh Press said that steel mill towns, with heavy CIO membership, "turned in substantial votes for Mrs. Buchanan."

The steel towns include Homestead, Rankin, Braddock and McKeesport.

ANOTHER liberal Democrat, also supported by labor—Judge Michael Musmanno of the Allegheny County Common Pleas Court—won nomination for the Pennsylvania Supreme Court over Justice Grover C. Ladner of the State Supreme Court. Ladner had the support of nearly all the State Democratic leaders.

In a surprising sweep, Musmanno won in nearly all counties. Nomination to the State court is tantamount to election.

Conn. FEPC Settles 19 Bias Cases

Nineteen cases involving alleged violation of the Fair Employment Practices Act were disposed of by the Connecticut State Commission on Civil Rights from April through June.

Commission Chairman Rabbi Morris Silverman pointed out that in 11 instances, the complaint was adjusted either by the hiring of the complainant, by a bona fide offer of employment to the complainant or by the elimination of the discriminatory practice.

Labor Puts 357 On Rent Boards —But Landlords Have More

ORGANIZED labor has 357 union representatives on the 335 active rent advisory boards throughout the country, an analysis of the Housing Expediter's records reveals.

The figure doesn't compare favorably with landlord representation, for at least one landlord member appears on every board. Labor membership is missing mainly in rural areas.

Every day labor representation on the boards grows, as local groups affiliated with the CIO and AFL realize the importance of a strong voice on the local board.

On 85 of the large boards, particularly in metropolitan areas, but occasionally in the South and rural areas, labor is represented by two or more labor men. On the Gary-Hammond board in Indiana, an important manufacturing region, there are seven CIO and AFL representatives.

While labor representation isn't as strong in the south, labor people do get nominated to its boards. In Sangamon County, Ga., and Paducah, Ky., there are two labor representatives on each board. In New Orleans, La., there are three labor representatives in the board.

Labor members on local rent advisory boards are vitally important to tenants in defense production and military areas.

The boards may recommend to city councils and the Housing Expediter continuance or the lifting of controls. Tenants and landlords may appeal to a board from a decision of an Area Rent Adviser. The board also acts on individual rent adjustments.

A governor has the authority to appoint labor representatives to boards, subject to approval by the Housing Expediter.

Seek Jobless Pay In Gov't Work

THE CIO has called for legislation to provide a "truly adequate system of unemployment insurance for federal civilian employes."

Two CIO witnesses, who appeared before the Forand subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, said that unemployment benefits "have become completely accepted for private employment and should no longer be denied to public servants."

The witnesses were Mrs. Katherine Pollak Ellickson, CIO Associate Director of Research, and Richard E. Shoemaker, legislative representative for the Government and Civic Employes Organizing Committee.

Both witnesses said that the Forand Bill (H.R. 3393), which would cover Federal employes under whatever terms the state employment security laws provide, is not adequate to meet the needs of the situation.

Mrs. Ellickson declared: "Federal employes would get some good out of coverage under the state laws, but not nearly enough.

"We urge your Committee to recommend not the Foran Bill but something worthy of the United States Government—a system of real protection regardless of the happenstance of place of work assignment."

SHOEMAKER also voiced his union's preference for a national system of unemployment insurance for Federal employes.

He urged enactment of the Forand Bill with the following improving amendments:

1. An increase in benefit paypayments lifting maximums to a range from $36.00 per week to $48.00 per week, payable up to 30 weeks.

2. The Federal government should establish uniform provisions regarding disqualification, waiting periods, etc.

3. Provisions should be made for an appeals agency to rule on questions arising out of the administration of the proposed bill.

Phone Rate Increases Delayed In 2 States

THE Bell Telephone System which recently showed a record-breaking net consolidated income of almost $372 million for the year ending May 31 was running into trouble in at least two states over rate increases.

In Pennsylvania, as the result of an appeal by the State CIO Council and the City of Pittsburgh, an $18 million rate increase granted the Bell Telephone Co. of Pennsylvania in 1949 was ordered re-examined by the State Superior Court.

In reversing a decision of the State Public Utility Commission granting the boost, the court ordered the PUC to hold new hearings, arrive at fresh conclusions and adjust the rates accordingly.

In New York City, Mayor Vincent Impellitteri labeled the company's latest effort to jack up consumer rates "far out of line and discriminatory."

He said the city will vigorously contest any new hikes and will continue to press its pending court battle to nullify increases granted by the Public Service Commission last year.

"New Yorkers are contributing more than their share to the income of the New York Telephone Co.," Impellitteri said. "Because the city's residents are deprived of the flat rate available outside the limits, our people frequently pay phone bills many times greater than those of upstate subscribers."

The PSC action last year increased public booth calls from 5 to 10c, residential rates 12% and business rates 23%.

Recently the company filed an application for rate increases which would add $57 million annual revenue. With a rate increase granted in 1950, the proposed new rates would increase revenues by $105 million.

Assemblyman Shupler (D. Brooklyn) called the company's application "outrageous."

"The . . . company has the effrontery to demand an increase in rates so that it may absorb, without cost to it, the increase in corporation taxes," Shupler said. "It's purpose is to keep its swollen profits at their present high level."

College Aids Labor In Keeping Rent Curbs

The United Labor Policy Committee of Louisiana has won a victory at Shreveport, where the city council refused to lift rent controls.

Spearheading the fight to lift controls was a landlord's group, the Shreveport-Bossier Rental Association. The ULPCL was aided in its fight for the retention of controls by Centenary College of Louisiana, Shreveport, which made a survey of rental units.

A story in the July 9 issue of The CIO News said that a ULPCL brief to city council attacked the reliability of a survey made by the college. The story should have said that the survey was made by the rental association.

Europe Worries, Too

The problem of inflation in America is one of the biggest worries of Europeans, according to Mrs. India Edwards, vice-chairman of the Democratic National Committee, who has just returned from a two-month tour of Europe.

ACLU Asks Better Federal Loyalty Plan

The American Civil Liberties Union has called for the replacement of the present federal loyalty program by a more definite plan with fair standards and procedures.

The ACLU, in a letter to President Truman, said:

"We believe it is not a service, but a disservice, to national security to require special loyalty investigations for persons holding, or applying for, non-sensitive positions." Sensitive jobs are those in agencies handling matters of national defense, foreign relations, or of secret projects.

The Civil Liberties Union said that the present program has created an "atmosphere of repression, highly dangerous to democratic government; it has envenomed and terrorized government employes and prospective employes, who are afraid to practice the good old American habits of speaking one's mind and joining organizations one believes in."

The Civil Liberties group charged that the recent changes in the standards of the loyalty program — from "reasonable grounds" to "reasonable doubt" of disloyalty—are stamped with the vagueness that marks many of the loyalty program's procedures.

The group called for the right of the accused to face their accusers and cross-examine them. It also called for immediate public hearings of all organizations on the Attorney General's subversive list.

HANDS ACROSS PACIFIC: James Kenny, president of the glass workers' union in New South Wales, Australia (left), visits Pres. Burl Phares (center), and Vice Pres. Leland Beard of the CIO Glass Workers. This picture was taken at the Glass Workers' headquarters in Columbus, Ohio. Kenny was impressed by the progress of the CIO union.

CIO Spokesman Says:

'World Needs Butter As Well As Guns'

THE CIO endorsed the government's Mutual Security Program for 1952 last week in testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

It urged, however, that greater emphasis be placed on "non-military aspects" of the program.

"In many parts of the world, a new irrigation pump is equal to a battalion of armed and equipped soldiers," John Brophy, CIO official, told Congress.

While it is urgent to build up military strength for the common defense, we must not forget that, in the last analysis, "peace, democratic free institutions, and human welfare can be assured only within the framework of an expanding world economy," Brophy said.

BROPHY IS serving as consultant of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to the United Nations.

He emphasized the interdependence of military, economic and political measures necessary to insure the security of the free world.

"Political and military security standing alone are at best precarious because they are always subject to an attack upon their flank—where the ill-housed, ill-clothed and the ill-fed are fair game for those who would exploit their needs," Brophy declared.

"Economic security standing alone fails to take into consideration these human needs and aspirations — individual freedom, the right to free expression, to worship as ones pleases and other fundamental rights of men—and could lead only to eventual enslavement."

Pointing out that "American foreign policy should be dedicated to positive and constructive goals," Brophy said:

"However, it must be emphasized that if the Mutual Security Program — or any international aid and assistance—is to be effective in preventing the world-wide scourge of Communist imperialism, it is clear that attention must be paid to the ills upon which communism thrives.

"Military aid must not be used to bolster reactionary regimes in power—economic aid must reach the rank and file of workers and farmers.

"WE WOULD indeed be pouring American money down a bottomless pit unless we see to it that our aid abroad does improve the living standard of these people.

"Simply granting military aid to the governments in power in these areas will not be enough to stop the sweep of communism there," Brophy told Congressmen.

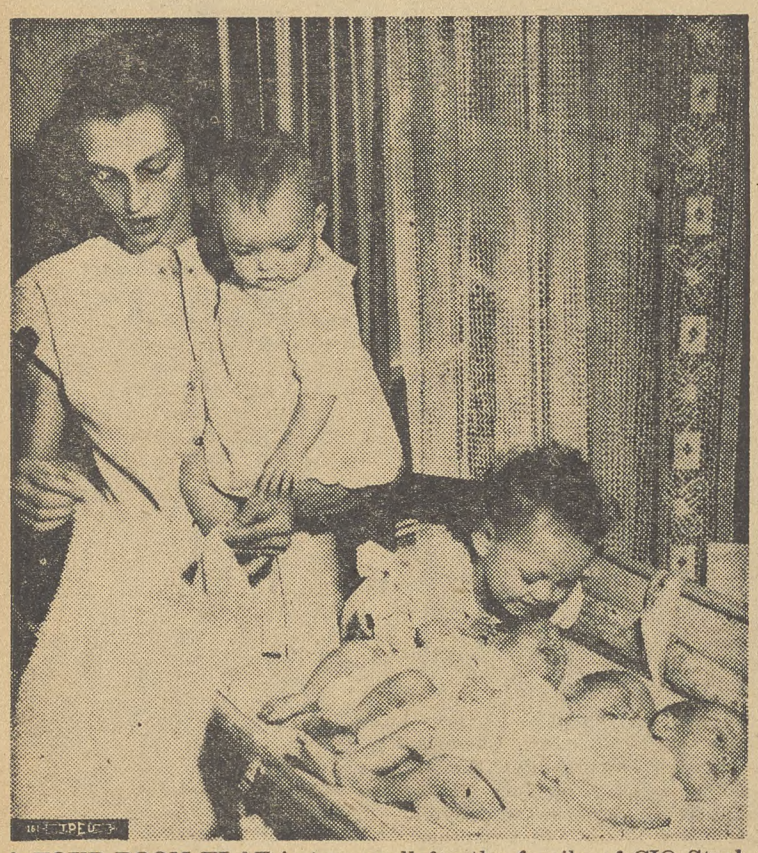
"The working people must actually have a way of life they feel is worth defending against Communist aggression."

Brophy said that in Europe—particularly in Italy, France and Western Germany — there is an urgent need for closing the gap between prices and wages. He said that in other parts of the world, particularly in the colonial and former colonial areas, "Communist imperialism has found fertile fields for its nefarious activities because poverty in fact does exist there to an amazing degree."

Factory Jobs Down In Three States

Employment in manufacturing concerns showed a decline in May for the second consecutive month in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Figures released by the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics disclosed the number of factory jobs in the three States dropped 1.6% between mid-April and mid-May.



A FOUR-ROOM FLAT is too small for the family of CIO Steelworker Fred Coulter of Portland, Ore., since the arrival of triplets increased the size of the family to seven. Mrs. Coulter says: "We're trying to find another place, but they're all so expensive."

New ECA Program Aims To Lift Workers' Standards

A BIG new program to strengthen democratic Europe and to pave the way for substantial rises in European workers' living standards, is ready for action by the government's Economic Cooperation Administration.

ECA officials last week confirmed an exclusive story in the New York Times by veteran labor reporter Louis Stark that a new "production assistance program" will be announced soon.

Backed up by over a quarter of a billion dollars, the ECA program is described by ECA officials as a means of freeing European industry from the high-price, high-profit stranglehold of monopoly cartels.

ECA officials believe that they can help large numbers of European manufacturing firms to increase output, cut per - unit profits, cut high prices, and provide major benefits for workers and consumers.

The Times story said that ECA would work closely with European labor unions, as well as with governments and employers, in an effort to make the plan work smoothly.

It was understood that one of the reasons for the program was the criticism by American union missions and some government officials that Marshall Plan aid has not satisfactorily "trickled down" to the average worker and farmer in many of the countries of Europe.

Last July a three-man ECA team of CIO and AFL union representatives reported, after a trip to France, that workers there were on low wage rates, while factory owners were getting the "cream" of the Marshall Plan aid in the form of greater profits."

With other union visitors reporting much the same story, and warning that the workers' justified complaints were making a tailor-made situation for the Communists, ECA's labor division began drafting programs to improve living standards.

The plan, it is reported, received much support in ECA's higher echelons.

Under the program—according to the Times—government, industry and labor in the various Marshall Plan countries will be encouraged to take the initiative to improve productive efficiency and to insure fair distribution of the benefits.

BOARDS representing labor, management, consumers, farmers and the government will be set up to handle the problem in each country launching the "crusade" for higher production and better living standards.

The boards will tackle a number of problems now believed to be restricting production and employment. These include, according to ECA experts:

1. Inertia, based on failure to beat the problem in the past.

2. Lack of incentives, for both workers and plant owners.

3. Tight restrictions on production and factory techniques by cartels, trade associations and employers wedded to old-fashioned methods.

4. Fears by workers and unions of speed-up, unemployment and a freeze-out on higher wages.

5. Scarcity of capital, raw materials and machinery.

THE TIMES story pointed out that special efforts will be made by ECA—through its labor division—to work closely with the unions in developing the program, so that workers will be certain to benefit from the added efficiency of European industry.

An ECA labor division spokesman in Washington confirmed that this will be done.

"The object of this whole campaign is to give the common people of Europe a break—not just the employers," he said.

We know that that's democracy's best way of building strength to resist communism."

House Unit Shelves Remaining Seaway Bill

THE BIG BUSINESS and special interest lobbyists in Washington — and their friends in the 82nd Congress—handed the public still another defeat last week.

By a 15 to 12 vote, the House Public Works Committee shelved the single remaining St. Lawrence Seaway bill. The vote probably killed any chance of Congressional action upon the defense important project in this session of Congress. Supporters promised to continue the fight, however.

It was the ninth seaway measure voted down in the committee. By keeping the proposal from reaching the floor of Congress, the 15 representatives voting against it managed to prevent the full House from even considering a measure which a majority of its members is believed to approve.

Rep. Dondero (R. Mich), one of the chief sponsors of the seaway, last week described as "nothing short of remarkable" the denial by Carroll Huntress that selfish interests were blocking development of America's greatest remaining natural resource.

THE MICHIGAN legislator named Huntress as "chairman of the railroad lobby which is fighting the St. Lawrence Seaway."

"At least eight of those who testified against the seaway in our committee admitted to being hired by the railroad lobby," Dondero said. "The others came from coal, port and utility interests."

Dr. N. R. Danielian, executive secretary of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association, also attributed the defeat of the seaway bills in committee to the activities of "railroad, coal and utility lobbies."

Meanwhile, reports circulated that Canada — fed up with Congressional stalling on the measure in this country—may take steps to build the seaway on the Dominion side of the river and operate it on a unilateral basis.

Parliamentary approval of the scheme seems assured on the ground that the enlarged navigational facilities between the ocean lanes and the Great Lakes is essential for national defense and economic development of the Dominion.

The need for power, especially in Ontario and upper New York State, also is urgent.

If Canada does decide to go it alone, the people of the United States will again have been robbed of their share in the Nation's natural wealth as the direct result of the subservience of a handful of key Congressmen to special interest lobbies.

"Now how in the heck did that one get up there?

Hudson Motor 'Lockout' Hit By Auto Union

THE CIO Auto Workers charged last week that the Hudson Motor Car Co. has locked out more than 2000 UAW members.

UAW Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey declared that since June 11, company policies (1) had effectively brought about a lockout; (2) had sent workers home after two or three hours work for the purpose of avoiding payment of unemployment compensation; and (3) had violated its contract with the union by cutting down the agreed number of workers on more than 40 jobs.

A resolution passed at a mass meeting of Hudson workers July 24, advised employes to seek work elsewhere and to apply for unemployment compensation while looking for work.

Mazey declared that the company "is obviously unwilling to operate its plants because of its inability to sell its cars."

In another union action, Ken Bannon, director of the UAW Ford Dept., accused the Ford Motor Co. of failure to cooperate with the union in planning to avoid unemployment resulting from defense conversion.

In a letter to John S. Bugas, Ford vice-president, Bannon said the UAW has been asking the company for a year "to make arrangements to provide jobs for those people who would be displaced as a result of government restrictions on materials."

"Up until the present time, the Ford company has not seen fit to comply with the many proposals we have made for providing this employment," Bannon declared.

U. S. Gives GM Big Tax Rebate

General Motors Corp., which is hardly starving, got the week's biggest plum in the tax bonanza to big business. Uncle Sam granted GM the right to write off in a hurry, for tax purposes, 75% of $51 million worth of new facilities.

Ford Motor Co. got an okay to write off 75% of $22 million worth of new operations, and the Missouri Pacific Railroad got an okay for 65% of $24 million plus it is spending for new locomotives.

These tax favors, now pushing the $8 billion mark, are all granted in the name of defense. Labor has denounced the practice as a racket, and even the Wall Street Journal has called it a "tax bonanza."

By being able to write off (amortize) these plants or equipment costs in five years instead of the usual 20 years or more, the corporations save substantially on taxes, at the ordinary citizen's expense.

HST Urges Statehood For Hawaii, Alaska

Bills granting statehood to Hawaii and Alaska, which have been bottled up in Congress for some time, should be passed soon, President Truman last week told Congress.

His message was delivered by Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), chairman of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee,

Profits Still Zooming, Despite Higher Taxes

THE SOCONY-VACUUM OIL CO. has increased its profits almost 70% in the first half of 1951 as compared with 1950, despite sharply higher taxes.

Here are some more profit figures, showing the big increases over 1950:

	1950	1951
Socony-Vacuum (6 mos.)	$45,000,000	$76,000,000
Shell Oil (6 mos.)	39,478,935	46,495,231
Robert Garr Co. (6 mos.)	2,239,164	4.184,915
Crucible Steel (second quarter)	1,304,625	2,740,400
Corn Products (6 mos.)	6,607,606	7,450,394
Textron (6 mos.)	(820,000) deficit	3,924,000
Commercial Solvents (6 mos.)	1,318,910	3,107,751
Blaw-Knox (6 mos.)	1,301,530	1,510,406
Bohn Aluminum (6 mos.)	455,730	985,975
ACF-Brill Motors (6 mos.)	(107,324) deficit	1,060,000
US Lines (6 mos.)	958,803	2,540,000
Parke, Davis (6 mos.)	9,002,128	9,943,981
Southern Railway (6 mos.)	7,862,915	8,705,598

Transit Radio Fought In St. Louis

The revolt against forced listening on street cars and buses has spread to St. Louis.

A committee has been named by the Lawyers' Association to protest transit radio as an invasion "of the basic civil rights of passengers by compelling unwilling persons to listen to commercial announcements."

The St. Louis group plans to take "further steps" and institute "further action" if necessary. The broadcasts originate in the radio station owned by Elzey Roberts, the publisher who sold the Star-Times to the Post-Dispatch June 15, throwing 600 employes out of work.

Utility Union Strikes At Ohio Power

THE STRIKE called by the CIO Utility Workers against three plants of the Ohio Power Co. continued last week despite efforts of the company to resume operations at its Zanesville works.

The company has been flying scabs and materials in by helicopter.

The walkout by 1000 UWUA members at Zanesville, Brillant, O., and Wheeling, W. Va., took place July 23 when company negotiators turned down union proposals for an 11c an hour wage increase.

UWUA officials declared late last week that they would not resume contract talks as long as Federal conciliator C. Russel Turner is assigned to the dispute.

"Our committee has lost faith in Turner," a union spokesman declared. "We refuse to attend any meeting called by him."

He added however, that UWUA negotiators "would be willing to meet with the Conciliation Service at any time if any other commissioner is assigned to the dispute."

Ford, UAW Both Protest NLRB Ruling

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board probably will decide shortly whether some 4700 union shop agreements—mostly CIO—are legal.

The decision will come in a case involving the CIO Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Company's Forge Div. at Canton, Ohio.

The board decided early this month that the union shop agreement between the two parties was illegal because top officers of national CIO had not filed non-Communist affidavits in the 1947-49 period when the union shop election was held.

If that ruling were allowed to stand, approximately 4700 other contracts would be affected. Both the UAW and Ford appealed the decision and asked the board to keep the contract intact. A hearing was held July 23.

The union shop election was held at the Canton plant in October, 1949, with NLRB sanction. The board at that time held that officers of parent federations affiliated unions were not required to sign the non-red statements.

LATER the Supreme Court said the board was wrong. It held that national CIO and AFL officers had to file non-Communist affidavits before any of their affiliate unions could use the services of the board.

CIO assistant general counsel David Feller and UAW attorney Harold Cranefield likened the case to a couple being married without a blood test. Two years and a child later, the couple were told that the license should not have been issued.

Feller expressed the opinion that no court would void the marriage.

"The mistake of the board should not be visited on the parties," said Ford company attorney Malcolm L. Denise, who urged the board to reverse itself and let the contract remain in effect.

THE FORD case came up when the AFL Blacksmiths asked for a representation election at Canton. The board authorized the election on the grounds that the present UAW-Ford contract was no bar to an election because it contained an illegal union-shop clause.

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther declared that if the decision of the NLRB in the Canton case is allowed to stand "it will be a threat to stable labor relations throughout American industry.

"It is a capricious, irresponsible, unlawful decision, based on a legal quibble, without any relation to equity, fact, law, the maintenance of sound labor relations and the promotion of the defense mobilization program," he said.

"This decision, if allowed to stand, would disrupt thousands of established bargaining relationships and encourage industrial strife."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

During Mr. Haywood's absence this column is being prepared by members of his staff.

DAVE WILSON, representative, Shoe Workers, reports that in a representation election held at the Brown Shoe Co., Festus, Mo., the Shoe Workers were victorious by a vote of 209 to 3 no union.

Allan Haywood

A. F. Hartung, vice-president, Woodworkers, reports that the Woodworkers won two representation and two union shop elections as follows: In a representation election held at the Foster-Lothman Mills, Oshkosh, Wis., the vote was, eligible 150, IWA-CIO 73, no union 68; in a representation election held at the Fruit Growers Supply Co., Susanville, Calif., the vote was, eligible 618, votes cast 444, IWA-CIO 226, AFL 190, no union 17, challenged 8, void 3. In a union shop election held at the Publisher's Paper Co., Wheeler, Ore., the vote was unanimous in favor of the union shop; election at the Kremmling Timber Co., Kremmling, Colo., the vote was 11 for, 1 against and 1 challenged.

J. E. Frost, president, LIU-CIO 78, reports that an important union shop election was won in the Salinas and Watsonville, Calif., area by a vote of 2048 yes, and 344 no. CIO Field Rep. James Spangler in conjunction with local reps. Frank Menezes, Lum Moorhead, Russell Parker, John Dismond and Al Provence did a fine job in this campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that the Steelworkers won the following union shop elections: Hellemie Brothers, Sparrows Point, Md., eligible 45, yes 36, no 3; Mesoligitos Co., Sparrows Point, Md., eligible 25, yes 19, no 6.

CIO Reg. Dir. Charles Cowl reports that the Stone Products Co., Tampa, Fla. The score was 49 for the Stone Workers, 4 no union and 3 challenged. Intl. Rep. Marvin Blaylock performed outstanding work in this campaign.

John C. Lawson, secretary-treasurer, Stone and Allied Workers reports that in a representation election held at the Everist Stone Co., Dell Rapids, S. D., the workers favored the USAPWA-CIO by a vote of 23 to 19 no union. Intl. Reps. Ralph F. Broadwell and Mearle Smart handled this situation.

Natl. Rep. Thomas V. Flynn, United Railroad Workers, reports that the URRWA-CIO won a representation election among the Coal Trimmers, employes of the Virginian Railway Co., Norfolk, Va., by the following vote: eligible 28, URRWA-CIO 21, ILWU 1, void 1.

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports the UAW-CIO won a representation election at the Dixon Mfg. Co., Coffeyville, Kan., by a vote of 598 to 459 no union. Intl. Rep. John (Pete) Rinkenbaugh was in charge of the organizational work.

CIO Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports that the United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers LIU 78 won three representation elections held in Phoenix as follows: Sorenson Produce Co., CIO 35, no union 3; Paul A. Ruth Co., CIO 38, no union 3; Birch Brothers, CIO 20, no union 0. CIO Field Rep. Howard McNamara and Staff Rep. Ann Tinnon handled these elections.

Al Harnett, secretary-treasurer, IUE-CIO, reports the following representation election victories: Durable Brass Co., Woodside, L. I., N. Y., IUE 15, UE 8, challenged 2; Diamond Tool Research, New York, N. Y., IUE 12, no union 0. Par Metal, Long Island, N. Y., IUE 54, no union 4; Exide Battery, Chicago, Ill., IUE 224, UE 113; Ludlow Typograph Co., Chicago, Ill., IUE 283, UE 208, no union 3; Burnell Electronics Co., Yonkers, N. Y., IUE 71, no union 3, void 1. In a union shop election at the Formica Insulation Co., Cincinnati, O., the vote was 1,146 for, 57 against, 6 challenged and 2 void.

Robert Edwards, director of organization, Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers, reports that between March 1951 and July 20, 1951, the following elections have been won: Briggs Maroney, Everett, Mass., Plastelight, Inc., Stamford, Conn., B. F. Stewart, Newark, N. Y., Wisconsin Southern Gas (office workers), A. B. Wrisley Co. (soap) Chicago, Ill., Dearborn Chemical, Chicago, Ill., Swift & Co., Portgeville, Mo., Le Flore Gas Co., Poteau, Okla., Radford Diamond Drilling, Flat River, Mo., Air Reduction Sales, Decatur, Ill., Roane-Anderson Co., Oak Ridge, Tenn., Hanna Paint Co., Birmingham, Ala., Blue Ridge Stone Corp., Blue Ridge, Va., Sterling Drug, Windsor, Ont., Canada, Parke Davis Office, Windsor, Ont., Canada, Canadian Canners Ltd. (5 plants under contract), Dow Chemical, Sarnia, Ont., Canada. Niagara Searchlight, Niagara Falls, N. Y., Robbins Pharma, New York, N. Y., Permolite Inc., Hamilton, O., Kroger Co., Dayton, O., Great Lakes Carbon, St. Louis, Mo., a Southern Cotton Oil, Little Rock, Ark. Citizens, Gas Co., Hannibal, Mo., Robert Scholze Tannery, Chattanooga, Tenn., Roanoke Ice & Cold Storage, Roanoke, Va., K. W. Fertz, Lake Charles, La., Wales Fertilizer, Pulaski, Tenn., Linde Air, Indianapolis, Ind.

Give A Buck

To PAC

Even Taft Can't Swallow This Line:

Chamber Reverses Itself, Opposes Tax Increase

"GOBBLYGOOK" may be a failing of some government administrators, but with big business the sin is plain, downright doubletalk.

This became clear last week when the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the Council of State Chambers of Commerce opposed any increase in the excess profits tax on corporations.

In their campaign to kill price controls, the big business groups had called for the use of "indirect" controls—meaning credit restrictions and higher taxes — rather than direct price-rent-wage controls as the best way of curbing inflation.

When a U. S. Chamber spokesman appeared last week before the Senate Finance Committee, the Chamber reversed itself and followed the pattern set by the National Association of Manufacturers in earlier testimony.

Ellsworth C. Alvord, chairman of the Chamber's Federal Finance Committee, asked Congress to balance the budget without any tax increase at all. He said that Congress should simply cut Federal spending by $7 billion, thereby eliminating the need for a tax increase!

This Alice-in-Wonderland disregard for economic facts was too much for even the committee's ranking Republican members to leave unchallenged. Two leading GOP Senators — Millikin (Colo.) and Taft (Ohio) — both said that the domestic, military and foreign budgets can't be cut enough to balance the budget.

Millikin scotched hopes that Congress could chop the amount suggested by the Chamber off the President's budget estimates.

"It just isn't going to happen," he said. "There will be a tax bill."

Taft said that he doubted whether more than $500 million could be cut from the foreign aid program. He pointed out that the administration had already reduced the original amount requested to $2 billion.

The big business groups united in opposing any increase in the excess profits tax on corporations, despite the fact that profits, after taxes, are now nearly double the previous record set in World War II. They proposed as an alternative, that a federal sales tax be enacted.

(Leading tax experts have pointed out that a sales tax would place the major portion of the increased tax burden necessary to meet defense expenditures on the low and middle income groups.)

In contrast, the American Association of Independent Industries, composed of several hundred small manufacturers and business men, has gone on record against a sales tax "in any form."

Ed Stevens, AAII president, warned: "Big business and financial groups trying to put over a vicious sales tax will reap the whirlwind of contempt from the American public if such a tax is foisted upon the people."

He added that the vast majority of American business men are "neither short-sighted nor greedy," but "some of their spokesmen are men who never learn."

"These alleged business leaders are the best friends Communism has in our country," he charged. "But they are so feather-brained, they don't realize it."

17-Month Record Broken; Price Index Drops Trifle

For the first time since 1949, the Consumer Price Index of the Dept. of Labor has dropped.

The index, which provides a rough guide to the cost of living, didn't drop enough to make much difference to consumers. It slid from 185.4 to 185.2 on June 15, the latest available date. In June, 1950, it stood at 170.2.

Period	Index	Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: Jan. 15	166.9
1943 monthly average	123.6	Fab. 15	167.9
1944 monthly average	125.5	Mar. 15	168.4
1945 monthly average	128.4	Apr. 15	168.5
1946 monthly average	139.3	May 15	169.3
1947 monthly average	159.2	June 15	170.2
1948 monthly average	171.2	July 15	172.0
1949 monthly average	169.1	Aug. 15	173.4
1950 monthly average	171.9	Sept. 15	174.6
1951 average to date	184.1	Oct. 15	175.6
		Nov. 15	176.4
		Dec. 15	178.8
		1951: Jan. 15	181.5
		Feb. 15	183.8
		Mar. 15	184.5
		Apr. 15	184.6
		May 15	185.4
		June 15	185.2

Louisiana Defies Court, Asks Tideland Bids

LOUISIANA'S flagrant disregard of the Supreme Court's decision against the big oil interests in the tidelands oil dispute came to light last week.

Secy. of Interior Oscar L. Chapman warned Louisiana that it had no authority to lease certain tracts of off-shore oil land belonging to the federal government.

The State has called for bids to lease the submerged land off its coast; some sections have already been leased.

A bill, endorsed by the House Judiciary Committee, is now pending in Congress to turn the oil-rich strips of underwater coastal land back to the states. A series of Supreme Court decisions dating from 1947 until just a few months ago have held that the tidelands belong to all of the American people.

To counteract the action by the House group, a group of Senators have proposed that the federal government use tidelands oil royalties—estimated to be worth more than $40½ billion—to raise educational standards in all 48 states.

Unwilling even to wait for action on the House measure before letting the vested oil interests plunder the nation's heritage, Louisiana apparently has ignored the Supreme Court's rulings.

In a letter to C. C. Collins, chairman of the Louisiana Mineral Board, last week Chapman said that some lands in off-shore areas belong to the U. S. rather than Louisiana, and that the State should withdraw the lands from public bidding.

15,000 Strike West Coast Bell System

MORE than 15,000 members of the CIO Communications Workers were on strike last week in Nevada, Oregon, Washington and California against the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co., a Bell System affiliate.

The strike began July 20 when 10,000 CWA traffic workers in northern California and Nevada walked out as contract negotiations broke down. Three days later they were joined by 5000 Oregon workers.

The strike was called after weeks of futile negotiations and was preceded by a 20-hour session in San Francisco.

Union demands include: a 10% wage increase, upgrading of certain cities and towns under area wage differentials, seniority, grievance procedure and arbitration.

The company has demanded a no-strike clause and flexible starting rates which the union has termed "insulting" to workers with extensive service.

Shipyard Union Strike At Mobile

The CIO Shipbuilding Workers shut down the Alabama Dry Dock & Shipbuilding Co. at Mobile, Ala., last week. More than 2000 MSWUA members walked out when the contract with the company expired.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Defense Production Act S. 1717	Extends Defense Production Act.	Senate and House passed crippling bills. Final action due by July 31.	Write to Senators and Representatives insisting that effective price and rent controls be established.
Taxes H.R. 4473	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House passed bill providing $7,206,000,000 increase. Senate Finance Com. now holding hearings.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30. Has since shelved all pending bills.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com. due to act soon.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.
Labor Dept.-FSA Appropriations. H.R. 3709	Appropriates funds for operations of the Labor Dept. and Fed. Security Agency.	In conference.	Ask Senators and Congressmen to restore funds cut out.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Mexico Awaits Law To Halt 'Wetbacks'

THE government of Mexico last week made it clear that it would not help the Southern farm bloc in the U. S. Congress in fostering substandard working conditions for Mexican farm hands employed in this country.

Although negotiators reportedly had reached agreement on the basic principles of a new migratory labor treaty, Mexican officials said that the code being completed would be effective for only "a limited period."

They said that it would merely provide time for the U. S. Congress to act on President Truman's recommendations for legislation to penalize employers of "wetbacks," as Mexicans who illegally enter this country by swimming the Rio Grande are called.

Mexican negotiators at first insisted on writing into the new treaty a provision for "penal measures against employers systematically hiring illegal workers." They agreed to a temporary treaty without this provision after U. S. representatives explained that the Ellender-Poage labor recruiting law recently enacted does not permit them to make such an agreement.

THE CIO, AFL and railway brotherhoods all joined in opposing the law, chiefly because it failed to provide penalties against farmers who encourage illegal entry of Mexican agricultural workers as a source of cheap labor.

Such farm hands must accept any wage the farmers give them, and usually live in squalid labor camps described as "unfit for cattle" by health officials.

President Truman signed the new law "reluctantly" and immediately called upon Congress to enact legislation to penalize employers of "wetbacks."

He said that he would not have approved the measure if Congressional leaders has not assured him that such a law would be forthcoming.

The Mexican government, however, was taking steps to end even temporary exploitation of its nationals. President Aleman ordered a strong reinforcement of border police.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 6, 1951 82 No. 32

FLOOD DAMAGE: A giant crane and hammer smash down walls of the three-story brick building of the CIO Packinghouse Workers in the Armourdale district of Kansas City, Kansas. It was gutted by the flood and was condemned by city inspectors as a menace to public safety. The union bought it not long ago for $13,000. (See story and other pictures on Pages 6-7.)

Photo courtesy of Kansas City Star

Special Panel Airs Dispute At Smelter

A SPECIAL three-man national emergency panel named by the Wage Stabilization Board opened hearings last week on a dispute between the CIO Steelworkers and the American Smelting & Refining Co., Garfield, Utah.

The board acted in response to a request from President Truman asking intervention on the grounds that a month-old strike was "of a character which substantially threatens the progress of national defense."

It marked the first time the President had sent a labor dispute to the board which he set up in November, 1950, under the Defense Production Act.

In a brief setting forth the union's position, Otis Brubaker, research director of the Steelworkers, declared that the upward surge in the cost of living has justified the demands of American Smelter workers for a 25c an hour general wage increase.

"We believe it is elementary equity," he said, "that wages should be permitted to rise at least as fast as the cost of living.

"Wage earners are not prepared to accept an erosion of their living standards through a stabilization policy which fails to adjust wages at least to the cost of living changes during such a period."

BRUBAKER pointed out that the WSB has recognized this fact and has already accepted the basic principle that "wage increases must at least be permitted to match the cost of living changes."

He cited a whole series of cases where the board has approved a general increase on a cost of living basis, even though the 10% formula was exceeded.

"Without reference to any other factor except the cost of living, an average increase of 11c an hour in cash wages is warranted at this plant merely to retain the purchasing power of employes' wages at the levels reached by the last general increase," he stated.

HE demonstrated that American Smelter's straight time earned rates are 8½c below the BLS figures for copper, lead and zinc smelting and refining; 10c below nonferrous metal smelting and refining; 13.9c below aluminum refining and 17.2c below lead and zinc mining. The company's wage level "clearly appears to be a straggler, and a most serious one," he added.

He said the company would have to grant non-contributory pensions to all employes, take over the full cost of the present insurance program, and grant a further increase "to even restore the relationship of wage movements and economic benefits as existed in the post war period in related industries prior to the 1949 pension and insurance pattern."

"This would be exclusive of any amounts necessary to restore cost of living losses or to close the widened earnings gap as compared to other closely related industries," he declared.

Set Example, Too

Blast Fails To Halt PAC Drive Of Chattanooga Laundry Union

THERE IS a small local of low-paid CIO members in Chattanooga, Tenn., toward which those who belong to larger unions in better-paying industries must bow with respect.

It's the Laundry, Cleaning & Dyeing Local 569 of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. The local represents the employes of five small laundries, with 46 members in the largest and 22 in the smallest.

The earnings of laundry workers—including the organized—are close to the low end of the wage scale even under the best of conditions. Chattanooga is no exception.

Yet the PAC drive of this small local with its poorly-paid members went over nearly 100%.

Rally Opens Drive

The drive opened with a rally at which the members were told not to be content with merely collecting $1 each from the membership, but to go out among their friends and neighbors and preach the doctrine of political action.

Sadie Henderson, union chairlady in the Modern Way Laundry, took this seriously. First she collected $1 from each member in the plant. Then she lined up key workers in each department and with their aid went to work on friends and neighbors.

Fully aware of their financial status, she didn't ask for $1 but for smaller contributions—nickels, dimes and quarters. She got them, too.

At the White Swan Laundry, Annie Head and Annie Stover drummed political action into their fellow workers until every last one of them contributed $1. At the Chattanooga Steam Laundry, Eula Jemison and Bertha McDougal got $1 from 86% of their members.

Radia Mathews, Roberta Bryant and Estelle Driver at the Star Laundry, and Vallie Brewer and Rosie Ford at the Plymouth Laundry, did nearly as well.

These low-paid workers, with few exceptions, could not give the $1 at once. The money came in nickels, dimes and quarters, and every member kept careful count. Business Agent Ursula Coppola had promised prizes to the laundry raising the most $1 contributions and to any laundry with a 100% record.

The competition was so keen that the members in each laundry kept the amounts collected a carefully guarded secret lest rivals learn what was raised and redouble their own efforts to forge ahead.

Secret Kept

Not until half an hour before the membership meeting at which the prizes were to be presented were the amounts collected and the names of the contributors made known.

The Modern Way Laundry—the one with the 22 members reported the greatest amount: $71. Miss Henderson got a special prize for her efforts. The other awards, presented by Miss J. P. Maloney, Textile Workers representative, went to Miss Head, Miss Stover and Mary Billups.

There's more to the story than the foregoing.

PAC meetings were held every week during the drive for discussion, information, etc. At every meeting Miss Stover appeared tightly clutching a small brown paper bag containing the money she had collected. She took a lot of ribbing for the way she guarded the collections, but laughed it off.

PAC Dollars Saved

A week before the prize award meeting, while spending her vacation ill in bed, her home was destroyed by a gas explosion.

Miss Stover escaped with her life, her nightgown —and her bag of PAC dollars. Everything else she owned—clothing, furniture, food—was destroyed.

Still homeless, she showed up at the meeting in clothes borrowed from a relative.

"I couldn't let my fellow-workers down," she said. "They helped me make my laundry 100% and it was my duty to make my report."

Then the members took up a collection for her. She certainly had it coming, they agreed

U. S. Rubber, URW Agree On Union Shop

THE CIO Rubber Workers last week won a complete union shop from the U. S. Rubber Corp., world's largest producer of rubber products.

The union shop covers 33,000 workers in 19 plants.

This is the second Big Four rubber company to sign a complete union shop pact with URW. Goodyear agreed to a similar contract clause in March. Both Goodyear and Firestone signed modified union shop agreements last fall.

The new agreement is part of a contract signed in New York City following a couple months of negotiations.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the URW lead the union representatives during the final week of discussions. Herbert Dawson, international representative assigned to the U. S. Rubber chain, was in charge of negotiations during the entire period.

The contract also gives the union an across-the-board increase of 12c an hour, with an additional 3c an hour for the night shift.

Buckmaster called the wage increase a "catch-up." He explained that the hike allows U. S. Rubber workers to keep up with the increased cost of living.

One of the contract features is a provision protecting the union from damage suits as long as it attempts to prevent or terminates illegal work stoppages.

The new pact also provides triple time for work on six holidays, and the reopening of wages on 30 days' notice during the life of the contract, which extends until March 31, 1953.

Shipbuilders Strike Two Gulf Coast Yards In Major Battle Against Low Wage Scales

A SHOWDOWN battle between major Gulf shipyard operators and 5000 CIO Shipbuilding Union strikers was in full swing as this edition of the CIO News went to press.

The Alabama Dry Dock & Shipbuilding Co., Mobile, Ala., and the Todd-Johnson shipyard at New Orleans were completely shut down.

AFL Machinists, loaded in seven big trucks, failed in an attempt to crash CIO picket lines established against a "hot" Todd-Johnson ship. No work is being done on the vessel.

"We have always respected AFL picket lines," IUMSWA Secy.-Treas. Ross D. Blood said, "and we demand that the AFL respect our picket lines and not permit the ship to be transferred from our jurisdiction to another.

"The Todd-Johnson interests sent the freighter from its drydocks to another wharf as a pretext to get the ship out of the jurisdiction of the IUMSWA Local 29 strikers."

The Mobile workers, 3000 strong, downed tools at 12:01 a.m. on July 23. Their move followed diehard refusal of management to boost pay to meet skyrocketing living costs and arrogant refusal to revise 18 other articles in the old Local 18 contract.

The New Orleans ship men struck 24 hours later

Pickets surround both yards on 'round-the-clock vigils. Strike machinery functions smoothly and no strike breaking interference has been reported at Mobile.

Efforts by Federal Conciliator John L. Kenney to break the deadlock in Mobile 72 hours after the strike call collapsed. The firm refused to budge from its below-pattern wage and working condition anchorage.

John J. Grogan, IUMSWA president, for eight days shuttled back and forth between Mobile and New Orleans in an effort to head off the mounting crises in pre-strike parleys.

"THE shipbuilders in Mobile voted unanimously to terminate their contract after 60 days of fruitless negotiations," he said.

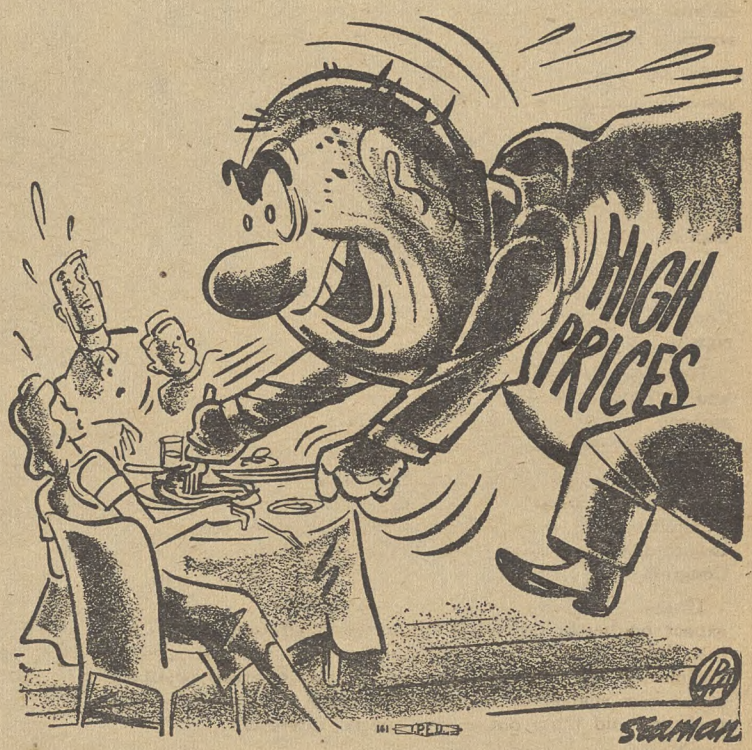
"We retaliated with our solid strike broadside in New Orleans after Todd-Johnson issued its chiseling ultimatum that our sub-standard scales remain nailed to the present miserable low-wage floor.

"Three weeks ago our union scored against the Merrill-Stevens shipyard at Jacksonville, Fla., in a five-day walkout and won a 30c hourly pay raise.

"That strike lifted Merrill-Stevens wages from the lowest rung in the South's shipyard pay scale to the highest. Not only did we pierce the low-wage Gulf barricade, but we immeasurably improved working conditions."

Wins Guild Award

Charles E. Mahon, of Scituate, Mass., a student at Richmond (Va.) Professional Institute, has been awarded the annual scholarship given "to further journalistic excellence" by the CIO Richmond Newspaper Guild. The scholarship honors the memory of Deverton Carpenter and Wyatt Stanley Kennon, Richmond reporters who were killed during World War II.



"Congress Sent Me!"

Inflation? You Ain't Seen Nothin' Yet!

By MILTON PLUMB

MORE INFLATION—meaning higher prices for the things you will buy—is here in earnest.

Ceiling prices on pork last week went up from 3c to 9c a pound. Prices on numerous manufactured items also rolled upward.

But these increases were only the beginning. A new "inflationary" Defense Production Act became law on July 31.

President Truman "reluctantly" approved a compromise controls bill, but sharply criticized it as "weak" and "inadequate." As he signed it, he issued a special statement notifying Congress that he would not abandon his fight for stronger price controls.

The President said that "the inflation control provisions of the act are gravely deficient," and that he would have vetoed the measure except for the fact that it continues rent controls, government authority over production and materials, and aid to business for national defense.

The House had approved the compromise measure, passed the previous week by the Senate, only one day before the temporary extension of the old law expired. That left the President with little time to weigh the measure.

"We will not be able to hold down rising prices under this act, and I'm going to ask the Congress to amend it to give us adequate controls," the President said.

HE MADE IT clear that because the new law allows prices and the cost of living to go up, it will be necessary to allow compensating wage increases.

"We cannot ask the working people of this country to reduce their standard of living just to pay for the higher profits this act provides for business," the President said.

UNHAPPY: President Truman takes a dim view of the new Defense Production Act, which he has just signed. He lashed out at the measure as "gravely deficient" legislation which will do little to stem the on-rush of inflation.

The United Labor Policy Committee had told him it would go along if he found it necessary to accept the legislation. The ULPC, however, termed the act a "callous betrayal" of consumers and a "disgraceful surrender to those who stand to profit from inflation."

Scarcely an hour before the President signed the new law, Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle made a last-ditch fight to hold prices down even if only temporarily. DiSalle reinstated price ceiling regulations on thousands of manufactured items.

Office of Price Stabilization officials explained that if DiSalle had not reinstated the ceilings, they would have had to be rewritten to allow for cost increases as specified under the new law.

However, OPS braced itself for a deluge of requests for higher ceiling prices. It predicted that the effects of the new law would be immediately felt in higher prices on food and automobiles.

The new law requires OPS to permit prices to reflect all "reasonable" increases in all types of costs through July 26. These costs must be added to the base price, which is the highest price of the item between January and June, 1950. This provision, sponsored by Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.), makes mandatory a new round of price increases.

Despite the last-minute OPS effort to hold down prices, there were indications that many manufacturers would simply refrain from selling their products at present ceilings. Meanwhile, they would try to rush through OPS applications to raise their prices in accordance with the Capehart formula.

Less than 24 hours after the new law had gone into effect, the Chrysler Corp. applied for a 9½% price increase on its cars. Other automobile manufacturers were reported ready to follow suit.

OPS officials had little hope of blocking Chrysler's request. They also said that because of loopholes in the law, ceilings on everyday food items will have to be hiked 5% to 10% within the next month.

THE NEW law may even wipe out part of the recent 10% rollback in beef prices. If packers and wholesalers can show that their cost increases since Korea have been big enough to pierce the present dollars-and-cents ceilings, the OPS will be required to allow them to rise.

Beef is already at more than 135% of parity, despite the fact that the U. S. beef herd is nearing a figure of 7.6 million head above 1945, the wartime peak.

That, ordinarily, means that cheaper beef is on the way.

However, the provision in the new law banning slaughtering quotas on beef was certain to mean a mushrooming of black market operations. DiSalle has called slaughtering control the heart of the whole meat control program. In addition, the law cancels two pending 4% price rollbacks.

THE NEW law gives the government authority to restore rent controls in "critical" areas, but prohibits it from denying landlords rent increases totalling 20% over June 1947 levels.

Despite this limitation, Rent Stabilizer Tighe R. Woods promised to "proceed against the horrors of $100 monthly rentals for tar paper shacks, century-old log cabins and the use of unsanitary outdoor privies" around defense installations.

"Every excessive rent that stands up like a sore thumb is going to be knocked down," Woods promised.

Now that inflation is here, the big unanswered question is only, "How much?"

During the next 11 months, when the new law will be in effect, less — not more — civilian goods will be produced. That means that inflationary pressures will be even greater than in 1946.

There were indications, however, that some members of Congress, now that the floor battle to "clip Truman" was over, had awakened to the consequences of their irresponsible acts. Capehart, even before the President had signed the law, introduced a bill to review the use of slaughtering quotas on beef.

Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), a leading fighter for firm price controls, hailed Capehart's action.

"This fight isn't over," he said. "The way may now be open for further action to clarify the rollback provisions of the new bill."

ULPC Tags Defense Act 'Disgraceful Surrender'

Text of the United Labor Policy Committee statement on the new Defense Production Act which was passed finally last week by Congress follows:

THE NEW Defense Production Act is a disgraceful surrender to those who stand to profit from inflation.

It represents a callous betrayal of the consumers of the nation by the reactionary coalition which rules Congress.

At a time when America is marshalling its strength for defense against the enemies of freedom, the coalition has struck a dangerous blow at our national economy.

In the months ahead, this no-limit-to-prices bill may prove as harmful to the nation's defense effort as the dropping of an enemy atomic bomb upon our territory.

The best claim that can be made by the supporters of the Swiss-cheese collection of loopholes and special-interest exemptions finally approved by Congress, is that it is better than no controls at all. Even that claim is open to question.

By dumping the bill in President Truman's lap at virtually the last moment before present controls expire, Congress intended to leave the President no option but to sign it.

However, he does have an option. He can veto the bill and call upon Congress for immediate passage of another stopgap extension of the present law until a better long-term statute can be enacted.

If the President feels there is even a remote possibility that such a course will succeed, the United Labor Policy Committee will support a veto and devote all its efforts toward obtaining passage of a real anti-inflation law from Congress.

If the President decides, however, that the nation can expect no better legislation from the 82nd Congress, then the United Labor Policy Committee feels that he should explain to the American people in the clearest possible terms how shamefully and how wickedly the Congressional coalition sold them out to the special interests.

And the United Labor Policy Committee urges the President to renew his demands upon Congress for saner, wiser and more effective action to combat inflation.

Almost a year ago, when the original Defense Production Act was adopted, American labor protested vigorously against its obvious weaknesses. We carried on an unceasing campaign to strengthen the law. Instead, the congressional coalition has written guaranteed inflation into the new law.

It will not protect consumers—whether they be small businessmen, small farmers, workers, pensioners or professional men. It will benefit only big industry and the big corporate farms which have reaped the biggest profits in history during the first year of the present inflationary spiral.

The effects of this Defense Production Act may be temporarily hidden by the present lull. But let us not be fooled: inflationary pressures will continue to plague us—of that we can be sure—regardless of the outcome of the Korean negotiations. A year ago, military production was 4% of our total output; today, it is 8%; a year from now, it may well be 16% or 18%. That will mean fewer consumer goods, and even greater pressure for higher prices. At that time, the American consumer will find in the Defense Production Act not protection but the certainty of still higher prices and greater hardship.

No alibis by the special-profit interests and their puppet representatives in Congress can obscure the failures of this ineffective law:

1. The Defense Production Act offers no promise whatever of firm price controls. Sensible, workable, dollars-and-cents price ceilings are forbidden. Stabilization is made impossible by cost-plus-profit guarantees.

2. The new act shuts the door on effective price controls over food by banning rollbacks and authority for future food subsidies.

3. The act specifically removes the Government's power to roll back meat prices and, by prohibiting slaughtering quotas, invites a nation-wide black market.

4. The act makes impossible effective enforcement of the few price control powers which the law does permit. It would deny the Office of Price Stabilization sufficient power to stop black-market operations or punish willful violators of government price regulations.

5. The new act makes no provision at all for holding down the price line through quality controls, grade labelling, control of production of high-price lines of merchandise as substitutes for cheaper goods, or restriction on existing exemptions from the law.

6. The act guarantees fat profit margins for manufacturers—at the expense of the consumer the law is supposed to protect.

7. The act guarantees increased rents—whether justified or not—for millions of tenants, thus forcing further increases in the cost of living.

8. The act contains no prohibition against speculation on the nation's commodity markets—speculation which contributed heavily to the inflation of the past 12 months.

9. The act prohibits the President from authorizing the construction of defense plants in areas where private industry refuses to do so in the national interest.

This bill of particulars—and it barely skims the surface in listing the weaknesses of the Defense Production Act—shows why American citizens can put no faith in this ineffective measure.

We offer our praise to the courageous minority in Congress who fought so valiantly to write a bill in the public interest. We commend President Truman, Defense Mobilizer Wilson, Economic Stabilizer Johnston, Price Stabilization Chief DiSalle and the other public officials who worked earnestly to win from Congress a stronger anti-inflation law.

We recognize that if not for their efforts and the activities of labor and consumer groups, the Congress coalition would have enacted an even worse law.

We pledge our untiring efforts to expose the record of those congressmen who surrendered to the special profit interests in a time of national emergency, and to seek their replacement in the next election by legislators more conscious of the public welfare.

What Now, Congress?

Back last November the CIO commented that the old Defense Production Act "fails to serve as a weapon against impending inflation."

It was, unfortunately, an accurate statement. The Labor Department's price index jumped from 175.6, when the bill was passed, to 185.2 on June 15.

Now Congress, in renewing the Defense Production Act for another 11 months, has passed an even weaker law. There's nothing in it that will prevent the cost of living from continuing to spiral upwards.

In fact, the new law has inflation written right into it. Almost every section of the price control statute was drafted to serve the interests of sellers—not the consumer-buyers. And corporations, which are the big sellers, like high prices and high profits.

The United Labor Policy Committee—representing CIO, AFL and railway brotherhoods—has described the Act as a "callous betrayal" of consumers. President Truman, reluctantly signing the new law, called it "gravely deficient" and flatly predicted that "we will not be able to hold down rising prices" under its provisions.

So, this latest offspring of the Dixiecrat-Republican coalition should fool nobody. But a lot of Dixiecrats and Republicans will spend a lot of time between now and 1952 Election Day trying to fool as many innocent citizens as they can into believing that their bill is truly an anti-inflation law.

And they'll try to say that the administration hasn't really tried to control inflation with the laws at hand.

Chrysler Corp. and other auto makers have already indicated they'll ask for higher prices within a matter of months. And all along the line other prices and other corporation profits will be "adjusting upwards," as the trade papers like to describe it.

We'll keep in mind, while our wallets get dented, that a lion's share of the responsibility for this hardship belongs to the controlling conservative coalition of the 82nd Congress—a Congress that has challenged the "Awful 80th" as the worst in our history.

End Of A 'Statesman'

Mr. Ed Gossett, a Dixiecrat Congressman from Texas, made a heart-rending speech the other day in the House of Representatives.

Much as he likes public service, Mr. Gossett told his fascinated colleagues, he just can't afford to live on a Congressman's salary—particularly with prices going up the way they are. So, Mr. Gossett announced, he was taking on a job as lawyer for the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., at $25,000 a year, about double his present salary.

Most Americans can sympathize with Mr. Gossett's predicament in this inflationary era.

They would sympathize even more if Mr. Gossett had not voted 12 consecutive times against strengthening amendments to the Defense Production Act, which was designed to control the inflation about which he complains so vocally.

Take the "statesman" away, Southwestern Bell—you can have him.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, W. P. Welsh

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIV August 6, 1951 No. 32

'Can't I Take You For A Ride?'

Collective Bargaining Processes

New Ideas For Europe

By WILLIAM H. JOYCE, JR.
Assistant Administrator of ECA

(Excerpts from an address by a leading official of the Economic Cooperation Administration at the Univ. of Oregon.)

IN RECENT months I have been thinking more and more that the United States and Britain and the Scandinavian countries and Holland and Belgium should get together and jointly develop one new and great article of export to France and to Italy.

That article of export is the idea of modern collective bargaining, along with its essential techniques, as these have been sweated out in America and Northern Europe by trial and error.

For behind this idea of collective bargaining and behind these techniques is the living faith in a free man's freedom—freedom of discussion, freedom of the exercise of economic power, and that very important freedom, which is the freedom to achieve compromise, to reconcile different views and interests—in short, the freedom to agree.

Collective bargaining is more than an economic process although it may be defined as the method by which union members, through their own representatives, market and help to manage the labor skills and energies that the employer needs to buy. Collective bargaining deals, in the final analysis, with that most crucial and challenging process of all: human relations.

THIS recognition that human relations are primary and pivotal is still lacking in altogether too many plants and workshops in France and Italy. That explains, in large measure, why in France the Communist-dominated CGT has 2,150,000 out of 4,100,000 union members. That explains, in large measure, why in Italy the Communist-controlled CGIL has 5,117,000 out of the country's 7,341,000 union members.

The brutal fact is that both French and Italian management still tends to look upon labor as a mass of inferiors whose hopes for a more ample life, economic and spiritual, can with impunity be disregarded, and denied.

The psychology of French and Italian management, with some notable exceptions, tends to be more feudalistic than capitalistic, in the sense that we use that term here. The failure of the managements of both countries to share their profits more equitably with their workers has aroused resentments which Communist agitators, organizers and propagandists have canalized and crystallized into bitterness and anger toward the kind of economic system which gives opulence to the few and poverty to the many.

I EXPECT that, as more and more Europeans understand what the American economic system really is, they will cease to be deluded by Communist caricatures of America as a Wall Street dictatorship in which children starve in the streets. Instead, they will seek eagerly to adopt those principles which have given to our own system its flexibility, its strength, its dynamic and healthy equilibrium, and its ability to meet the challenges of a new day.

All these developments which signify a changing mental climate in Western Europe can be in large part credited to the work of the ECA. I think I can say with some objectivity that one of our greatest accomplishments has been our ECA program of helping Europeans re-vamp American precepts of industrial know-how and apply them to their own conditions.

We concentrate on transferring from the United States whatever parts of our industrial lore, our economic techniques, that can be reshaped and and adapted to the particular needs of a European factory, or industry, or country. The Europeans have their own cultural patterns, their own traditions, their own values, which we at all times respect.

We are looking forward to the time when the philosophy of high production and high wages, of volume sales at ever lower unit costs, and of substantial profits from this process will prevail throughout Western Europe.

We feel sure that it would be a welcome advance from today's business philosophy of low production, low wages, small sales at high unit costs, and of profits too often siphoned off into the hands of a management that does not even plow them back into improving plant efficiency.

Civil Liberties Report:

Serious Inroads Threaten Our Freedoms

SERIOUS inroads have been made on freedom of expression and due process of law "in the name of national security," the American Civil Liberties Union charged last week in its annual report, "Security and Freedom—The Great Challenge."

The inroads, the report recounted, have been made by public officials, by local, state and federal legislators, by private pressure groups, and in some cases by courts.

The report covered the period from the middle of 1949 through 1950. The worst of the "inroads" during this period, it said, was the McCarran Subversive Activities Control Act, which was passed last year over the strenuous objections of the CIO, most of the rest of organized labor, and thoughtful people generally.

The report described the act as "the worst departure since the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798 from the central principle of American law that a man is accountable only for his own illegal acts, not for mere association with persons who hold obnoxious opinions."

"Happily, the concern over national security and the concern over individual freedom sometimes support each other," the report pointed out.

"For example, in 1950 the recognized necessity for unity and high morale at home and of sustained and enthusiastic support abroad accelerated our advance toward effective equality for Negro citizens.

"And, on the other hand, the preservation of civil liberties . . . awakened in 1950 their proponents to the danger of the forces of Soviet Communist tyranny, from without and within.

"We must, indeed, remind ourselves that treason and revolution are real and hateful facts in the present as in the past; that our government, with the active support of its citizens, should do its utmost to prevent or punish treasonable and revolutionary acts.

"But, we must also do the harder job of reminding ourselves that the attempt to prevent or punish treasonable and revolutionary acts frequently steps over its proper boundaries into indiscriminate invasion of civil liberties, and that protection of those liberties demands active allegiance, even in times of crisis."

The McCarran Act, the report says, has done nothing to guarantee national security, and court tests of its restrictive provisions will probably take several years. Acts of the same type passed in local communities for the most part have either been declared unconstitutional or have become moribund.

The ACLU during the period continued its opposition to the Smith Act, which prohibits "teaching or advocacy" of violent overthrow of the government, and under which the 11 Communist leaders were convicted in New York in 1949.

It found some small improvement in the conduct of the House Un-American Activities, but held its accomplishments were "insignificant compared with the results of the expert and relatively quiet work of the FBI . . ."

The report says that the damage done by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) "was somewhat limited by the fairness of ex-Sen. Tydings' (D. Md.) sub-committee in investigating his charges."

It urged scrapping of the "all-embracing" federal loyalty program in favor of a specific security program aimed at persons in "sensitive" positions. However, it found, the program has been administered efficiently and justly, "granted the conditions imposed on those conducting it."

Where Is Patrick Henry?

Declaration Of Independence Scaring Americans As 'Subversive'

"Too many Americans view one another with cold and fishy eyes.

"Too many Americans wonder if their neighbors are dangerous characters; too many Americans are afraid to invoke their most precious freedoms for fear they will be identified as troublemakers.

"How many Congressmen would ratify the Bill of Rights if it came up tdoay?"

THE QUOTATION is from an editorial in the New York Post following a day-long attempt by two of its reporters to persuade New Yorkers to sign a petition reaffirming their belief in the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights.

The Madison Capitol-Times, a newspaper published in Sen. McCarthy's home state of Wisconsin, circulated a similar petition on July 4, containing quotations from the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights. Of 112 persons interviewed, only one signed it.

In a speech at Detroit's sesquicentennial celebration President Truman used the Madison incident apparently to slap Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) and some other "big lie" disciples in Congress.

"This malicious propaganda," President Truman said, "has gone so far that on the Fourth of July over in Madison, Wis., people were afraid to say they believed in the Declaration of Independence.

OUT OF 161 people the New York reporters interviewed exactly 19 signed the petition.

"Although the petition contained nothing except quotations from the two historic documents, the most general reaction we encountered was that we were subversives engaged in an un-American enterprise," the reporters declared.

"We also encountered underlying dread of the 'consequences' which might develop from excercising the right of petition."

Comments of those who refused to sign included:

• A patrolmen in front of the National City Bank glanced "sneeringly" at the petition and then said to the reporter, "Beat it. You guys got your nerve. You're even asking cops now."

• Two Wall St. secretaries coming down the steps of the Chase National Bank read it, and one asked:

"You wouldn't be trying to make me loose my job, would you, Mister? You put your name on something these days and it's no telling where it might show up later."

• A well-dressed man standing nearby suddenly snapped: "Why don't you let those ladies alone? Take your . . . . . Red racket somewhere else."

• A priest read the document and then handed it back, "I'm afraid to sign anything," he said.

• One signature was nearly obtained on the steps of the New York Public Library. A stocky man read the petition thoughtfully, then slowly wrote "John Evans" on the first line.

He started adding his address when a woman companion said: "I don't think you should do it, John. You might get in trouble these days." He hesitated a moment, drew a line through his signature and silently handed the petition back.

• Many persons approached said they couldn't read English, or had left their glasses at home. But a mild-looking man on a bench in Trinity Churchyard at Broadway and Rector "paled visibly" when the petition was explained to him.

"Please, sir," he begged in broken English. "Don't make me sign. Only six months I'm here. I don't want trouble. Please."

• A stylish matron walking her dog on Park Ave. read only half the petition before crumbling it and throwing it on the street.

"They should put you in jail with the rest of them," she told the reporter. "You damned Communist, you."

"Neither Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) nor Eugene Dennis (C. Federal Prison) could have asked for more," commented the Post reporters when their assignment was completed.

Give A Buck To PAC

Prophets Of Electronic Age See No Work, No Jobs, No Nerves

By W. P. WELSH

THERE is a better day possible in the electronic age, two physicists, E. W. Leaver and J. J. Brown, tell us.

After knocking their readers about with such words as "automaticity," "unitized" and "ancillary," they come to a surprising conclusion: This better day is also desirable.

But their look at the future makes grim reading.

Harper's Magazine for August publishes the report of these two prophets of the coming electronic age.

They seriously claim the time is at hand for electronic management of industry, business and government, finance and commerce. These can all be handled by future models of electronic machines like the Navy's RCA-engineered "Project Typhoon" and the Remington Rand UNIVAC.

It is safe to assume Harper's—or at least, its staff—does not endorse the Leaver-Brown program. And why should it? Leaver and Brown promise to eliminate "all the hordes of little clerks who scratch marks on paper."

WORKERS in blue shirts will be no better off than their white collar brothers. Leaver and Brown promise to "carry off the sweepers and oilers, the diggers, the wipers, and all the dogged components of our present social machine."

Every argument against the new life is smashed like an atom or given the cold, scientific stare treatment by the authors of the Harper's piece. Every problem is "solved"—except what to do with workers swept along by the physicists' broom into "freedom from work."

Leaver and Brown offer eight hints to those who would create our electronic Utopia. One suggestion is:

"Machines must be utilized in terms of the common denominator of electronics."

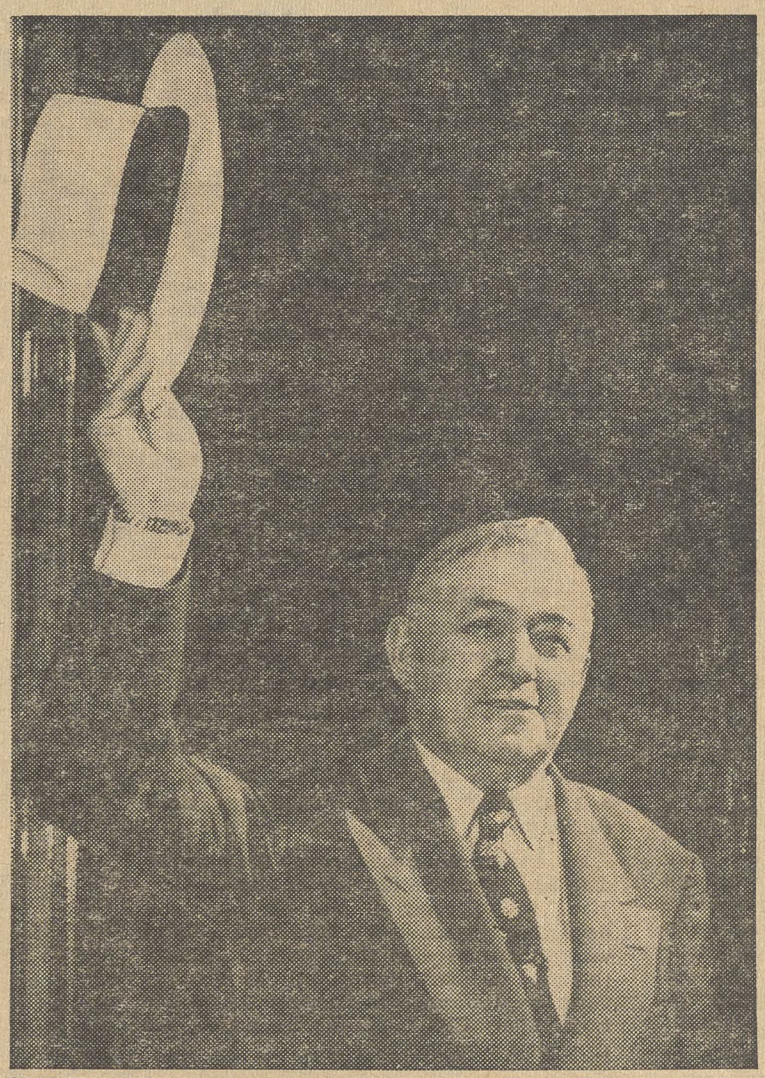
No one seems to know what that means. But it is frightening as hell.

BUT ALL IS not black. The scientists tell us "the most far-reaching effect of the introduction of a proper regimentation of machines will be to the amelioration of national and individual neuroses."

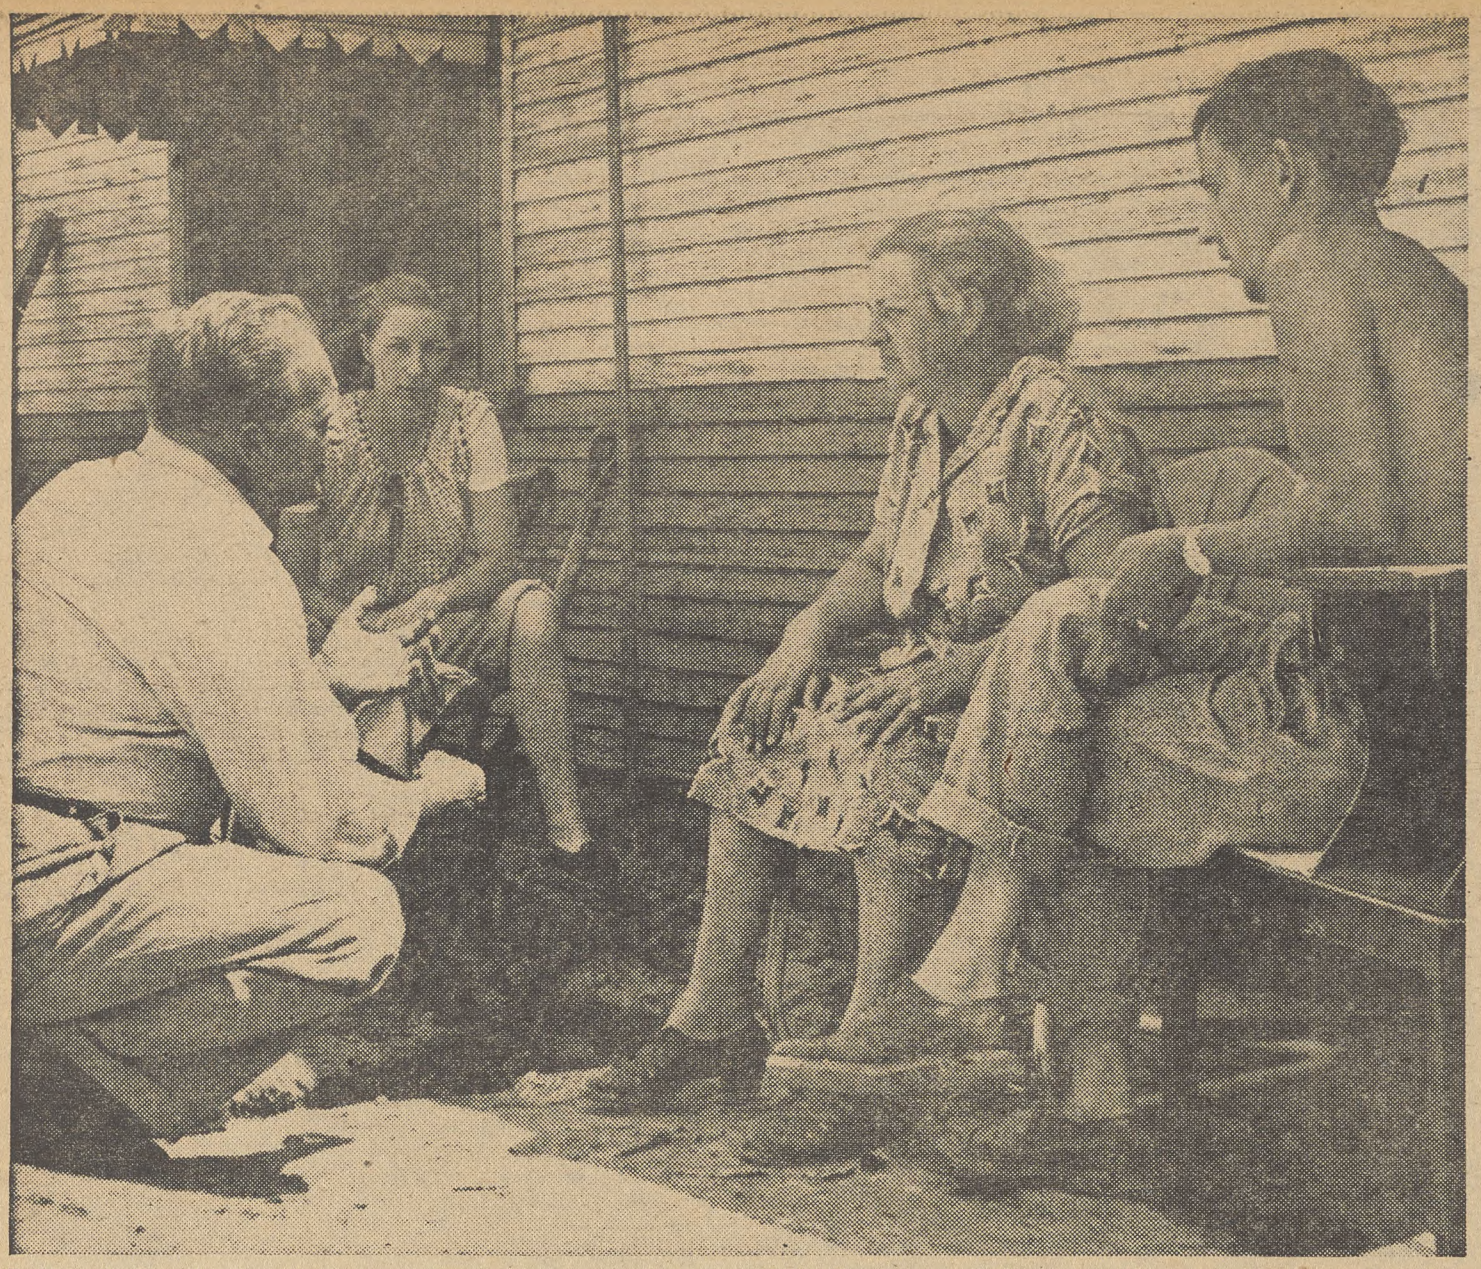
If that means we won't be nervous any more, we should be for it. We can be nervous, however, until somebody finds a guaranteed system of assuring three square meals a day, now or in the electronic era.

One final thought: Leaver and Brown also say the widespread use of "automata" (machines to you, bud) may bring an era of peace.

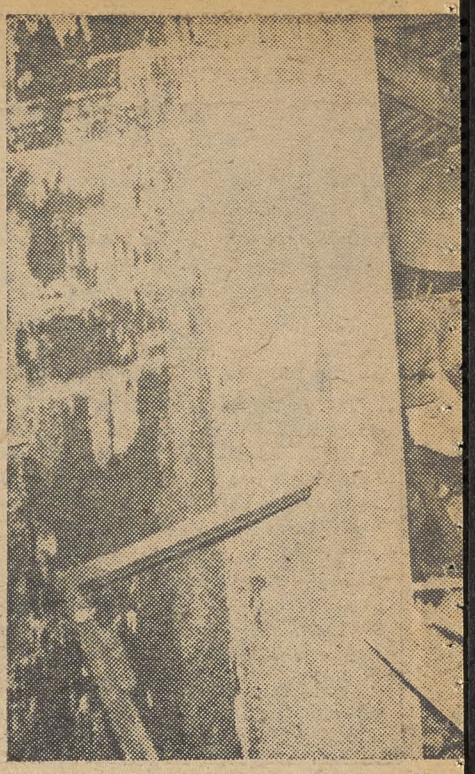
Just may do it, they say.



RARING TO GO: CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood waved a happy hello July 31 as he left Mercy Hospital, Pittsburgh, where he was a patient almost a month for treatment for gall stones. He expects to be back on the job soon.



1 Mrs. O. Engelmohr, bitter about her ruined home, listens to Moon Lewis, CIO organizer (left), telling her what steps to take to get help. With her are her daughter, Evelyn, and her son, O. W. Engelmohr, who belongs to the CIO's Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers. He is employed at the big brick Colgate-Palmolive-Peet plant across the street. Young Engelmohr watched breathless from the roof of the plant as the flood submerged his parents' home.



2 The Engelmohrs' front bedroom as The ever-present filthy black m everything and is piled deep on the

Kansas City — Thousands Of Personal Tragedies

For several weeks the papers have been full of news and feature stories about the damage done by the big Midwest floods. These have told in detail about the millions of dollars lost by business, the plants ruined, the livestock drowned in one of the nation's major meat packing centers; the freight cars destroyed, the farm lands inundated.

Heated arguments have been carried on as to whose fault it all was. Congress has been accused of failing to appropriate enough money for adequate flood control. Army engineers have been blamed for not building enough dams, or for building them in the wrong places. The CIO points again to the need for a Missouri Valley Authority, similar to TVA, which it has long advocated.

Dozens of government officials from numerous U. S. agencies have visited the flood area, talked with city and state government people, circled over stricken districts by airplane, or made a quick survey by auto and then issued statements and reports. But so far, little except generalities has been said about the misery and suffering of the industrial workers in the flooded districts.

Yet what—short of actual death or permanent physical disablement—could be worse in these days of acute housing shortage and high prices, than to lose your home, all your possessions, and possibly your job?

Perhaps the pictures and story of what happened to a typical family in the flood area may give at least some slight idea of the bitter depth of the sorrow felt by thousands of workers, many of them CIO members, who had their homes, furniture, clothes and other belongings turned into mudsoaked rubbish.

BY HOLLACE RANSDELL

I've just come back from a personally conducted tour through hell. My guide was William (Moon) Lewis, a seasoned CIO organizer who is a veteran of World War II.

Moon saw many a bombed city overseas when he was in the army, "but nothing as bad as this," he said. "That was clean rubble."

Moon was driving me through the Armourdale and Argentine districts of Kansas City, Kan., where many of the big industries have their plants, and where thousands of workers employed in them live. It was in this area on Black Friday, July 13, that the flood swept through in its most destructive fury. Many CIO families were among the thousands who fled in panic.

That was more than two weeks ago, but the area still lies desolate and stricken. An A-bomb blast could not have caused as much havoc, an official government survey of the area revealed.

All around was the most awful devastation. A crazy kind of devastation. A gas range with its legs in the air hung on a fence. A fence hung on a tree.

An auto tire lay on a roof that had been wrenched half off. A sofa and a big oil drum, a lawn mower, a venetian blind, a twisted bunch of enameled metal that once might have been a bed, a dining room table with no legs, a bashed-in kettle—all were jumbled together in a heap.

An automobile lay upside down like a big beetle that had fallen on its back and couldn't get up. A shamble of heavy boards were scattered around like fallen toothpicks. A tall pole snapped off in the middle clung together by shreds.

Vile Stench

Once lovely trees stood gaunt and hideous, their leaves and branches turned to slimy festoons of filth.

Such were the sights we saw on our dismal tour. And everywhere, spread in thick rippled layers, or lying in great piles, was horrible slick black mud giving off a vile stench, and arousing fears of epidemics.

The streets for the most part had been cleared, or were blocked off where work was going on, but here and there whole blocks lay still inundated in mud. Moon often had to twist and turn, back up, and sometimes creep his way through dirty water over his tires.

Occasionally we were stopped by guards or police officers, but we managed to cover a good portion of the 10-mile area where it is estimated that some 3000 homes were destroyed and more than 70 major industrial plants employing thousands of CIO members, were flooded.

Destruction in some spots was worse than in others, as you would expect. The flood pulled many freak stunts, such as carrying a house several blocks and dropping it in one piece; turning others on their sides, piling up two or three together while leaving those nearby standing intact—at least on the outside—and neatly lifting off a roof.

Foul Mud Everywhere

The one thing the flood seemed to be logical about was the distribution of the awful smelling mud which it left behind impartially everywhere. Thousands of people in the area were given anti-typhoid and other shots at emergency centers.

As we continued on our way, block after block, mile after mile, our faces and clothes became heavily coated with the dust from the drying mud, dirt gritted in our teeth and our depression deepened.

It would take a hard heart and a thick skin indeed not to sense the blasted hopes and misery of the people who had suddenly lost everything they had in this calamity.

Very few of them were about, in the worst devastated sections.

Now and then we would see a lone man or woman, or a family group hopelessly struggling with the mud, using brooms, rakes, hose or old rags. Some of them still seemed dazed. Others looked as though they were having a ghastly nightmare.

One man with pale set face was standing in the mud of his front yard, his home a total wreck, painstakingly cleaning the muck out of a metal mail box. Apparently it was the only thing he could salvage.

It seemed especially ironic in the midst of all the dirt and filth left by the flood to come suddenly upon the huge Colgate-

Chemical Union Gives $3000 To Flood Victims

The Chemical Workers has given $1000 to the CIO Emergency Relief Committee.

President Martin Wagner of the Chemical Workers explained in a letter to CIO Pres. Philip Murray that $2000 had already been sent to members in flooded sections of Kansas City, Kan.

The union's executive board, meeting at the time of the flood, saw the need as "so great and immediate" that $2000 was authorized for use at once.

Later, when the board learned of the work of the CIO Relief Committee, an additional $1000 was sent to Committee headquarters in Kansas City, Mo.

Photos on this page were taken by James G. Walker, CIO Steeworkers' Local 1294.

today. The venetian blinds, bought with much pride, are a wreck. Belongings accumulated for years lie buried in mud.

3 Muck flowed through the entrance of the little union hall of Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers' Local 114. Workers in the nearby Peet plant belong to this local, across the street from the Engelmohr home. Authorities have ordered the building razed.

CIO Aide Named To Flood Unit

JIM LEARY, CIO regional director whose headquarters are in Kansas ity, Mo., has been one of the most ctive and outstanding leaders in the reater Kansas area during the flood mergency.

He has pressed vigorously for team- ork on the part of all agencies en- aged in flood relief and has recom- ended a clear-cut program to speed p such activities.

As head of the CIO Emergency Flood Re- ef Committee, Leary's offices are buzzing ay and night with conferences of CIO ocal, International and council officials erving on various sub-committees set up to ring quick aid to CIO flood victims.

Recognition of the important part he CIO has been playing in the flood area as given last week when Leary was appointed an executive member of a newly formed coordinating committee composed of outstanding civic leaders.

Harry Darby, endorsed by the CIO, heads up the committee. Mayor William E. Kemp of Kansas City, Mo., and Mayor Clark E. Tucker of Kansas City, Kans., are members together with AFL, Chamber of Commerce, newspaper and business leaders.

Here are the main points in the program Leary has recommended to the newly formed Flood Relief and Rehabilitation Coordinating Committee:

1. Formation of a Rehabilitation Commission to deal with all matters affecting food, shelter, clothing and medical care, to be composed of a coordinator of all Federal agencies, representatives of governors of the affected states, municipalities, the Red Cross, and a group of distinguished citizens.

2. Pressure on Congress to assure speedy grants-in-aid for those in need, and the pooling of these funds with available resources of the Red Cross and state and local government.

3. All available welfare personnel of government and private groups be merged with forces of the Red Cross, and its procedure accepted in handling the thousands of needy cases.

Kansas CIO Council Office Scene Of Feverish Relief Activity

Feverish activity is the regular routine these days at headquarters of the Kansas CIO Council, in the heart of the flood area on the Kansas City Kan. side of the river, where most of the big industrial plants are located.

Council Pres. Willard Murphy and Council Secy.-Treas. H. J. Yount are members of the CIO Emergency Flood Relief Committee for Greater Kansas City, and their activities on both sides of the river keep them rushing.

At the Kansas Council offices, committee meetings and conferences on flood relief activities run practically on a swing shift basis. Every available table, desk, and even the hall at the top of the stairs is utilized for meetings.

Boxes and racks of clothing are everywhere, and members line up to register for relief or for help in filing for unemployment insurance.

A number of CIO internationals have locals in this area. The Packinghouse Workers head the list, as the big packing plants of Armour, Cudahy and Wilson and others are in this district.

The Steelworkers have members in a large number of foundries and fabricating plants. The Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers have hundreds at the big Colgate-Palmolive-Peet soap plant and other concerns. Oil, Auto, Paper workers, retail and shoe unions are some of the others.

Members of all of them have been badly hit by the flood, and union-appointed case workers and committees are working around the clock to help out.

Another area in Kansas severely damaged by the flood is at Topeka, where members of the United Rubber Workers are employed in the Goodyear plant. The union's executive board has donated $7500 to aid its Topeka members.

News that the John Morrell packing plant in Topeka, damaged in the flood, would be shut down permanently, throwing 1200 CIO members out of jobs, hit the Kansas Council hard.

Protests against the action are building up. Meantime CIO funds have been contributed to aid the victims.

almolive-Peet plant, known in the area as -O-P, where all kinds of soap bars, flakes nd powders are produced, and to reflect ow little these soap products turned out by e millions can do to clean up the appalling ess all around.

Two men were sitting in front of the ant, and we stopped to talk with them.

Both turned out to be CIO workers at OP, members of the Gas, Coke and Chemi- l Workers. One, E. L. Edwards, said he orked in the processing end and had been ere ten years. The other, O. W. Hill, from e shipping department, had 15 years' sen- rity.

Both were working on the clean-up job at e plant, as were most of the other male employes, but they didn't know how long it might take, nor when the plant would be able to get back in production. Meanwhile they were glad to have their pay checks coming in.

Hill and Edwards struck the one hopeful note in this tragic situation. For the time being at least, a majority of the men employed in industrial plants in the devastated area, are being kept on the payroll to do salvage work. They may have no homes to go to at night, but they are working. How long this will last nobody knows.

Leaving the Peet employes, we stopped to talk to a family group sitting dejectedly outside their ruined home across the street from the plant.

The mother, Mrs. O. H. Engelmohr, normally a pleasant-faced, nice-looking woman with curly gray hair, at first was too bitter to say much.

One Family's Plight

But after her young daughter, Evelyn, and her 27-year-old son, O. W. Engelmohr, who belongs to the CIO union at the Peet plant and is still working there on the salvage crew, started telling us the story of their ruined home, the mother began putting in a few words. Her remarks were often chocked off by tears.

The story of the Engelmohrs told is typical of many others we heard later and illustrates the heart of the tragedy that has struck many a CIO family among the thousands of victims in this and other flooded areas.

The Engelmohrs' home was their pride and joy. They have lived there for 29 years, and five children were born there. The elder Engelmohr, who has worked at Swift & Co. for many years, was just on the point of being retired.

With his home paid for and a small pension to live on, he and his wife hoped to live in security the remainder of their lives without ever being a burden on their children.

"To think how hard my dad has worked all his life and then have this happen!" said Evelyn, her eyes full of tears. "That really hurts."

Engelmohr liked to fix up and improve the house, work on the lawn and plant flowers. Loss of some prized dahlias, his son said, hurt his father deeply.

Just before the flood came, the senior Engelmohr had put up some new green and white metal awnings. The fact that they stood up pretty well in the flood while everything else was destroyed, seemed a bitter irony to him.

Into the neat, attractive frame house, surrounded with its well-kept lawn, flowers and shade trees, had gone much hard work and the savings of many years. In it were all the family's cherished belongings of a lifetime.

Now all that is left is the smeared and stained walls and roof. Inside it is a hideous jumble of mudsoaked, broken furniture, plaster, and sodden rags that once were rugs, curtains and bed clothes. Only the keys tell you what was once a piano.

We looked at the sickening sight, standing in the outside doorway. "That's what we have left," said Mrs. Engelmohr.

Army Engineers Blamed For Flood By Farm Union

The National Farmers Union has urged President Truman and Congress to relieve the Army Engineers of all civil works functions, create a Missouri Valley Authority, and set up a national review board to pass on all watershed development plans.

The union declared that the midwest floods have shown "the complete folly and futility of the Army brand of flood control which starts at a river's mouth." The farmers "have had enough, and more than enough," said the union.

CSC Representatives Aid In Flood Work

Charles Ferguson, representative for the CIO Community Services Committee, is at present in Kansas City, Mo., to assist in the organization of flood work.

Originally from Philadelphia, Ferguson has worked in steel, auto and other industries and has held quite a few official positions in various CIO organizations, including the Chester, Pa., CIO Council. He has been with the CIO since 1944.

Another CSC representative now in Kansas City, is Virgil McCormick, who is a full time liaison officer to the Community Chest.

CSC was instrumental last week in getting two CIO members appointed for liaison work with the Red Cross. They are Judson King, Steelworkers, and George Orlich, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers.

Congressional Log Jam Worst In History

THE LEGISLATIVE log jam created by the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition in control of the 82nd Congress is the worst in history.

It's so bad that last week even the legislators themselves were forced to admit that it's worse than they realized.

When June 30 arrived and Congress had not passed even one of the dozen major appropriations bills providing funds to run the government, the "lawmakers" passed a stop-gap resolution. The extending measure gave them until July 31 to complete action.

But July 31 passed and Congress still had not passed a single appropriations bill. The legislature sheepishly, but swiftly, "ate" its earlier estimate of the time it would need to complete action.

NOW, through the device of another extending resolution, Congress has until the end of August to act on pending appropriation bills.

While it's true that under the stop-gap measures, government employes are being paid on time, the delay in final enactment of appropriations unquestionably will work hardships in some agencies.

The temporary extending resolution allows the government to spend the monthly amount of money based on last year's appropriations. Nearly all agencies, however, face cuts in funds for the present fiscal year. That means that when the bills finally are approved, they will have to "absorb" the reduction in 10 months instead of the full 12.

The time element, moreover, is particularly important this year, in view of the House Dixiegop coalition's insistence upon retaining the so-called Jensen amendment which will prevent agencies from filling more than one out of every four personnel vacancies which occur.

Personnel officials point out that administration of government inevitably must suffer in such circumstances.

Perhaps because its conscience had been pricked when it had to vote another extension, Congress got the first appropriations bill on President Truman's desk on August 1. True, it was a relatively minor measure appropriating money to run the District of Columbia government, but its passage put an end to hunger and the threat of hunger for nearly 13,000 people on the District's relief rolls.

THE congressional delay in providing funds had brought real hardship to Washington's relief recipients because there are now nearly 100 more cases on the rolls than a year ago.

Since under the stop-gap measure the District could not spend more than it did in 1950, and since prices have risen sharply, many people in the nation's capital went hungry because Congress has administered its affairs so poorly.

The irony of the situation is that the present state of affairs has come about because Congress itself has failed in the very respects for which it spent most of its time in criticizing others.

Most of its energies have been frittered away "investigating" and criticizing the administration for "lack of efficiency." The legislators have been so busy trying to smear President Truman that they just haven't had time to attend to their primary task—that of legislating.

Then, too, Congress has been guilty of one of its own pet "peeves"—when it's done by the other fellow. Absenteeism in the 82nd Congress has been so great that Senate Democratic Leader McFarland (Ariz.) has threatened Senators not showing up on the floor with possible "arrest" for truancy.

IT USED TO BE that this Congress had vacant seats on only Mondays and Fridays when members from near-by states went home for four-day weekends. A week ago last Tuesday, however, the Senate was forced to withdraw two quorum calls because there weren't enough Senators to form a quorum.

Such a situation on Capitol Hill has given the lobbyists for special interests a field day. They can time the voting so that majorities on their side are assured.

Rissman, Chicago CIO Leader, Dies

Sidney Rissman, one of the founders of the CIO Clothing Workers, died in Chicago Aug. 1.

Labor and civic leaders from throughout the nation attended the funeral services Aug. 3.

Among those present were Frank Rosenblum, secretary of the Clothing Workers, who assisted Rissman in founding the ACWA in 1914; Reuben Block, manager of the ACWA Chicago Joint Board; Hyman Blumberg, ACWA executive vice president, and Rabbi Benjamin H. Birnbaum of Nertamid Congregation.

Rissman was a member of the executive board of the Illinois CIO Council and a vice president of the Chicago CIO Council.

He was president of Local 61 of the AFL Garment Workers in 1910. He became business agent in 1917, after the CIO Clothing Workers was organized, and in 1920 was elected ACWA vice president.

CEREMONY by which Mrs. Vera Buchanan (D. Pa.) became a member of Congress to fill out the unexpired term of her late husband was re-enacted in Washington last week, with Speaker of the House Rayburn (D. Tex.) (center) administering the oath in the presence of her sponsor, Rep. Walters (D. Pa.).

IUE-CIO And UE-CP To Vote In Elections At 3 GE Plants

THE CIO Electrical Workers have petitioned for a National Labor Relations Board election at one of the last major outposts of the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers, the General Electric Co. plant at Schenectady, N. Y.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey has predicted that the several thousand GE employes there will follow the lead of thousands of other electrical workers and vote for IUE over the CIO-expelled UE. No election date has been set.

At another GE plant in Lynn, Mass., where IUE Local 201 has bargaining rights for 18,000 workers, the CIO union was prepared to give UE its usual shellacking in an election Aug. 16.

At the Cleveland, O., GE plant, where IUE won representation in 20 out of 23 units last year, petitions have been entered for two of the three units where UE still is the bargaining agent.

Aid For Israel Asked By CIO

Financial aid to Israel is of "prime importance" in the American program to strengthen the free world against Communist aggression, Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept., has told the House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Cowan recalled to the committee the CIO's long record of friendship for Israel and the Israeli labor movement, and cited both CIO Pres. Philip Murray's role as honorary chairman of the National Committee for Labor Israel and the resolution supporting that country adopted at the last CIO convention.

He described U. S. aid to Israel as "crucial" to its stability, and urged a $150 million grant "to make Israel an impregnable fortress for democracy in the Near East."

Two Fellowships At Pendle Hill

Pendle Hill, center for religious and social study maintained by the Society of Friends (Quakers) at Wallingford, Pa., a suburb of Philadelphia, is offering two fellowships for the 1951-52 academic year.

Applications will be welcomed from men and women in the trade union and cooperative movements. Holders of fellowships spend half their time in study and research, the other half in field work with unions and cooperatives in the Philadelphia area.

The grants cover board, room, tuition and $250 in cash. The academic year runs from Oct. 2, 1951, to June 13, 1952.

Applications should be sent before Aug. 15 to The Secretary, Labor & Cooperative Service, Pendle Hill, Wallingford, Pa.

CIO Blasts Move To Ease Trust Law

THE CIO last week hit back at a move in Congress to weaken the nation's anti-trust laws by legalizing price discrimination.

Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept., wrote each member of the Senate July 31, enclosing a copy of his statement to the Senate Select Committee on Small Business opposing S. 719 and the companion House measure (H. R. 2820).

He urged all Senators to "work and vote against" the proposal when it came before the Senate.

"S. 719 is a bill to aid the growth of monopoly and the exercise of monopoly power by big business," Cowan said in his statement.

He pointed out that the measure seeks to achieve this result "on behalf of monopoly" by "legalizing the most powerful weapon that can be employed by large and powerful corporations to keep smaller competitors under their control and to suppress competition among themselves."

"That weapon is price discrimination," he added.

COWAN SAID that by selling to customers in one locality at lower prices than it charges other customers throughout the country, a large corporation can punish and put out of business small or local concerns which try to compete with it.

(The government has charged the Atlantic & Pacific stores with engaging in such practices.)

"Thus with negligible financial injury to itself it can inflict fatal injury upon local concerns that dare to sell below the prices it has fixed," Cowan pointed out.

The legislative director said that Congress itself had long ago recognized that price discrimination is a weapon by which monoply can be achieved and competition suppressed.

Prohibitions against price discrimination were written into the anti-trust laws, he pointed out, and the Dept. of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission may and do bring action against concerns caught using price discrimination to punish competitors.

The pending bill would legalize price discrimination by authorizing monopolies to discriminate as they wish, regardless of the consequences, providing the discriminatory reductions in price are made "in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor."

The effect of this provision is to legalize all discriminations that are made for the purpose of punishing small competitors or for the purpose of keeping competitors in line, Cowan pointed out.

Cowan also noted in his statement that he was filing it with the Select Committee because only it had given opponents of the bill an opportuniy to be heard.

The Standing Committee on Small Business of the Senate recommended the legislation without holding public hearings.

Coast Phone Strike Ends In Victory

THE WAGE pattern in telephone is all settled, but the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. is going to try to force every union on the Coast into striking before it will agree to a new contract.

That's the judgment of veteran organizers and negotiators of the CIO Communications Workers.

To back it up, they point to the 10-day strike of 9000 CWA operators in Northern California, which was settled last week, and to the shorter walkout of 4000 CWA operators in Oregon.

"Hit-and-run" picket line tactics—first tried in the 1950 Western Electric national strike—were used effectively by the phone operators.

Long distance service, overseas radiophones and manual exchanges were hardest hit by the roving pickets, who marched before new PT&T offices daily.

The phone company struck back by locking out plant department and other telephone workers — members both of CWA and the independent Order of Repeatermen and Tolltestboardmen — for respecting the "hello girls" picket lines. As result, National Labor Relations Board charges are pending.

Settlement of the Northern California strike came on July 29 after a 28-hour bargaining session, with CWA winning these major demands:

- A flat 10% wage increase for all operators (the company previously had agreed to 10% only if it covered all contract costs). Wage boosts will range from $3 to $10 weekly.
- Shortening of the progression, or experience schedule from 7½ to 6½ years.
- Upgrading of wage scales in 38 cities and towns.
- A number of substantial improvements in working conditions and grievance rights of the union.
- Dropping of several "retrogressive" demands of PT&T, notably a "no-strike" clause.

A. T. Jones, CWA international vice president, joined Joe Beardorff, CWA district director, and the local bargaining committee in the negotiations. Mannie Silva was area strike director.

CIO assistance to the striking phone operators was offered by Tim Flynn, Northern California CIO regional director, the Contra Costa and San Francisco CIO Councils, and locals of the CIO Steelworkers and Oil Workers.

Give A Buck To PAC

Can't Fire Member Failing To Pay Assessment — NLRB

UNION assessments — for strike funds, building programs or union papers — got a gratuitous slap last week from the National Labor Relations Board.

In another controversial case involving the CIO United Auto Workers, the NLRB ruled that employes covered by union shop contracts cannot be dropped from their jobs if they fail to pay the union-directed special assessments.

The Board's unanimous decision held that such payments do not come under the definition of monthly dues and initiation fees —payment of which may properly be required as a condition for holding a job under a union shop contract.

The ruling affected the UAW's pact with Intl. Harvester Co. at Louisville, Ky. It declared that the contract was not a "bar" to a new NLRB election sought by the AFL Carpenters Union and the unaffiliated, Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers.

A CURIOUS angle of the case lies in the fact that the UAW local at the Harvester plant has no right—under the UAW constitution—to levy a special assessment anyway.

The last UAW convention, which increased auto union dues, amended its constitution to forbid assessments of any kind, by either the national union or the locals.

The pact at Harvester, running five years and signed before that convention action, provided that each union member, as a condition of employment, must keep up his union membership "to the extent of current monthly union dues, general assessments and initiation fees, if any . . . "

Basis of the NLRB action, however, was Taft-Hartley language which forbids the dropping of members from the union — and hence, from their jobs where union shop pacts are in force—except for non-payment of initiation fees or "periodic dues."

THE BOARD'S interpretation was that assessments do not qualify under that language of Taft-Hartley.

In making its decision that the contract was not a bar to an election, the NLRB then ordered a new poll within the next 30 days among the plant's 1500 employes.

The Board sought to justify its decision by maintaining that Congress wrote that section of the Taft-Hartley law with the "De Mille" case in mind.

Cecil De Mille, the Hollywood bigshot, got much publicity when he refused to pay a one-dollar assessment levied by a radio performers' union to fight a proposed anti-closed shop law in California.

NLRB Kills Union Shop Rule Threatening 5000 Contracts

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board, by a 3 to 1 vote on Aug. 2 reversed a two-week-old decision that threatened nearly 5000 union shop contracts signed by CIO unions during the 1947-49 period.

By its latest action, the Board held that these contracts stand as a bar to elections, sought by competing unions for the duration of the agreement. The Board's decision and its later reversal, involved the contract of the CIO Auto Workers at Canton, Ohio.

In its first decision the Board had cleared the way for a craft union to get an election, despite the UAW's five year contract with the company.

The NLRB had at first decided that because CIO national officers had not signed Taft-Hartley Act non-Communist affidavits until 1949, union shop elections and subsequent contracts won by CIO unions betwen 1947 and 1949 were subject to challenge.

That decision brought forth stormy protests from CIO unions, which argued that the Board had gone far beyond the limit required by T-H in making its Ford-Canton decision.

It also brought an announcement from Sen. Taft (R. O.), co-sponsor of the act, that he would introduce a bill in Congress legalizing the elections. Since all CIO national officers have now signed the non-Communist affidavits. he explained, it seemed "wholly unnecessary" to hold new elections.

An NLRB spokesman said it was the first time in the Board's 16-year history that it had reversed itself on a single case.

Challenge WSB Control Over Wages Paid Seamen Shipping To Foreign Ports

TWO CIO unions, the National Martime Union and the American Radio Association, have challenged the right of the Wage Stabilization Board to review wage increases they recently negotiated with major shipping companies.

In a memorandum submitted to the WSB by Herman Cooper, general counsel for both unions, the seamen and radio operators contended the Board has no legal right to pass on the terms of the agreement because the 10% wage formula does not apply to men engaged in foreign shipping.

In support of this contention, Cooper cited Section 713 of the Defense Production Act which says:

"Provisions of this act shall be applicable to the U. S., its territories and possessions and the District of Columbia."

The memorandum quoted from U. S. Supreme Court decisions to back up the unions' view that American ships engaged in foreign commerce were not part of the U. S. within the meaning of the price wage control law.

UNION spokesmen have estimated that 90% of the membership of the two unions are employed by lines engaged in foreign trade. They concede that WSB authorization would be required for the remaining 10%.

The outcome of the case will not only have a bearing on the wages of 86,000 workers in the maritime industry, but might also influence the status of employes of trans-oceanic airlines and workers of American corporations employed abroad.

The two unions signed a contract with major Atlantic and Gulf Coast shipping companies after an 11-day strike last month which provided an 8% direct pay raise on top of a 6.3% increase won by the unions last October.

In addition, the basic work week was cut from 48 to 44 hours, with a further cut to 40 hours to become effective Dec. 16.

The companies have complained that the combined effect of the wage increase and the drop in weekly hours, plus liberalized vacations and other concessions in the new contract will lift the earnings of seamen well above the 10% wage formula established by WSB.

Muench Wage-Hour Head In N.Y.-N.J. Area

Frank J. Muench has been appointed regional director for the New York-New Jersey region of the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Div. of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

He succeeds Arthur J. White, who resigned to become director of the recently organized Regional Wage Stabilization Board. He has been a member of the division's staff since 1939 and assistant regional director since 1944.

Cost-Of-Living Order Continues

WSB Eases Rules On Merit Pay, Bonuses

THE WAGE Stabilization Board last week liberalized its regulations on merit pay increases, and authorized payment of certain types of periodic bonuses without board approval.

It also extended its earlier regulation—which would have expired July 31—allowing wage increases under cost-of-living clauses pending adoption of a permanent board policy.

The regulation provides that such increases may be paid if they are covered by a contract signed before Jan. 25, 1951, even though they may pierce the WSB's 10% formula.

The new merit pay raise regulation will, in the words of Chairman George W. Taylor, "allow maximum flexibility but avoid a flank assault on stabilization."

The bonus ruling authorized "customary bonus-practices" under certain limitations without applying them against the 10% wage increase formula.

The merit increase regulation applies to workers paid on a time basis—by hour, week, or month. It covers white collar workers as well as production employes.

IN NO CASE can merit increases or changes in piece rates be used as an excuse for boosting prices, the board said.

Employers who use "rate ranges" for each job—paying a worker more as he improves or gains experience on a particular job—may increase pay for merit or length of service by one of the following methods:

1. According to past practices: Whatever the employer's actual increases amounted to in 1950, except that the top rate for each job may not be raised.

2. Advancing a worker's rate up to 6%, but again the top rate must remain unchanged.

3. Following an established plan for a group of workers that was in actual operation on Jan. 25, 1951. Such a plan must have maximum and minimum limits for each job and must set limits on the total amount of merit raises that normally may be made each year.

This kind of program can be followed even if it results in increases that aggregate more than 6% of the group's straight time pay.

THE BONUS regulation permits companies to continue making payments that are usually made once or twice a year, such as at Christmas or at the end of a fiscal year.

It does not apply to bonuses computed more often than every three months, nor to incentive type bonuses directly related to hours worked or units produced.

In order to continue in operation without board approval, a bonus plan must conform to the following standards:

1. It must be based on an established plan which sets forth a formula for computing the bonus.

2. It must have been in continuous operation since Jan. 25, or it must have been in a written agreement completed before Jan. 25, 1951.

3. The method of computing it must not be changed from the method used in 1950.

4. If a company does not have an established plan, it may go on paying bonuses to workers as long as the amount paid in one year does not exceed that paid to a worker in the preceeding year.

5. If an employer wants to increase bonus payments by changing the formula for computing the bonuses, he must apply that increase against the 10% allowable wage boost.

United Front Pays At Flint

THE CIO'S newest affiliate, the National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians, is finding it pays to present a united labor front when dealing with an anti-union employer.

When the Engineers voted to strike at Station WTAC, Flint, Mich., on July 13 because of alleged unfair labor practices and prolonged negotiations, the CIO members expected to have to fight the battle alone.

They found, however, that their picket line was respected from the beginning by both CIO and AFL unions. The strike, now in its fourth week, is still receiving the support of all organized labor in Flint.

Officials of the AFL Flint and Genesee County Building Trades Council were first to notify CIO Regional Director Robert Carter that they would give 100% backing to the strike. Other unions have followed their example.

In another NABET action, the National Labor Relations Board has ordered an election at NBC's TV Station WNBW in Washington, D. C., to determine if non-performing employes in the program department desire to be represented by NABET.

"Got a TV set I presume. I only sit for families that have them."

California CIO Steps Up PAC To Help 'Unhorse Reaction'

By WILLIAM MILLIS

"REACTION IS in the saddle and we have to unhorse it!"

That was the challenge to the second convention of the California CIO Council—just as Congress was finishing the job of sticking the knife into labor and consumers.

To organize effectively in '51 in preparation for '52, the California CIO convention—after much debate, many caucuses and two roll call votes—authorized a new and expanded legislative and political action program.

The convention was held in San Francisco July 27-29.

Established by the convention was a special state legislation and political education fund, to be financed by an additional 2c per capita on all affiliated unions. On a statewide basis, the program is comparable to the citizenship fund set up by the last Auto Workers' convention.

A Prime Goal

A prime goal of CIO under the new program is to make use of California's initiative and referendum.

These will be used to seek enactment of a little Wagner Act, a union security bill, fair practices legislation and other measures which have been blocked for years in the big business and big farmer-controlled California Legislature.

Haywood Wished Speedy Recovery

Delegates to the California CIO convention sent the following telegram to CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood while he was a patient at Mercy Hospital Pittsburgh, Pa.:

"California CIO Industrial Union Council in convention assembled at San Francisco offers prayers to Almighty for your quick recovery, and calls upon your indomitable will to assert itself over mere flesh.

"The labor movement, your life passion, has many tasks yet for you. We have problems here in California that await your counsel. Love from everyone."

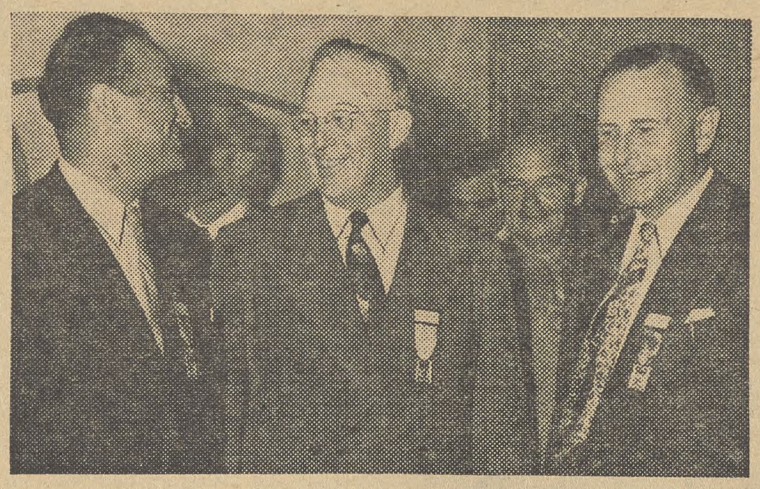
The 125,000—member, Council's goal is a "political realignment" to "bring farm, labor and all liberal forces together in an alliance for political action . . . through which political parties will become responsible for delivery to the people of the policies and programs for which they vote in elections."

The California CIO's new political education fund will be used also in support of general PAC education and organization and in state and local campaigns.

It will also be employed in support of CIO legislative representatives at Sacramento during legislative sessions, and to back a campaign to end the state's long-standing cross-filing system.

While the immense political action task took much of the convention's attention, the California CIO acted on a number of immediate economic and legislative issues.

Full and hearty backing—and a pledge of financial and other assistance as necessary — was pledged to the Communications Workers on behalf of 9000 CWA telephone operators then on strike against Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. throughout Northern California.



"HYSTERICAL LEGISLATION" was condemned by Gov. Earl Warren of California (center) at the California CIO Council convention at San Francisco. With him are Council Secy.-Treas. John A. Despol (left) and Council Pres. Manuel Dias.

The Oil Workers, likewise, were offered full assistance in seeking to reverse recent NLRB decisions tossing out blacklist cases dating from the 1948 statewide oil strike.

Ask Effective Controls

The convention wired Congressional conferees on the Defense Production Act demanding a law which will "effectively control inflation for the consumer and protect our defense mobilization program."

The Council opposed the pending state constitutional amendment to write the Levering "loyalty oath" into the constitution. It declared "the safety of our country and freedom rests upon more solid and dependable shoulders than professional patriots and loyalty bugs."

Top officers who led the Council in its first year since organization —after cleaning out of commieline groups in command of the former California Council — were re-elected without opposition.

They are President Manuel Dias, of UAW-CIO Local 76, Oakland, and Secy.-Treas. John A. Despol, of Steelworkers Local 2018, Los Angeles. Also elected was an executive board of 25 from the several international unions.

The challenge to CIO members to "unhorse reaction" and to "remember '52 in '51" came from David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Political Action Committee and Steelworkers' international secretary-treasurer.

Reaction Assailed

McDonald—who also is assistant to Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston—spoke "as a labor man and not a government official" and assailed the drive in Congress for "no price controls and absolute wage controls."

Warning that Soviet Russia would "rather conquer America by rampant inflation, and our reactionaries seem to agree with them," McDonald said "we of the CIO have fought a good fight against the reaction of Communism, but now we must fight the other fight against reaction on the right. We can win that fight but it is going to take work."

Another top CIO official, Joseph A. Beirne, condemned "unrealistic" controls imposed on labor with no effective controls on prices.

Beirne, CWA president and a member of the Wage Stabilization Board, said "the 10% formula now is even more unrealistic than when it was established. Unless that formula is increased, there will be no other recourse to American workers than to demonstrate their disapproval."

California's Gov. Earl Warren, speaking at his first State CIO convention, urged expansion of the state health-disability insurance and unemployment insurance programs to "find some better way to meet the high cost of medical care."

'Magnificent Job' —Murray To Confab

Greetings of CIO Pres. Philip Murray to the California State convention for "a magnificent job in the past year" were sent to the San Francisco convention.

They were delivered by David J. McDonald, Steelworkers and PAC secretary-treasurer.

McDonald voiced a similar message from Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization and councils, and added this pledge by Haywood:

"CIO is not going to rest until every worker in California is free from the last vestige of Communist domination of unions."

He was warmly applauded by convention delegates when he attacked "hysterical" legislation supposedly aimed at Communists, and particularly for his veto of one such bill recently voted by the legislature.

The convention speakers—USA Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes and George L. P. Weaver, former director of the CIO Anti-Discrimination Committee—emphasized the urgency of intensified action in support of CIO's civil rights program so as to "close the gap between what we preach and say about democracy and what we do."

The CIO regional directors in California, Irwin L. DeShetler of Los Angeles and Tim Flynn of San Francisco, urged the Council to continue in the union-building program.

'Prohibition Wedge'

You Won't Like Higher Taxes On Your Beer

PROHIBITION must not be reimposed on the U. S. under the guise of a tax law, Pres. Karl F. Feller of the CIO Brewery Workers last week told the Senate Finance Committee, now considering new tax legislation.

"Fanatical forces of prohibition, which are ceaslessly active in our national and state capitals, view any increase in alcoholic beverage taxes as a step toward prohibition," Feller said. He branded proposed increases "unfair, ill-advised an short-sighted."

Moreover, Feller pointed out, a higher tax rate may actually mean much less in total tax income. He warned that additional taxes on beer, "the workingman's drink," might place it beyond reach of the public and destroy the industry.

Feller said that in recent years "the size of the beer glass has been shrinking and its price has been rising," primarily because of increased taxes. He noted that the federal tax on beer has jumped from $5 to $8 a barrel, while state taxes range from 62c per barrel (in California) to $14.40 (in South Carolina).

Other Taxes

There are also numerous additional local taxes, federal and state license and permit fees, as well as general corporation taxes on breweries.

The union president said that the "saturation point" on beer taxes has already been reached, and that diminishing returns have already set in. In 1947, he pointed out, the amount collected in federal beer taxes amounted to almost $703 million, but in 1950 the total fell to $662 million.

Many of the same facts also apply to proposed increases in the taxation of distilled spirits from $9 to $10.50 per proof gallon, Feller said.

Heavier taxation, he warned, would bring back the racketeer, hijacker, bootlegger and speakeasy and "would be an invitation to organized crime on a national scale."

"This Committee and this Congress," he added, "have no mandate to reintroduce national prohibition. I assume that this Committee and this Congress are too well aware of the social catastrophe which is called the 'Noble Experiment' to even contemplate its restoration."

Feller's remarks underscored the fact that a higher tax rate alone does not necessarily mean a higher tax income for Uncle Sam.

Figures Support CIO

The CIO in previous testimony has urged that most of the increased taxes necessary to pay for defense should be obtained through increases in the excess profits on corporations and, by plugging loopholes in the present tax law.

Figures released by the Dept. of Commerce last month reveal that private industry wage and salary income is falling off, although the total of personal income is increasing.

Wages and salaries were at about the $140 billion annual rate in May, about $1 billion lower than in April, but personal income totaled $249.5 billion—about $500 million more than in April.

This means that most of the increase in personal income came to those on farms and in farm and in businesses, in dividends and interest, rents received by landlords, and other types of individual income.

In other words, the workers' wages fell by $1 billion while gains to capital went up $1½ billion.

Corporation profits are more than double the previous record set in World War II, but spokesmen for big business are trying to pressure Congress to shift most of the tax burden upon the lower-paid, wage and salary workers.

Railroads' Plea

Typical of their approach is the statement of the Association of American Railroads to the Senate Finance Committee. The AAR said proposed increases in corporation income taxes would hamper the railroads in expanding to meet the needs of the defense program.

J. Carter Fort, representing the association, claimed that railroads must rely primarily on earnings to finance expansion.

Fort conveniently forgot that the railroads are among the big benefactors of the tax write-off scheme made possible under the terms of the Defense Production Act.

Corporations have been getting "certificates of necessity" permitting them to write off 50 to 85% of the cost of new facilities within five years. Nearly 3000 such authorizations, amounting to $8½ billion, have been granted.

In the week just before Fort testified, more than $140 million of $395 million approved that week under the program went to railroad equipment and expansion projects. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. alone got concessions on a project costing $51,936,200.

Test Vote Lost In TV Ad Fight

A VOTE last week on a sample issue before the Common Council failed to settle the question of commercial programs on a proposed city-owned television station in Milwaukee.

The Council agreed to postpone final action till Sept. 11. Earlier, CIO-backed non-commercial forces lost, 12 to 13, when the sample issue was put up to test Council reaction.

Commercial broadcasting on the city station would reverse the agreement made with the Federal Communications Commission last April to reserve a television channel for "non-commercial educational purposes."

Fred A. Erchul, secretary-treasurer of the Milwaukee Industrial Union Council, said the CIO position was that mass communication media which help form public opinion should not be entirely controlled by commercial interests.

At least one TV station, he maintained, should be used for education and cultural purposes.

U. S. System Of Jobless Pay Asked By CIO

THE CIO last week asked President Truman to call upon Congress to enact an "adequate" national system of unemployment insurance to be tied in with the social security system.

The request was served on the President in a letter signed by Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Committee on Social Security and president of the Textile Workers.

Rieve cited unemployment in auto and electrical plants because of the defense programs, layoffs in Kansas and nearby states due to the flood, and joblessness in some consumer industries.

"We believe this is an appropriate time," he wrote, "for you again to urge Congress to enact legislation to prevent the hardships that result under present inadequate state laws, which make up little more than one-third of lost wages for most of our jobless members.

"With profits virtually guaranteed to many manufacturers and continuing at amazingly high levels, wage earners should not in contrast be suddenly left without enough to cover the cost of rent, food, and other essentials.

"The inadequacies of existing state unemployment insurance laws were spelled out in your message to the last Congress on Apr. 6, 1950.

"The increased cost of living has more than nullified any modest improvements in benefit levels that have since been enacted by state legislatures.

"The CIO believes the federal government should establish an adequate national system of unemployment insurance, coordinated with old age and survivors insurance and affording all workers proper protection, regardless of where they live.

"Proper handling of defense manpower problems likewise requires a coordinated U. S. Employment Service rather than 51 independent systems . . ."

Indiana's Action Cuts Off U. S. Funds

Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing last week cut off $18 million in federal welfare funds earmarked for Indiana because of the State Legislature's recent enactment of a law requiring that recipients' names be made available to the public.

Ewing had no choice under federal legislation. This specifically provides that if a state wishes to receive federal funds, it must submit a program for approval.

Congress also required that each program "must . . . provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants and recipients to purposes directly connected with the administration of the program."

The Indiana Legislature, which is Republican-dominated, was warned of the consquences when the act was before it and passed it over the veto of Gov. Henry F. Schricker. State GOP leaders flayed Ewing for refusing to defy Congress and continue the grant.

Office Wages Rise In N. Y. C.

OFFICE workers in New York City have at last caught up with a few of the increases in the cost of living that have been bedevilling them for the last couple of decades.

A survey by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, shows that their earnings increased by 15% to 20% between February, 1948, when a previous study was made, and April, 1951.

The survey was based on the wages paid some 565,000 workers in the city's five boroughs employed by more than 650 concerns which voluntarily supplied payroll information. The results are considered representative of the wages paid in 4200 establishments employing 1.3 million workers.

The figures made public show that wages increased from $6 to $8 a week for most white collar job classifications studied.

Secret Ballot Keeps 'Coerced' Strikers Out

The company said the union was keeping the men out by coercion. So a secret vote was taken by outsiders. The vote: To return, 38; to stay out, 127.

About 175 members of the CIO Chemical Workers, walked out at the Great Lakes Carbon Co. plant at St. Louis on July 19 in a dispute over seniority promotions. The company made a back-to-work proposal, asked for a secret vote. The union agreed. The vote was supervised by R. Walston Chubb, an attorney, and Prof. Joseph Klamon, of Washington Univ.

Is Ex-Rep. Thomas In Chips? U. S. Hopes So—To Get Fine

THINGS apparently have been going fine again for J. Parnell Thomas, former Republican Representative from New Jersey, who recently was released from prison after defrauding the government.

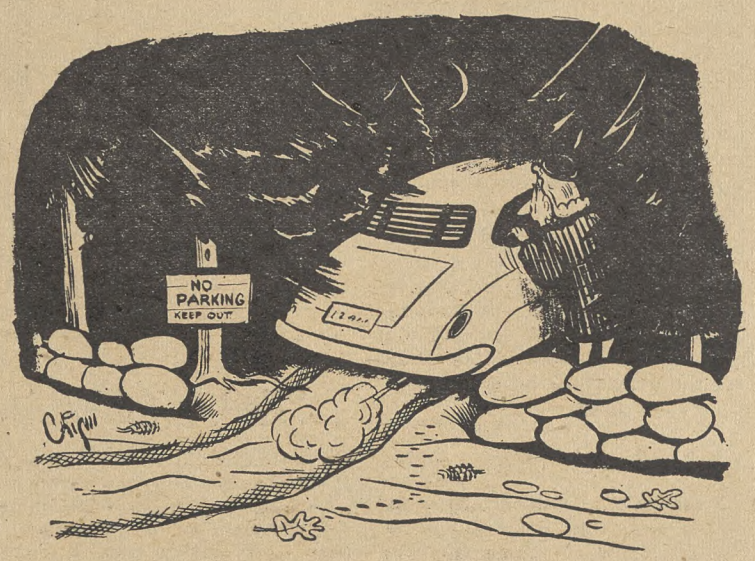
Thomas reportedly is planning to purchase a chain of three newspapers in Bergen County, N. J.

If the reports are true, the government hopes that things may be fine enough for it to collect a $10,000 fine imposed on Thomas with the prison sentence for padding his Congressional payroll and exacting kick-backs from his employes.

U. S. Attorney Grover C. Richman announced last week that he had begun to recheck Thomas' financial position.

"We intend to collect the fine," Richman said. "If an informal inquiry shows that Thomas has acquired income to go into the publishing business, we will then make a formal investigation with a view of making him pay the fine."

Thomas first came to public disgrace through his high-handed actions in ignoring witnesses' rights when he was chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee. He was paroled from the Federal House of Correction at Danbury, Conn., last September after serving nine months of a six-to-18 month sentence.



"Good evening, have you people contributed to the community fund lately?"

Mass. GOP Aims To Hurt Jobless Pay

A TERRIFIC struggle over Massachusetts Unemployment Compensation is being fought in the State Legislature.

The fight has been going on for several months. On one side—the side that wants to cripple the law and make it increasingly unpopular with employers—are the Republicans and Massachusetts Council for Employment Security.

The Democrats under the leadership of Gov. Paul A. Dever are seeking to retain and strengthen the present law.

The aim of the Republicans, according to Albert Clifton, Massachusetts CIO Council legislative agent, is to make the employers so unemployment-compensation-conscious that they will fight every claim for the benefits.

THE SAME gimmick to accomplish this purpose is in every one of the five bills introduced by the Republicans at this session. Every cent that is paid out in unemployment compensation would be charged to each employer's reserve fund, which is established through a payroll tax.

The Democrats have been fighting off this GOP foray, but the outcome of the struggle is still uncertain.

A bill containing Dever's proposals to build up the unemployment compensation funds and to retain the present payments of $25 for 23 weeks, died in committee because the Republicans would not consent to an extension of the hearings.

Two Republican-backed measure—both designed to make employers fight every unemployment compensation claim—are now before the House Ways and Means Committee.

There is a possibility that the Democrats who control the Committee may report out a measure containing Dever's proposals.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

During Mr. Haywood's absence this column is being prepared by members of his staff.

I take this opportunity of expressing my heartfelt thanks and appreciation to my many friends of the CIO in all our unions—international, national and local—for the kind expressions sent to me in many ways during my recent confinement in the hospital. I am happy to report that the operation was successful and I am now out of the hospital. I am going for a rest and will soon be back with you all, rolling our unions on. In the meantime, R. J. Thomas will continue with the splendid work he is doing. I also want to especially extend my thanks to the staff members in the field who have been so loyal and are doing such great work. My appreciation to all of you.

REG. DIR. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at the Charles Levy Co., the Clothing Workers emerged with a victory by a 12 to 3 vote. Union Rep. Sam Krips was in charge of the campaign.

Allan Haywood

W. J. Trombley of the Oil Workers reports a representation election victory at the Gulf Refinery, Neville Island, Pa., by the following vote: eligible 192, OWIU-CIO 112, no union 61, challenged 13.

Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson reports that CIO Local Industrial Union 1767 won a representation election at the Keller Packing Co., Inc., Orcas, Wash., by a unanimous vote of 36 to 0. In a union shop election among members of LIU-CIO 1584, who are employes of the National Farmers Union Service Corp., Seattle, Wash., the vote was 58 for and 1 against. All election arrangements were handled by the local union officers.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in a representation election at the International Harvester Co. parts warehouse, Memphis, Tenn., the workers favored the UAW-CIO by a vote of 51 to 33 for the AFL Teamsters. This campaign was conducted by UAW Rep. James Harden.

A. F. Hartung, vice president of the CIO Woodworkers, reports the following representation election victories: Priest River Lumber Co., Priest River, Ida., eligible 19, IWA-CIO 10, no 9; Schotthoefer Logging Co., Lyons, Ore., eligible 15, IWA-CIO 11, no 4; Schaeffer-Hitchcock Corp., Sandpoint, Ida., eligible 21, IWA 15, no 5; L. D. McFarland Co., Sandpoint, eligible 20, IWA-CIO 17, no 3; Hitchner and Hitchner, Sandpoint, eligible 12, IWA 9, no 3; Tyrrell County Lumber Co., Columbia, N. C., eligible 82, IWA-CIO 51, no 18; Leon C. Thompson Lumber Co., Chocowinity, N. C., eligible 28, IWA-CIO 18, no 4.

Reg. Dir. John Maurillo reports that the IUE-CIO won a representation election at the General Electric Co. plant at Auburn, N. Y., by the following vote: IUE 18, IAM 0, void 2, neither 2.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that the CIO Furniture Workers won a representation election at Sun Glow Industries, Inc., Logan, O., by a vote of 74 to 37 for the AFL. Dir. of Orgn. William Gilbert and Rep. Frank Hargroves were in charge of the campaign, and the CIO Shoe Workers in Logan gave a great deal of assistance. In a representation election at the Ternstedt Corp. (GM), the timekeepers voted 33 to 14 in favor of the UAW-CIO. In a union shop election cafeteria workers of the North American Aviation Corp., who are members of the UAW, voted 41 to 0 in favor of the union shop. Intl. Rep. Waldo Sneary handled the election.

Pres. Martin Wagner of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers reports two representation election victories: Koppers Coke Co., Westfield, N. J., UGC-&CWA-CIO 46, no union 3, challenged 3, void 1; oil mill plant of Swift & Co., Portageville, Mo., UGC-&CWA-CIO 33, no union 3, challenged 1. The latter was organized by Intl. Rep. Martin R. Wente.

Reg. Dir. Charles Cowl reports that the Transport Service Employees, CIO, won a representation election at the American Celcure Wood Preserving Corp. by a vote of UTSE-CIO 27, against 2.

FTC Cracks Down On Standard Oil

Federal Trade Commission last week ordered five Standard Oil Cos. and Atlas Supply Co., which they control, to discontinue certain monopolistic practices. The order affects "TBA" products, tires, batteries and accessories.

This action affirmed the decision of a trial examiner filed on June 5. Standard Cos. and Atlas Co. must not use their combined purchasing power to force discounts and rebates, the Commission ruled.

The ruling forbids any "combination, conspiracy or planned common course" by the Standard-Atlas combination which would force tire and accessory makers to sell at lower prices to the combine.

Standard Oil Cos. named were those of Ohio, Kentucky, California, New Jersey and Indiana.

More Women Workers

More women are going to California manufacturing plants, the State Dept. of Industrial Relations reported last week.

A steady seven month rise in the number of women employed has brought the total to a post-war high. Significantly, the report added, larger numbers are employed in durable goods industries.

Peril To U. S. Fails To Halt 'Oil Grab' Plans

TEXAS, Louisiana and California were voted a "gift" of $40 billion by the House last week.

But most of the benefit would go to the big oil companies. The American people would be the losers.

It happened this way:

Back in the 30's, private oil companies began to take millions of dollars in oil from the lands under the ocean off the coasts of these three states. Assuming that the land belonged to them, the states leased oil rights to the companies.

The U. S. then had a Secretary of Interior named "Honest" Harold Ickes. He questioned the title of the states to this land, and in 1938 urged the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt to authorize a suit to determine ownership and control of offshore oil lands.

The war delayed action, but in 1945, President Truman, acting on Ickes' recommendation, ordered the Attorney General to file suit against California. The powerful oil lobby got busy in Congress at once.

Even before the Supreme Court had ruled, Congress passed a "quitclaim" bill giving full title to the submerged land to the coastal states. President Truman vetoed the measure, pointing out that Congress was not the "appropriate forum" to determine the fate of a legal question "of great importance to the Nation."

Three Court Rulings

In 1947, the Supreme Court handed down a ruling against California. The court said that the U. S. had "paramount rights" to the "lands, minerals and other things" under the ocean off the California coast.

The following year, the Dept. of Justice filed similar suits against Louisiana and Texas, and in 1950 the Supreme Court also ruled against these states.

The oil lobby continued to exert pressure "in the right places." Immediately after the first Supreme Court ruling, the House, in 1948, passed another quitclaim bill.

That was in the Republican-dominated 80th Congress, and the vote was 257 to 29. Only seven Republicans voted against the bill.

The measure was approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee, but then the historic legislative snarl for which the 80th Congress is remembered came to the people's aid. Despite lobby urgings, the measure never reached the Senate floor.

U. S. Needs Oil

Meanwhile, President Truman has been trying to get Congress to pass a law giving the government authority to lease offshore lands for development to private oilmen.

The oil is urgently needed for defense purposes, but Congress has ignored that fact. It has been sitting on the President's request, while hatching the measure which the House approved last week.

In terms of national defense, Congressional apathy on this issue means that, if war should break out, the U. S. would be faced with a shortage of 500,000 barrels of oil a day. The U. S. is already importing oil.

The under-water oil resources are estimated to contain at least 13 billion barrels. The "dispute" over ownership has seriously delayed development of wells, as well as geophysical exploration of the area.

Another Veto Likely

The new bill approved by the House would give the oil land in the coastal seas back to the states. The oil companies find exploitation of natural resources much easier to effect when they deal with state officials.

President Truman has indicated that he will again veto any "state rights" bill.

The House vote, 265 to 109, was, however, sufficient to override his veto, and Rep. Walter (D. Pa.), sponsor of the measure, was confident that the Senate also would not only pass the measure but would do so by more than a two-thirds margin.

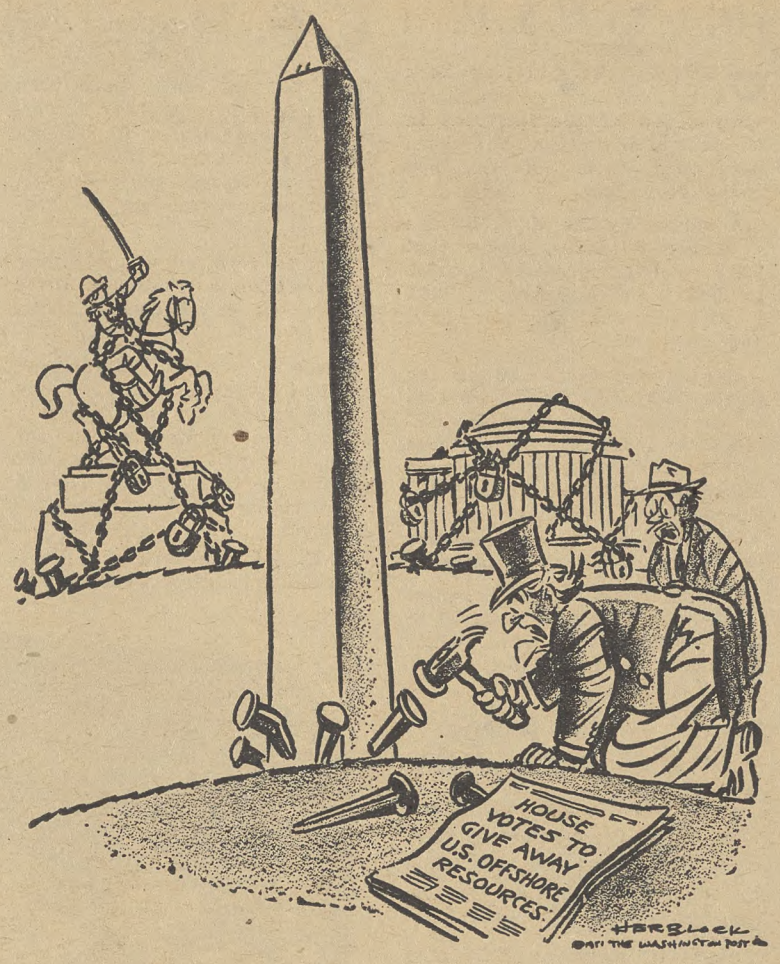
If Congress should pass the law over the President's veto, however, it would not mean more production of oil. There is serious doubt that Congress has the legal authority to dispose of the lands in question.

Delay pending another Supreme Court ruling would seem to be a certainty.

Solicitor General Philip B. Perlman told the Senate Interior Committee this year at tidelands hearings that, whether the Senators acting for the oil interests "like it or not," the Constitution makes the Supreme Court the final arbiter of disputes between states and the federal government.

Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), chairman of the Senate Interior Committee, pointed out that it would be impossible for the states to own the land because of its status in international law. Perlman supported this view.

While the battle between the special interests and the federal government over this issue was pending in the court, the nation would be denied even the use of the oil in the undersea lands. It might even place the nation in grave peril.



—From Washington Post

"No Use Taking Any Chances These Days"

3 Subversive Control Board Members OKd

THE SENATE judiciary Committee has approved three of the President's nominations to the Subversive Activities Control Board, set up under the McCarran Communist control law.

Approval of the appointments had been blocked by McCarran since last year in order that he could keep a club over the Board during its public hearings to determine whether the Communist Party must register under his law.

At the same time, however, the committee took an indirect slap at the most liberal member of the board, former Rep. Charles LaFollette (R. Ind.), by failing to act on his nomination. McCarran has been critical of LaFollette's insistence that the Communists be given a fair hearing.

A fifth member of the board and its chairman, Republican Lawyer Seth W. Richardson, recently resigned his post.

MC CARRAN, a most active supporter of Spanish Dictator Franco in Congress, has also blocked confirmation of the President's Commission on Internal Security and Individual Rights.

That unit was created by President Truman last January to study the problem of providing internal security while at the same time protecting individual rights and freedoms.

The Commission is headed by Admiral Nimitz and many other prominent citizens from both major parties. Although the House voted to exempt the members from the "conflict of interest" laws, McCarran, as chairman of the powerful Senate Judiciary Committee, succeeded in bottling up this measure.

His action has prevented a study not only of the impact of internal security laws on individual rights, but also an independent survey of the workability and effectiveness of the laws—including McCarran's own — intended to protect the nation from sabotage and subversion.

"Seriously concerned" by the delay, President Truman two weeks ago took steps to at least partially get around McCarran's block.

He ordered the National Security Council, made up of key Cabinet officers and top defense officials, to investigate the way the Government loyalty program is being administered and whether changes are needed.

Aid Medical Education, Marshall Says

DEFENSE Secy. George C. Marshall last week tried to prod Congress into acting on the program of federal aid to medical education, which the legislature has been sitting on for some time.

Marshall warned that the number of physicians, dentists and nurses is "well below" civilian and military needs.

He added, "There is a much greater threat of large-scale civilian disasters resulting from the existence of more modern weapons which we can expect will be used against us."

His remarks were contained in a letter to Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), chairman of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee. The Defense Secretary said federal aid to medical schools is needed to keep up high professional standards and, at the same time, make sure that medical schools educate the maximum numbers which their facilities will support.

Murray's committee some time ago approved a bill (S. 337) to provide emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental and nursing education, but the Senate has not yet considered it. There has been no action in the House.

Following receipt of Marshall's letter, Murray said the measure will be up for Senate debate in a few days.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taxes H.R. 4473	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House passed bill providing $7,206,000,000 increase. Senate Finance Com. now holding hearings.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30. Has since shelved all pending bills.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com. due to act soon.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.
Labor Dept.-FSA Appropriations. H.R. 3709	Appropriates funds for operations of the Labor Dept. and Fed. Security Agency.	In conference.	Ask Senators and Congressmen to restore funds cut out.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 13, 1951 82 No. 33

8% Cost-Of-Living Rise Is Predicted; Johnston Sees Food Prices Jumping

(See Story Page 3)

WELCOME HOME: When Tony Troilo—who lost both feet in the Korean War—returned to see his former fellow workers at the Allen Iron & Steel Co. plant at Norristown, Pa., he was warmly greeted. Tony (in the front center of the photo) is receiving a $2000 check from Pres. Kenneth Hoffman of Steelworkers' Local 2296 at the plant. On the other side is Richard Davidson, staff representative of USA-CIO Dist. 7, whose members voluntarily contributed the money. Tony hopes to return to his former job of operating the drill press which appears in the background. Troilo's feet were frozen when North Koreans — who had captured him — forced him to march barefooted in the snow for 21 days. He also is an Army veteran of World War II.

McCarthy, Under Attack, Continues Smear Tactics

Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) on Aug. 9 named 26 persons in the State Dept. whom he claims are charged with "Communist" activities.

But the Senate's smear artist had difficulties of his own. Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) called for his ouster after a Senate Elections subcommittee denounced McCarthy's part in the 1950 Maryland campaign, in which former Sen. Tydings (D) was beaten. (See Page 12.)

New CIO Insurance Pact Sets Industry Precedent

A precedent-setting agreement has been negotiated by the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee and the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Wage and working conditions provisions in the new pact, now awaiting union ratification, are well above industry standards. The agreement provides for a 14% commission, to be increased to 15% next year; union shop, dues check-offs and better grievance arbitration. (See Page 2.)

CIO Insurance Agents Win First Hancock Contract

A CONTRACT agreement that will make the industrial insurance agents of John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. the highest paid in the business was reached last week between the CIO Insurance Co. the highest paid in ganizing Committee and the company.

The agreement remains to be ratified by vote of the general membership. It is the first reached since the IAWOC won bargaining rights in a National Labor Relations Board election in May.

The new pact calls for a flat wage increase of $7.14 per week. The weekly premium collection commission was increased to 14% and goes to 15% in January 1952. The commission paid by competing companies averages 12½%.

In addition, the agents will get "continuing" commissions on policy renewals as long as they remain with the company. This applies to all policies sold since Jan. 1, 1947. In other companies the agents only receive commissions on the first few years' renewals. All other commissions, flat allowances, bonuses and expense arrangements also have been increased.

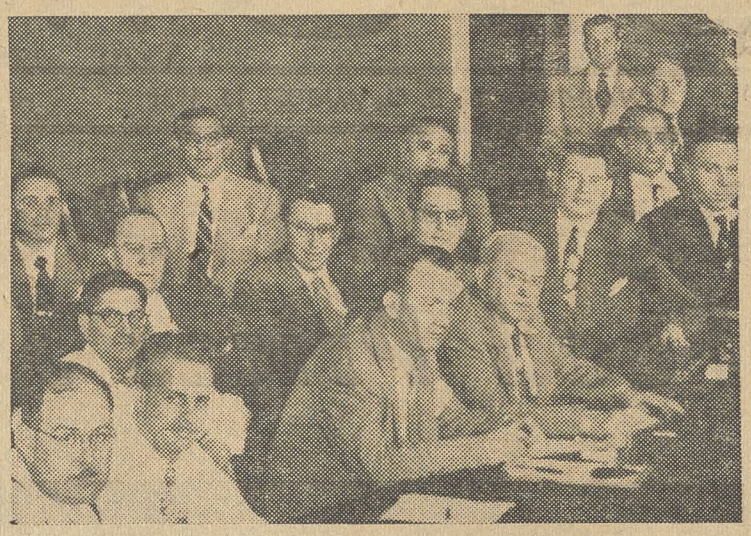
The contract also calls for paid vacations, the union shop, check-off of dues, and improved arbitration procedure which covers all grievances, including discharges.

THE CONTRACT is to run until June 30, 1935, with reopenings in April and October 1952, and April, 1953. All phases of the contract can be discussed at reopenings, and the union reserves the right to terminate the contract and take economic action if necessary. About 6000 agents are covered.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization and councils, participated in the initial negotiations. He expressed satisfaction over the terms of the agreement.

"I am happy that we were able to win the improved working conditions and increased compensation for the Hancock agents," he said, "Our next task is to organize agents in the other big insurance companies and negotiate comparable contracts for them."

Organizing campaigns are currently under way at Metropolitan, Prudential and Boston Mutual life insurance companies.



ANOTHER CIO FIRST: Under the leadership of CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood (fourth from the left) the CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee has reached its first agreement with the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. Haywood is surrounded by some of the other Committee negotiators.

Indiana CIO Hits Act On Jobless

The Indiana CIO Council has issued a formal demand that the Indiana Legislature meet in special session and either repeal legislation which is costing the State $18 million in federal welfare funds, or appropriate a like sum.

The State lost the federal money when the Legislature passed a law requiring that the names of public welfare recipients be made available to the public. Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing blocked payment of the U. S. funds because the State law violated the federal law.

"These people need aid," the State CIO pointed out, "and cannot be expected to be held at the mercy of quarreling politicians and newspapers whose sole purpose is to embarrass the national administration."

How Dixiegop Wrecking Crew Half-Killed U.S. Role In UN

By MILTON PLUMB

THIS IS the story of how the Republican-Dixiecrat "wrecking crew" in Congress has already gone half-way toward killing U. S. participation in the United Nations.

It is a shocking story of irresponsible men in Congress, but it reveals the Dixiegop politics-first strategy in all its details.

Last month, when the State Dept. appropriations bill was pending in the House, the Republican policy committee captured the headlines by announcing its support of an amendment sponsored by Rep. Phillips (R. Calif.) to withhold the salary of Secy. of State Dean Acheson.

Administration Democrats concentrated their attention on this proposal. They were joined by enough responsible and patriotic Republicans to beat it down easily when the test vote came.

Meanwhile, the Republican-Dixiecrat "wreckers" created another diversion. Rep. Clevenger (R. O.) called for a $15 million cut in funds for the Voice of America. The Appropriations Committee had already cut $30 million from the VOA budget request.

Seventeen Republicans then made speeches, one after the other, bitterly attacking the Voice.

Mimeographed copies were made available in the press gallery even before they began to speak. Later, it was learned that all had been ghost-written, and given to the Congressmen to read by Republican strategists.

ADMINISTRATION Congressmen rallied their forces and beat down this move, too, by a vote of 167 to 137. Debate consumed four days. The "wrecking crew" saw to it that the "get Acheson" and "kill the Voice" movements got all the headlines possible.

While attention was concentrated on them, the "wreckers" called upon two Dixiecrats actually to perform their real dirty work. Almost unnoticed in the press until after the bill had left the House and gone to the Senate were two amendments sponsored by Reps. Davis (D. Ga.) and Williams (D. Miss.).

Although their language is that of legal niceties, their effect is to weaken critically U. S. participation in the United Nations and other international organizations.

The Davis proposal, approved 117 to 102, reduces U. S. contributions to international organizations by $3 million.

The Williams amendment, approved 155-137, provides that U. S. contributions to international organizations must not exceed 30% of the estimated total annual budget of each organization.

The CIO, in a letter to each Senator, last week expressed "great concern" over the effects of these riders. Pointing out that if the House action stands, the U. S. would have to default on its present commitments to UN and inter-American organizations, the CIO said:

"OUR FAILURE to pay the assessments levied on us in accordance with the constitutions of the various organizations could only be interpreted as a weakening of U. S. support and renunciation of all that we have expended in strengthening these organizations to cary out their objectives."

President Truman also struck out at the action. In a letter to Chairman McKellar (D. Tenn.) of the Senate Appropriations Committee, the President said that failure to pay what America owes to the UN would "jeopardize our moral standing in the world and threaten the very existence of the UN."

He said that he could not conceive that the members of the House—had they known what they were voting—would deliberately risk the ruin of the UN "merely in order to save $3 million."

"If by some chance that is what any member of Congress does intend," he wrote, "it would be far better—and far more direct and honest—if he were to offer legislation which would withdraw this country from its membership in the United Nations, the Pan-American Union, the World Health Organization and the rest."

New Escalator Policy Recommended By WSB

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has approved a new regulation to permit wages to rise with the cost of living.

Final approval of the order is up to Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston, but the unanimous vote of the Board was expected to influence his decision favorably.

Previously, cost of living contract clauses were permitted to operate only if they were signed prior to last Jan. 25.

WSB Chairman George S. Taylor termed the board's decision "an exceedingly important plank" in wage stabilization policy.

If approved, the resolution would allow escalator clauses tying wages to the consumer price index, signed before Jan. 26, to continue indefinitely. It also would permit companies which do not have similar escalator clauses to install them, so long as the raise in pay is limited to actual changes in the cost of living.

In addition, parties who do not want escalator clauses would be permitted to re-open their wage contracts in order to make periodic adjustments to meet increases in the cost of living.

Taylor explained that while the Jan. 1950 date would apply as a base from which escalator clauses could operate, this date would be changed in cases where it would mean "perpetuation of inequities."

The WSB has appointed a six-man advisory committee to work with it "in the development of a stabilization policy on health, welfare and pension programs." The committee is composed of labor, industry and public members, and held its first meeting last week.

Labor members are Harry Becker of the CIO Auto Workers and Carl Huhndorff of the AFL Machinists.

Utility Workers Push PGE Vote

Petitions of the CIO Utility Workers for system-wide representation elections for over 14,000 Pacific Gas & Electric Co. workers in Northern California have been found in order by the National Labor Relations Board, according to Clem J. Lewis, UWUA national representative.

Objections by the AFL Electrical Workers, now representing both physical and clerical workers, prevent an early consent election, Lewis said. NLRB hearings must be held before an election is ordered.

Physical workers in the Bay Area were represented by the UWUA and those in outside divisions by the IBEW until 1950, when the IBEW won a system-wide election.

CIO Asks Legislation To Save Union Shops

THE CIO last week urged passage of a new bill to protect the union-shop conditions won for workers in thousands of factories throughout the country, and suggested the measure should have support from both political parties.

The proposal was made in a letter sent to Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) by Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel. Humphrey is chairman of a labor-management sub-committee of the Senate Labor Committee.

"We are confronted with a practical situation threatening the stability of industrial relations in thousands of plants," Goldberg wrote, in reference to the recent Labor Board decision at the Ford Canton plant, where the five-year contract of the CIO auto workers was at stake.

WHILE a reconsidered decision of the NLRB un-did some of the damage caused by the Board's first ruling in the case, Goldberg said that "its long-run repercussions threaten to be much the same as those of the original decision . . .

"Faced with that situation, we must find a practical solution, which can only take the form of legislation to deal with this particular problem," he wrote.

In his letter to the Minnesota Senator, Goldberg pointed out that the "CIO remains unalterably opposed to the Taft-Hartley Act and all of its provisions, for the reasons which we have frequently stated to your Committee and elsewhere. The remedy in our considered opinion is complete repeal."

The NLRB's decision in the Ford Canton case held that the UAW contract could not be a bar to an election by a competing craft union, and that the union shop provision could not be enforced—because it was signed at a time when CIO national officers had not yet signed the Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavits.

THE CIO at the time was testing the constitutionality of the affidavits. In addition, the Labor Board itself had ruled that affidavits were not necessary from officers of the CIO, provided the officers of the union actually using the NLRB's services had signed them.

The affidavits were eventually upheld as constitutional, and the NLRB's own ruling was overthrown by the Supreme Court.

In making its recent Ford case decision, however, the Board was accused by CIO and company attorneys of going far beyond the provisions of Taft-Hartley.

After strong protests from the CIO, the Board held hearings on the matter and came up with its second decision.

"The new decision does eliminate some of the drastic consequences of which would immediately have flowed from the original decision," Goldberg wrote to Sen. Humphrey.

But, he said, with a view to the long-range dangers, "the CIO has decided to ask your assistance, and that of the (Senate Labor) Subcommittee of which you are chairman, in securing appropriate legislative relief."

Reuther Says:

Tax Well-Heeled Luxury Spenders

THE SENATE Finance Committee will begin closed door sessions on Aug. 13 to determine its action on the House-approved $7.2 billion tax increase bill.

Six weeks of public hearings on the measure, which falls far short of the $10 billion in additional taxes requested by President Truman, were concluded by the committee last week.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers last week filed a proposal calling for a "progressive spending tax" with the Senate committee. Reuther said that his suggestion would increase tax yields while at the same time cutting the pressures of inflation.

Chairman George (D. Ga.) of the Senate Committee said last week that he expects that the 13 members of the committee will take about two weeks to work out changes in the House measure. That would mean that the bill would not be ready for Senate debate until the end of August.

THE HOUSE had set Sept. 1 as the beginning date for higher income taxes, which are one of the bill's main money-raising features. George said that, in view of the short time remaining, he did not believe that the Senate would adhere to this date and that he would recommend setting it at Oct. 1 instead.

The delay in applying the new scales—which the House made higher in the upper income brackets than big business spokesmen liked—would in itself reduce the government's income considerably. George gave no indication of other changes which the Senate may make in the House measure.

It is generally believed, however, that the Senate group would try to shift more of the tax burden on lower and middle income families than the House proposals would do.

In his midyear economic report to Congress last month, President Truman again warned that a $10 billion tax increase is necessary to help meet the threat of inflation.

He was supported by his Council of Economic Advisers, who also submitted a separate report the same day criticizing the House bill on grounds that it would neither balance the budget nor give needed support to the program to control inflation.

The progressive spending tax, Reuther pointed out, would mean little or no additional burden on persons with low incomes. But, he said, it would dig deeply into "luxury" spending by higher income groups.

REUTHER SAID that the rates for the "spending tax" and also the size of the exemption could be easily changed according to the needs for revenue. He cited as an example, an exemption of $1500 a person and said that this would mean that a family of four would have to pay the tax on only what it spent above $6000.

The tax rate on the excess spending would increase progressively under his plan. Thus, the rate for those spending $1000 or less above the exemptions might pay 10% while those spending $10,000 or more above might pay 75%.

"Such a tax obviously would be a powerful deterrent to non-essential spending," Reuther urged. "Yet if the exemption level were set high enough, no family would be hampered in the purchase of necessities. Every well-to-do family could maintain a high standard of living—only its standard of luxury would be somewhat curtailed."

REUTHER'S proposal was offered as a counter-measure to the sales tax, which has been called for by the National Association of Manufacturers and other big business groups. The UAW leader said that the NAM proposal would shift a tax burden of more than $5 billion a year from families earning more than $5000 to those earning less.

Terming the NAM proposal "a steal from the needy for the benefit of the greedy," Reuther said that it would make "sharecroppers" out of persons earning less than $1000 a year with the government taking 51% of their income.

"In all the NAM's history of blind, reckless and socially irresponsible greed," he charged, "there has never been an example of heartless rapacity to compare with that."

Johnston Warns

Weak Controls May Cost Public $16 Billion In Year

AMERICAN consumers may pay $10 billion to $16 billion during the next 12 months just to meet higher living costs stimulated by the failure of Congress to enact adequate anti-inflation legislation, government stabilization officials predicted last week.

Economic Stabilizer Eric A. Johnston told Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson last week to expect living costs to spiral upward that much, as a result of the new controls law.

Percentage-wise, that is an expected increase of from 5% to 8%. Government economists estimate costs to the country rise $2 billion for each 1% rise in the cost of living.

Johnston told Wilson that the new controls law probably would have its first inflationary impact in higher prices in barber and beauty shops, and on automobiles.

Inflation Ups Cost Of African Brides

Maybe it's inflation, but it is a fact that the price of brides in Khartoum, in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan of Africa, was recently increased from 20 to 50 spears each.

The decision to up the ante was made at the annual chiefs' meeting in the Zande District. The chiefs also voted to outlaw the practice of purchasing a bride on the installment plan. The price must now be paid in full by the prospective husband before delivery.

Fifty Sudan spears are worth approximately $10. They're not covered by price control.

BUT OFFICE of Price Stabilization officials expected other more basic cost-of-living items—especially food—would also be caught on the price spiral as a result of the combined effect of the new controls law and new freight rate hikes.

Increased freight rates were authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission last week. OPS officials said that they would mean "significant increases" in costs to consumers, running into millions of dollars yearly.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics last week reported another fractional rise in retail food prices during the three-week period ending July 15, leaving them 12½% higher than just before the outbreak of the Korean war. An eight-city BLS survey showed higher prices for chickens, pork, dairy products and eggs.

Agriculture Dept. experts pointed out, however, that most of the boost in food prices will be pocketed by the middleman, not the farmer. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics predicted that a bumper crop this fall would keep prices from rising at the farm level.

They added that the spread between farm and retail food prices may increase because the new controls law relaxes the limitation on profit margins of processors, wholesalers and retailers.

Economists predicted that the middlemen would not "pass up" the chance given them by Congress to increase margins of profits. Average retail food prices during the first half of this year were 15% above last year.

ROBERT W. WINN, National Production Authority enforcement chief, warned that big-time racketeers would try to muscle in on the mobilization program, and said that there is a danger of steel, copper and aluminum black markets developing.

With this situation in mind, Pres. J. E. Fadling, of the CIO Woodworkers, told the sixth annual convention of his union's Plywood, Box Shook and Door Council that there are only two kinds of controls working at present in this country.

One control, he said, is that maintained over wages, while the other control is "that maintained by the National Association of Manufacturers over national legislation being passed by Congress."

Great Britain To Reinstate Price, Dividend Controls

RISING PRICES and inflation will be met in Great Britain by price and dividend controls.

Hugh Gaitskell, Chancellor of the Exchequer, voiced the position of the Labor government on the twin evils in a resolution placed before the House of Commons to open debate on Britain's economic position.

Quoting the Chancellor, the British Information Services say retail prices in Britain rose 9% in the year ending May, 1951. (American retail prices rose 8.8% in the same period.)

Unlike the United States, the British never gave up the power of controlling prices by law, the Information Services point out. Only Orders in Council are required to bring any part of the price control machinery into operation.

"One of the steps which can be taken is price control, and after 10 years' experience of it, there is no doubt in my mind of the valuable part it has played in checking inflation," Gaitskell said.

He said increased profits resulted not so much from more efficiency as from "consequences of much wider world events."

Rather than be "continually frustrated" in efforts to check inflation and the rise in the cost of living, Gaitskell promised controls would be introduced in the autumn.

Woods Predicts New Rent Law Will Speed Roll Backs Around Defense Posts

THE PRIMARY purpose in administering the new rent control law will be "to protect military and defense workers and their families from exploitation," Tighe E. Woods, Director of Rent Stabilization, said last week.

Military families will be protected against "capricious eviction" from company housing, and all tenants in designated critical areas will be guaranteed against unjust eviction generally, he added.

"This rent law can and will roll back the exorbitant rents around reactivated military installations," Woods promised. Specifically, he mentioned high rents on "tar paper shacks" as an early target for the Office of Rent Stabilization action.

Under the new law, once the Secretary of Defense and the Director of Defense Mobilization designate a critical housing area, rent control can be applied to every type residential rental in that area. Of the 40 areas now so designated 29 are without rent controls.

Woods pointed out that accommodations such as hotels, tourist homes, motor courts and new construction, now exempt from rent control, can be brought under control when they are in an area certified as critical.

(Under the new law, Woods has a new title—he was formerly Housing Expediter.)

Protection of military families in company housing against eviction is assured. An exception is allowed when the company proves a particular accommodation is needed to obtain or retain a key employe.

To evict for alterations, a landlord must create additional self-contained family units, improve the unit for continued use as a dwelling, or show alterations are necessary to conserve the dwelling.

Murray To Speak On Radio Sept. 3

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will deliver his annual Labor Day address over the American Broadcasting Co. network on Monday, Sept. 3, at 8:45 P.M., Eastern Daylight Time.

Not For MVA Alone

CIO President Murray's recent letter to President Truman, urging a stepped-up program of flood control and river valley authorities, has brought forth a highly sensible reply from the White House.

Mr. Truman knows the Missouri Valley states' problem from long experience, both as a Senator and as Chief Executive. He also knows "that there have to be more forward-looking, liberal-minded members of Congress from these states before you can expect action to be taken."

That is true, not only for MVA or other river projects, but for a whole range of l e g i s l a t i v e projects which have been gathering dust in Congressional pigeonholes.

There might be more liberals in Congress if more people registered, got to know the issues, and voted for candidates who look to the future rather than run away from it.

The President's letter reminded us that "there are a lot of people who take little interest in flood control until a disastrous flood occurs."

There are also a lot of people who take no interest in politics until the day after their favorite candidates have been licked in the elections.

The moral of the story? Even though these be the dog days of August, 1951, it's not too early to start political action work for that crucial day in 1952 when the flimsy record of the Congress will be subject to the people's ballots.

Talking Of Inefficiency . . .

The Senate and House, like the Hatfields and the McCoys, have got a feud on.

To date, it's a knock-down-drag-out affair, and both sides are exactly even. Neither is giving an inch—and essential legislation is getting nowhere as the result.

The fight is over how funds for personnel to staff government agencies should be cut.

The Senate passed an amendment making a straight 10% cut in personnel funds. The House, on the other hand, likes the proposal of Rep. Jensen (R. Ia.) which would prevent agencies from filling more than one out of every four jobs that become vacant during the year.

Appropriation bills for the Interior Dept., Labor-FSA and Independent Offices have come out of conference without including the Jensen rider. Each time the House has sent them back, with instructions to its conferees to insert the provision. The Senate conferees, however, are holding out just as firm.

Meanwhile, not a single major appropriations bill for the present fiscal year has gone to the White House. But still the Dixiegop wreckers in Congress have the gall to continue talking about "Administration" inefficiency.

Is This Where We're Heading?

General Electric engineers, according to a news story, are looking for practical uses for atomic energy.

One test "offers hope of turning sawdust into cattle feed."

Further tests, we suppose, will turn horsemeat into roast beef, lamb chops and steaks.

At which point—we further suppose—the price of horsemeat will rise to $1.25 a pound; and General Electric will try to wiggle out of its contract with the CIO Electrical Workers on grounds that the corporation is really engaged in agriculture!

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, W. P. Welsh

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIV August 13, 1951 No. 33

All The Cribbing Isn't At West Point

The Senate & McCarthyism

BY MAX LERNER

(Reprinted From The New York Post)

I'M GLAD that Sen. Benton of Connecticut had the courage the other day to call the U. S. Senate's attention to the facts of life about a member named McCarthy.

Since the days of Bilbo of Mississippi the Senate hasn't had so solid and serious a ground for expelling one of its own members. A Senate subcommittee has censured him for his unprincipled role in the Maryland campaign against Tydings . . . with a sharpness never administered to any Senator in my memory.

Benton knows that McCarthy won't resign, and he knows also that the Senate will not drum up the necessary two-thirds vote to expel him. But the time has gone for giving McCarthy the silent treatment or the kid-glove treatment. The Benton resolution at least takes the offensive toward a man whose terrorism has always put others on the defensive.

The U. S. Senate hates to court trouble for itself, and prefers to act on the assumption that every member is a gentleman in a gentleman's world. It is curious to see a Senate which whips itself into a lather about the question of the honor of West Point, failing to take action about the honor of the U. S. Senate so cynically betrayed in the Maryland election.

The Senate subcommittee pointed out that Butler had been elected by a "back-street campaign" conducted by a Chicago public-relations man called Jonkel and a couple of McCarthy's lieutenants; that the whole thing was lawless as well as grossly dishonest; that any Senator who, like McCarthy, uses methods of fraud and lawlessness in the campaign of another Senator is equally guilty with him.

BUT having led us to the water's edge, and invited us to dip our feet in its cooling justice, it sends us back to the locker-room.

The Senate rules, the committee says, ought to be made clear and sharp enough to deal with such cases in the future. It is as if a jury had brought in a verdict saying: "The murderer is guilty as Gehenna, and his brutality makes our blood congeal. Therefore we recommend that there ought to be a law in the future making murder illegal."

There are signs that even his Republican colleagues are finding McCarthy an albatross who has fastened himself to their necks, and is riding them to their doom.

He has debased every issue he has touched. He has made chronic and pathological use of the big lie. He has taken a serious issue of our era—the question of whether a public servant can be trusted because of his associations with a potential Communist enemy—and caricatured it until it has become too grotesque to use except by paranoiacs and political mobsters.

We shall never know how many decent and intelligent young men kept away from public service, simply because they have recoiled from the enormities of politics of which he has become the symbol. He has worn out the language of political abuse, so that each of his attacks forces him into more extravagant language than the last.

NOTHING quite like McCarthy has crawled out of the dark and maggoty crevices of America's Cro-Magnon period into the Senate of the United States. How shall we try to explain him? He is the expression of the deep impulses of violence in our time.

In Eastern Europe he would have been a Communist commissar, in Germany a Gauleiter, in a Latin-American dictatorship he would have been a putsch-making colonel, in an Arab country he would have been one of the Grand Mufti's trusted lieutenants.

In our own culture he plays cops-and-robbers, setting up an elaborate spy-network with money furnished by vague and nameless "friends," and surrounding himself with the air of high secrecy and low terror cultivated only in grade B movies.

Above all he has made hate the central theme of politics. I can only repeat about him what Benjamin Rush, the famous Philadelphia doctor of the Revolutionary period, wrote to his sons: "In battle men kill without hating each other; in political contests men hate without killing, but in that hatred they commit murder every hour of their lives."

'No Grub, No Work,' Egyptians Said 3100 Years Ago

A UNIV. OF CHICAGO scholar has dug up—literally—a strike that took place some 3100 years ago.

Just about the time the siege of Troy was going on, workmen excavating and decorating the tomb of the Egyptian Pharaoh, Ramses III, in Luxor's "Valley of the Kings," refused to work because they didn't get their pay on schedule.

The record of the strike is in an ancient Egyptian office memorandum, translated in the current issue of the Journal of Near Eastern Studies, by William F. Edgerton. Edgerton is professor of Eyptology and chairman of the Dept. of Oriental Languages, in the university's Oriental Institute.

The workers literally went out on strike, leaving their job in the Pharaoh's tomb, and gathering in other nearby places.

When government officials were hastily summoned, the workers refused to go back, explaining:

"It is because of hunger and because of thirst that we come here. There is no clothing, no ointment, no fish, no vegetables."

Although the record is incomplete, the workers apparently struck five times during the course of a single year when their rations were not delivered on time or were inadequate.

Each time they refused to work until the rations were delivered. Apparently they won their point each time.

Even though there was inflation at the time, which had increased the price of wheat 500%, and which might have made it difficult for Ramses III to gather enough food for them, Edgerton suggests the strikers might have been working a primitive shakedown racket.

One of their relatives, named "To," had been appointed vizier to the Pharaoh, and was the second most powerful man in Egypt. Instead of being near starvation, the workers in the royal tomb may merely have been putting pressure on their relative.

The apparent lenience with which the strikers were treated by meeting their demands may have been due either to the influence of To, or to the importance of their work.

The Pharaoh needed the tomb workmen, because one of the most important purposes of his life was the building of the structure which would perpetuate his life after death as a "great god."

First notice of the strikes is found in a primitive fragment of ancient pottery in a Berlin museum. The continuing story, on mutilated papyrus, was set down for the record by an ancient scribe and is currently in a museum in Turin, Italy.

Investigation of the tomb of Ramses III at Luxor was first begun in 1925 by members of the staff of the Oriental Institute at the Univ. of Chicago.

Scuttling Of Seaway Project Held Harmful To U.S., Canada

POWERFUL Washington lobbyists set back the national interests of both the U. S. and Canada when they succeeded in scuttling American participation in the St. Lawrence Seaway project.

So declared M. J. Coldwell, leader of the Commonwealth Cooperative Federation Party, last week at an international student seminar at St. Alexandre College, Quebec.

Coldwell said that the Canadian Parliament is less influenced by lobbyists than the American Congress. Pressure groups find it more difficult to work under the Canadian system, he contended, because the cabinet as a whole, not the individual member, initiates legislation.

"In the United States, however," he said, "Congressmen, because they are in a better position to initiate legislation, and at the same time because they are not as well disciplined by their national party organizations, often yield to interests which conflict with the national interest of the country."

MEANWHILE, bipartisan supporters of the seaway in the Senate last week moved to include funds for the project in the $8½ billion foreign aid program.

Sens. Moody (D. Mich.) and Aiken (R. Vt.) have asked for an amendment to the pending legislation on the grounds that the seaway would open the midwest to direct communication with Europe and permit importation of iron ore from Labrador.

Moody left Washington Aug. 7 on a brief trip to Europe to discuss the program with Gen. Dwight Eisenhower and other U. S. and European leaders. He said that he hopes to learn of "further need" for the seaway with respect to increasing foreign commerce with Great Lakes industrial centers.

The House Public Works Committee has prevented the House from voting on all seaway proposals which have come before it.

Conn. State Employes Forbidden To Strike

Connecticut has joined the list of states denying public employes the right to strike.

In a ruling involving a five-year-old salary dispute between the Norwalk Teachers Association and the school board, the State Supreme Court said public employes may not "engage in concerted action such as strike, work-stoppage, or collective refusal to enter upon duties."

Report Of Profits Shows

That 'Anguished Cry' Is Strictly Phony

Business, in spite of its anguished howls, isn't doing too badly, according to a report on the second quarter earnings of 450 companies printed Aug. 6 in the Wall Street Journal.

The report showed that in spite of piteous protests about the alleged injustices of taxation, allocations, delay in awarding defense contracts, etc., the companies earned 1.4% more in the quarter ending June 30 than in the quarter ending Mar. 31, and only 2% less than in the quarter ending June 30, 1950.

INDUSTRY GROUPS	Net Profits June 30, '51 Quarter	Percentage of Gain over —or decline from— Mar. 31, '51 Quarter	June 30, '50 Quarter
7 Aircrafts	$ 9,294,049	+ 37.6	+ 1.4
6 Airlines	7,595,910	+129.5	+17.0
26 Autos and Equipment	170,889,953	— 1.4	—46.0
24 Building Materials	40,272,687	— 5.2	—13.0
24 Chemicals	148,866,557	+ 2.2	— 1.8
8 Coal Companies	5,883,033	— 15.0	—36.5
7 Distillers	16,289,854	— 62.3	—43.7
11 Drug Makers	14,633,530	— 29.4	+ 0.6
14 Electric Equipments	63,147,149	— 16.9	—17.2
5 Farm Equipments	42,899,837	+ 99.4	+19.1
14 Food Products	20,733,918	— 25.8	—18.5
28 Iron and Steel	171,261,436	+ 10.4	—13.7
12 Mining and Metals	19,009,306	— 8.3	+36.4
6 Office Equipments	13,307,170	— 0.3	+11.1
18 Petroleums	328,825,839	+ 6.1	+90.1
12 Pulp and Paper	19,506,736	— 6.2	+39.9
10 Railway Equipments	18,093,487	+ 13.8	+16.2
12 Textiles	22,535,912	+ 0.9	+23.0
10 Tobaccos	9,606,556	+ 1.8	—13.2
24 Tools and Machinery	19,863,623	+ 23.0	+38.5
87 Other Companies	68,637,282	+ 9.7	+15.1
TOTAL 365 Cos.	$1,231,153,824	+ 1.4	— 1.5
52 Railroads	125,490,657	+ 36.2	— 1.7
33 Utilities	79,777,349	— 27.2	— 8.3
GRAND TOTAL 450 Cos.	$1,436,421,830	+ 1.4	— 2.0

GI's In Korea To CIO:

Glad Others Are Thinking Of Us Besides Our Immediate Families

"WE ALL enjoyed very much the results of your kindness. It is indeed food to our minds and hearts that others, besides our families, are thinking of us there at home."

Thus wrote a captain in the 35th Infantry Regiment fighting in Korea. His letter was one of a score received by the CIO Community Services Committee, expressing appreciation and thanks to CSC for one of the 1052 CARE packages shipped early this year to the armed services in Korea.

Another letter from a Marine private, a veteran of several Korean campaigns who had been wounded twice in action, declared that the writer considered himself "a real tough guy—that is, until I received your package. It touched me deeper than most people who have not been through this Hell can understand. To me, it symbolized the fact that the people at home do care and have an interest in us," he wrote.

A former member of the CIO Auto Workers, now with the 8th Cavalry Regiment in Korea, thanked the CSC "for such thoughtfulness and unselfish generosity." He declared, "I am proud to have been a member of your organization."

Chaplain Writes

A chaplain in the same regiment wrote: "Just a short note to say thanks for your kindness in sending packages to our gallant American boys here in Korea. God bless you for your thoughfulness. In gratitude the men promise they will continue to fight for everything we all of us hold so dear and will pray for you at home."

The CIO convention last year approved CSC's program to aid men and women in the armed forces.

In cooperation with CARE and the Dept. of State Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid, CSC spearheaded the CARE for Korea Campaign. CSC also launched its own drive among CIO affiliates and members for funds for Korean relief.

The 1052 CARE packages destined for Korea were shipped from this country early this year. Containing food, playing cards, cigarettes and books, the packages were picked up by the War Dept., flown to Korea and given to chaplains for distribution. The appreciative letters from servicemen began to arrive at CSC headquarters in New York shortly afterwards.

Leo Perlis, CSC director, said he got a big kick out of the following letter from a sergeant in the 7th Infantry Division.

Had A 'Ball'

"Last night after things cooled down a little, the section got together and had a little party with your packages we received yesterday. We really had ourselves 'a ball.'

"Some of the replacements arriving here give us the impression the people back home in the states don't know there is a war going on and don't hardly give a damn.

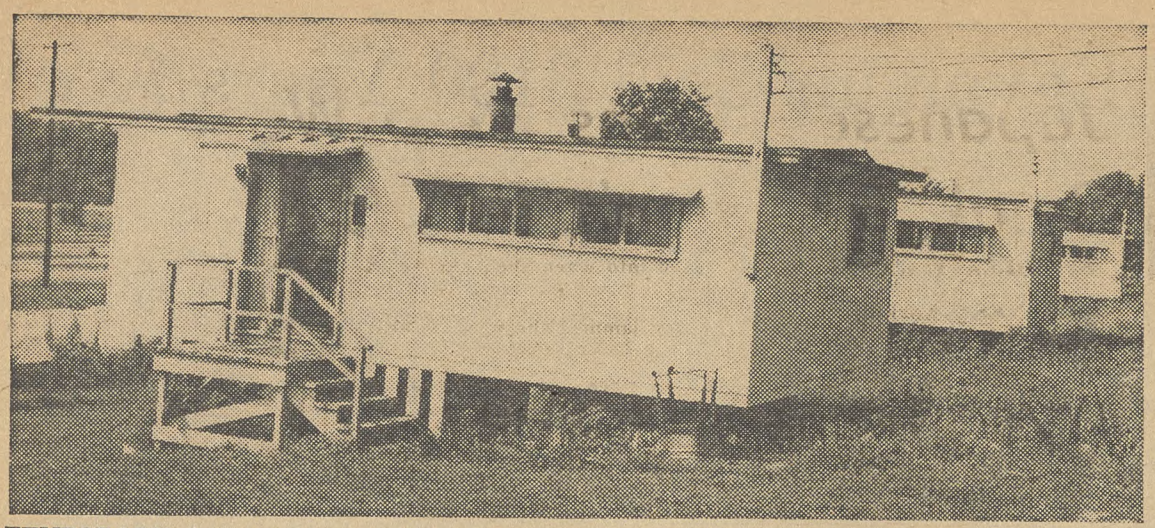
"I've been in Korea 10 months now and this is one of the few times we have been able to eat something from the States we really like. That's all for now. Again, thanks for remembering us. It's a darn good feeling, believe me."

Two CIO Members Win $850 Lost Pay

Two members of the CIO Furniture Workers won back pay settlements after charging unfair labor practices, the National Labor Relations Board reported last week.

Bernard Hefner and William Curtis, fired by the Lenoir Mirror Co., Lenoir, N. C., for union activity, were awarded a total of $850 for time lost. As part of the settlement, the company agreed to post notices that it will not interfere with employes' rights to join and work for their union.

CIO State Dir. Franz E. Daniel said the settlement was reached late in June, but was delayed pending NLRB approval.



TEMPORARY flat tops at Oak Ridge, Tenn. was Atomic Energy Commission's answer to housing problem. The CIO is demanding better conditions there and at other atomic energy plants, where rents are exorbitant as any place in the country.

Better AEC Housing Seen

CIO Committee Hails Farrell's Appointment

THE CIO Housing Committee last week hailed the appointment of Maj. Gen. Thomas F. Farrell to the post of assistant general manager of the Atomic Energy Commission as a major step toward better housing at more reasonable prices in atomic energy towns.

Farrell's post in AEC is newly created. He is on military leave from the New York Housing Authority and on military assignment to AEC.

Leo Goodman of the CIO Housing Committee called the appointment a "strong indication" the AEC is now moving forward to a "realistic housing policy under the prodding of CIO."

Terming trailer and flat top shelters in Oak Ridge, Tenn., Hanford, Wash., and other atomic energy towns "slave state housing," Goodman promised full CIO cooperation to Farrell in any program aimed at cleaning up the mess. Owners of the flat top shelters collect high rents.

Farrell's record in the Army and state and federal governments as a policymaker and operational manager is impressive.

Recognizing housing as a prime factor in manpower allocation, he helped create the gigantic New York housing scheme. Goodman termed "idiotic" any talk the General would not come to grips with the shocking housing conditions in atomic energy towns.

Pres. Martin Wagner of the Chemical Workers has long advocated a public housing program for both old and new AEC projects. Congressional support has been lacking.

The Chemical Workers Executive Board has decided adequate housing will be a major union demand in negotiations with AEC and their sub-contractors.

Give A Buck To PAC

SEEKS PLEDGES: Sam Eubanks (left), executive vice president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, calls on Leland Beard, first vice president of the CIO Glass Workers, to obtain further support for a proposed national labor daily. The picture was taken in front of the union's international headquarters in Columbus, Ohio. Fifty thousand subscriptions are needed.

Inflation Cuts Wages In Canada

CANADIAN industrial workers are losing ground steadily in their race to keep up with the rising cost of living, according to Labor Research, monthly bulletin of the Research Dept. of the Canadian Congress of Labor.

Although average wages have increased in the period between August, 1950, and April, 1951, real earnings—or purchasing power—have declined.

"There is no question that workers are worse off now than they were eight months ago," says the bulletin in its latest edition.

"IN AUGUST, 1950, three out of 10 workers were getting less in real weekly earnings than shortly after the war ended (April, 1946). Now, because prices have been permitted to go still higher, four out of 10 wage earners receive less each week.

"This despite the fact that in manufacturing, average earnings rose from $44.29 to $47.56 per week in the period from August, 1950, to April, 1951."

The bulletin's article is based on official Dominion of Canada statistics.

These show, the CCL found, that whereas 31% of the country's one million workers were earning less in real wages in August, 1950, than in April, 1946, the figure rose to 42% by April, 1951.

"Almost half are earning either less or only up to $1 more each week, in terms of real purchasing power, than in April, 1946," the bulletin continues.

"Another 17.8% are earning only from $1 to $2 more each week. Of the one-third who are getting from $2 to $5 more, about 12% are still below the average wage in manufacturing . . ."

PROFITS DURING the eight-month period ending April, 1951—as in the United States—rose steadily while the workers' purchasing power was being cut.

Profits after taxes were $1.4 billion last year, an increase of more than 76% over 1946. It is expected they will be higher this year, the bulletin says. It concludes:

"The figures on wage-earners' real earnings clearly reflect the hardship that is being suffered by thousands of Canadian workers. The government's failure to impose price controls has led to the situation where Canada is being cited as an example of 'what not to do' in a period of inflation . . ."

In New Orleans

Labor Spikes Effort To Kill Rent Control

ON AUG. 1, between 6% and 7% of the rental units in New Orleans were freed of rent controls—places where the rent is $70 a month or more.

If it hadn't been for a determined, fighting, labor-led opposition, the controls would also have been swept off the remaining 93% or 94% of New Orleans' rented living quarters—the places where most of the people live.

And the real estate lobby, as it so often had done before, would have chalked up another victory for the forces of uninhibited greed.

For the landlords, spearheaded by the Property Owners Association, tried all the dirty tricks that had been used to drive controls out of dozens of other communities. They didn't work because organized labor, consumer groups, the Association of University Women, and religious and charitable organizations had the facts—and justice—on their side.

FIRST, the Association asked the Mayor and the Commission Council to hold a public hearing on dropping controls. That's a logical first step, one required by federal rent control legislation.

The real estate lobby, of course, figured on taking over the hearing and rushing through a decontrol resolution before the opposition found out what it was all about. Its mistake was not to recognize the calibre of the opposition, which included the local Rent Advisory Board.

On the Advisory Board, among others, are Lucille Savore, of the CIO Textile Workers, and Adolph Trascher and P. I. Piro of the AFL. When the decontrol petition was filed, the board asked the Housing Expediter in Washington to have an independent, fact-finding government agency make a housing vacancy survey.

THE BUREAU of Census did the job. It came up with the information that unfurnished rental units in the $70 a month and up class showed a vacancy figure slightly higher than normal. Under that figure, the shortage was as bad as ever.

The Property Owners knew about the result of the survey as soon as the rent advisory group, because its president and chief hatchet man, Marvin B. Farmer, is a member.

The second step in their plan was put into effect with military precision. They attacked the completeness of the survey, said it didn't give a true picture.

Farmer grandly announced that HE would produce a complete survey by the time the public hearing was held, and that it would show more vacancies than the scientific survey conducted by the Census people.

IT DID, TOO. The only trouble was that the figures were phonier than a $12 all-wool suit. They were gathered by the New Orleans Fact-Finding Committee, a rather imposing name for three college teachers, and listed 10 apartment buildings with a total of 2750 vacant units which were not included in the Census Bureau report.

The figures became known the day before the hearing. That didn't give the labor people much time, but they scurried around to check. It was a good thing they did.

For they found out that four of the 10 buildings with more than 1700 units were under construction and wouldn't be ready for occupancy for from three months to a year.

And in the other six buildings, the owners or operators reported 23% fewer "vacancies" than the landlords' research agents turned in.

WHEN THE public hearing was finally held, the new report wasn't even mentioned. But the real estate lobby tried the next trick in the book. It tried to take over the hearing and prevent the Area Rent Director from testifying. The labor and tenant representatives on the Advisory Board screamed so long and so loud that the Mayor and the Commission Council overruled the landlords.

The debate was terrific, but the decontrol resolution was licked by a tie vote. The Advisory Board later unofficially recommended to the Housing Expediter that units renting at $70 or more be decontrolled, and he accepted the recommendation.

Goney Gets Post

Joseph Goney, director of the CIO Steelworkers District 15, in Pittsburgh, has become a member of the Pittsburgh Housing Authority. He replaces James J. Thomas, director of the union's District 17, in nearby Homestead, who resigned because of ill health after nine years' service.

Rent Control In Minnesota City Saved—By Legal Technicality

Federal rent control is still in effect in Rochester, Minn.—home of the famous Mayo Clinic—thanks to a legal nicety.

On June 18, the Common Council voted to decontrol rents. However, Mayor Glenn O. Amundsen vetoed the resolution. To pass it over the veto, the five-sevenths majority was necessary. This was obtained only when the council president voted along with those who cast ballots to override.

Then Atty. Gen. J. A. Burnquist of Minnesota got into the act.

After a study of the Rochester city charter, he ruled that the council president can vote only in case of a tie. Since there was no tie on the vote to override, the council president's ballot could not be legally counted and the veto stood.

Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods refused to take any action, thus leaving controls in force. The Rent Control Act requires that decontrol resolutions be passed "in accordance with applicable local law."

VICE-PRES. GLADYS DICKASON of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, visited hundreds of plants on her 3¼-month official tour in Japan. Here she is with a group of girls employed at the Katakura Silk Reeling Co., in Saitame, looking at some skeins of silk ready for shipment.

A TEXTILE WORKER on the job in Daiwa Spinning Mills, Kanazawa, Japan. About a thousand are employed here, 70% of them women. Some capable leaders are being developed among the women unionists, Gladys says.

Gladys Dickason Finds

Japanese Unions Help Women Break Tradition's Bonds

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

JAPANESE working women are still bound down by age-old customs and traditions, but more than a million of them are eager union members. They're doing all right in spite of the many obstacles they have to overcome.

Gladys Dickason, first woman trade unionist from America to be sent to Japan on an official mission, gave this over-all impression of the progress being made by the working women of the land of our former enemy last week upon her return from a visit of nearly four months there.

Miss Dickason is a vice-president and director of research of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

In her office at ACWA headquarters in New York, Gladys related to the CIO News some of her first-hand observations of Japan.

Visits 50 Plants

She made the tour at the invitation of SCAP (Supreme Command for the Allied Powers) as an expert on activities of women in unions.

To get first-hand information on wages, working and living conditions, and union activities, she visited about 50 plants employing some 120,000 workers, the majority of them women.

She held meetings and conferences with representative groups of local union leaders, both men and women; talked with government officials concerned with labor and women's affairs; conferred with management representatives (union representatives were present); and spoke at a number of union mass meetings.

"The interest shown by women in trade unions and in public affairs is really amazing." Gladys said. "For example, the percentage of women voting in elections is higher than among the men.

"And Americans may blush to learn that more than 80% of the total electorate turn out to vote."

We are inclined to think of Japanese faces as being rather dead-pan—but one of Gladys' most vivid memories is of the bright, glowing faces of the women she looked into when she talked with them.

They jammed the halls to hear her speak. They crowded around eagerly when she visited them in the company dormitories where many of them live. Through an interpreter, they asked her hundreds of questions.

A large percentage of Japanese women workers are very young—the minimum working age is 15. Gladys said that some of them looked to be no more than 10 or 12, but they may have been 15 or older, as Japanese don't show their age as a rule. Only about 15% of paid women workers are married.

In Japan, Wife Has Ma-In-Law Problem

Although Japanese women have made enormous strides toward more freedom in the post-war period, there is one custom in particular which holds them back.

"The mother-in-law still rules the roost as she has always done," Gladys Dickason reported.

When a girl marries, she, her husband and—eventually—their children are all under mama's complete control.

As yet only a slight tendency to break away from this system is evident.

Women's Lot Better

The status of women in industry has been greatly improved by the great body of post-war legislative and constitutional changes which have acted to revolutionize the position of women in Japan.

Among these are the right to vote, first exercised in April 1946; outlawing discrimination because of sex in political, economic or social relations, and provision for equal educational opportunities for women.

The Labor Standards Law, which covers both men and women workers, limits working hours at straight time to eight hours a day, 48 hours a week in manufacturing and other industries, curbs overtime for women, and bars them from dangerous and harmful jobs.

The Trade Union Law, approved in December, 1945, also for both men and women, guarantees workers the right to organize and strike.

"Traditional handicaps against women make both these laws stand out as charters of freedom for women," Gladys said.

More than 12 million women out of a total labor force of 33 million were employed as of February, 1951—latest available figures when Gladys was in Japan. Nearly half of these were engaged in agriculture.

Only about 2.5 million women or 38% of the 6.5 million employed in non-agricultural occupations work in manufacturing; slightly over two million in trade, finance and real estate; a million in service industries, and about 210,000 in government.

One of the striking facts, Gladys explained, about employment in Japan is the large number of unpaid workers there are, even in non-agricultural jobs.

Many Women Unpaid

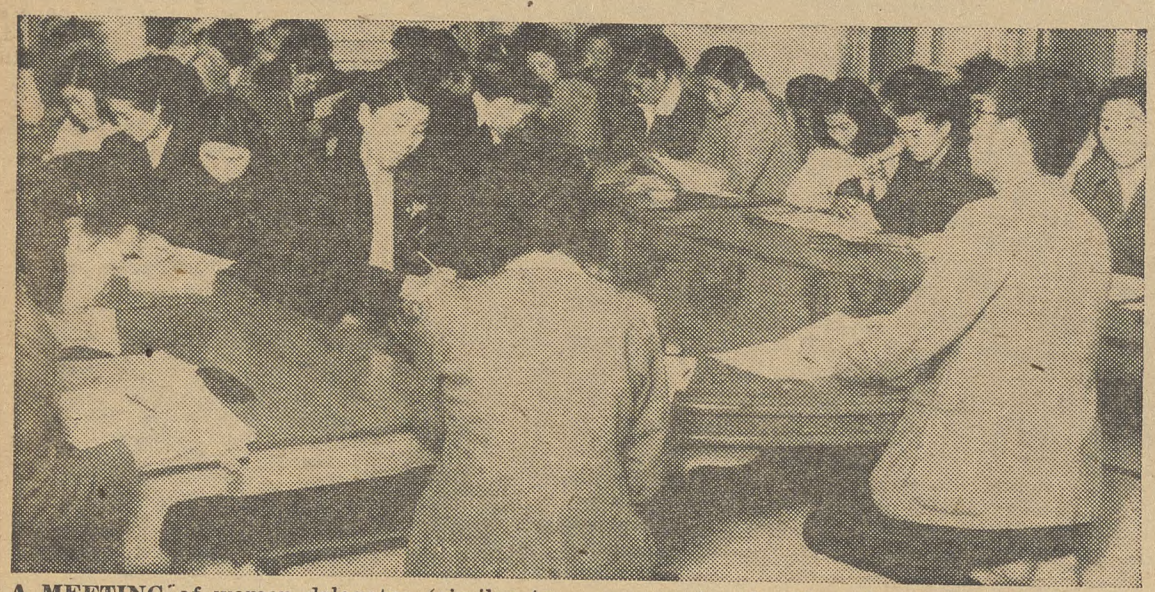
More than seven million workers, or about one-third of all those in this group, both men and women, are unpaid. They come from the great reservoir of home and family enterprises which constitutes one of the serious union problems in Japan.

Nearly three million or 43% of all women workers in factories and shops are not paid. Only slightly more than 1.5 million of the nearly 2.5 million women employed in manufacturing receive pay. Furthermore, cash wages of women workers on the average are less than half those of men.

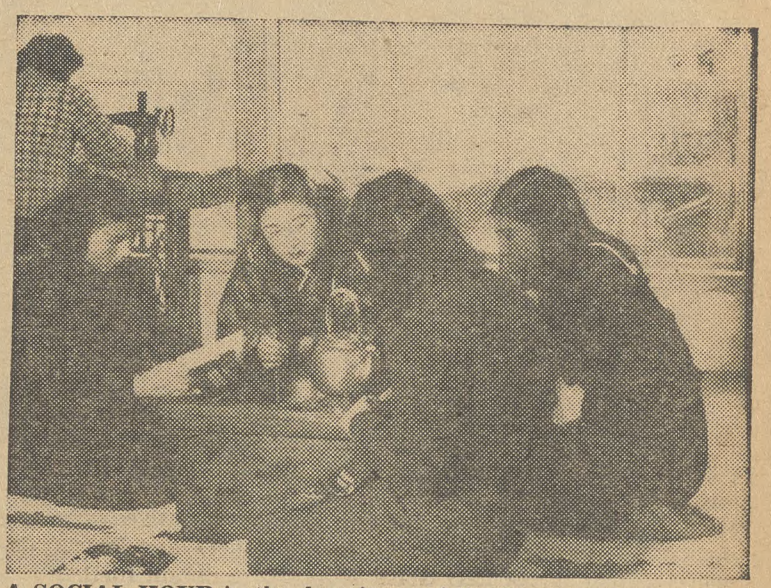
Considering the great handicaps Japanese women workers have to contend with, it is an indication of their regard for unions to note that one out of every four of the total number of members is a woman.

Altogether there are 1,304,332 women members. About 38% of all women in paid employment belong to a union.

The largest single group of organized women workers is in the textile industry, where 284,000 are members of the union. They comprise 71% of the total membership.



A MEETING of women delegates (similar to our shop stewards) at a club house on Kyusu Island, in Japan, where some 35,000 workers are employed. Note the knee-high tables, in front of which the women sit cross-legged on the floor.



A SOCIAL HOUR in the dormitory of the Daiwa Spinning Mills. Japanese women workers—and some men—live in company owned dormitories. They now have self-government.

Delegate Reports

ICFTU Second Congress Spurs Building East's Free Unions

THE CIO delegation to the second world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Milan is back home with a broadened outlook on world affairs.

"It was a good convention, a very good one," said Michael Ross, director of the CIO International Committee, and a member of the CIO delegation.

"It was truly an 'international' meeting, more than most others I've attended, by reason of what it considered and who did the considering.

"The outstanding thing about it, I think, was the extent to which non-European problems were discussed and the high degree of participation in the discussions by non-European delegates.

"THE CONGRESS was greatly concerned with the affairs of the Far East and Near East, and the delegates from those countries took an active part in the debate about them.

"This was pretty important, of course. In the last year, the ICFTU has set up regional organizations in these areas to coordinate trade union activity, and to carry on organizational and educational activity in order to help the unions.

"Our success in those parts of the world is important because of the efforts of the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions to capitalize on the poverty and discontent of the people.

"We in the advanced parts of of the world have to help them through technical and material assistance, which is increasingly important to them and which was continually referred to in speeches.

"THE EXTENT to which the unions are ready to recognize the need of help and advice from the older part of the labor movement is gratifying. The ICFTU is using a very large proportion of its funds to help them to help themselves. It rejects the idea of dominating them as wholeheartedly as they reject the idea of foreign domination."

The American delegation played an active part in congress affairs without "overdoing it," Ross said.

"With the British Trades Union Congress delegation," he said, "we renewed our pledges to the free labor movements of France and Italy to help them in the fight they have successfully started to throw off Communist domination of the unions.

"We encouraged them to strengthen and broaden their attack, and we recognize that they require continued assistance from American unions and the European office of the CIO. They will, of course, get it."

Compromise Home Rule Bill Raises Hope For Vote In D.C.

A COMPROMISE Home Rule bill for the District of Columbia was introduced in the House last week by Rep. Klein (D. N.Y.).

Earlier, a Senate District subcommittee headed by Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) unanimously approved the bill which was designed as a substitute for the Kefauver-Taft measure bottled in committee since April.

Under the Klein bill, which is promised a good deal of bipartisan support, the President would appoint a mayor. Residents, however, would elect a 15 member council and five-member board of education.

The city council would have power to legislate on strictly municipal affairs, including budget-making and taxes. Congress would have the right to repeal any action it fails to approve.

Comment among legislators ran mostly to cautious approval of the measure.

The Washington Post, long an advocate of the franchise for the city, called it "by all odds the best substitute that has been offered for the stymied Kefauver-Tabt bill."

'Bill' Urban, Wyoming CIO Leader, Dies

WILFRED A. Urban, veteran Wyoming CIO leader, died at his home in Sinclair, Wyo., Aug. 8. He was 51.

Urban, a charter member of Sinclair Local 269 of the Oil Workers, had been a member of the international executive council of the OWIU since the council was established in 1936. No other member had served so long.

He also had been secretary-treasurer of the Wyoming State CIO Council since 1938. At the time of his death he was mayor of Sinclair and previously had served on the Town Council since 1935.

Urban had been employed in the Sinclair refinery in Sinclair since 1923. On several occasions he turned down opportunities to run for full time union offices in order that he might remain a rank-and-file union worker.

He was active in Democratic party politics in the state of Wyoming.

O. A. Knight, president of Oil Workers, said:

"Bill Urban held a position in our union that was not approached by any other individual. Despite the fact that he was an uncompromising fighter for the union during some rough and tumble years, he apparently had not a single enemy and was universally respected by our members."

Survivors include his wife, Laura, a constant partner to Urban in his years of union service. She is president of the OWIU Ladies Auxiliary.

Also surviving are two sons and two daughters.

In Winnipeg, Can.

Steel Union Wins Pact After 32-Year Fight

IT HAS taken 32 years, but there's a union now at the Vulcan Iron Works at Winnipeg, Can.—the CIO Steelworkers. And the contract has a union security clause.

In 1919 the iron mongers of Winnipeg refused to recognize a union, with Vulcan Iron leading the way. A general strike followed. The government sent in mounted police.

The criminal code was enlarged to charge any small group with criminal conspiracy. The section was not repealed until 1936. The immigration laws were amended to permit arrest and deportation of strike leaders without trial. As a result, the greatest strike in the history of the Canadian labor movement was broken.

J. S. Woodsworth, the strike leader, was arrested on a charge of sedition. His crime: reprinting two verses from the Book of Isaiah. Two years later he was elected to the House of Commons.

Several other strike leaders were elected to the Manitoba Legislature, including John Queen, who was elected while serving a jail sentence. Later he was elected mayor of Winnipeg for seven terms.

Woodsworth, a few other labor men, and a group of progressive farmers from the prairies joined forces in Parliament, and the outgrowth in 1932 was a new political party — the present Co-operative Commonwealth Federation. Woodsworth became the leader, and remained so until he died in 1942.

Dominion and Manitoba Bridge, associated with Vulcan in the 1919 fight, gave in some years ago and signed with the CIO Steelworkers. Vulcan remained open shop.

This year the Steelworkers staged a whirlwind campaign, signed 300 workers.

Certification followed, and an agreement was quickly negotiated. The base rate went up 18c an hour and there was an across-the-board raise of 6 and 7c. The union got eight holidays, a week's vacation after one year, two after two years. (LPA)

Pierce AMA's 'Iron Curtain'

RHODE ISLAND'S Medical Society lifted the American Medical Association's "iron curtain" against national health insurance high enough to issue a defense of the program.

Physicians have been denied the opportunity to learn the story of national health insurance in most of the journals of their state societies, because of AMA's animosity.

Dr. Channing Frothingham, chairman of the Committee For The Nation's Health, pointed out the advantages of national health insurance in a recent issue of the Society's Journal. He asked his brother medicos to drop the dollar sign when dealing with this nation's health.

"Opponents admit that some program is necessary," he said. "Organized medicine has favored the development of voluntary non-profit insurance plans."

Dr. Frothingham said such plans as Blue Cross, Blue Shield and commercial insurance company policies are fine as far as they go. But vast numbers of people are not covered by these plans, he said.

He also labeled the so-called "means test" for medical care as something "distasteful to Americans."

NO COMFORT for the Reds is the story James B. Carey (left), secretary-treasurer of the CIO and president of the CIO Electrical Workers, is tape recording for two Brisbane, Australia, radio newsmen, during their visit in Washington. They are Peter Clark (center) and Les Andrews. In the interview Carey told the story of the CIO, with particular emphasis on the ousting of the Communist and the advances made since their enforced departure.

UE Challenged At All GE Plants

The CIO Electrical Workers last week challenged the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers to consent to immediate Labor Board elections in General Electric Co. plants where the UE won bargaining rights last year.

Last year, IUE-CIO won representation rights for about 70,000 GE employes, UE for only 40,000.

The UE challenged IUE at the big Lynn, Mass., plant recently, and the CIO affiliate called the bluff by consenting to an immediate election, which will be held Aug. 16. IUE has filed petitions for votes at the Schenectady, N. Y., Erie, Pa., and Cleveland, O., plants.

The IUE challenge was sent by Pres. James B. Carey to UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald.

If it is rejected, Carey said in a wire. "it will be evident that the UE does not have the courage or capacity to function as a bona fide trade union and it will be evident also that it does not have the support of GE employes at these plants."

Factories In Fields

Move To Exploit Kids Of Migrant Workers

THE INK on a new treaty between the U. S. and and Mexico, designed to give agricultural interests of the west and southwest a cheap supply of migrant laborers, had barely dried before representatives of the farm bloc in Congress took steps to lower work standards still further.

A bill weakening the Child Labor Law by amending it to permit farm children to work in the fields during school hours in harvest season is now before the house Labor Committee. It was sponsored by the delegation from Texas, which introduced it the day after the migrant labor treaty was signed.

About 300,000 Mexican laborers will be available to U. S. farmers under the new U. S.-Mexico agreement, which runs for only six months. It is reliably estimated, however, that more than 350,000 additional farm hands will enter this country illegally during the same period — unless Congress acts to penalize farmers who encourage such entries as a source of cheap labor.

Chiefly because the big cotton growers have found that this so-called "wetback" labor is readily available, cheap and easy to exploit, Congress refused to write penalty provisions into the new migrant labor law passed last June.

President Truman, in signing the measure, called for new legislation to remedy this weakness. He said that he would have vetoed the bill as organized labor had asked if congressional leaders had not assured him that such a law would be forthcoming.

Congress has failed to take up the President's request, however. Treaty talks were stalled for a month because the Mexican government insisted that farmers who hire its nationals illegally in this country must be penalized. In the end, Mexico agreed to the new treaty for a period of only six months, in order that — as Mexican officials put it — "Congress will have time to act."

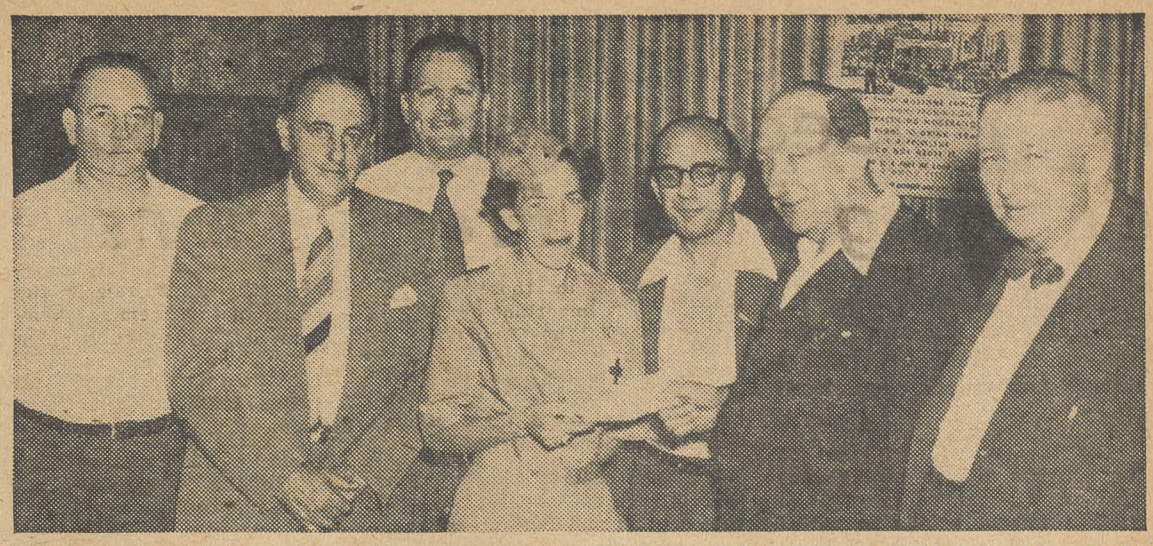
Under the treaty Mexico will assemble prospective workers at five migratory stations within its borders. They will be transported at U. S. government expense to five reception centers in this country. There, farmers will hire them and transport them to harvest fields.

FARMERS who hire them will repay the government for transportation to the extent of $15 a worker—only a fraction of the actual cost. This means that the American people are already paying a major part of the transportation costs of legally hired workers so that the big agricultural and canning interests will have a continued supply of cheap labor.

But the profits-hungry agricultural employers find child labor an equally easy-to-exploit supplement. Amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act adopted in 1949 gave the federal government authority to prevent the labor of children under 16 in commercialized agriculture during school hours, but known violations are considerable.

IN THE 11-months from July 1950 through May 1951 more than 2500 children were found illegally at work on 937 farms in 33 states during school hours. More than 65% of this number were 13 years old or younger; many were only six to eight.

Since the Child Labor Law amendments were adopted partly at the Labor Dept.'s request, it was a foregone conclusion that the Texans' proposal would meet at least some strong opposition.



FLOOD SUFFERERS benefit at annual convention of Missouri Council of CIO Brewery Workers in Kansas City when check for $2500 was given to Red Cross. Shown are (left to right) Recording Secy. Jack Riggs of the Council; Joseph E. Brady, international coordinator of State Councils; Pres. Earl Leddy of the Council; Mrs. Alice B. Hons, receiving the check on behalf of the Red Cross; Treas. Clifford Schneider, Secy. Lou Griesedieck both of the Council, and Secy. Roy Fulton of Local 46, a member of the union's executive board.

Truman Answers CIO's Letter:

Elect Liberals To Enact Plan To Stop Recurrent Floods

PRESIDENT Truman praised the CIO last week for its aid to flood victims, and for its steady support of an overall plan for flood control, power and irrigation projects which might have prevented the disastrous Midwest flood.

But he warned that it will take more liberals in Congress to get worthwhile action.

In a letter replying to CIO proposals sent him by Pres. Philip Murray, Truman said:

"Your organization is to be congratulated for raising special funds from CIO union treasuries to help out the victims of the recent flood.

"I also agree with you thoroughly that such emergency relief, while necessary now that the flood has occurred, is no substitute for the real job that needs to be done —to prevent such floods from happening in the first place."

The President said that his budget requests for flood control had been cut by Congress for the last four years, and that the House cut this year's budget requests by nearly 20% shortly before the flood.

"I know your organization has always appreciated the need for long-term, comprehensive planning in this field.

"You have worked steadily, year in and year out, for sensible, effective control and use of our great rivers to prevent floods, to produce power, to irrigate lands, and to yield the other benefits that can come from wise river basin development. I appreciate your constructive attitude on these problems very much.

"BUT YOU know the right kind of river-basin development cannot be accomplished unless the people elect public officials who will support it."

The President noted that while he was in the Senate, he joined in suggesting the formation of a Missouri Valley Authority, but that it was bitterly opposed by most of the Governors and Senators in the Missouri Basin, "and it was clear that it could not be passed at that time."

Murray's letter to the President had said that "the discredited" Pick-Sloan plan "has stood in the way of effective flood control on the Missouri River," and "was wrong in purpose and wrong in method."

Referring to the CIO's criticism of the plan, the President said that he did agree that "we need something that is an improvement on the Pick-Sloan Plan," and that he was aware of the "inadequacies of the present situation."

Truman said that "the best way to handle this problem is the way I have advocated all along—and that you and your organization have supported me on." he added.

"We ought to have a single agency, with its headquarters in the Basin where it is accessible to the people who are most directly affected, and where those people can have a direct part in working out the program.

"That agency should be given the responsibility for making a sensible over-all plan for coordinating upstream and downstream flood control, navigation, irrigation, power and other programs in the Missouri Basin, and for seeing that that plan is put into effect efficiently . . ."

$3.5 Million More For Flood Relief

President Truman last week allocated an additional $3.5 million to the Housing and Home Finance Agency to be used for emergency housing and other flood relief in Kansas.

The funds come from the $25 million appropriated by Congress recently for flood relief in the Midwest, and brings to $7 million the amount so far available for use in Kansas and Missouri.

The President also called on Congress for an additional flood relief appropriation of $21 million, and asked that the 20% cut in funds for flood control and rivers and harbors voted by the House be restored

He said that the cut was "false economy" and warned that it would increase the risk of the nation being caught unprepared by other floods.

CIO TEXTILE WORKERS won a union shop and other benefits during a three-week strike at the St. Louis (Mo.) Paper Stock Co. During the strike, TWUA Rep. William Boyle (second from the left) charged the company with several violations of State and Federal labor laws. The striker's picket line was respected by the city's junk and paper dealers.

Arbitrator Named For Steel Disputes

Sylvester Garrett, former executive director of the Wage Stabilization Board, has been named chairman of the U. S. Steel-CIO Steelworkers board of arbitration. Both union and company urged him to accept the post.

The board has been operating without a chairman, in effect an impartial umpire, since Ralph T. Seward resigned in 1949. Garrett accepted the appointment for 60 days, desiring to return to teaching law at Stanford Univ.

East Zone Schools Train Youths As Commie Robots

COMMUNIST - dominated schools in the Soviet zone of Germany are turning out robots as shock troops for Russia's goal of world conquest, according to teachers in the free unions of Western Germany.

The project, with children as the subjects, is even more vicious than the Communist technique of forcing human beings to parrot incriminating lies—a technique made familiar to the world through the Minszenty, Oatis, Vogeler and other trials—and the continual "purge" confessions made by discarded functionaries in the satellite countries.

The unionized Western German teachers of Berlin have just published a documented booklet showing what the Communists are doing to children in the country's Eastern zone. The same method is used in other satellite countries.

The objective of those German schools under Russian control is not to turn out graduates capable of thinking for themselves, of distinguishing between what is right and what is wrong, but to indoctrinate their pupils with Communist thought.

The sovietizing of schools began in 1945 with the abolition of private schools and institutes. Next, parental authority over the formal education of youth was curtailed by abolition of parent-teacher associations and substitution of a Communist-controlled agency.

Finally, religious instruction was banned from the public school system.

TO KEEP children under almost constant indoctrination outside of school hours, the Kremlin has set up the Free German Youth (FDJ) and its junior branch, the Young Pioneers.

It has given these Communist organizations an increasingly stronger hand in the planning and control of education and general cultural activities. FDJ not only plans "recreational" and other activities, but it dictates training within the schools.

Purging of the lower school teaching staff in 1945 meant 45,000 new teachers, or 60% of the total. Many of them were qualified only by a two-month course in Communist training. Four years later, 80% of the instructors were "new" teachers whose "political" aptitude far outstripped their professional qualifications.

How this was done at the Teacher Training Institutes is indicated by the themes prescribed for instruction, such as:

"Marxism-Leninism as Most Progressive Ideology and as Theoretic Basis of Soviet Sciences."

"Historical Conditions of Rise of Marxism, Its Sources and Attributes."

"Dialectic Materialism—Characteristic of the Dialectic (Examples from Nature and Society)."

SALARIES ARE graded according to the teachers' political zeal. Special public honors carry with them increased rations and monetary benefits.

Russian will be the first foreign language in German schools; its study is obligatory beginning with the fifth year of elementary school. Between 1945 and 1949, 5270 Russian-language teachers were trained.

"American culture-barbarism" must be carefully avoided, according to the regulations. All internal or external influences which conflict with Communist ideology or the current party line are being eliminated. Parents who allow their children to attend schools outside East Germany and East Berlin are punishable by law.

As a result of sovietization of the schools, including the universities, East and West German educational systems have practically nothing in common with each other. In the West students are encouraged to do their own thinking; information centers are scattered throughout Western Europe by ECA and the U. S. State Dept.

Optical Union—CIO Insurance Pioneer

ONE OF the smaller CIO international unions that pioneered in life, health and accident insurance for its members is the United Optical Workers.

It signed its first contract with an employer providing the then unusual protection in 1945, with Aug. 1 of that year the effective date.

Now it is marking six years of steady progress in the insurance field, with better coverage for more members each succeeding year.

That first contract covered 55 members of the union. The employer paid 3.5% of the base payroll each month into the United Optical Workers Insurance Fund.

Under agreements with the Prudential Insurance Co. and the Associated Hospital Service of New York—the Blue Cross—each member was entitled to:

A thousand dollars in life insurance; $1000 in accidental death and dismemberment insurance; $150 per operation in surgical benefits, including maternity cases, and $12 to $25 a week in sickness and accident benefits for 13 weeks.

Hospitalization was provided free for members, and for their immediate families on payment of a fee direct to the fund.

By December, 1946, the fund had grown so that hospitalization coverage was extended to the members' families at no cost and the 11-months waiting period required in maternity cases was ended.

The five-man board of trustees determined to negotiate still broader coverage. So beginning Dec. 1, 1947, the coverage provided:

Twelve hundred and fifty dollars in life insurance and the same in accidental death and dismemberment insurance; $225 per operation in surgical benefits, including maternity cases; $150 in medical expenses at the rate of $3 for an office call and $5 for a home or hospital call by a doctor; $12 to $35 a week in sickness and accident benefits for 13 weeks; six weeks of benefits in maternity cases, and hospitalization coverages under the Blue Cross Plan.

A YEAR later, Dec. 1, 1948, another benefit was obtained—$25 per disability for X-rays and diagnostic laboratory expenses.

The John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.—which last week reached its first contract agreement with the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee—is now the insurance carrier.

Some 1300 members of the Optical Workers are now covered by the insurance and hospitalization protection. The annual report last January showed that since its inception in 1945, members and their families had received a total of $217,930.80 in benefits and hospitals had been paid an additional $98,925.16 for services to them.

Members of the union who have been helped by the fund are enthusiastic in its praise. Here is a sample from a typical letter written to the trustees:

"Don't know how my wife and child would have gotten along while I was unable to work without the weekly benefits you sent me in the past three months."

Arrest Of Pickets Aids Drive Against Non-Union Firm

THE ARREST OF PICKETS at the Richman Brothers clothing store in St. Louis was used to the advantage of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers' campaign against the non-union firm. The police arrested barrel-clad pickets Bob Fahle and Jim Youngdahl on a charge of indecent exposure—later changed to disturbing the peace. Terrific newspaper and radio publicity followed. Just in case the public was unaware that Richman Brothers is a non-union firm, the same pickets appeared later as clowns. If Mr. Gallup polled St. Louis residents, he probably would find most of them know the story.

Mazey Attacks Detroit News' Banning Ad

SECY.-TREAS. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers has charged The Detroit News with a "bootlicking attitude" toward its big advertisers following the paper's refusal to print a UAW advertisement calling attention to "uncertain and intolerable" employment conditions at the Hudson Motor Car Co.

In a letter to the editor of the News, Mazey declared that the refusal of the paper to print the text of a letter addressed to Sen. Moody (D. Mich.), informing him of the situation at the company's plant, was an attempt "to keep the truth from the people of Detroit."

"This defensive attitude toward a large advertiser is in striking contrast to your readiness to accept advertisements from companies, business associations and other organizations attacking our union in the most intemperate language without regard for truth and justice," he wrote.

"It is in striking contrast also to the numerous occasions on which The News has editorially and intemperately attacked labor and has misrepresented, both in editorial and news columns, the facts about industrial disputes."

He said that in the absence of a "justifiable reason" for the paper's action, the UAW "will exercise every means at its disposal to inform its members and the citizens of Detroit of the bootlicking attitude of the Detroit News toward its big advertisers and of its refusal to print an advertisement stating the point of view of a labor organization which was prepared to pay for the space."

TWUA Pay Raise Approved By WSB

The Wage Stabilization Board has approved a 6½% wage increase for more than 150,000 CIO Textile Workers in rayon cotton mills in the New England and Middle Atlantic states.

The increase, averaging 8½c an hour, was negotiated earlier in the year, but could not be put into effect without WSB approval.

The board also approved a cost of living escalator clause which will give the TWUA members more money if prices go up. Action was withheld on contract clauses involving retirement, severance pay and insurance pending adoption of a broad policy on these issues.

Russians Tough On Minorities

Russia continues to eliminate minorities. Seven national groups have been liquidated or banished since 1941.

Basing its finding on tangible evidence reaching the United States, the New York Times says one million persons have been destroyed or moved to remote areas by their Communist masters in a decade.

Beginning with the transfer of 400,000 Volga Germans to central Siberia, six other national groups have since disappeared from their homes in Russia. It is believed many of them have also disappeared from the face of the land.

Quill Blisters N. Y. Police Head For Barring Cops From Union

NEW YORK City authorities last week attempted to halt the successful campaign of the CIO Transport Workers to organize the city police force by barring policemen from joining unions.

The same day TWU issued a charter to a police union, Police Commissioner George P. Monaghan issued an order prohibiting any policeman from joining labor unions.

Policemen also were ordered to withdraw applications for membership in any union "now in existence or hereafter to be formed." Violators of the order were threatened with disciplinary action.

More than 4500 policemen had paid their first months dues and more than half the department had signed TWU pledge cards, according to TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill.

The Monaghan order brought a blistering reply from Quill. The Commissioner was termed a "stumbling, petty dictator" by the TWU leader, who said his action "betrayed an utter lack of confidence in the integrity of the police department and New York policemen who deeply and bitterly resent his coercive threats."

"His blundering collusion with the president of the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association to sabotage the TWU program marks the death knell of the PBA and assures 100% unionization of the police into our union," Quill declared.

"The real enemies of the police and their families are now exposed. We will intensify our organizational drive, openly or secretely, until the policemen of this great city are liberated from these evil influences."

The Commissioner's unprecedented action followed receipt of a letter from Quill requesting a conference to discuss "basic" union proposals dealing with wages, hours, pensions, uniforms and grievances.

In another move obviously designed to prevent the policemen from joining the CIO union, Mayor Vincent Impellitteri announced at a special meeting of the city's Board of Estimates the same day, that the board had agreed unanimously to a cut in the pension contribution of thousands of police and firemen.

Impellitteri claimed that Quill's announcement a week previous that he intended to charter a local of policemen "had absolutely no bearing" on the board's action.

Monaghan's order was looked upon by some policemen as an infringement of their constitutional rights while others expressed the opinion that the Commissioner had made a serious "blunder" in that the directive would have the effect of encouraging union participation.

MONAGHAN'S action constituted an about face in his own policy. On Aug. 3, after Quill had announced he would charter a police local, the Commissioner was asked if he would issue a directive to his men urging them not to join. He said then he would not and added that he would take no steps to counteract the union drive.

Last February when TWU officials first announced that a police organizing drive would be launched, Thomas F. Murphy, Police Commissioner, advised the men not to join but expressed the view that there was nothing in the city charter to prevent them from doing so if they wished.

The TWU program for the police calls for a wage of $5500 for all first grade patrolmen, instead of the present $4100, plus a $250 cost-of-living bonus and an escalator clause.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

During Mr. Haywood's absence this column is being prepared by members of his staff.

THE WRITER is happy to announce that there has been successful completion of wage negotiations with the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. This will result in a contract agreement that will make the industrial insurance agents of John Hancock the highest paid among the "Big Three."

Allan Haywood

This is a great achievement by the Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, and I am happy that we were able to win improved working conditions and increased compensation for the Hancock agents. Our next task is to organize agents in the other big insurance companies and negotiate comparable contracts for them.

Congratulations to Brothers Richard Leonard and Harold Ash, all the IAWOC Negotiating Committee, and CIO Reps. Fred Pieper and Walter Harris for a tough job well done.

Many, many thanks to my office staff in Washington—Bonnie Sublette, Carl Allen, Pearl Phillips and "Midge" Davis, for their splendid effort and cooperation during my absence from the office.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that Local Industrial Union 78 won an election at the Stillwater Orchards by a vote of 75 to 2, and along with it, its first certification and union shop election. The result of the union security vote was 66 for and 11 against. Reps. Gillie and Spangler were in charge with assistance coming from Local Reps. Moorhead and Parker.

Other good news from the west coast, according to DeShetler, includes two CIO Furniture Workers victories. Both wins were in Los Angeles, the first at Avalon Products and the second at the Justin A. Davis Furniture Co.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports a unanimous vote in favor of the CIO against the AFL in Newark, O. Without exception, workers at the Kress Box Co. voted to leave the AFL and then proceeded to petition the CIO Paperworkers for a charter. Rep. Berkeley Watterson from the Columbus regional office of the Papermakers handled the situation, with the aid of the recently organized Licking County CIO Council.

Despite the flood in Kansas City, Reg. Dir. James Leary reports a win for the CIO Packinghouse Workers. The union was granted recognition as bargaining agent for the employes of the Kansas City (Mo.) Sausage Co. after 10 employes struck. Regardless of the flood, organizational work continued and after a 14-hour strike the company granted both the recognition and a 20c per hour increase in pay. The organizational work was handled by UPWA Rep. Frank Brown.

Rep. David Sternback of Puerto Rico reports three victories for the CIO: The Auto Workers Union No. 3 won a representative election at the Dodge Agency by a vote of 20 to 2; the Auto Workers Union No. 2 was victorious in all four shops of the Caribe Motors by a vote of 82 to 5; and 300 workers of the Psychiatric Hospital of Rio Piedras, an insular government institution, formed their own union and affiliated with the General Confederation of Labor—CIO. Sternback also reports that a grievance case was won against the Fullana Construction Corp. which resulted in the NLRB ordering 17 dismissed workers reinstated with full back pay.

REG. DIR. Frank Bender reports a CIO Rubber Workers union shop win at the Schenuit Rubber Co., Baltimore, Md. The vote showed 202 in favor and 5 against. Rubber Workers Rep. Zembower was in charge of the election.

William Gilbert, mid-west director of the Furniture Workers, reports a 2 to 1 victory over the AFL Upholsterers in an election at Logan, O. The workers of Sun-Glow Industries voted to enter the CIO, 71 to 34.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports a unanimous victory for the CIO Steelworkers at the Standard Engineering & Manufacturing Co., Denver, Col. Of 40 eligible voters, 32 voted in favor of the USA-CIO and none against. Frank Richmond and W. M. Neal, USA representatives, were in charge.

Newton, Ia., was the scene of another UAW victory, according to Reg. Dir. Ben Henry. At the Dun-Lap Novelty Co. plant, the vote was 83 for the UAW and 14 for no union. Bob Johnson, UAW representative, was in charge.

W. J. Trombley, of the CIO Oil Workers, reports a representation victory at the El Dorado Oil Co., Bayonne, N. J. Of 62 eligible voters, 34 workers cast their ballots for the CIO and 24 for the AFL.

CIO In Penna. Fights Phone Rate Boost

CHARGING the $18 million rate increase permitted the Pennsylvania Bell Telephone Co. is far too much, the State CIO Council has asked the courts to reconsider the issue.

Harry Boyer, council president, said the increase at most should be $8 to $10 million.

Late in 1948 the company asked the Public Utility Commission for permission to increase its rates by $25 million. The State CIO Council and City of Pittsburgh challenged the increase, and in October, 1949, the PUC allowed the company the $18 million increase.

Pittsburgh and the CIO appealed to the Superior Court. A majority of the court has ordered further hearings, but according to the CIO, it overlooked fundamental errors by the PUC which will cost phone users millions of dollars more than permitted by law.

The minority opinion contended the Commission's order was contrary to law in a number of respects not dealt with by the majority opinion, and that the rate of return permitted Bell on its investment was "unconscionable."

The CIO, through its counsel, M. H. Goldstein, has asked the court to deal with these points in the new hearings.

WSB Tool Unit Studies Rates

REPRESENTATIVES of the CIO Auto Workers from industrial centers of the midwest participated in a hearing called by the Tool and Die Panel of the Wage Stabilization Board in Chicago last week.

The hearing had been ordered by the WSB following Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson's directive to all defense agencies for quick action to break bottlenecks in machine tool manufacturing.

The nine-member panel, composed of three members each from labor, industry and the public, attempted to make a determination on the relationship of wage standards to manpower shortages in the industry.

UAW Vice Pres. Richard T. Gosser said the union would insist on a realistic consideration of wage problems in the industry and protection of journeymen's standards.

He pledged UAW's cooperation in working toward the elimination of the backlog of orders for machine tools, the lack of which is holding up defense production and causing mass unemployment in many critical areas.

8 Auto Workers Win $9000 In Back Pay

Back pay totaling $9000 has been paid to eight strikers fired by the Allis-Chalmers Co. at West Allis, Wis. in 1946.

Max Raskin, attorney for Local 248, CIO Auto Workers, said the money was paid after the National Labor Relations Board ruled that they were fired unfairly.

Raskin objected to the ruling because no provision was made for reinstatement of the strikers.

McCarthy Is Now Turning Even GOP Stomachs

McCARTHYISM — a new word for stinking politics —was attacked from many quarters in the Senate last week. Even some of the more respectable Republican colleagues of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) joined in the criticism.

But despite a call for his expulsion from the Senate, the Wisconsin smear artist went merrily on his way of capturing headlines by villifying—apparently without any proof at all—many innocent persons.

Here are the highlights of the week's developments:

1. The Senate Rules Committee by a nine to three vote approved the unamimous report of its elections subcommittee bitterly denouncing the campaign of Sen. Butler (R. Md.) and McCarthy's part in it as "despicable backstreet" politics. The only dissenters were McCarthy and two of his Republican supporters, Sen. Wherry (Neb.) and Sen. Jenner (Ind.). Other GOP Committee members upheld the report.

2. Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) introduced a resolution for a Senate investigation of McCarthy's conduct and called upon the Wisconsin Senator to resign at once. McCarthy replied in his usual way—by trying to pin the label of "Communist sympathizer" upon Benton, one of the country's leading business and advertising executives.

3. McCarthy announced he would name off the Senate floor 29 persons whom he says are State Dept. security risks, provided any news service would promise beforehand to publish the names despite the fact that the press would not be immune to libel action. Since he had no takers, he then proceeded to name 26 of them from the floor, where he has immunity from libel suits.

THE Senate Elections Subcommittee report held that the practices of some of Butler's supporters in Maryland "can best be characterized as destructive of American principles."

The group decided that Butler was well aware of them. It said that while he can escape legal penalties, "there was a moral responsibility" he overlooked to keep the campaign "above the low level of 'exploiting the doubt' as to the loyalty and patriotism of former Senator Tydings."

Tydings was defeated by Butler in the 1950 Senate race. Jon M. Jonkel, Butler's political manager, has since been fined $5000 for violating Maryland election laws in his conduct of the campaign.

The Republicans following McCarthy's lead, charged that Tydings, as chairman of a Senate committee, had "whitewashed" the State Dept. in investigating charges by McCarthy that the department was crawling with Communists.

'Dipsy-Doodle Ball' McCarthy's Weapon

Time Magazine has a new name for McCarthyism. It calls it "the dipsy-doodle ball.

In the Aug. 13 issue, Time says:

"Wisconsin's Sen. Joe McCarthy gets headlines by what might be termed the dipsy-doodle or slider type of accusation—charges which are so horrible, fascinating or so slick with the tobacco juice of half-truth that the victim often strikes out helplessly while trying to get a clean swing at them."

DURING THE hearings it was disclosed McCarthy's staff had taken an active part in the campaign to "get" Tydings. It was found that about half of the material in a widely distributed tabloid, containing a fake photograph purporting to show Tydings in conversation with Earl Browder, former Commie leader, came from McCarthy's office.

In characterizing the tactics of Butler's campaign as "destructive of fundamental American principles," the committee named McCarthy as "a leading and potent force in the campaign."

Two Republican members of the subcommittee, Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (Me.) and Sen. Hendrickson (N. J.), who voted to approve the report, at once were bitterly assailed by McCarthy. Last year both had signed the famous GOP "Declaration of Conscience" which also condemned McCarthy for his tactics.

The report made particular note of the fact that Jean Kerr, Donald A. Surine and other McCarthy employes took an active part in Butler's campaign. It also accused Surine, an investigator for McCarthy, of making "an apparent willful and knowing misstatement of a material fact" when he testified that he voluntarily resigned from the FBI.

As a matter of fact, the committee pointed out, the FBI had dropped Surine from its rolls.

The committee recommended that its hearings and report be referred to the Justice Dept. and other appropriate authorities for study and action.

The committee said that "as a matter of fairness" it would not recommend the unseating of Butler for his part in the matter, but "this is not to say that we approve or condone certain acts and conduct in his campaign."

It made eight recommendations, however, which in effect said that any candidate in the future who permits such a dirty campaign in his behalf should be punished.

Following publication of the findings, Benton told the Senate that "in view of the indictment of the practices of Sen. McCarthy which is found in this report, I suggest today that Sen. McCarthy at once submit his resignation from this body."

Benton pointed out that "a very high percentage of the members of this body would resign forthwith if such a report were written about them, agreed to unanimously by five of their colleagues."

HIS resolution called upon the Rules Committee to investigate McCarthy's part in the campaign and "his other acts since his election to the Senate as may be appropriate to enable such committee to determine whether or not it should initiate action with a view toward the expulsion from the U. S. Senate "of McCarthy."

McCarthy responded by attacking Benton with the same tactics he had used against Tydings.

Actually Benton, when in the State Dept., performed some of the most effective work to defeat Communist propaganda abroad.

Benton's resolution has been referred to the Senate Elections Subcommittee, where it has been shelved for at least six weeks. Expulsion, which requires a two-thirds vote, has seldom been suggested in the Senate. The group indicated that it would proceed cautiously.

Senate Bill Hands Over U. S. To Monopolists

THE HOUSE Monopoly Subcommittee now has before it a Senate-approved price discrimination bill (S. 719) through which big business monopolies intend to "sabotage" the anti-trust laws.

A coalition of Republicans and anti-administration Democrats ganged up in the Senate Aug. 2 to pass the measure by a 42 to 34 vote. Prompt action in the House was promised.

Led by Sens. Long (D. La.) and Benton (D. Conn.), opponents of the bill waged a last-ditch fight before the Senate voted. They pointed out that it would wreck the anti-trust laws and permit big business firms to ruin many small competitors.

The bill would allow a seller to charge different prices for a single product if he acts "in good faith" to meet competition. Under present anti-trust laws, such price discrimination is unlawful.

In a half-hour speech Benton bitterly assailed the proposal. He called it "a dagger at the heart of our anti-trust legislation," and said that it would work the most profound changes in the anti-trust laws dreamed of in recent years.

"It isn't even a sheathed dagger," Benton said. "It is an open invitation to collusive action among competitors to fix prices—and to fix them high and handsome — at the expense of the public."

Benton said that he wished the Senate was debating a measure to double the funds of the Justice Dept.'s Anti-Trust Division, which is responsible for enforcing the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust laws.

"These acts should be strengthened, not weakened," Benton said. "They should be enforced, not torpedoed. This innocent-sounding bill proposes to sabtoage them."

BENTON warned that lack of adequate anti-trust legislation contributed to the breakdown of the British economy and that cartels were doing the same thing on the continent.

"I am personally of the opinion," he said, "that strong anti-trust laws for England and the continent, vigorously enforced—and by this I mean the sending of a few hundred European businessmen to jail—could do more to stimulate European productivity, over the next decade, than all the billions which we have invested in the Marshall Plan."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taxes H.R. 4473	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House passed bill providing $7,206,000,000 increase. Senate Finance Com. completed hearings Aug. 3, now drafting bill.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30. Has since shelved all pending bills.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com. due to act soon.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.
Labor Dept.-FSA Appropriations. H.R. 3709	Appropriates funds for operations of the Labor Dept. and Fed. Security Agency.	In conference.	Ask Senators and Congressmen to restore funds cut out.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Buy Textiles Now—Rieve

PRES. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers has urged that the government immediately award contracts to textile mills as a means of overcoming serious unemployment in the industry.

In a telegram to President Truman, Rieve pointed out that quick action would permit the government to purchase textiles at lower cost, as well as to revive production and employment in hard-hit textile centers.

"In part this has been due to the curtailment of government textile purchases because of Congress' failure to approve the appropriation bills," he said. "A resolution just passed by Congress, however, would now permit textile and other Defense Dept. purchases to be made in line with previous expenditures.

"By immediately awarding textile contracts, the government would make use of idle productive capacity, provide much needed employment and make purchases at a time when costs were low.

"Thus government orders would level out production rather than add to an already high level of consumer demand, as in the past."

Publicker Strike Ends

A wage increase of 12½c an hour plus fringe benefits of 1½c for 2300 workers ended the six-week strike at the huge Publicker Industries' distilling plants in Philadelphia.

Members of the CIO Brewery Workers local walked out June 16.

Cleveland Site Of CIO Golf Tourney

The third annual International CIO Golf Tournament will be held Sept. 15 and 16 at Cleveland, O., under the joint sponsorship of the Auto Workers Recreation Dept. and UAW-CIO Region 2.

Competition will be at 36 holes medal play, with titles awarded the winners in team, men's individual, women's individual and mixed divisions, and prizes for low gross and net winners in all flights. Deadline for entries is Sept. 1. Entries, entry fees and correspondence should be addressed to CIO Golf Championships, UAW-CIO Recreation Dept., 8000 E. Jefferson, Detroit 14, Mich.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 20, 1951 82 No. 34

Congress Screams 'Inefficiency' —But Its Record Shows Sorry Mess

(See Story, Page 12)

A Major Scandal Is Brewing Over Boons For Big Biz

The monopolies, more entrenched that ever after a decade of expansion, have drunk their fill from the public trough for the time being. Now they've closed it by temporarily cutting off special tax amortization certificates. Holding the bag are 8000 small businessmen whose applications were shunted aside while big business' agents processed big business' requests—and the public, which is paying for $8.8 billion in new plants. (Stories on Pages 6 and 7.)

Senate Set To Protect Rich From Equality Of Sacrifice

More and more it apears that if any "equality of sacrifice" is to come out of the mobilization and the fighting in Korea, it will be supplied by the armed services and the mass of Americans—NOT the wealthy. The Senate Finance Committee, tackling the House-passed income tax bill, finds it too easy on people of low and middle income. So—hang on to your pocketbook! (Story on Page 8.)

Defense Production Plan —Now Lacking—Is Vital

"The key to our national strength is our ability to produce," declares the current issue of The Outlook, publication of the CIO Dept. of Research and Education. But a plan for the best use of our resources for defense is lacking. The Outlook says that progress has been made in defense production but "has not matched our ability nor has it squarely faced the emergency posed by Communist imperialism." Expanding civilian needs should also be considered. (Story on Page 5.)

SHERIFF JAILS CIO AIDES

Sheriff Carlus Gay (above) of Laurens County, Ga.—gun in hand—broke up a union meeting and arrested two CIO organizers, it was testified last week at a Senate subcommittee hearing. Another witness said employers buy the debts—and the services—of the Negroes. (Stories on Page 2.)

The Romantic South:

Moonlight, Magnolias—Terrorism And Peonage

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

REACTIONARY elements in the South employ charges of "Communism," along with involuntary servitude and "reigns of terror" to keep workers from joining unions.

That sordid story was unfolded last week before the Senate Labor-Management Relations subcommittee.

Clyde G. Brock, representing the CIO Organizing Committee, told the Senate group, headed by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), that he was accused of being a "Communist" and jailed for nearly 24 hours in Dublin, Ga., after a union meeting was broken up.

He charged that he and Charles Gillman, Georgia CIO director, were arrested by Sheriff Carlus Gay of Laurens County last February while trying to organize employes of the Cordell Lumber Co. into the CIO Woodworkers.

According to Brock, he and Gillman were held without charges and were not released until after they had talked to their attorney the following day. He said the judge ordered them to pay $200 in "attorneys' fees and costs."

Gun Brandished

Brock testified that when Gay and two deputies raided the union meeting, the sheriff, brandishing a gun, asked him and Gillman:

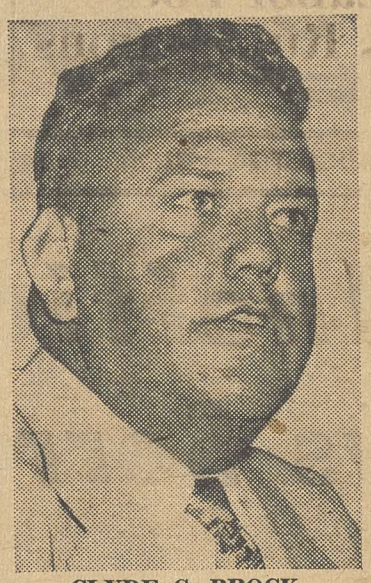
"What the hell are you doing at this Negro meeting?"

When told that it was a union meeting, Brock said, Gay replied:

"Union, hell, you are holding a damn Communist meeting."

The sheriff then ordered his two deputies to "take these men to jail and lock them up." They remained there until the next evening.

Brock told the Committee that



CLYDE G. BROCK

Brock served with the U. S. Army Air Force in the last war. He and another organizer were jailed by Sheriff Gay of Laurens County, Ga., and held almost 24 hours without charges after Gay raided a union meeting last February.

Negro workers in and around Dublin are held in virtual slavery by employers who go bond for them when they are arrested for a minor infraction of the law and then threaten to return them to jail if they quit their jobs.

He pointed out that previous to an investigation by agents of the Wage and Hour Division of the Dept. of Labor last year, the Cordell company had been paying its employes 50c an hour only if they worked 40 hours a week.

If they worked less than that, they were paid 40c an hour. No overtime was ever paid.

Although Sheriff Gay was said to have the reputation of locking up any Negro caught with whisky on his breath or taking a drink, Brock testified that on the day the National Labor Relations Board held an election at the plant, jugs of "white liquor" were "sitting around the company yard and foremen were pouring drinks for the workers."

He said the Sheriff was there twice that day but made no arrests. The CIO lost the election although all the workers had signed membership applications.

Asked by Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.) how he felt about his treatment at the hands of the Sheriff, Brock said:

"Exactly like I always imagined the German people felt when Hitler was reigning in Germany."

Neely said he hoped Brock would go back to Georgia and hire a lawyer "to bring suit for damages for false arrest and for false imprisonment."

"Unless there is something to justify the mistreatment . . . and the indignity and the outrage you have suffered," Neely declared, "there isn't a sheriff that could not be made liable on his official bond for the outrage you have suffered."

Attempting to defend his action in arresting the CIO representatives, Gay told the Committee he was suspicious of them because they were strangers and "because the FBI had told me to be on the lookout for Communists."

History Made?

"I was suspicious," Gay declared, "because that was the first time we have ever had anything like that in our county—a meeting like that of Negroes and whites.

"Of course we have some of the best Negroes that I believe there is in the world down home . . . but just at that place . . . meeting these men out there, finding them there, that is what it all was based upon."

Asked if it was a general practice in Laurens County for an employer to put up bond for a prisoner and then have the man work out the bond, Gay admitted that "some do that."

"There is no force to it. I say probably there is 'agreement' between the worker and the man who goes the bond. He says, 'I will get you out and you go to work for me'."

Asked what happens when a worker decides to quit working for the employer who went his bond, Gay replied that he couldn't "definitely recall" any case where that had happened, but declared that "if he wants to get relieved of his bond he can bring him in and turn him over to me and say he wants to get relieved of that bond."

Back In Jail

"Then would you put the man back in jail?" he was asked.

"Yes, or give him a bond and have him go and get somebody else to sign it," Gay replied.

Gillman tangled with a Committee member when he declared it would take the NLRB "a couple of years" to get around to holding a hearing on the union's objections to the conduct of the Cordell election.

The Committee member said he did not think "there has ever been an objection to an election case that took over 60 or 90 days."

"You should come down South, because we have lots of them that take a long, long time to be heard," Gillman replied.

He said that although the objections were filed the day after the election, Apr. 25, there has been no ruling by the Atlanta NLRB regional director to date.

"We have many cases before the board that have been laying up there (in Washington) from a year to three years," he stated.

Blacklists Thrive Under Taft-Hartley

GEORGIA CIO Dir. Charles Gillman last week told the Senate Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee that the Taft-Hartley law "has done more to retard and destroy organized labor than anything else that has been done."

He cited the case of the American Thread Co. in Tallapoosa, Ga., where, he said, it took six or seven months to get an NLRB decision after the CIO Textile Workers had filed unfair labor practice charges.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), subcommittee chairman, asked what happens "in the meantime while it takes so long?"

"They fire everybody," Gillman answered, "the active union people in the shops. When we get a decision, even though back pay is ordered and the election set aside, there is nobody left in the plant anymore. That is what happens to all the unions, the newly organized unions there.

"WHAT happens is this. We go into a town and arrange a meeting with textile workers down there. They attend meetings. The next day they are fired.

"There must be 200 or more people, textile workers, who have been blackballed and blacklisted from getting jobs in the textile industry anywhere because of their union activity.

"One of the objections to the law is the delay in processing cases.

"It may not mean much to the average person, but I think the Taft-Hartley law has done more to retard and destroy organized labor, particularly in the South, than anything else that has been done.

"Because of the delays and injunctive powers that the employer has, this so-called free speech that they have, they call the workers in on their own time and threaten them because of union activities. This is the problem we have been facing. We are still up against that problem down there."

They're Still Buying And Selling Negroes In Dixie, Georgia Lawyer Testifies

SOME EMPLOYERS in Lauren County, Ga., have apparently never heard of the 13th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution, which outlaws slavery and involuntary servitude.

Testifying before the Senate Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee, Thomas W. Johnson, a practicing lawyer from Macon, Ga., related the case of a Negro, James Day, Jr., who, he said, an employer attempted to hold in peonage.

Day told him that the operator of the Naval Store at Mentor, in Laurens County, had his four children and refused to let him have them. The Negro was sent to Johnson by the U. S. District Attorney's office in Macon.

"I asked him what the trouble was," Johnson related. "He told me he had gone to work for the proprietor, William Balote, some time prior and that Balote had worked him unmercifully, had paid him only $2 or $3 a week, and had refused him medical attention.

"He said his children were without sufficient food, that they had no clothing, which fact I later confirmed, and that they did not have enough to eat."

The attorney said the Negro put up with the situation as long as he could and finally ran away. He went to a neighboring county where he got a job.

A month later Balote and two other white men came to where he was staying and told him they had a warrant for him and that if he did not come back and go to work for Balote, they were going to put him in jail.

"He went back with them to Mentor," Johnson stated. "After about a week or 10 days he again ran away."

The attorney told the committee he went to Balote's store to attempt to get the children.

"Balote asked me where Day was and I told him he had not come because I had not thought it necessary," Johnson related.

He said Balote then declared:

"I want that blank Negro to come down here because I want to put him in jail."

Johnson then asked Balote if he intended to hold the children as security for a $200 debt he said Day owed him.

"He said he didn't give a damn what it was called, but that he intended to hold them until his money was paid," Johnson testified.

After a further series of events, which included the jailing of Day on an abandonment charge, Johnson said he was able to get the Negro out of jail and reunited with his children after eight days.

Humphrey asked if this was an unusual case. Johnson replied that "situations of this kind are entirely too prevalent in the South."

"Some employers down there get Negroes in debt to them purposely," he declared. "They actually buy the debts from each other.

"If one Negro wants to go and work for somebody else and it is satisfactory with the man for whom he is working at the moment, the man for whom he wants to work buys the debt from the other man.

"They hold it over this Negro's head. Great numbers of times, if the Negro doesn't want to work for that particular person, he is prosecuted. All he has to do is to go back to work and the prosecution is dropped.

"That definitely is a form of peonage."

CIO Greets Indonesia On 6th Anniversary

CIO Pres. Philip Murray sent greetings to the Republic of Indonesia on Aug. 17, the sixth anniversary of its organization.

"The existence of an independent Indonesia is of great importance in the struggle to maintain a free world," he said, "and we believe that your people are deserving of all the disinterested help and assistance that can be given by our nation.

"Our organization will do all it can to preserve the right of your people to develop in freedom in accordance with their national ideas."

Wichita Labor Market Group Gets 3 CIO Men

CIO representatives appointed by Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin to the labor-management committee for the Wichita, Kans., labor market are Arthur D. Hessling, Communications Workers; J. R. Wheeler, Packinghouse Workers, and Earl Miller, Auto Workers.

IUE Thumps UE In Lynn GE Vote

The CIO Electrical Workers handed the Communist-dominated, independent United Electrical Workers another shellacking last week at the Lynn, Mass., plant of the General Electric Co.

Of the 16,173 workers eligible, 6927 voted for IUE, 5867 for UE and 206 for no union. There were 261 challenged and 42 void ballots.

The UE had petitioned for the vote at the plant, where IUE Local 201 had bargaining rights.

The CIO union has petitioned for elections at three other GE plants—Erie, Pa., Schenectady, N.Y., and Cleveland, O.

UE was expelled from the CIO last year.

The CIO And The United Labor Policy Committee

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE LEADERSHIP of the American Federation of Labor has taken steps to end the functioning of the United Labor Policy Committee, the New York Times reported last week.

AFL spokesmen confirmed the substance of the exclusive story by Louis Stark, veteran labor reporter for the Times, that the Federation's executive council is recommending AFL withdrawal from the ULPC.

The AFL's action—taken at a council meeting at Montreal—came without public forewarning. CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who is on a brief vacation, and other national CIO officers withheld comment pending official word of the action from the AFL.

The proposal for AFL withdrawal from the ULPC—which would mean its dissolution—is contained in the report and recommendations of the executive council of the AFL to the federation's forthcoming convention. The AFL's meeting opens at San Francisco on Sept. 17, and the report will be made public about that time.

Top Executives

The ULPC is composed of top executives of the CIO, AFL, the Railway Labor Executives Association—which speaks for the non-operating brotherhoods, most of them AFL affiliates—and the Machinists. The Machinists, who were unaffiliated when the ULPC was formed last December, joined the AFL early this year.

In the welter of unofficial statements from AFL leaders following publication of the Times story, it was not clear precisely what events or trends had led to the decision of the AFL council.

Some newspaper reports suggested that AFL officials were advancing three major types of reason for their action:

1. One stated reason was that the ULPC had made no progress toward "organic unity"—that is, merger—of the CIO and AFL.

However, at no time during the nine-month history of the ULPC had the AFL delegates ever suggested the placement of the organic unity question on the committee's flexible agenda. In addition, the AFL had made no move for further meetings of the unity committees of the CIO and AFL, which met a number of times during the summer of 1950.

2. A second "explanation" offered by AFL leaders to reporters was the claim that the CIO had tended to use the ULPC for its own advantage, and had obtained more than a fair share of appointments to government defense agencies for CIO representatives.

The record, however, does not bear out this criticism.

For instance, the post of special assistant to Charles E. Wilson, head of the topside Office of Defense Mobilization, is held by George Harrison of the AFL. In the ULPC, his nomination for that post was made by the CIO.

CIO's key representatives in the defense set-up are David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, who is assistant to Eric Johnston in the Economic Stabilization Agency; and O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, who is deputy to Manly Fleischmann in the National Production Authority.

On the other hand, the United Labor Policy Committee nominated AFL officials not only for the ODM post but for the top labor positions with the Office of Price Stabilization, the Defense Production Administration, the Defense Dept.'s manpower division, and the defense transportation agency.

3. A third theme noted by reporters in their talks with AFL spokesmen revolved about the activities of the CIO delegation at the recent Milan conference of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

In that situation, too, the CIO and AFL delegations had worked in a spirit of harmony.

As an example, AFL Vice. Pres. Matthew Woll was elected head of the joint CIO-AFL delegation—on motion of the CIO. The two U. S. union groups worked closely together, discussed policy questions almost every day, agreed on almost every point—and on those, they "agreed to disagree."

A major point of difference concerned the nomination for president of the ICFTU—an honorary position which requires only part-time activity.

(The top full-time executive of the ICFTU is J. H. Oldenbroek, who was unanimously re-elected secretary-general.)

In the election for president, the CIO supported the decision of virtually all the other unions represented on the executive board of the ICFTU to support Vincent Tewson, of the British Trades Union Congress, as successor to Paul Finet, of Belgium, the ICFTU'S first president. Tewson was elected.

The AFL delegation, although opposed to Tewson, supported no other candidate, and cast no vote.

The CIO delegates wanted to "go along" with the choice of most of the other delegates, rather than to give the appearance in any way of exercising what might be considered an "American veto" over the organization.

Accusation Untrue

Some of the unofficial AFL comments have sought to picture the CIO as engaged, at Milan and elsewhere, in a major campaign to throw its full support to the Socialist-led unions of Europe, and to ignore the non-Socialist unions.

The accusation is untrue. The CIO has never promoted "socialism," and its delegation at Milan was not promoting "socialism."

The CIO, of course, has always sought to encourage all non-Communist European trade union groups. But far from seeking to "freeze out" the non-Socialists from the ICFTU, the CIO has worked consistently since 1949 to find a formula for bringing the strong Catholic unions of Europe into the ICFTU ranks.

This effort, started at the time of the first ICFTU congress two years ago, was resumed at the recent Milan meeting.

One columnist quoted AFL officials as irritated because the CIO had gone all-out to support the "UIL"—a new, militantly Socialist Italian trade union group.

CIO delegates, while showing fraternal interest in the UIL, pointed out that that group's most tireless "lobbyist" at the Milan conference was a member of the AFL delegation; and that the motion to bring the UIL into the world labor federation was made by a Puerto Rican delegate with strong AFL connections.

So, on the basis of newspaper reports, the AFL's complaints, as voiced by various of its unofficial spokesmen, seem to have little foundation in fact.

Difficult To Assess

Until the executive council's report on the ULPC is made public—either at the San Francisco convention next month, or at some earlier date—it will be difficult in the extreme to assess the reported decision to scuttle the joint action program of American labor.

But if the newspaper stories are authentic—as they seem to be; and if the AFL convention accepts the recommendations of its leadership—then the demise of ULPC will bring deep regrets in states and cities throughout the country.

For in scores of localities, local labor groups have followed the lead of the ULPC in forging a workable degree of unity on home-state and home-town issues.

That spirit of united action has benefited every union and every worker.

The absence of national leadership of a kind which the ULPC has been able to give during the past nine months would be a severe blow not only to the welfare of American labor, but to the entire country as it moves through the present difficult period of national emergency and international crisis.

ULPC Halted Labor Foes' Aim To Divide, Rule Unions

CIO Pres. Philip Murray recently pointed out that the joint activity led by the ULPC clearly "has strengthened the cause of organized labor in America and played an effective mechanism for more serious consideration—by the public, by industry, and by government—of labor's program."

The statement was contained in an article written by Murray for Labor & Nation magazine. It was reprinted in the current issue of Steel Labor, organ of the United Steelworkers.

"At a time when the enemies of labor were obviously hoping they could hang us separately," Murray wrote, "the major branches of the American union movement have held together, and prevented the application of a policy of divide and rule."

Looking toward the 1952 elections, Murray suggested in the article that "the political action efforts of labor must be strengthened and made more effective than at any time in the past, if the country is to avoid the road back to reaction . . ."

The CIO president suggested in the article—which was written early this summer—that the ULPC might speed up the movement for more united political action.

Such action, he said, "can do much to bring the crucial issues of the 1952 election directly to the attention of labor and the public, and to speed the retirement from public office of those members of Congress and of state and local governments who have betrayed their mandate from the people of America."

CONGRATULATIONS are being expressed by Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald (right), of the CIO Steelworkers, to Francis Whitehair over the latter's appointment as Undersecretary of Navy. Whitehair, who comes from Deland, Fla., was formerly general counsel of the Economic Stabilization Administration under Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston.

Mich. CIO Fights Excise Tax Rises

Secy.-Treas. Barney Hopkins, of the Michigan CIO Council, urged the State Senate to kill House-approved increases in excise taxes on autos, trucks, busses and gasoline.

At the same time, Hopkins called on all Michigan labor and consumers to support a statewide referendum to repeal a 1½c-a-gallon gasoline tax recently voted by the Republican-dominated legislature over the veto of Gov. G. Mennen Williams.

The House bill would boost excise taxes on passenger cars from 7 to 10%, on trucks and busses from 5 to 8% and on gasoline from 1½c to 2c a gallon. Hopkins said the State gasoline tax could be repealed if 200,000 voters sign the referendum before Aug. 27.

Price Fix Victim Wins 11-Year Suit

The Sager Glove Corp. has been awarded $975,000 from two optical firms found guilty of a price-fixing conspiracy which nearly wrecked the firm because it refused to cooperate to keep lens prices up in Chicago.

Sager, which makes safety clothing, charged that Bausch & Lomb and the American Optical Co. refused to sell lenses for goggles after it cut its price from $1.50 to $1. The case has been pending in the courts 11 years.

CWA Helps Save Sight Of Member

CIO Communications Workers locals in Illinois have collected $1500 to help a fellow member regain her normal eyesight.

The fund will finance a trip to the famed Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., for Alice Calkin, a Centralia phone operator who has been idled since last October when eye trouble developed. The fund-raising campaign has been headed by Cecilia Williamson, CWA Centralia steward, and Doris Birks of the Centralia local.

Joe Glazer, 'Union Songman,' To Sing On ABC Network

Joe Glazer—the "union songman"—is going to sing a collection of his workers' songs over the ABC radio network, under CIO auspices.

Joe is education director of the United Rubber Workers. He also plays a mean guitar and chants a practically inexhaustible collection of folk-songs.

He has sung before hundreds of union groups in every part of the country, appeared at the CIO convention last year, and recently returned from a trip to France, where he talked—and sang—to union members.

Now Glazer will strum his guitar and sing his ditties on three ABC appearances, starting Saturday night, Aug. 25, at 6:45 P.M. EDT. He will come back to the mike on Saturday night, Sept. 1, and on Sept. 8, at the same hour at a guest of the CIO.

Glazer is filling in for Robert R. Nathan, nationally known economics expert, who usually appears on the CIO show. Nathan is making a quick trip to Burma to help strengthen that country's economy.

So make a date with your radio for the next three Saturday nights at 6:45 P.M. EDT on your local ABC station.

Let's Avoid 'Or Else'

In an era when government spending runs into billions, it's perhaps old fashioned to talk of saving pennies and wasting dollars. Perhaps it's more appropriate to talk about saving millions and wasting billions.

Whatever the amount, the principle is the same—and it applies most directly to the current Congressional debate on establishing funds for the Mutual Security Program.

President Truman has asked $8.5 billion for this program—which includes military aid to our allies, continuation of the Marshall Plan program, the Point Four program to aid underdeveloped areas, and other overseas projects endorsed by the American people.

It would be easy to say that this money should be spent at home. But to say so is to ignore the realities of a world where the threat of Soviet totalitarian aggression is constant, and where the peoples of the democratic nations badly need our help to strengthen their economies and their military defenses.

As usual, the Congressional isolationists and the preachers of false economy have suggested a series of "meat axe" cuts in the appropriation for the Mutual Security Program.

But, as General Ike Eisenhower has pointed out in relation to the proposed program, "it's this or else."

Strong as it is, America cannot afford the "or else"—for the "or else" is nothing less than eventual Soviet domination of the free peoples of Europe and Asia.

Death Of A Publisher

It would be nice to be able to say, upon the death of William Randolph Hearst, that American journalism had lost a constructive leader.

But, even as one thinks most kindly about the departed, the regret must be that the Lord of San Simeon, with his wealth and power, did not do so much as he could have done for the people of America.

His newspapers attacked the CIO, the New Deal of Franklin Roosevelt and the Fair Deal of Harry Truman. In doing so, they stooped to any practice that would smear the opposition; and in doing so they lost for publisher Hearst the respect of right-thinking Americans who like a fight but want to play it fair.

Balloons For Freedom

This week, thanks to the efforts of the Crusade for Freedom organization, the people of Czechoslovakia have a chance to read a message of liberty and democracy—wafted over the Iron Curtain in balloons that ignore man-made boundary obstructions.

The words of liberty and civil right are always thrilling, always refreshing — whether in Prague or in Washington, whether they be directed toward restoring lost freedoms or strengthening present freedoms.

President Truman's magnificent speech at the dedication of the new American Legion headquarters comes in the second category.

Rightly, he associates "real Americanism" with courage, fair play, and our basic liberties. He calls for a fight against hysteria, and the exposure of the "rotten motives" of those who would destroy the Bill of Rights.

"Real Americans" will cheer his words, as "real Czechs" must be hailing the balloon message from west of the Iron Curtain.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Henry C. Fleisher, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love, Milton Plumb, W. P. Welsh

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C., under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912, and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIV August 20, 1951 No. 34

Dog Days

British Unions — And The Reds

By C. H. HARTWELL

Publications Editor Of Britain's Trades Union Congress

AS THE summer season of trade union conferences moves towards the climax of the annual assembly of the Trades Union Congress in September, there are speculations about possible changes of policy on the big issues unions face in Britain today.

Least happy in weighing up the chances are the Communists. They have not had a particularly successful year. At conference after conference since Easter, they have met with rebuffs from delegates, and in one ballot after another they failed in their attempts to "secure and extend the leading positions of Communists in the trade unions."

In the Amalgamated Engineering Union, whose 800,000 members have vital work to do on rearmament projects, Jack Tanner recently defeated his Communist rival for the presidency after a nationwide ballot of the members. Earlier, and by the same democratic process, the Engineers ousted Communists from high office in their union—including two national organizers.

These set-backs to Communist efforts to get themselves installed in key positions in the unions have come at a time when the political stock of Communism is low—for none of its adherents is in Parliament, and very few have retained the municipal seats they first won when they were able to borrow a little prestige from the wartime achievements of the Red army.

DISAPPOINTED AT failure to recoup in the industrial field the severe losses sustained in politics, Communist Party members have now been sharply reminded that their "primary responsibility" is to build Communist Party groups in the factories.

The expressed aim is for thousands rather than hundreds of these groups, many of whom, if the normal tactic is followed, would conceal their existence altogether or hide their political affinities under names like "workers' defense committees" while organizing votes for nominees approved by the Party's chiefs for local and national office in the unions.

Exposures by the Trades Union Congress three years ago of these and other techniques have not gone unheeded, and scarcely one union conference this year has ignored the serious issue that is involved.

In half-a-dozen cases, however, with their traditional tolerance for minorities, delegates have been reluctant to take drastic action to check the activities of an organized group within their ranks who, though showing little respect for democratic principles, take full advantage of the democratic machinery.

HARD EXPERIENCE, on the other hand, has prompted a stern approach in some unions. Clerical workers insisted two years ago that candidates for office must declare their political beliefs. That put an end to the hopes of many Communist aspirants, including the man who this year was beaten nearly six to one in the vote for the union's presidency.

Meanwhile, some eight Communists had been using their positions as union local officials to press on trades councils and other bodies views that conflicted with the union's policy. They were expelled.

The Transport and General Workers' Union with 1.3 million members found it necessary to make a similar rule two years ago.

Among the elected representatives of 350,000 distributive workers at their annual meeting there was majority backing for a demand that Britain's Ambassador be withdrawn from Madrid. But only a few hands were raised to support a call for the withdrawal for all foreign troops from Korea or for other resolutions designed to whitewash Soviet foreign policy or condemn by implication the policy of the Western countries.

Delegates went on to give a labor member of Parliament a huge majority over his Communist contender for the presidential chair, while Communists among the 113 members of the executive and divisional councils were reduced to six.

It all adds up to show that Britain's trade unions, though exercising to full their rights to criticize and to seek to change the policies of their government, are becoming increasingly aware of the high risks involved not only to their unions but to the economic health and democratic structure of their country by an over-tolerant attitude to Communist tactics of penetration.

'Peace Fighters' Vanish To Eat In West Zone

THE Communist World Youth Festival, a two-week hate-the-democracies camp meeting in East Berlin masquerading as a plug for the Soviet version of peace, ended Aug. 19.

It left official faces redder than the banners around Marx-Engels Square, the East Berlin version of Moscow's Red Square. Predictions were made freely that a lot of heads would fall, because the festival was one of the worst propaganda failures the Soviet has chalked up in years.

Troubles were many. One of the major ones was that a lot of the million or more young men, women and children from all over the world who deployed into Berlin were more interested in the West Zone where the Allies have control, than in generating the synthetic enthusiasm required for their roles as "peace fighters."

Approximately a million of the blue-shirted visitors slipped into the West Zone to look around, according to a police estimate. They were welcomed with open arms, fed better meals than they got either at home or in East Berlin, and were visibly impressed by the freedom that everybody seemed to take far granted.

They also were astounded by what to them was a vast array of the consumer goods they seldom saw at home.

Disinterested Hosts

The meals at the camp meeting were a sore point with the visitors. Somebody slipped up, and there wasn't enough food to go around. Youths from East Germany suffered particularly, for as titular hosts they were forced to apply the old family-hold-back principle.

That made the East Germans more disinterested than ever in the success of the festival. The housing arrangements were bad, too, and again as hosts they were forced to find shelter in accommodations far from the center of things.

Besides that, it rained and rained.

Relationships between the enslaved East Germans and visitors from Russia and the other satellite countries, already strained by the lack of food and housing, suffered further during a sports program that was supposed to show the joy of Communist games as a complement to Communist work.

It seems an East German soccer team played the Moscow "Dynamos." The host screamed a Teutonic version of "We wuz robbed" and loudly booed the visitors—and the referee they brought with them.

The Germans claimed their team would have won if the Dynamos hadn't played dirty and if the imported referee had called even half the fouls they committed.

The normally efficient Soviet propaganda machine blew a fuse right in the faces of all the top brass. The brass staged an open press conference. Minister-President Otto Grotewohl, head of the Russians' puppet government, made the mistake of asking a question he obviously planned to answer himself.

"Does the United States wish to protect the world from the Soviet Union?" he demanded.

"Yes!" came the unexpected answer from a score of western reporters.

The festival was not a complete loss, of course, to the Communists, but it is questionable if they got full value for the estimated $40 million it cost them.

About a million of the youths and children, some of them only seven and eight years old, marched in a huge parade that took nearly eight hours to pass a reviewing stand loaded with East German and Communist Party officials.

The Ol' Pep Ran Out

They carried propaganda flags and banners, cheered lustily and screamed slogans of peace and hate—for the first few hours. Then enthusiasm dropped off sharply, and despite pepping up over loudspeakers, they were just too weary and indifferent to heed commands to yell things like "Friendship" and "Long Live Stalin."

The next day, however, a record-breaking number of them visited the West Zone. Youth hostels and other installations where they were fed and entertained checked in 107,779 blue-shirted guests.

Thousands of the visitors appealed for political refuge in the West Zone. All but a handful of them, however, had to be turned down, because they were unable to demonstrate that their lives were in danger in their own areas.

About 6000 of the most militant invaded the West Zone on Aug. 15 to stage Red "peace" demonstrations. Police broke up the rallies in a series of hand-to-hand street battles in which more than 100 of the demonstrators were arrested.

Approximately 40 Americans, none representing any youth organization, attended all or part of the festival. All of them, apparently, were completely disillusioned.

"The whole thing is a fake," said one American who refused to identify himself, but said he went to East Berlin because he was interested in peace rather than communism. "I think it has done more to divide East and West further than anything else."

Many American and British delegates said their names had been signed without their consent to a pledge to the Russians to "fight for peace" under Stalin's leadership.

The festival was sponsored by the World Federation of Democratic Youth, the constitution of which purports to be concerned with the social and educational rights of young people, but which in practice has been concerned only with Soviet political activities and aims; the Intl. Union of Students, an instrument of the Comintern; and the Free German Youth (FDJ), youth organization of the German Communists.

Balloons For Freedom

While the East Berlin congress was going on, the Crusade For Freedom inaugurated a counter-attack against the Communists—a "balloon barrage" carrying messages of hope and friendship from the free world across the Iron Curtain into Czechoslovakia.

Some 2000 balloons, riding "the Winds of Freedom which in the upper air always blow from West to East," bore messages of encouragement signed by the Crusade For Freedom, representing 16 million Americans; the ORIT, Latin-American regional organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions; Intl. Federation of Free Journalists; Confederation Internationale des Anciens; Prisonniers de Guerre, from Belgium, Germany, Holland and Italy; the General Federation of Women's Clubs, with 11 million members in 32 countries; Canadian Congress of Labor, CIO, and Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, AFL.

"There is no dungeon deep enough to hide the truth," the message read, "no wall high enough to keep out the message of freedom."

Two types of balloons are being used. One is a 4.5-foot square plastic "pillow" on which is imprinted the word "Svoboda," Czech for freedom. It carries one-third of a pound of messages and lands intact.

The other is a 4.5-foot rubber meteorological-type balloon that carries 3.6 pounds of leaflets and bursts at 30,000 feet.

Unplanned Defense Effort Peril To Economy

THE UNITED STATES is in need of an over-all plan that will keep its economy sound in case of either all-out war or peace in Korea, according to the current issue of the CIO Economic Outlook.

The Outlook is published by the CIO Dept. of Research and Education.

"If we are prepared to defend our national interests and the cause of freedom against Communist aggression," it adds, "there is less chance of an all-out war. And if war should come, our preparedness would stand us in good stead.

"The key to our national strength is our ability to produce. It was put to test in World War II and it is the basis of our might today."

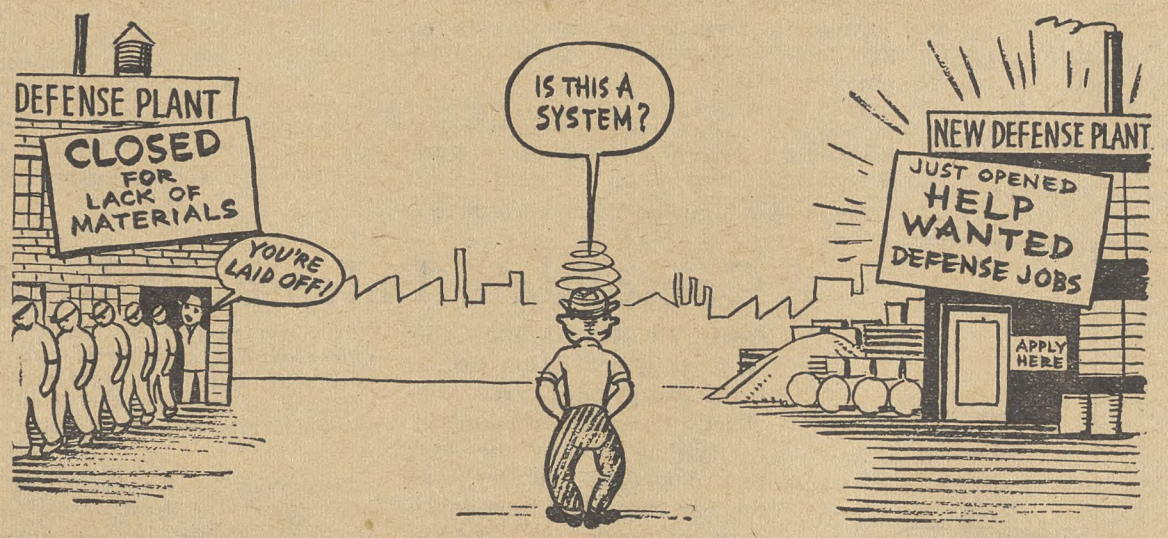
Over-All Plan Needed

The Outlook contends that an over-all defense production program is essential to determine what we need, how fast we are to get it, how to mesh together defense and civilian requirements, how to dovetail defense orders with manpower, raw materials and plants, and how to integrate long-run with short-run considerations.

"Without a planned program," it maintains, "we can at best fumble along and rely on our rich resources, ingenuity and luck to carry us through . . .

"Unfortunately, the over-all defense production program—estimated defense and civilian requirements for partial mobilization based on the military needs for all-out war—is still missing.

"Scheduled production programs of major military goods have hardly gotten under way. And such programs can be only makeshift so long as there is no over-all plan.



—From Economic Outlook

"Top mobilization leaders from Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson down have failed to develop an over-all scheduled defense production plan. As a result, much of the production effort to date has been halting and hesitant."

Production Lagging

The publication quotes from Wilson's report in June that a year after the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, less than $10 billion of finished products had been delivered to the defense forces—slightly more than 3% of our total output. Wilson said this was 20% below his expectations—and his expectations were none too high.

The change from a civilian to a wartime economy poses many problems, the Outlook points out. Time is needed to shift materials, equipment and manpower to defense production. Planning is necessary, it asserts, to carry us through with a minimum of dislocation. It continues:

"If all-out international warfare can be avoided, we should be able to reach the point within a few years where our production can meet the needs of military preparedness PLUS an expanding civilian economy.

Some Progress Noted

The Outlook concedes that progress has been made in defense production, with costs of military construction and deliveries of finished defense goods now at the rate of $18 billion a year, or 5½% of total output, and expected to reach the annual rate of $48 billion by the middle of next year.

"But it has not matched our ability," it adds, "nor has it squarely faced the emergency posed by Communist imperialism.

"Although some dislocation in this armament build-up is inevitable, it is a luxury we can seek to avoid. Future bottlenecks can be broken now by a planned program. A disruption of the economy in the present emergency represents a waste of labor, time and equipment that cannot be retrieved."

The Outlook stresses the intelligent use of manpower in defense planning, with continuation of the 40-hour week and premium overtime pay, greater use of older workers and of Negroes and other minorities, and the channeling of orders to areas where manpower is available.

Federal Trade Commission Reports:

Biz Giants' Profits Outmushroom Mushroom

By GERVASE N. LOVE

IF YOU WERE a farmer growing tobacco in Maryland or corn in Iowa, you'd think yourself pretty sharp if you could write off your total investment in three or four or five—or even 10—years.

Some of the country's biggest industrial firms can do it, even if the farmer can't, at the rate their profits after taxes piled up during 1950.

In fact, three industrial empires wouldn't need as long as three years, at their 1950 rates of return, to get back every penny of capital invested in them.

The Corning Glass Works, for instance, could do it in a week or so longer than 2½ years. Its 1950 rate of return on invested capital after taxes were deducted was 39.4%.

General Motors would need a little longer—just less than two years and nine months. Its rate was 37%.

The far-flung Du Pont principality, with its heavy investment in GM and its incredible variety of industrial chemicals—including nylon—has a 34% profit return; it would need about a month more than GM to get back its investment.

The figures come from a report of the Federal Trade Commission on the rates of return for 520 identical companies in 25 selected manufacturing industries. They represent about half the total assets of all manufacturing companies.

They include all the large and medium-sized firms (but none of the small ones) which make public reports of their earnings. This excludes a few behemoths like the Ford Motor Co. and Lever Brothers, who run a nice, clean soap business.

Big Firm, Big Profits

The FTC statistics are particularly interesting because they are the only ones at hand which pose 1950 earnings and rates of return against those for 1940, last year before World War II, and for 1947, 1948 and 1949.

In 16 of the 25 industries covered in the report, the profit rates of the four largest corporations were higher than those of the smaller corporations throughout the postwar period—1947 to 1950 inclusive. These were:

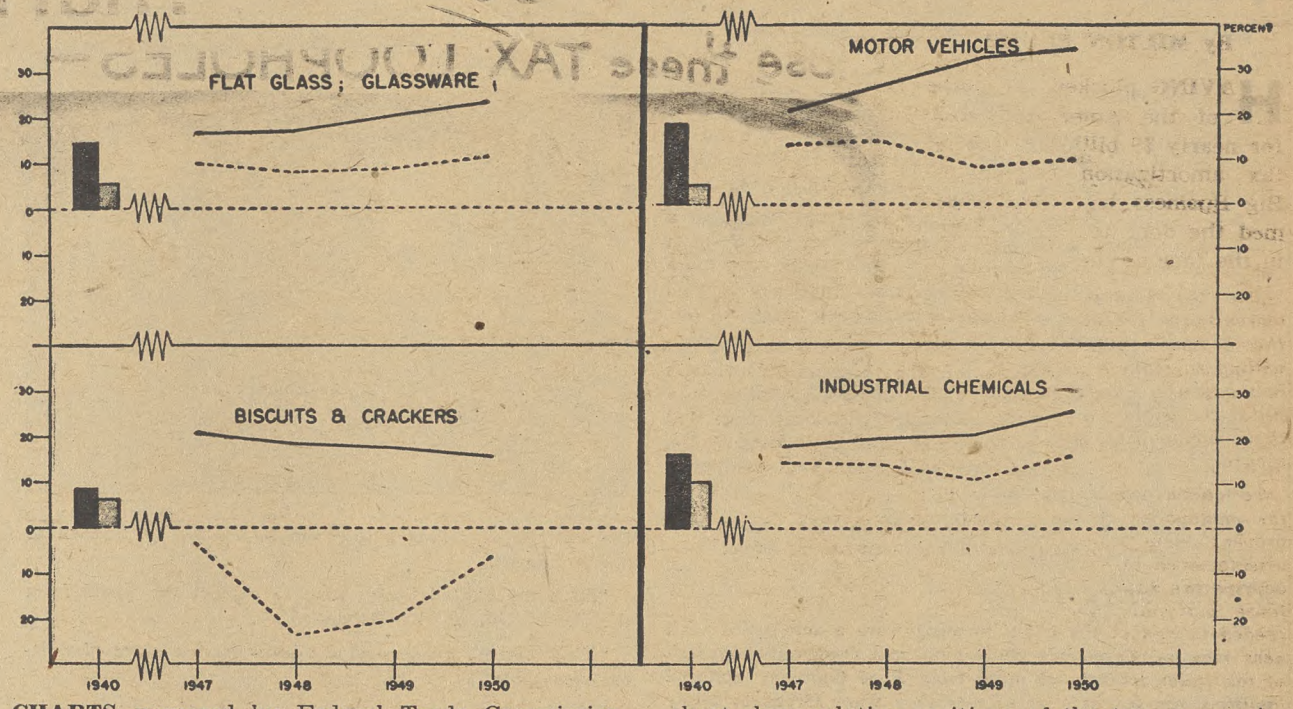
Dairy products, biscuits and crackers, cigarets, cigars, linoleum and felt-base, paper and allied products, industrial chemicals, rayon, soap, tires and tubes, flat glass and glassware, tin cans and other tinware, office and store machines and devices, electrical machinery, equipment and supplies, motor vehicles and motor vehicle equipment.

One more was added in 1950—non-metallic mineral products.

The smaller firms did better than the largest in but six industry groupings in both the postwar period as a whole and in 1950, the report showed. They were bread, wool carpets and rugs, petroleum refining; blast furnaces, steel works and rolling mills, non-ferrous metals and engines and turbines.

In the remaining industries no clear conclusion could be drawn.

"An outstanding characteristic of the industries studied," says the report, "is the continuation into the postwar period of the relationship which existed between the largest and the smaller companies during the prewar period.



CHARTS prepared by Federal Trade Commission compare rates of return on stockholders' investment in four largest companies and in other companies in three selected industries. Blocks at right of each chart show relative positions of the two groups in 1940—black for four largest firms, gray for others. Charts show how monopolists have entrenched themselves since the war started.

"If the large corporations were more profitable than the smaller firms in the prewar period, they continued to be more profitable in the postwar period; and if the reverse was true in the prewar period, it continued to be in the latter period."

However, the prewar relationship in four industries—dairy products, rayon, office and store machines and devices, and motor vehicle equipment—was reversed after the war in favor of the larger firms.

With profit rates increasing all along the line, Corning Glass, GM and Du Pont were not the only firms which could write off their capital investments in short order on the basis of the 1950 rate of return.

A profit rate of 25% would enable a corporation to get back its invested capital in four years. The report shows that these firms, at the 1950 rate of profit, could do it in less than four years:

Libby-Owens Ford Glass Co., 30.3%; Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co., 25.1%; General Electric Co., 26.6%; Radio Corp. of America, 29%; Chrysler Corp., 26%; Nash-Kelvinator Corp., 28.4%; Budd Co., 26.2%, and Briggs Manufacturing Co., 26.7%.

And How's YOUR Mortgage?

Ten other firms earned between 20% and 25% last year, could get back all their investments in between four and five years.

In all but three of the industry groups the FTC studied the profit rate was greater in 1950 than in 1940. In 19 of the groups the rate was higher than in 1949, and in nine it stood at a record high.

The profit rates indicate that when three or four firms tend to monopolize an industry, they tend not only gradually to weaken their smaller competitors and grab off an ever increasing share of the take, but to boost their own rate of net earnings higher and higher above the general level for the industry.

The FTC report shows that in dairy products, for instance, the four largest companies had a net return at the rate of 9.1% in 1940 while 14 other firms earned 10.4%. In 1950, however, the big boys had a profit rate of 14.5% and the smaller fellows an average of 9.5%.

Topsy Was A Piker

In electrical machinery, equipment and supplies, the four largest had a rate of 14.6% in 1940 compared to 22.5% in 1950. On the other hand, 60 smaller companies which had a rate of 13.3% in 1940 climbed to but 18.6% last year—a comfortably large figure, but substantially lower than the giants.

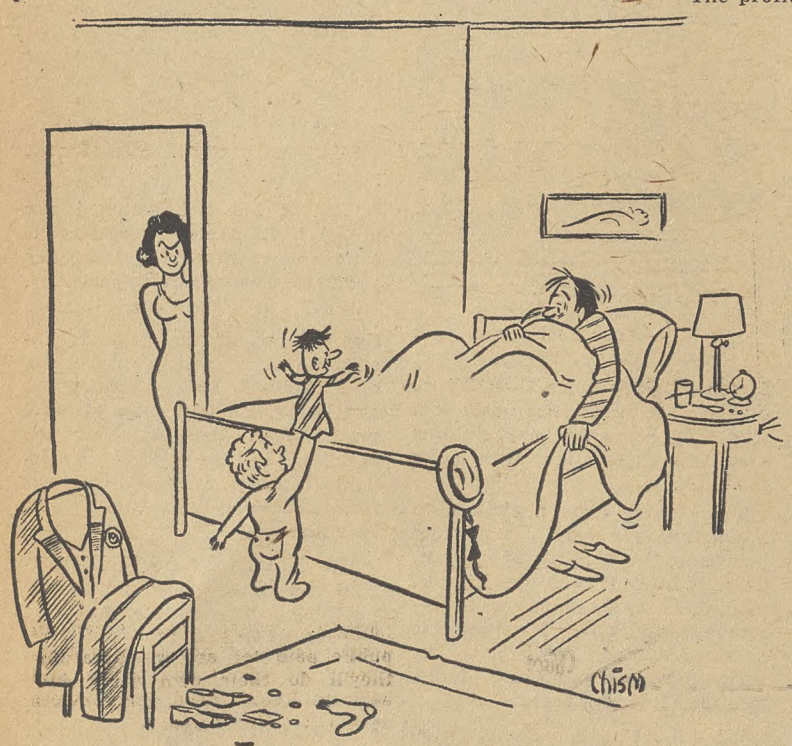
The rates of profit of some of the firms which have, or will get, the major defense contracts lead to some interesting speculation insofar as price control is concerned.

Does Congress, for instance, plan to freeze General Motors' profit rate at 37%, or the Corning Glass Works' at 39.4%?

If so, will Du Pont be allowed to climb up to them—or must it be content with its relatively "modest" 34%? And what about U. S. Steel, which had a net rate of but 11.8% in 1950? Or Bethlehem Steel, with 15.9%?

Will they be frozen at their 1950 rates, or will they, too, be permitted to get into the top-of-the-bottle class?

One thing is certain: None of the big boys will suffer.



"Howdy doody, pal, how's the old head feel this morning?"

Consolidate Defense Of Trenton 'Two'

THE FIGHT TO free Collis English and Ralph Cooper—the two young Negroes convicted of murder last June by a jury that acquitted the other four defendants in the Trenton Six case—has been taken over by a new joint defense committee.

The American Civil Liberties Union, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the Princeton Committee for Defense of the Trenton Six have united to set up the Joint Committee to Free the Trenton Two.

The new group will assume complete financial and legal responsibility for the appeal of the case.

Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council said the new committee has the Council's strong support and cooperation.

The Trenton Six were accused of the murder, in January, 1948, of William Horner, an aged second-hand shop dealer, during an attempted robbery at his Trenton store.

Spokesmen for the Committee said that every legal resource would be exhausted to obtain the release of Cooper and English, including appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary. The two men were sentenced last June to life imprisonment.

Attorneys for Cooper and English, Arthur Garfield Hays of the ACLU, and George Pelletieri of Trenton—have already filed their intention to appeal to the State Supreme Court.

"We are convinced that these men, who have already spent more than three years in prison and have three times been on trial for their lives, are victims, not criminals," the Committee stated.

The statement said the jury inconsistently acquitted the two men charged with striking the blows that killed Horner and the two accused of being lookout men, but convicted Cooper and English, charged only with being present.

ACQUITTED were McKinley Forrest, John McKenzie, James Thorpe and Horace Wilson.

All six were convicted and sentenced to be executed at the close of their first short trial in June, 1948.

The State Supreme Court declared the first trial unfair and ordered the men re-tried. After nearly three years' delay, the second trial which finally opened Feb. 5, 1951, ended in a mistrial when the prosecutor was taken to the hospital for an appendectomy.

It was at the third trial, which opened Mar. 5, that the jury returned a verdict freeing four of the men and finding two guilty.

National Scandal Brewing

Tax Refunds 'Studied,' Now That Big Biz Got Its Fill

By MILTON PLUMB

HAVING plucked the purse of the American public for nearly $9 billion in special tax amortization certificates, Big Business last week slammed the door to such benefits in the face of the little fellow.

The big monopolies, in other words, have reached the limit of the defense expansion they are willing to make even at the public's expense. They've drunk their fill at the public trough, and made their monopolistic hold even more secure.

To clinch their grip, however, the monopolies are determined to prevent new competition from arising, even if by doing so they deprive the nation of essential defense materials. They have succeeded in denying the small business man even his "token" share of tax funds for special plant and facilities expansion.

This, in summary, is the actual effect and real meaning of last week's order by the Office of Defense Mobilization clamping down a 60-day moratorium on the granting of special tax amortization certificates.

Behind the administrative niceties, the legal double-talk and confusing regulations connected with the so-called "certificates of necessity" program is a national scandal.

Unhidden Scandal

The amazing thing about this scandal, however, is that it has been allowed to grow in the open. Congress has been fully aware of what has been going on. Some conscientious Congressmen have been critical of the program from the very beginning.

In voting to approve "certificates of necessity," Congress originally had in mind the defense need for additional special-purpose facilities having only a war use, such as a gunpowder factory, or a mine for a rare metal.

The certificates were to allow firms investing in these kinds of enterprises to depreciate them—that is to recover the capital invested—in five years.

However, when the Defense Production Administration—staffed by agents of big business serving "without compensation"—came to administer the program, the WOCs, as the hoards of business stooges are known in Washington, saw to it that the certificates were granted to almost every kind of big enterprise with no questions asked.

Labor Was Aware

There is no question but that the nation needs the expanded capacity which the program was intended to make possible. Organized labor, determined to support the defense effort to the fullest, said that following even this scandalous method was better than not getting the additional capacity essential to defend the nation.

But labor from the beginning was critical of the tax-amortization certificates because they were not doing the job intended.

Not only were small firms frozen out of the program, but big business jumped at the chance to use the certificates to write off costs even of plants which had been completed before the benefits had been approved. No additional facilities resulted in such cases.

During recent weeks, the rate at which the certificates were granted increased sharply. Observers wondered at the sudden increase in the number of requests approved, although they noted that nearly all of them were still going to big business, rather than to little firms.

A total of 172 requests totalling $234.7 million were approved in the week of Aug. 3 to 10, for example. More than half of the total funds went to two firms.

Not including an unknown amount of additional applications rushed through last week, the total value of facilities for which the special tax treatment has been approved since the beginning of the program last fall amounts to more than $8,883,154,415. Approximately 70% of this amount is subject to the rapid amortization; the remaining amount can also be written off in the normal period, usually about 20 to 25 years.

Sen. Benton Critical

"This whole policy," Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) points out, "automatically put great productive capacities in the hands of great corporations who anticipate being in the excess-profits brackets and therefore are in here asking for these certificates, while the smaller manufacturers aren't even going to have a chance to buy the plants after the war as they would have if the government were building the plants."

The irony of the situation is that many of the certificates have been issued although the plants proposed actually can't be built, either because of shortages of steel or other factors, and many may never be developed.

Some of the requests were to build new facilities in remote, out-of-the-way places, to make products never to be made again. Obviously, these were moves by the monopolies to divert money—and government orders—from smaller firms.

During the recent hearings on the Defense Production Act, Secy. of the Interior Oscar Chapman, who had opposed the high rates of amortization being granted, told the Senate Banking Committee how the small business man was frozen out under the program.

Little Guy Didn't Share

"As a small business man," Chapman said, "he is almost excluded from prime contracts by just the sheer fact that he is a small business operator, and his plant capacity is so small that he can't take one of these major operating contracts. He has to come in as a subcontractor."

Chapman then described the small business man's plight when he tried to benefit under one of the smaller contracts:

"Obviously the big industry people of the country have their plans and their programming for two, three and five years ahead, worked out much more completely than the average small man has.

"So when the Defense Act was passed, most of your large companies that wanted amortization, as an example, for plant extensions, were ready to file their completed requests almost overnight with every bit of requirement that was necessary, so they got in first. There isn't any question about that."

This was a description of only the less sordid side of the picture. Lawyers and economists who tried to process requests for the tax certificates from smaller firms report that these requests were simply pigeonholed.

Big business requests went through in a matter of days, and sometimes hours, but thousands of small business requests were delayed for many months.

What was happening was this: The big business executives serving on the staff of the DPA saw to it that the requests of the big firms got processed promptly—and favorably.

The requests from the little fellows were handled in the routine way—by minor government clerks.

While the WOC men were "taking care of" their friends without too much regard for scruples, the clerks handling the small business requests were required to process each with the utmost conscientiousness.

The WOCs Laughed

Applications were rejected for the slightest technicality, or they were delayed interminably for further study and investigation.

The big business crowd in the top posts thus turned an admirable conscientiousness on the part of honest government employes seeking only to protect the government into a weapon to serve their ends. Behind their backs, however, they were laughing at "those stupid bureaucrats."

Figures made available to Congress last May concerning the size of companies receiving the certificates indicated that 69% of those approved had gone to big business firms with more than 500 employes.

These same companies got 87% of the total amount approved up to that time. Some 8000 applications, mostly from small business, had not been acted upon at all.

Yet among the approved requests were tax amortizations granted on plant facilities begun, and in some cases completed, before the outbreak of the war in Korea. Included were certificates on office buildings and similar facilities that were two-thirds completed at the time of the Korean invasion.

Program Halted

In his Aug. 13 order halting the processing of pending requests for two months, Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson said that it was intended to give officials an opportunity to review the program.

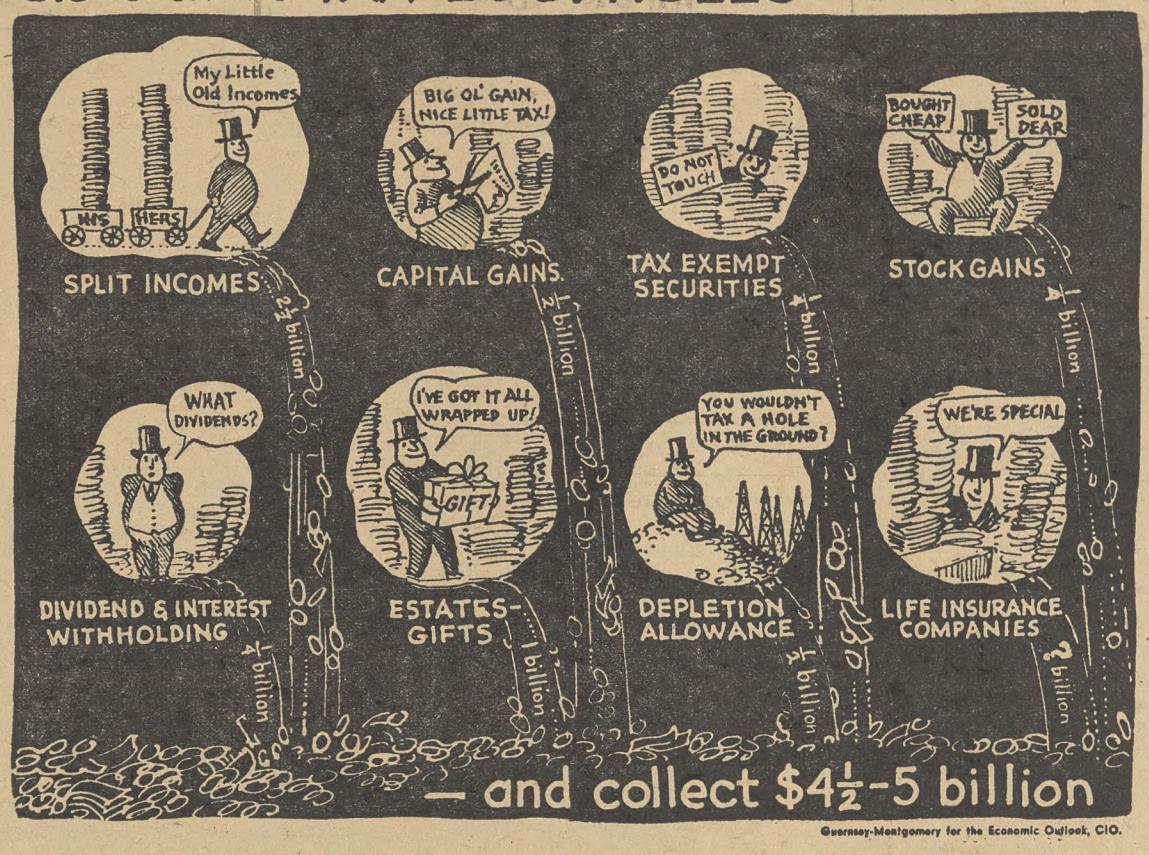
"We should tighten our standards and adhere to specific rules wherever possible," Wilson instructed. "This should result in generally lower percentages of amortization."

While on the surface this step may appear to be all to the good, actually it means that it will deny thousands of small firms—whose applications have been pending for many months while hundreds of big business applications were being rushed through—the same depreciation rate even if their requests are finally approved. Applications are now pending for more than $12 billion—most of them from small business enterprises.

The worst irony of all, however, is this. Little firms, which have been doing work for the big monopolies under subcontracts, are now being told that a few months hence they will no longer get the same orders.

The big fellows tell them that, as soon as the new plant facilities which the American public paid for are in operation, they'll do their own work and will no longer need the services of the smaller firms.

(Next week: How the public pays to build monopoly.)



"You've just got to learn the value of money. Think how hard Daddy works to make it."

Senate Finance Dixiegops Plan Soak-The-Poor Tax

FAMILIES with small and middle incomes will get soaked with most of the increased income taxes necessary to pay for defense if Republican-Dixiecrat members of the Senate Finance Committee have their way.

As the committee last week began writing—behind closed doors—its version of the new tax bill, a strong move was developing to kill the individual income tax plan adopted by the House.

Chairman George (D. Ga.) of the Senate Finance Committee, said that no final decision had been reached, but he has previously expressed disapproval of the House proposal. Republican members of the committee are known also to oppose the system adopted by the House, on the grounds that it would put more of the proposed new taxes on the upper-income families.

The Senate committee seemed to be working toward adoption of a method turned down by the House Ways and Means Committee, after a flood of protesting letters resulted from its earlier vote of tentative approval. The method being considered by the Senate would mean an addition of three percentage points to the tax rates — not actual payments — in all brackets.

Methods Compared

Under the House-approved method, the taxpayer would compute his taxes according to the old rates and then add 12½%.

Either method would raise approximately the same amount of increased income for the government.

However, under the plan being considered by the Senate, the average family with two children and an income of $3000 to $5000 would pay 15% more taxes instead of the 12.5% increase voted by the House. But the same family with an income of $100,000 would pay only 5.5% more under the Senate plan.

The Senators who favor the percentage point approach admit openly that this method hits low incomes harder than the upper brackets.

Although they were the same men who helped wreck the new price controls law and to bring on more inflation, they now try to justify their support of this method by saying that "it is necessary to combat inflation."

Some Relief Considered

George did say last week, however, that the committee was considering plans to ease the proposed increase on low-income single people and married couples who get no help from the split income provision because their income totals less than $5000 a year.

There was no definite indication of what action the Senate would take in regard to the President's request for $10 billion in additional taxes. However, several members of the committee have already urged cutting the increase of $7.2 billion voted by the House to between $5 billion and $7 billion.

Sen. Martin (R. Pa.), a committee member, said that a cut will definitely be made.

● The Twentieth Century Fund called for an increase of $16 billion a year in personal income taxes—most of it to come from the small wage earner.

It asked that the rate in the lowest bracket be increased from 20% to 32% and personal exemptions be cut from $600 to $400. This would mean a boost of more than 500% in the tax paid by a married man with two children earning $3000 a year.

● Congress was warned by its own financial experts—the staff members of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report—that taxes will have to go higher than the House measure proposes if the defense program is to be kept on a pay-as-you-go basis.

The staff report upheld President Truman's $10 billion request as necessary "to balance the administrative budget."

● Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) asked the committee to rewrite the House bill to close "loopholes" which, he said, give unwarranted benefits to the well-to-do. He hit at depletion allowances granted oil and mining interests, called for higher estate, gift and gains taxes, and asked a strict withholding tax system on dividends.

Humphrey estimated that $4.5 billion more in taxes could be raised by merely plugging loopholes. He added:

"Loophole closing is not an easy undertaking since it will raise opposition by powerful interests. Unfortunately, the man in the street does not have a lobby to protest the injustices in our tax laws. He must be protected nonetheless."

The Minnesota Senator said that Congress would "violate every test of equal sacrifice" if it asked the people with low incomes to make a substantially larger tax contribution for defense "when the rich become richer through our failure to close tax loopholes."

Humphrey Asks Better Lobbying Act

A BILL amending the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act to require all lobbying organizations or individuals to report quarterly all contributors of $50 or more has been introduced by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

The present law requires lobbies to reveal only the sources of contributions of $500 or more. This, Humphrey told the Senate, merely "invites evasion."

"Some organizations refuse to accept any contribution larger than $490 and thus avoid having to reveal the source of the donor," Humphrey pointed out.

The Minnesota Senator said that he regarded his amendment only as "one of the primary or initial steps" toward a much-needed complete revision of the Federal regulation of lobbying acts.

He cited a number of major defects in the present law which, he said, "should be revised to provide for continuous and effective publicity of all lobbying activity so that the public may be kept constantly aware of the pressures that are attempting to affect the welfare of this country."

Humphrey's bill (S. 1961) has been referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Britain Europe's Output Leader

Great Britain has gone far ahead of other European countries in post-war industrial output, farm mechanization and housing, according to a report by the Organization for European Economic Cooperation.

It is the only nation where industrial production per man-hour has passed the pre-war level, the OEEC said. With 100 as the pre-war measure, Great Britain's current output is 105, Norway's 96, Denmark's 88. France is down in the list with 69.

British farm tractors, which numbered 50,000 in 1938, totalled 275,000 in 1949-50 and is expected to jump to 300,000 in 1952.

Her coal mining production "per manshift made the best recovery since the war," the OEEC found, while "only in the United Kingdom was the number of dwellings per head of the population greater than pre-war."

New York State CIO Denounces McCarthy

Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) is "the nation's No. 1 character assassin," the executive board of the New York State CIO Council declared in a resolution passed at a meeting at Lake Placid.

The CIO accused McCarthy of "handing out political narcotics to the American people in an effort to cover up his imcompetence as a Senator."

"Don't keep telling me you invented the atom bomb—just repair my cigarette lighter."

Utah 25th State To Ask 'Keep Uncle Sam Poor'

THE "KEEP Uncle Sam Poor Club" scored another victory recently when the Utah Legislature, with every Republican voting in the affirmative, approved a resolution asking Congress to consider a constitutional amendment limiting the federal taxing power to 25% of incomes.

Utah thus became the 25th State to give legislative approval to the proposal. It has been pushed since 1938 by the American Taxpayers Association, a front for ultra-wealthy reactionaries who have their own tax evasion program.

The Democrats control the Utah Senate by 15 to 8, but four Democrats joined with their fellow-tory Republicans to put across the resolution by a 12 to 11 vote.

In the House, which is split 30-30, one lone Democrat lined up with the friends of the wealthy to pass it by a 31 to 29 tally.

Action on the resolution was preceded by a campaign in which Orval W. Adams was the spokesman for the special privilege groups.

CIO Hits Proposal

Pres. Clarence L. Palmer of the Utah CIO Council in a statement quoted Adams as saying that "the pipeline from the Treasury into the pockets of the voters must be wrecked." Palmer said:

"Such statements . . . clearly indicate that the spokesmen of industry are hell-bent on protecting these profits and income from taxation by passing the cost on to the workers in the form of sales taxes or excise taxes.

"This is done by placing a tax on the things the public buys, such as automobiles, food, clothing and other essentials . . .

"Mr. Adams, in asking for the destruction of the so-called 'pipeline,' failed to say what that pipeline contained. To the worker, it contains social security, workmen's compensation, occupational disease compensation.

"To the old people it contains old age benefits.

"To all the people it contains insurance against bank failures, 4½% interest on home loans, development of our rivers, forests and parks. To the farmer it means parity payments and low interest on farm mortgages. To education it contains more and better schools.

"Mr. Adams talks like the rest of the spokesmen for special privilege, but he says very little except 'don't tax us—pass it on to the working people.'

False Economy Blasted

"Labor is for economy whenever it can be practiced without endangering the social reforms that we have fought so long and so hard to get. We are for a fair tax program that will place the burden on those that are most able to pay. Certainly those with high incomes and large excess profits should pay, and such payments should be on a graduated scale . . .

"If there is a danger to our country, it isn't in helping the working people and the consumers. Rather it is permitting the greedy, dangerous and economically unsound profits of America's corporations."

The program of the American Taxpayers Association, with its proposed 25% limitation, is liberal compared to that of the National Committee to Limit Federal Taxing Powers.

This outfit, the result of a merger of guiding lights in the tory Committee for Constitutional Government and the equally tory American Medical Association, wants to turn off Uncle Sam's taxing authority at 15% of the average total annual income received by the country's individuals during the previous four years.

Other States Act

The 25% limitation has been approved in resolutions passed by the legislatures of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Iowa, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana and Nevada.

The Pennsylvania and Montana resolutions were vetoed by the respective governors. The Wisconsin, Illinois and Arkansas Legislatures have rescinded their action.

The ATA technique of amending the Constitution has never been used before. It is based on a section of the Constitution which provides that Congress "on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds (32) of the several states, shall call a convention for proposing amendments."

The proposals then would get the same treatment as an amendment approved by Congress, with approval by two-thirds (36) of the states needed for ratification.

The ATA is using the conventional approach—through Congress. Joint resolutions proposing the 25% limitation as a Constitutional amendment have been introduced by Rep. Coudert (N. Y.) and Rep. Mason (Ill.), Republicans who usually reflect the views of swollen wealth.

—From The Washington Post

"Say, What Ever Happened to 'Freedom From Fear'?"

Latest M'Carthy Smear Kicking Back On Him

THE conscience of America last week was bringing about a growing rebellion against McCarthyism and all the dirty political shenanigans the term implies.

Although the Senate Rules Committee took no action on a resolution calling for the expulsion from Congress of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wisc.), the nation's press and hundreds of individuals joined in deploring McCarthy's latest smear campaign against State Dept. employes.

McCarthy, again hiding behind the cloak of congressional immunity which protects him from libel suits, on Aug. 9 named 26 State Dept. employes who, he said, "are all charged with Communistic activities." As usual, he offered no proof to substantiate his remarks.

The State Dept. promptly pointed out that his list included "the names of persons who are not employes of the Dept. of State, employes who have been cleared by the department Loyalty Security Board, as well as individuals in process through the loyalty program."

Carlisle H. Humelsine, State Dept. spokesman, issued a statement in which he said that "as an American" he deeply deplored "the smear tactics used in making this misleading list of names public." He added:

"I am at a loss to understand the motives of a man in Sen. McCarthy's position of responsibility, who deliberately violates the fundamental tenet of freedom from intimidation."

Sens. McFarland (D. Ariz.) and Lehman (D. N.Y.) struck back at McCarthy in speeches on the Senate floor. McFarland pointed out that the Kremlin would like to bring about distrust of those in authority and added:

"When you take a man's good name by insinuation and innuendo, without proof, you are doing him a great injustice. More, you are doing your country a greater injury when you accuse a man unjustly of disloyalty to his country."

Meanwhile the American Foreign Service Journal, an unofficial publication, called upon the State Dept. to "have the courage to defend" its workers against unjustified attacks.

An unusually outspoken editorial in the Journal said that in the face of the current criticism of department employes," "courage is needed on the part of the department and the government."

The highlight of the week's growing indignation with McCarthy's betrayal of the basic American tenet that an accused is innocent until proven guilty. however, was a speech in which the Wisconsin smear-monger wasn't even mentioned.

PRESIDENT Truman, in dedicating the new Washington headquarters of the American Legion, bitterly attacked those who, while claiming to be against Communism, "are chipping away at our basic freedoms just as insidiously and far more effectively than the Communists have been able to do."

The President said that a campaign of "slander, accusation and just plain lies" was being waged and that the practice of character assassination has become a threat "to every single citizen everywhere in this country." He called upon the people to "rise up and put a stop to this terrible business."

He was interrupted three times with warm applause.

Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), author of the resolution calling for McCarthy's ouster from the Senate, revealed that hundreds of people have written him to support his stand. Benton challenged McCarthy to campaign against him in Connecticut when he comes up for reelection next year.

Price Control Front Cracks, New Increases Predicted

THE THIRD of the "big three" automobile manufacturers last week jumped on the gravy train to higher prices made possible under the new price controls law.

General Motors Corp. informed Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle that it wants to increase the prices of its cars 9% to 10%. Ford Motor Co. and the Chrysler Corp. had previously applied for similar increases.

Well, What Are We Waiting For?

With porterhouse steak about $1.25 a pound. cattlemen and packer lobbyists shed crocoddile tears until Congress killed two roll backs in meat prices. But if American meat men lived in Cuba, they would really have something to cry about.

There the official price for first grade beef is 36c a pound, retail. Second grade is 28c.

Threats by livestock men to hold back cattle shipments to slaughterhouses for higher prices were met last week by an order giving the government power to seize and re-sell at official prices the whole range of farm and industrial products.

Action on the automakers' requests is expected in a few weeks. But DiSalle pointed out that in addition to any increases approved at this level, the prices of cars also will be affected by the provision in the law requiring the Office of Price Stabilization to permit "customary" percentage markups.

That means that the actual percentage increase to the auto buyer will be higher than that granted to the manufacturers.

The Price Stabilizer said that he is now trying to find out if the new law permits any additional rollbacks on the price of beef. The law prohibits roll backs on agricultural products below the May 19 level. DiSalle said that there is some "confusion" about what effect this clause has on beef prices.

"If the new controls law permits any beef roll backs, I will order them," he added.

Hopes of the government to keep the price of beef in line despite the new law received a severe blow last week when an outbreak of hoof-and-mouth disease was discovered in Mexico. Agricultural experts had been preparing to recommend lifting the four-year ban against Mexican beef in an effort to bring some cattle to market at competitive prices. The discovery of the disease at this time means postponing such action for at least a year.

Charles E. Wilson, director of defense mobilization, addressing the National Institute for Chamber of Commerce and Trade Association Officials on Aug. 14, forecast local meat famines and black markets.

THE BAN ON the livestock slaughtering quota system written into the new law, he said, probably will disrupt the meat distribution system and concentrate supplies in the hands of large packers at the expense of the independents.

"The result is likely to be local meat famines," he added, "which the customer can avoid only by paying illegal and extortionate prices for black market meat."

Wilson said that the new law had breached the dam against higher prices, and compared the present inflationary spiral to a dog chasing its tail.

"Round and round it goes," he said, "and where it stops nobody knows."

Meanwhile, the Democratic National Committee joined Sen. Anderson (D. N. Mex.) in calling the ban on slaughter quotas the "black marketing amendment."

In its publication, Capital Comment, the committee pointed out that the ban was sponsored by two Republicans, Rep. Hope and Sen. Butler, both of Nebraska, and that while a majority of Democrats in both houses had opposed it, 81% of the Republicans in the House and 36 of 39 Republican Senators had voted for it.

Inflation Victim: The 10% Tip

Here's a tip from an expert on tipping: Inflation's going to cost you more for tips, as well as living, in the months ahead.

Gilbert Phillips, manager of the travel department of the New York Automobile Club, last week advised summer vacationists that the old 10% tip no longer is in keeping with the times. He referred to it as an "inflation casualty."

He suggested 15% to 20% of the check as appropriate.

But he did provide an out. Under no circumstances, he said, should you leave more than you can afford.

Steak Dinner Price For Senators Zooms

Now the story of rising food costs has come home to the Senate.

The price of the "Senate Special," a daily favorite meal in the Senate Restaurant in the Capitol, last week leaped 35% upward.

Gone are the days when coffee and dessert went with a meal. Now the lawmakers pay an additional 30c for those two items.

The price of a 12-ounce sirloin steak has gone up from $2.50—the price last spring—to $3.25.

Negro Group Backs IUE In Election

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is supporting the CIO Electrical Workers in the forthcoming National Labor Relations Board representation election at the General Electric Co. plant in Schenectady, N. Y.

The NAACP sponsored a mass meeting in Schenectady at which Herbert Hill, its assistant field secretary, declared that the NAACP "supports democratic, anti-Jim Crow, non-Communist unions both on the local and national levels." Edward Gamarkeian, chairman of the NAACP branch executive committee, also spoke.

The IUE is being opposed in the election by the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers, which was expelled from the CIO

As San Francisco CIO Sees It:

NAM Assesses You A Dollar A Day; Give PAC A Buck To Save Union Gains

CIO UNIONS in San Francisco have launched a campaign for Political Action Committee memberships with an effective leaflet reminding members that the wrong kind of representation in Congress is costing them $600 each over a two-year period.

"You've earned that six hundred bucks," the leaflet explains, "but it's been taken away from you by lawmakers and politicians—and the lobbyists behind them—back in Washington, who are writing laws to promote inflation and more high prices for you, instead of bringing prices out of the stratosphere.

"Six hundred bucks—that's the cost to each American family of runaway prices. Half of it went to price boosts in the last year and a half, since war began in Korea.

"And you'll have to shell out the other half of it in the year ahead, because Congress has just enacted an 'anti-inflation' law which will roll prices forward instead of rolling them back . . .

"Three hundred dollars this coming year for higher prices figures out at pretty close to a dollar a day in higher living costs, in reduced living standards for each American family.

"It amounts to a dollar a day 'assessment' paid by you to the National Association of Manufacturers and the friends of high prices.

"When Congress, by its action and inaction, can cut your real wages by a dollar a day (for that is what the new law does), when reactionary politicians in legislative halls can take away what you and your union gain at the bargaining table, then 'bread and butter' politics are a pretty important matter to the average working man and woman."

The leaflet was prepared for the unions by the San Francisco CIO Industrial Union Council.

It points out that "bread and butter politics" is the concern of PAC at every level—local, state and national—and urges a "buck for PAC" to help elect lawmakers "who will enact laws which will protect the gains we make in collective bargaining."

THIS IS WHAT the recent flood did to the homes of many CIO Packinghouse Workers in Topeka, Kansas. Not only did many of them lose their homes, but their jobs as well, when the Morrell Packing Co., employing about 1200, announced that it was so seriously damaged by the flood it would shut down permanently. Some trailers are due to arrive in Topeka ultimately to house homeless families still living in makeshift accommodations.

Trailer City Will Shelter Homeless Victims Of Flood

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

A DESPERATE need of housing is now, and will long be, the big problem in areas devastated by the Midwest floods.

Thousands of families, a large part of them CIO, are still sleeping in schools, tents, public buildings and other makeshift shelters a month after the flood.

Many others are still living crowded in with relatives, friends or neighbors who took them in for the flood emergency. But the "emergency" has turned out to be a matter not of a few days or even weeks, but a long bleak period which seems to all concerned to have no end.

Workers' homes in the heavily industrialized areas of Kansas City, Kansas, where the flood destruction was worst, still lie in shambles.

In the Armourdale district alone, some 3000 families, at least half of them CIO, reports Secy.-Treas. H. J. Yount of the Kansas CIO Council, have no place to call their own.

In the adjacent district of Argentine, some 300 families are still living in one school building, Yount says.

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers in Topeka, another badly hit area, tell of a CIO family of 12, ranging in age from 14 months to 60 years, who are living in an army tent with no better housing yet in sight.

Meanwhile they have thrown up a rough wooden addition to the tent to relieve the congestion a bit. This CIO family is only one of many critical cases in Topeka.

The Red Cross has been doing a rushing business in giving out food orders, clothes, arranging temporary shelter and helping fill incidental needs.

But what these homeless people want to know is when they can get their scattered families together again in a house of their own—and what help they can expect in replacing their destroyed homes, furniture and other belongings.

The most important step taken so far—and this too is a temporary measure — is the plan to bring trailers into the flood ruined areas.

Government officials in charge of the project at first said the trailers could not come in until sewers, electricity, water pipes and other facilities were constructed on sites set aside for trailers.

THIS WOULD postpone even the temporary housing program for some time. The CIO national Housing Committee and CIO Emergency Flood Relief Committee in Kansas City urged that trailers be brought in at once and placed in school yards and at the sites of destroyed homes, where necessary utilities could be adapted quickly to immediate needs.

Officials yielded to this argument and last week agreed to permit some trailers to be made available on such sites at once. Several hundred were reported to be rolling into the Kansas City, Kans., area.

The overall plan for the use of trailers in the flood housing emergency in this area calls for setting up a "trailer city" on an 85-acre golf course in the Armourdale district near the southern limits of Kansas City.

Yount, who told of this plan on a visit to CIO headquarters last week, said that he had just been appointed as a CIO state representative to the 25-member Kansas State Rehabilitation Committee recently named by Gov. Edward Arn. The committee was scheduled to meet in Topeka to take up important flood problems, including housing.

Funds for trailers and other emergency housing relief projects came from the $25 million appropriated by Congress for flood aid. So far $7 million of this sum has been allocated to the Housing and Home Finance Agency for emergency housing and other flood relief. Raymond Foley is administrator of the HHFA.

AS FOR long-range plans to aid those who lost their homes in the flood, Congress on Aug. 3 approved a bill which amends the National Housing Act to provide a 100% guarantee for mortgages up to $7000 in the flooded area, and a 95% guarantee for mortgages up to $8500.

Flood sufferers also would be aided under a bill entitled the Flood Claims Act of 1951 introduced in both the Senate and the House.

The proposed legislation would set up a Flood Claims Commission of five members appointed by the President to direct a survey and determine the extent of damage to property in the flood area for the purpose of authorizing payment of indemnity for losses suffered, according to a formula set forth in the bill.

Hearings on the bill were held in the House last week and will continue this week. In the Senate the bill has been referred to the Judiciary Committee.

CWA Members Hard To Help

CIO Communications Workers were hit badly by the Midwest floods in practically every area affected, Secy.-Treas. H. J. Yount of the Kansas CIO Council said last week.

Yount said that union investigators sent out by William Bastian, CWA director in the flood area, to find out what had happened to telephone workers in the disaster reported that flooded-out members had been found living in 15 towns in an area of 800 square miles.

The fact that they were scattered over such a wide area, instead of concentrated in industrial centers as were most CIO members, made the problem of getting aid to them particularly difficult.

Fresh Start Is Needed To Control Missouri

ANTHONY W. SMITH, assistant CIO director of industrial union councils, told delegates to the 13th annual convention of Iowa State CIO Council in Des Moines that Missouri Valley residents need a fresh start toward future control of the great river.

Big dams and a nine-foot navigation channel are not necessarily the answer to making the most of the river's potentialities, he said.

Pointing out that the CIO has asked President Truman to set up an emergency commission to study the whole problem, Smith said there can be no progress in the valley "until people interested in it agree to come to some over-all direction as would be contained in a central authority similar to the Tennessee Valley Authority." He continued:

"We believe work should be started immediately to carry out plans for holding water where it falls by means of small dams and ponds back on the farms.

"It is possible that big reservoirs would be necessary here and there, especially to generate power, but there should be a different approach other than the 'big dam' philosophy."

Pres. Vernon Dale of the council urged the convention to strengthen its battle against all "unfriendly labor laws."

He sharply criticized the State Republican party for its failure to modify or repeal the state anti-closed shop and secondary boycott laws during the 1951 legislative session.

Dale called for an increase in union dues to be placed in a special educational fund for use in stating the CIO's position on state and national legislation.

Harry Booth, president of the Des Moines CIO Council, urged that local CIO unions "become increasingly active in community betterment services."

Uniform industrial safety laws, patterned after similar statutes in 45 other states, were called for by M. L. Gilbert, State commissioner of labor. Such a bill failed to pass in the last session of the Legislature.

The convention supported a resolution in favor of an educational program of summer schools, week-end institutes and close cooperation with the State Vocational Educational Dept., which has given the State CIO complete latitude in conducting local union night classes.

MAIN themes of the convention were the broadening of the CIO Community Services Committee, political action and activity on the legislative fronts.

Delegates approved resolutions in support of a comprehensive national health program; a general federal aid to education bill; a continuing fight for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, and an endorsement of the Jewish Labor Committee.

Other resolutions called for elimination of segregation and discrimination in the State; reaffirmed support of an increase in the financial support of Iowa schools, and advocated establishment of a Farm-Labor Cooperation committee.

Dale was reelected president and Kenneth Everhart was renamed secretary-treasurer.

Jim Crow Schools Legalized By Arizona Legislature

THE SCHOOL Board of Tucson —the second largest city in Arizona—has voted to abolish Jim Crow schools.

This followed the action of the State Legislature which voted to permit de-segregation in the schools. The presence in the House of the first two Negro representatives speeded an affirmative vote.

The Senate passed the bill without a dissenting vote because copper, railroad and utility interests were in favor of the measure—one school instead of two means lower taxes.

Most Arizona communities have Jim Crow schools, but in a few towns the old law making segregation mandatory was ignored in the interest of economy.

In 1949 and last November, bills to abolish segregation were defeated in the Legislature. Anti-segregationists recently introduced another bill just for the record.

When the bill was amended to make de-segregation permissive instead of obligatory, the measure passed through the Legislature with comparative ease.

In addition to Tucson, other smaller cities have voted out Jim Crow schools.

In the copper towns of Miami and Globe the firing of Negro teachers followed de-segregation action.

The courts, however, decided in their favor a test suit—instituted with the help of the Arizona Education Association.

German Miners Grateful To U S.

The Miners Union of Western Germany has received a grant of 225,000 marks, or about $50,000, of U. S. cultural funds for establishing an education center at Haltern for young miners.

The money came from a congressional appropriation earmarked for the purpose of encouraging democratic institutions in Germany. The union is spending about 255,000 marks of its own funds as its share of the project.

In a letter to L. E. Ditchfield, chairman of the U. S. Special Projects Committee, acknowledging the grant, August Schmidt, union president, wrote:

"Anything that is done to contribute to education and training in our modern world will further international understanding.

"A school will live and fulfill its purpose long after the occupation is gone. Therefore, it will remain a living example of the cooperation and good will of the Americans towards the German trade union movement."

Fire Seagoing Dope Sellers, Curran Urges

PRES. Joseph Curran of the CIO National Maritime Union, last week urged legislation to give the Coast Guard authority to deprive sailors convicted of dope peddling of their government papers.

Testifying before the Senate Crime Investigating Committee, Curran also recommended circulation among union officials and employers of a bulletin listing all persons convicted of narcotic law violations.

Curran pointed out that the NMU is "rough" on convicted narcotic violators and lifts their union cards at once.

Union action was not so effective as it might be, he said, because convicted dope smugglers and peddlers could still find berths on ships outside NMU jurisdiction and continue their illegal activities.

CIO Unity Pays Well

WITH ONLY 200 members, Local 64 of the United Rubber Workers is one of the smallest CIO locals in Contra Costa County, Cal.—but there are several large steel, oil and auto union locals in the county.

Their support, through the county CIO Council, paid off recently in a 15c hourly wage settlement and several major contract improvements, including a three-week vacation clause and better working conditions at the Pioneer Rubber Mills.

Co-operation among all CIO locals was a major factor in the successful negotiations, said Local 60 Pres. J. O. Stedman. Several weeks ago the URW unit called in Jack Bruhl, head of the Contra Costa CIO Council and also of OIW Local 587.

Negotiations dragged, until Bruhl made plain to management that the 10,000 CIO members in the county would be fully able to support a strike by the small URW local. That brought the settlement.

Island Wage Hearings Set

Public hearings on minimum wage recommendations made under the Fair Labor Standards Act for industries in Puerto Rico are scheduled this fall in Washington, F. Granville Grimes Jr., acting administrator of the U. S. Labor Dept. Wage-Hour and Public Contracts Divisions, announced last week. He said all recommendations were made by Special Industry Committee No. 10 and range from 35c to 75c an hour.

Hearings will cover workers in food, beverages and related products; jewel cutting and polishing; communications; utilities; miscellaneous transportation; shoe manufacturing and allied industries; textile and textile products; and paper, paper products, printing, publishing and related products.

The purpose of the hearings is to obtain evidence to help the administrator decide if the recommendations should be accepted or rejected.

Quill Heads Drive For Cancer Hospital

Michael J. Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers and the New York City CIO Council, has accepted the chairmanship of a campaign to raise funds for the free cancer hospital at the City of Hope in California.

Right To Talk Held Need Of U.S. Employes

FULL collective bargaining rights for Federal employes was called for last week by the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

Too many postmasters and agency heads have the feeling laws and regulations are "something to be circumvented," Richard Shoemaker, GCEOC legislative representative, said. Strong organization can, in effect, "police" both the laws and the regulations, he added.

Proposing a contractual relation between the government and its employes as the best way of ending one-sided decisions management, he said, is the best way of ironing out differences on operations, morale and efficiency.

Where differences could not be ironed out, the CIO committee suggested they be sent to an impartial arbitration board or a congressional committee for action.

Support was given to H.R. 554 and H.R. 571, sometimes called a "little Wagner Act," not that "they establish collective bargaining in government," but rather "as a step in the right direction."

The GCEOC suggested amendments to include a impartial agency for adjudicating violations.

Landlords Plot Decontrol On West Coast

ON TOP of the high cost of hamburger, it looks like tenants in the San Francisco Bay Area are in line to be swatted with some whopping rent increases.

Landlord and real estate associations in Northern California—following the pattern developed first in Southern California—are winning decontrol in small towns and suburbs before moving into the big cities.

In recent weeks, that pattern has been followed in the Bay Area, with ceilings removed in Berkeley and adjoining Albany.

On Aug. 28, a decontrol hearing will be held by the Oakland City Council, and a majority of members of that council, in a recent election, were pledged to decontrol.

In San Francisco, the CIO Council and AFL Central Labor Council—before Congress voted to extend rent controls for one year—moved to get the Board of Supervisors to enact a standby municipal rent control ordinance.

They were turned down at a hearing in which a landlord spokesman said his group would be back again, and soon, before the Supervisors with a decontrol petition.

Ex-LPA Staff Member In Indonesian Post

Cushman Reynolds, former Labor Press Associated staff member, has taken up his duties as an attache of the U. S. Embassy in Djakerta, Indonesia.

He holds the post of labor information officer. Before joining LPA he served as a staff member of the Seafarers Log, organ of the AFL Seafarers Union.

Manpower Pay Raises Hedged In By Wilson

THE government outlined a new wage manpower policy last week designed to provide higher wages in "rare and unusual cases" where they are necessary to attract needed manpower.

Federal manpower officials said, however, the government has no plans to "freeze" workers on their jobs as was done during World War II.

Provision will also be made in rare and unusual cases for the Wage Stabilization Board to consider manpower wage increase requests from other Federal agencies only if they certify to the board that a concerted program has been undertaken to remedy the manpower shortage.

They will also be obliged to convince the board that a wage adjustment is an important part of the overall effort to attract and retain labor.

The new policy was approved by the Office of Defense Mobilization, Inter-Agency Manpower Policy Committee and the ODM Labor-Management Policy Committee.

Under its terms, the WSB cannot adopt manpower utilization as "the major criterion" of wage adjustments, but may approve certain manpower wage adjustment requests. The directive added that more appropriate methods than wage inducements ordinarily must be used to provide the desired manpower.

Wage stabilization and manpower utilization problems are different, the directive pointed out, and there are a number of reasons why wage increases should not be used for manpower purposes.

"Among these are the fact that such adjustments upset established wage differentials and result in other employers attempting to get compensating increases from the board," Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson said. "Thus, the initial problem is recreated and inflationary pressures are increased.

"Moreover, wage adjustments alone are inadequate to control the flow of manpower; a variety of non-wage factors are also important in accomplishing that purpose."

THE WSB WILL work out a procedure for processing manpower wage adjustment applications with other governmental agencies.

The ODM directive specifies the following general steps in manpower wage adjustment cases:

1. The Defense Manpower Administration will report on the manpower facts involved, listing the nature and extent of the shortage.

It will also list the nature and effect of non-wage measures taken to remedy the situation, and the expected impact of proposed wage increases on other civilian and defense activities in the area.

2. The appropriate procurement or production agency will report on the production facts involved, listing the relative importance of the product or service, the rate of production, etc.

Strike Voted At Douglas

OFFICIALS of CIO Auto Workers Local 148 at the Douglas Aircraft plant in Long Beach, Cal., last week got a "go" signal from 98% of the membership to call a strike Sept. 5.

A meeting attended by about 8000 members overwhelmingly voted walkout authorization. The UAW constitution provides that the international executive board must give approval before the strike is actually called.

Local 148 Pres. Oval Pierce said the basic cause of the overwhelming strike vote was "widespread and growing indignation" against the company's refusal to agree to numerous improvements in working conditions asked by the union.

Pierce said the company had offered only a 10% wage increase which would do no more than bring the Douglas wage scale to the point where it should have been months ago.

The company had rejected union proposals which included a 10% increase in wage rates plus a 10c hourly raise, and retroactive payment of 6% on workers' earnings from last October to April and of 10% on earnings from April to now.

Other recommendations turned down by the company included an escalator clause tied to the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumers' price index, payment by the company of half of the cost of group insurance, a full union shop, a company paid and jointly administered pension plan, and severance pay.

Give A Buck To PAC

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

REG. DIR. Michael Livoda reports that in a representation election at the Brown Trailer Co., Denver, Colo., the Auto Workers were chosen by a vote of UAW 23, no union 3. The campaign was conducted by UAW Representatives M. R. Lee and Charlie Moll. Vice President A. F. Hartung, of the CIO Woodworkers, reports the result of a representation election at the Redding Pine Mills, Anderson, Calif.: for IWA 13, no union 10. Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports the following representation elections: Bayly Mfg. Co., Long Beach, Calif., Amalgamated Clothing Workers 80, AFL 68; Geary Mfg. Co., Los Angeles, Amalgamated 18, AFL 7.

Allan Haywood

Martin Grayson, secretary-treasurer, Amalgamated Lithographers, reports several elections. At the Case-Hoyt Co., Rochester, N. Y., a certification election was won by a vote of 8 to 1. A union shop election at the Gamse Lithographing Co., Baltimore, Md., went overwhelmingly in favor of a union shop. In a collective bargaining election at the Brandt & Lawson Co., Houston and Galveston, Tex., the vote was unanimous in favor of the Lithographers.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election at the Marion Motor Products, Marion, O., the vote was UAW 334, AFL 233. This is the climax after a year-long battle with the AFL and the company. UAW Staff Rep. Emerson Baringer was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports the following representation elections: American Optical Co., Kansas City, Mo., OIWU 21, no union 2; Morgan Optical Co., Kansas City, OIWU 10, no union 0; Heart of America Optical Co., Kansas City, 1 eligible to vote, OIWU 1; Gerry Optical Co., Kansas City, 9 eligible to vote, OIWU 9. Earl Stakley, president of OIWU Local 1258, was in charge.

Al Hartnett, secretary-treasurer of the IUE, reports the following representation victories: Continental Carbon Resistor, Cleveland, O., IUE 88, AFL 61, no union 2; General Electric Co. Warehouse, Auburn, N. Y., IUE 18, no union 2; RCA, Cincinnati, O., IUE 86, IBEW 34, no union 0; Sylvania Electric Co., Point Pleasant, W. Va., IUE 216, no union 6; Maqua Printing Co. (GE), Schenectady, N. Y., IUE 107, no union 46.

W. J. Trombley, Oil Workers, reports a representation election at the Sinclair Refining Co., bulk plant terminal, Camden, N. J., for OWIU 10, AFL 1.

Reg. Dir. Henry J. Henry reports that the CIO Paperworkers has been recognized as the barganing agent at the Twin City Container Corp., Benton Harbor, Mich., without an election. UPA Rep. Darrel King, who was in charge, had 48 of the 49 employes signed up.

A. F. Hartung, vice president of the Woodworkers, reports the following union shop elections: Thompson Swain Plywood Co., Tuscaloosa, Ala., for 67, against 11; Wilbur Lumber Co., Wilbur, Ore., for 70, against 22.

CWA also reports that in a representation election at the Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., covering five states—Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, and North and South Dakota—the vote was CWA 8236, IBEW 5908, neither 201 and challenged 13.

Congratulations to all. Another repulse for the IBEW, which has failed so miserably in the telephone industry. This will pave the way to more and greater victories.

Ill-Famed 80th Looks Good

82nd Congress: Government By Investigation

THE 82ND Congress begins to look more and more like a badly battered kettle calling a comparatively new pot black.

No Congress of recent years, with the possible exception of the ill-famed 80th, has shouted louder about "inefficiency" in government and the need to "trim" government expenses. And when it comes to "investigating" and taking potshots at "bureaucrats," the 82nd has been just about "tops."

The only respect in which the 82nd Congress seems to fall seriously behind the 80th is in its primary job of legislating. By this time of the year, even the 80th had at least completed action on all the appropriations bills before it.

It is the recognized responsibility of Congress to pass the regular annual appropriations to run the government by June 30 at the latest. That enables the various government departments to plan their year's operations with an accurate budget before them.

But the 82nd Congress, having wasted most of its first six months in fruitless investigations and wrangling, and dominated by a coalition of reactionary Republicans and Southern Democrats bent upon throwing as many monkey wrenches as possible into President Truman's program, failed miserably to meet this deadline.

It followed the example of the 80th, which also had gone along in much the same way, and voted a 30-day permit to government agencies to continue operating on the basis of last year's appropriations. This implied that it intended to complete work on the money bills before the end of July.

Meanwhile, the 82nd Congress continued to villify and excoriate the "inefficiency" of government employes. It decided that, despite the increased work dumped upon them, that there were far too many of them, and that if they really did their work the government could "economize."

So the Senate adopted a formula proposed by Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.) cutting personnel funds by a straight 10%. The House, in turn, decided that the Senate way gave government administrators too easy a way of absorbing the cut, and it adopted instead a method proposed by Rep. Jensen (R. Iowa) forbidding agencies from filling more than one out of four jobs that become vacant during the year.

HOW EITHER decision could contribute to the supposedly desired "efficiency" in government was an unanswered question. Nor did it matter that by adopting either method Congress will fail to meet its responsibility under the Constitution to appropriate funds on the basis of the need.

The important thing — as the Southern Democrats see it — is that they have obtained a blanket over civil rights legislation by repaying the Republican leaders with favors on their anti-Truman program.

July went by, however, and not a single money bill had gone to the President. Another 30-day extension was voted. But 20 of those days have now elapsed, and still not one appropriation measure for the Federal government has been approved.

It's the worst legislative log jam in history. Even the 80th had gotten over the appropriations hurdle before the middle of August.

While the House has now finally cleared all regular appropriations, the Senate still has not acted on five of the measures, including the huge military budget. All of the others, except a minor bill providing funds for the District of Columbia, were snarled in conference until last Tuesday.

Several bills had been reported out, but the House returned all of them with instructions that the Jensen amendment must be included. Since the Senate conferees were holding firm to the Ferguson plan, a deadlock developed.

It appears that the deadlock was broken Aug. 15, however, when the House approved the conferees' compromise on the appropriations bill for some 20 independent offices of the government. The conferees finally agreed, in effect, to use both plans at once.

THEY ALLOWED the one-in-four provision to stand until each agency had reduced its personnel expenditures to 90% of the budget estimates.

This plan still needs Senate approval, and anything can happen there.

Meanwhile, not a single regular Federal appropriation bill has been sent to the President.

Despite this fact, Sen. McFarland (D. Ariz.), Senate majority leader, predicted last week that "must" legislation would be completed by Oct. 1 and that Congress would adjourn by that time.

8-20

Foreign Aid Debate Revises GOP Isolationism

THE OLD isolationism of the Republican party, which was thoroughly discredited during the Roosevelt Administration, had a public revival last week.

It was evident as debate began in the House on the bill appropriating funds to carry on the government's program of military and economic aid to friendly nations abroad.

The President has asked Congress for $8.5 billion dollars for this purpose, and he has been solidly supported in his request by top military and diplomatic leaders.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee reported the bill out last week after chopping some $650 million from the amount requested.

House Republicans at once called a party conference on the measure to work out plans to slash up to $1 billion in the name of "economy." Meanwhile, in the Senate, where the measure is being considered jointly by the Foreign Relations and Armed Services committees, a Republican-sponsored move was developing to chop off $1.275 billion—nearly twice the cut made by the House committee.

SEN. KNOWLAND (R. Calif.) introduced an amendment to cut a straight 15% across the board. The slash would apply to military as well as economic items.

Administration Democrats promptly termed Knowland's proposal too drastic, and Sen. Lodge (R. Mass.) said that it was essential that military funds be approved in full.

Because of these disagreements, Chairman Connally (D. Tex.) decided to have the Senate Foreign Relations Committee wait for passage of the House bill before taking action on its companion measure.

However, as debate in the House got under way, some Republicans indicated that they would fight for even a bigger cut than that advocated by party strategists. Rep. Vursell (R. Ill.) took the floor to demand a cut of at least $3 billions.

There was also some indication that the Southern Democrats might continue their "wrecking crew" coalition with the Republicans and support further cuts in the measure. Sen. George (D. Ga.) announced that he will ask the Senate to trim "at least" $2 billion from the President's request.

Qualified observers doubted, however, that top Republican strategists will permit the more drastic moves to succeed.

They point out that there is a "hot" internal party problem connected with the measure, since Sen. Taft (R. O.), who favors a cut, must be careful that in working toward it that he does not give Gen. Eisenhower and President Truman an "alibi" if the program should fail.

TAFT, A leading GOP Presidential aspirant, must see that any cut that is made is not so drastic that it completely wrecks the program.

On the other hand, since Eisenhower's stature as a Presidential nominee would diminish if he does not succeed in his difficult assignment, it would help Taft's own candidacy if Eisenhower's job is hamstrung as much as possible without creating a situation that would arouse widespread public indignation.

Most of the cut made by the House Committee was in the economic aid items. It was expected that Republican moves would be chiefly directed at this part of the program, which includes funds to carry out the Marshall Plan and other aid administered by the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taxes H.R. 4473	President Truman has proposed raising $10 billion additional revenue for defense effort.	House passed bill providing $7,206,000,000 increase. Senate Finance Com. completed hearings Aug. 3, now drafting bill.	Urge Senators and Representatives to adopt a fair tax measure based upon ability to pay.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Authorizes construction of $800 million St. Lawrence Power and Water Project.	House Public Works Com. concluded hearings Apr. 30. Has since shelved all pending bills.	Urge members of House Public Works Com. to approve project.
Local Public Health Units S. 445	Provides federal aid to help states establish local public health agencies.	Bill passed Senate. Interstate and Foreign Commerce Com. due to act soon.	Ask members of House Com. on Interstate Commerce for prompt, favorable action.
Aid to Medical Education S. 337	Provides emergency U. S. grants and scholarships for medical, dental, and nursing education.	Approved by Senate Labor Com. Senate action due soon. No action yet in House.	Ask Senators to support bill.
Labor Dept.-FSA Appropriations. H.R. 3709	Appropriates funds for operations of the Labor Dept. and Fed. Security Agency.	In conference.	Ask Senators and Congressmen to restore funds cut out.
Disaster Claims S. 1935 H.R. 5022	Provides rehabilitation funds for flood victims.	Hearings now on before House Judiciary Com., pending in Senate Judiciary Com.	Write to members of Senate and House to support these bills.
Military - Critical Defense Areas Rent Control S. 1893	Prevents rent gouging of military personnel and defense workers.	Before Senate Banking & Currency Com.	Urge early favorable action by Senate.
Military - Critical Defense Areas Housing S. 1894	Assists construction of housing near military establishments and critical defense plants.	Before Senate Banking & Currency Com.	Urge early favorable action by Senate.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Wetback Law Held Scandal

THE CIO last week, through its Latin American Affairs Committee, struck out sharply at the legislation passed by Congress to permit importation of Mexican farm labor.

"The new wetback legislation," Dr. Ernst Schwarz, national executive secretary of the Committee, declared, "is a scandal. It is nothing but a document prepared by men subservient to the interests of the big plantation owners, providing them with a new opportunity to exploit those unfortunate immigrants and their families."

Schwarz pointed out that the law is directed against U. S. workers unable to work under the conditions offered to the wetbacks.

"Through an insidious stipulation," Schwarz said, "it actually permits the use of wetbacks as strike breakers."

The Committee called attention to the fact that four bills and one House resolution have been introduced in Congress to nullify provisions in amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act outlawing child labor on commercial farms.

CWA Strike Wins Wage Increase

The CIO Communictions Workers' strike in Virginia against Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. ended last week when a contract calling for pay increases of $3 to $9.50 a week was signed.

The 4000 union members involved ratified the agreement which is effective from July 29 and runs for a year, CWA announced.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF
INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

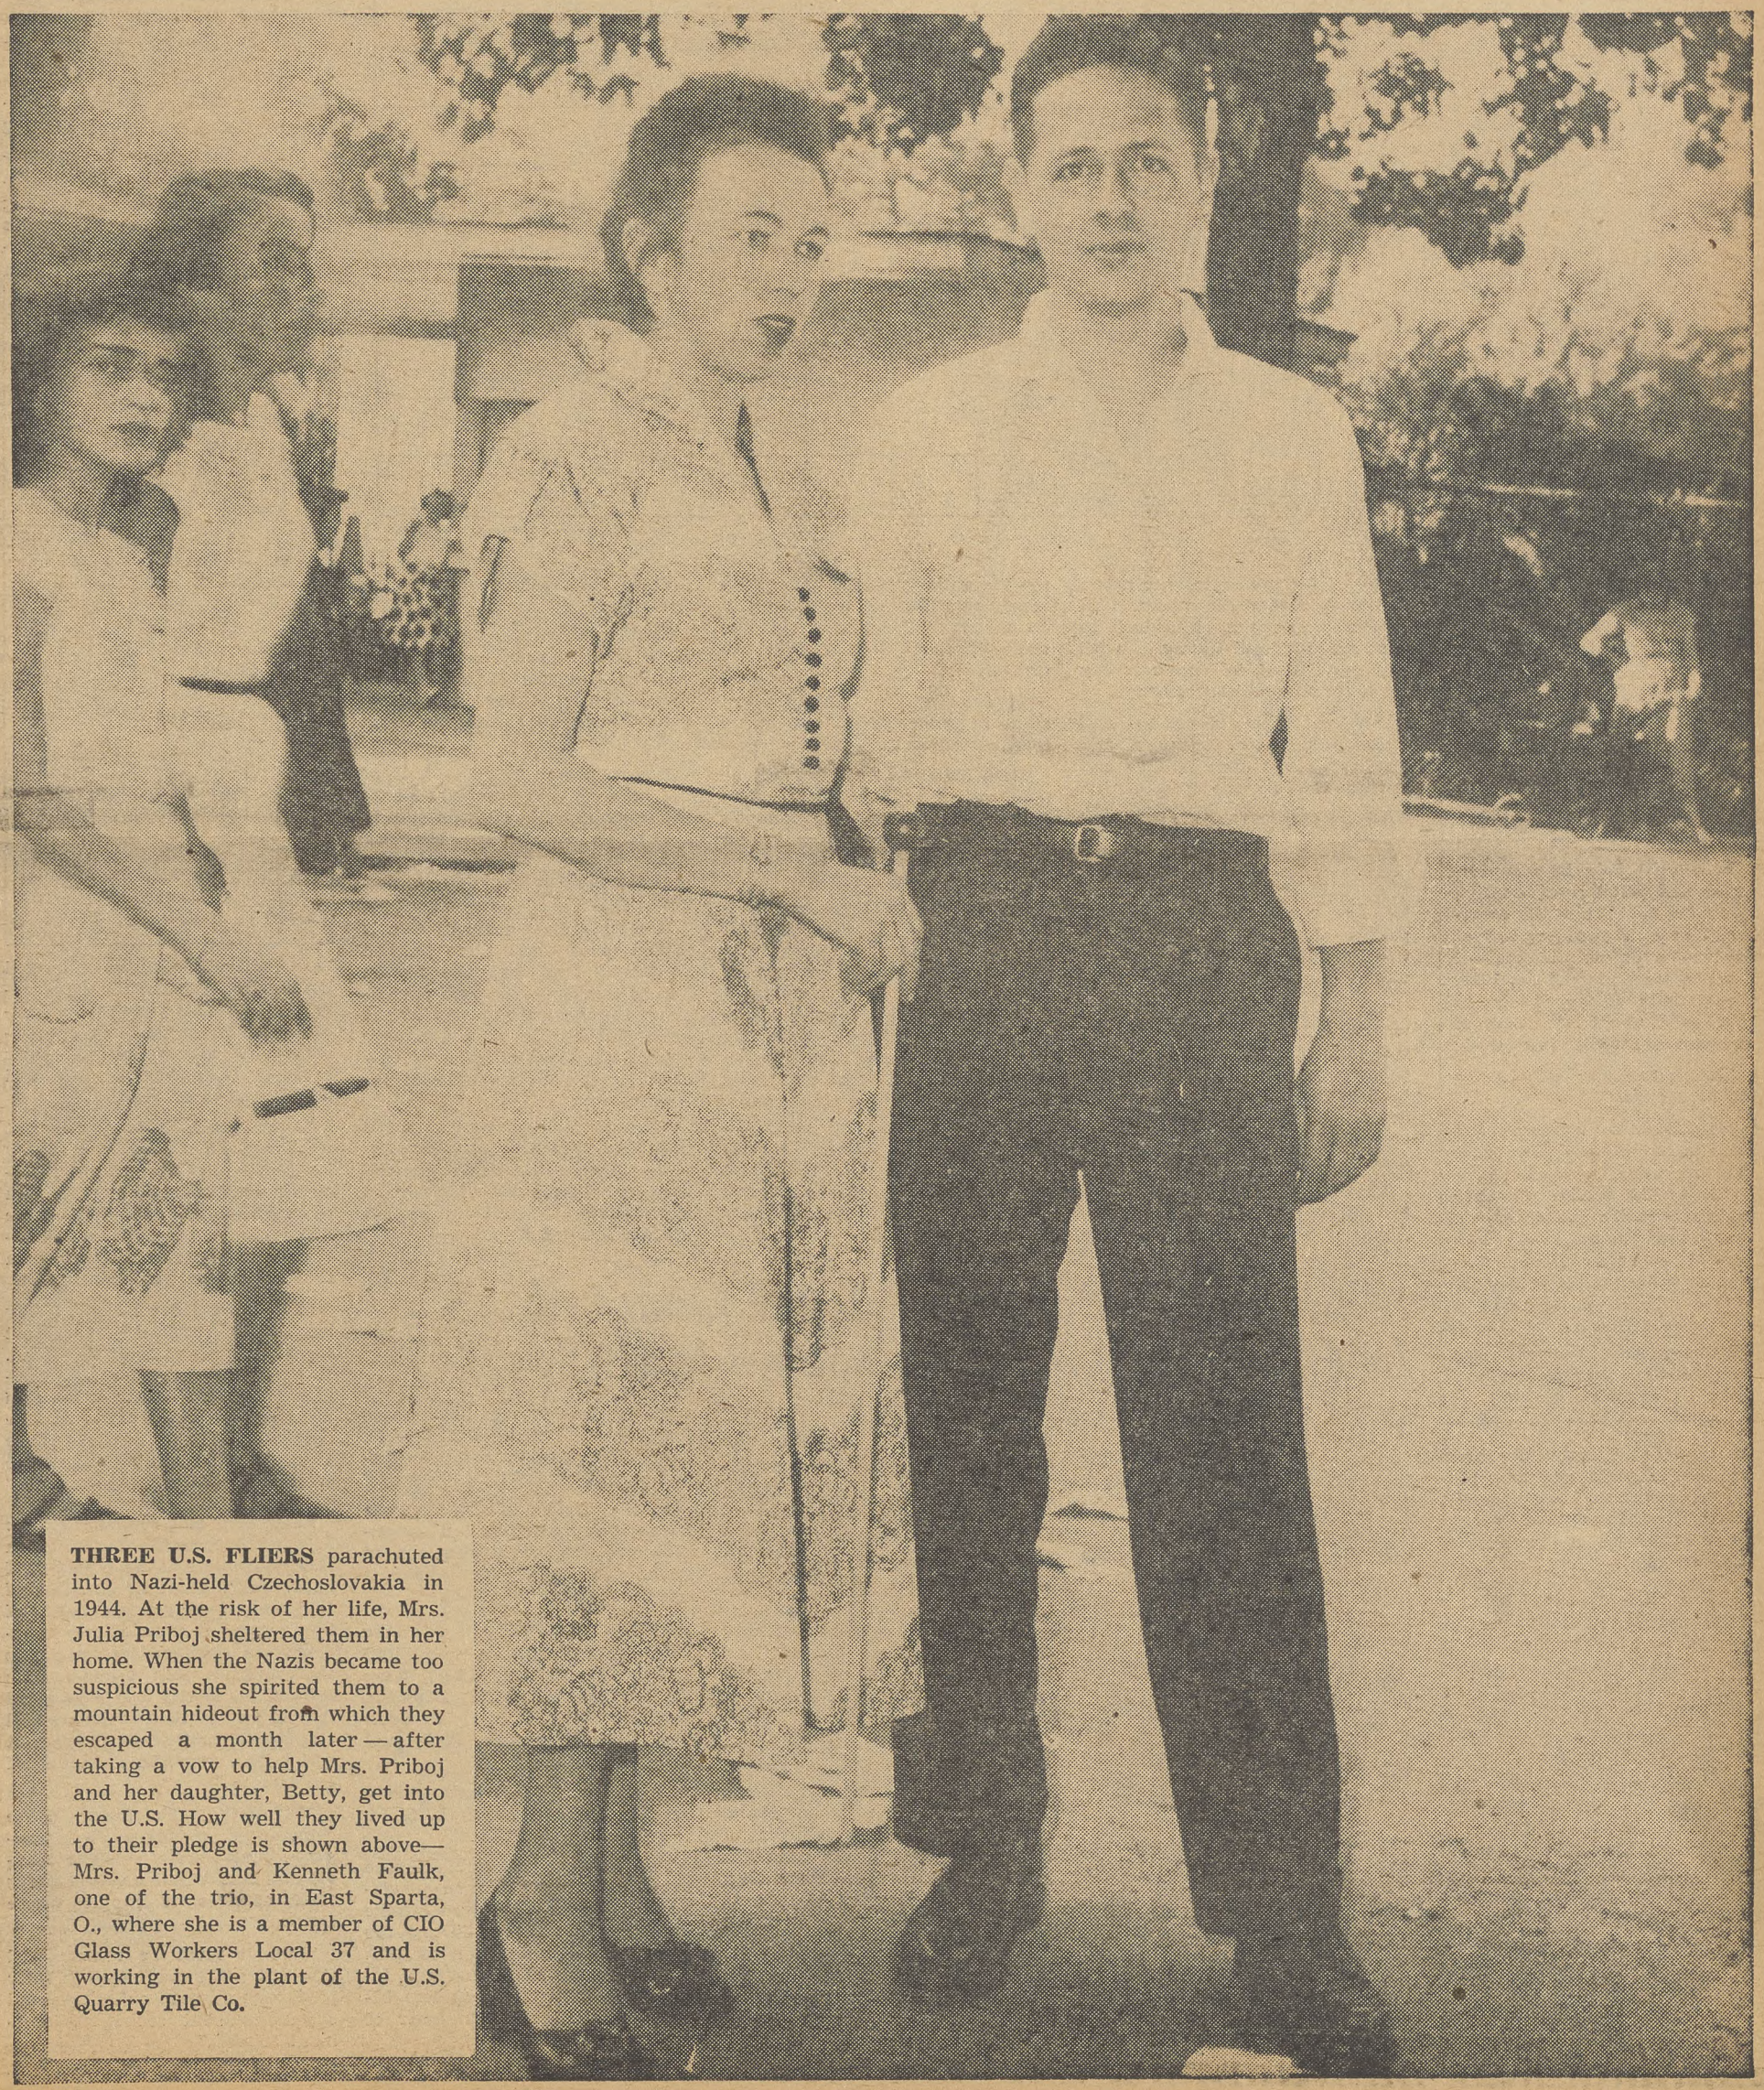
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIV WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 27, 1951 82 No. 35



THREE U.S. FLIERS parachuted into Nazi-held Czechoslovakia in 1944. At the risk of her life, Mrs. Julia Priboj sheltered them in her home. When the Nazis became too suspicious she spirited them to a mountain hideout from which they escaped a month later — after taking a vow to help Mrs. Priboj and her daughter, Betty, get into the U.S. How well they lived up to their pledge is shown above—Mrs. Priboj and Kenneth Faulk, one of the trio, in East Sparta, O., where she is a member of CIO Glass Workers Local 37 and is working in the plant of the U.S. Quarry Tile Co.

Welfare Agencies' Study Shows Why:

Life Is Drab For 10 Million Low-Pay Americans

By GERVASE N. LOVE

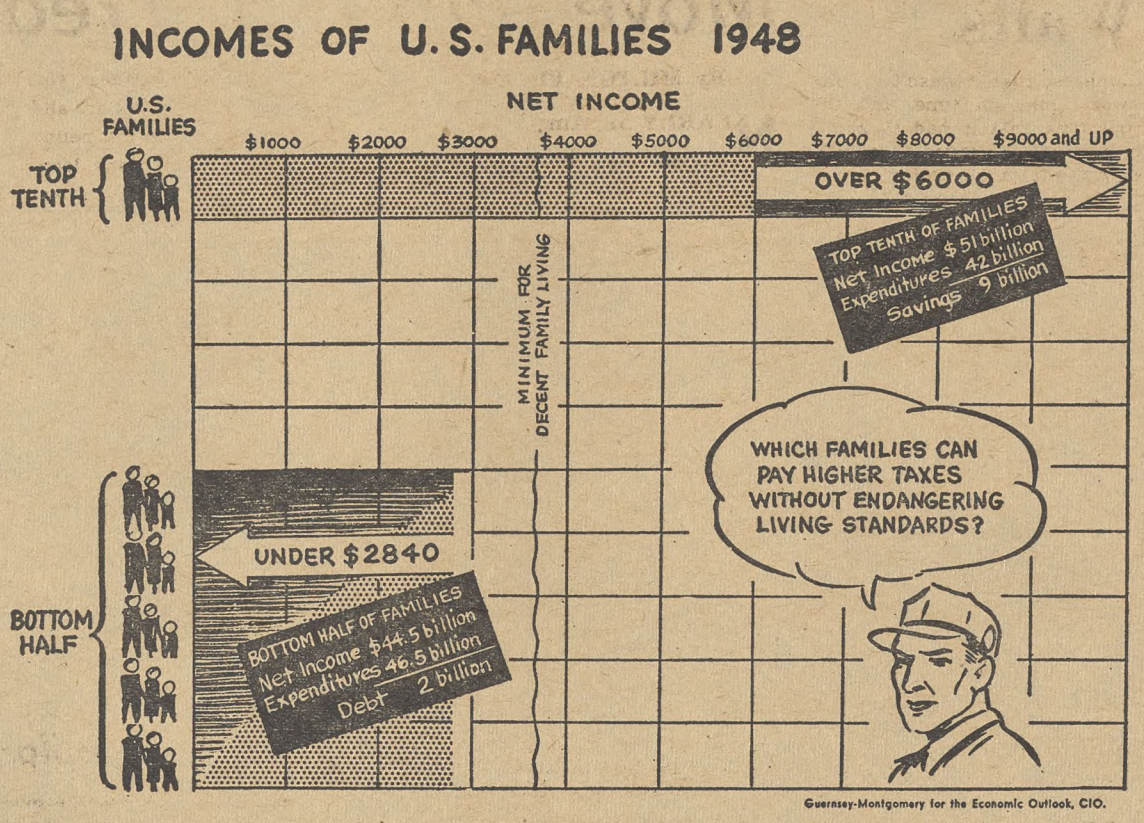
THE drab curtain that hides the barren lives of the ill-housed, ill-fed and ill-clad was pulled aside last week long enough for a revealing glance into the unending struggle for existence waged by 10.5 million families at the lowest end of the economic scale.

The glimpse came in the form of a report to the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report from the Conference Group on Low-Income Families, which is composed of nine national voluntary welfare agencies.

It is entitled "Making Ends Meet on Less Than $2000 a Year." It tells the stories of what 100 families did in 1949 and still do to stretch out their cheerless existence for one unrelieved year after another.

THE 100 case histories aren't pretty stories. They are stories of too little food, often of the wrong kind; of hand-me-down clothes, with seldom a pretty new dress to brighten the stagnent life of an overworked mother or a gay tie to cheer a harried father; and for the most part, of overcrowded, broken-down slum homes.

But they also are cheering stories of the unquenchable human spirit that sometimes prospers in the most grinding poverty, of unbroken courage that flouts every adversity, of infinite hope that thrives in the ashes of discouragement.



Clothing Buying At Slump Level

Inventories held by manufacturers and retailers of clothing are piling up because the American family is spending less of its income on wearing apparel than in any year since 1929, the monthly survey of current business of the U. S. Dept. of Commerce showed last week.

The latter year was during the depression.

Despite sales promotions and price cuts, retailers' stocks at the beginning of July were worth $2.358 billion, up $138 million from the end of March. The manufacturers, in the face of smaller orders from retailers, held inventories valued at $1.877 billion, or $23 million more than at the end of March.

Families with incomes of less than $2000 a year can't afford to spend much on clothing.

They also give rise to the feeling that the condition besetting these 100 families—and the rest of the 10.5 million families which earned less than $2000 in 1948—shouldn't be allowed to exist in a country as rich as this.

Our case stories from 27 states and the District of Columbia were gathered during the spring and summer of 1950," writes Mrs. Elizabeth G. Magill in a summary prepared for the conference group and made part of the report.

"The people they introduce to you are kindred to those with whom we deal in our everyday work throughout the country."

"To us their struggles and makeshifts, their ingenuity and grit, as well as their failures and unwise choices, are part of the warp and woof of American life. So too is the spirit that keeps them going and spurs them on."

MRS. Magill found some common factors in the general pattern of poverty in spite of the widely varied backgrounds and work skills in the 100 families.

